

HARVEST GLEANINGS

FOREWORD

This book marks the completion of the three-volume Harvest Gleaning series. Together, this series contains over 2500 pages of writings by the late Charles Taze Russell not found in other materials currently available.

Volume One of the series contains a reprint of the book The Three Worlds, the debates between Pastor Russell and two ministers, E. L. Eaton and L. S. White respectively, and a collation of tract material published under the series titles of Old Theology Quarterly, and Bible Students Monthly. Volume Two consisted entirely of sermons of Pastor Russell published in various newspapers between 1901 and 1910.

This current volume is divided into three sections. The first contains 20 tract articles from Bible Students Monthly that were not available at the time of publishing volume one. In section two the publishers include 24 tract articles from the Old Theology series as well as some originally published under the series titles of Everybody's Paper and People's Pulpit. In the final section we are including 262 sermons which both fill in the gaps missing in volume two and continue on to the death of Pastor Russell in 1916. Also included in this section are a treatise from Old Theology Quarterly under the title of Bible Study and Needful Helps Thereto; a booklet including three suggested discourses on the Chart of the Ages and a formerly unpublished issue of the Watch Tower entitled A Conspiracy Exposed, and Harvest Siftings.

While additional materials continue to surface from the early days of the Bible Student movement, the publishers of this volume do not anticipate publishing a sequel to this third volume of Harvest Gleanings. We hope, pray and trust that the faith which so stimulated the Bible Students of some 100 years ago may be renewed through this reprinting of those truths which were so meaningful to the brethren of that time and remain so to many today.

Sincerely,

At the time God accepted Israel to be His people He entered into a Covenant or agreement with them. He gave them the Law, represented in the Ten Commandments, as the basis of the Covenant which Moses mediated. Israel agreed to be faithful to God, and to keep those commandments perfectly. And God agreed that in that event He would bless them. They should be His people and by doing the things contained in the Law should live everlastingly—not die. Not only so, but He promised to bless them in all the temporal affairs of life; in their homes, in their families, in their flocks and herds and fields they should be prospered.

Israel failed to get these blessings, for the same reason that any other people would have failed; namely, because God’s Law is perfect, the measure of a perfect man’s ability: “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind, being and strength; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.” Hence, the Israelites continued to die, as their fathers had done, and as all mankind die not being able to keep the Divine Law perfectly. For the same reason Israel experienced wars, famines, pestilences and droughts in proportion as they were negligent of the terms of their Covenant. Lev. 26:14-33.

HAPPY IS THAT PEOPLE

In the text above the Prophet David pictures the holy, happy, blessed nation of the Lord. It is a picture of the future and not of the past. It is an ideal picture. It will be realized when Messiah’s Kingdom shall have been established amongst men when Satan’s power shall be restrained, when he shall be bound, when the blessings of Restitution shall have uplifted mankind from sin and degradation and shall have brought them back to the image and likeness of God lost in Eden, but re-acquired for our race through the sacrifice of our Lord on Calvary.

But that happy nation will acquire, additionally, a happy home and world-wide Paradise. Even human perfection would not bring happiness if cyclones, tornadoes, blizzards, tidal waves, earthquakes, famines and pestilences continued. Thank God, the Bible's assurances are that the blessing of the Lord shall be, not only upon mankind, but upon all their earthly home. The earth shall yield her increase. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad and blossom as the rose. The Lord will make His footstool glorious. Acts 3:19-21; Isa. 11:9; 65:25; Ezek. 37; Isa. 35:1; 60:13.

PARTICULARS GIVEN BY THE PROPHET

Incidental to the blessed condition of the holy nation of the future, the Prophet David mentions a deliverance from strange children: "Rid me and deliver me from the hands of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and whose right hand is the right hand of falsehood." Psa. 144:11.

In the Church of the present Age there are some whom the Apostle styles "bastards," or strange children. All may make the same profession and confession, but "the Lord knoweth them that are His," and in His due time shall separate the false or strange children from the true and will glorify the saintly ones as members of the great Messiah, The Christ. Then will come the time for dealing with humanity in general the time described in our text, when humanity in general, under the Messianic Kingdom, will be privileged to become the holy and happy people of God when Satan and sin will be banished and righteousness and Truth will flourish and the knowledge of the glory of the Lord will fill the whole earth.

The great Messiah undertakes to be the world's Life-Giver, Father, Regenerator. All mankind will be awakened from the tomb and have the opportunity for regeneration and full attainment of human perfection and God-likeness. However, for quite a time there will be strange children amongst men those who will experience the blessings of that glorious time without giving proper heart responses. Not until the world shall have been rid of these, by their dying the Second Death, will the fullness of happiness prevail amongst the children of men. With the wrong spirit they utter vanity, foolishness, and their right hand, their best powers, prove disloyal to the King of kings, of whom King David was merely a type.

TIMES OF REFRESHING SHALL COME, AND HE SHALL SEND JESUS CHRIST

“Then you sons will be like plants, grown up in their youth; your daughters like corner-pillars, sculptured in the model of a palace.” The grace and beauty of the children of Messiah, partakers of human Restitution blessings (Acts 3:19-21), will be marvelous. They will attain to more than Adamic perfection, for they will have an increase of knowledge.

Then the garners will be full, furnishing all manner of provisions. Then your sheep will bring forth thousands and tens of thousands in your open pastures. The earth shall yield her increase under the blessings of Messiah’s Kingdom.

Then the oxen will be strong to labor. Then there shall be no breach no rupture of the happy relationships. Even death shall be destroyed.

Then there will be no migration no further seeking for better or more happifying conditions. Then there will be no complaining in our streets. Discontent is now rapidly increasing with every added blessing of our wonderful day. The difficulty lies in the fact that sin and selfishness are reigning in the hearts and minds of men. Under the wonderfully changed conditions of Messiah’s Kingdom, peace, happiness, contentment will take the place of selfishness and discontent.

No wonder the Prophet declares that happy will be the people who fare thus happy are the people whose God is Jehovah. We need to correct our ideas, our theologies. God does not acknowledge Himself the God of the wicked and He declines to treat evil-doers except as rebels, aliens, foreigners, strangers, as respects His promises and favors. Our entire race was originally thus estranged. But Divine grace provided a “Savior and a great One.” This Savior is already reconciling a saintly, faithful Church, who will be His associates in the Heavenly Kingdom. Shortly He will apply of the merit of His sacrifice on behalf of all mankind.

The Scriptures assure us that this will be fully acceptable to the Heavenly Father, who will enter into a New Covenant with Israel, of which Messiah will be the great Mediator, the antitype of Moses. (Jer. 31:31). Under that New Covenant all mankind will be privileged and assisted to come back to Divine favor under the processes of Restitution, in connection with the judgments and disciplines of that Messianic Kingdom. The result of the thousand years of that reign of righteousness will be the development of mankind as one holy nation or people, whose happiness will be complete and everlasting. There shall be no more sighing, no more crying, no more dying; for all the former things shall have passed away, and He upon the Throne shall have made all things new. Rev. 21:1-5.

PRINCE LUCIFER OF OLD IS NOW PRINCE OF DEMONS

*“The God of Peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.”
Rom. 16:20*

Doubtless many have been much surprised when told that Satan is not in some far-off place stoking fires and torturing human or other victims, but that he is present amongst men, an invisible angel of evil, ably supported in his work as an Adversary of God by legions of other fallen angels, of whom he is master a “Prince of Demons,” either because of his superiority of nature, or because of belonging to a higher rank or grade than the ordinary angel. It is a surprise many to learn that Satan, so far from being ill favored, is beautiful, according to the Scriptures, and that he is supervising the work directly and through the fallen angels, his servants, to mislead and to deceive humanity putting light for darkness and darkness for light, error for truth, etc.

The time was not long ago when intelligent people made light of everything in the Scriptures respecting invisible spirit beings, good and bad the messengers of God and the messengers of Satan. This, however, can no longer be done. Under the increasing light of the New Dispensation man himself today can do things which but a short time ago would have been considered impossible. Can we not speak with our friends over hundreds of miles with a telephone and recognize each other's voices? Yet there is no pipe, no tube to convey the sounds and nothing, seemingly, carries it over the wire. We speak into a hole in the wall and our friends hundreds of miles away hear plainly. Still more marvelous is wireless telegraphy and wireless telephony. If man can accomplish these things, what cannot the Almighty accomplish? Who can deny the possibility of the invisible presence of spirit beings and yet admit the possibility of wireless telegraphy? We are safe, dear friends, in guiding our judgments directly by the Word of God and reasoning inside and not outside of its boundaries.

THE BIBLE IN PERFECT ACCORD

The Bible, and it alone, explains certain phenomena, and all of the Bible explanations, although written, some of them centuries apart, are in most perfect accord. Thus in Genesis the Bible tells us respecting Satan's deflection, and the book of Revelation, written more than three thousand years later, tells us of his binding for a thousand years, of Messiah's reign and Satan's ultimate destruction. Isaiah and Ezekiel tell us of his being at one time in full harmony with God, and that then he was the “covering cherub,” glorious, grand, beautiful, and that his name was Lucifer, which signifies the Morning Star.

All of the angelic, heavenly hosts are termed stars, bright ones; but Lucifer, being of a higher order, was styled the Morning Star, the Brightest Star. It was at that time, while in Divine favor, that Satan permitted the lodgment in his mind of a disloyal thought of how, indirectly, by being in higher responsibility, he could work some wonders and do some things better than the Almighty. He craved the opportunity to make a demonstration of what he could do. But the Scriptures declare that, first of all, he said this merely in his heart and uttered it not. “He said in his heart, I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of God (still farther above his angelic associates), I will be as the Most High” a ruler.

THE OPPORTUNE TIME CAME

Never had there been sin in heaven. Satan was the first of all its inhabitants to cherish, to entertain, a rebellious thought and to bring it to a consummation. He held the thought in abeyance until the opportunity afforded, and God Himself afforded the opportunity, with full knowledge of the consequences, and with the desire that this test of the entire heavenly host, and of a human race as well, should be effected, because God seeketh not the worship of constraint, but “seeketh such for worshipers as worship Him in spirit and in truth,” voluntarily, joyfully.

It was when Satan beheld our first parents, in the image and likeness of God, yet not spirit but flesh, earthly, that he perceived the opportunity of gaining the coveted power for an empire, separate from that of Jehovah. In the first pair the Adversary beheld a new thing, a creature of Godlike qualities and possessed of the power to propagate his own species. Satan realized that the conquest of this pair and the bringing of them into subjection to himself would signify the capture of a world full of people eventually that the enslavement of the parents would signify the enslavement eventually of the race.

SATAN’S METHODS WERE SUCCESSFUL

We cannot deny that Satan’s plans were logical and that he has carried them out with great success so that the Scriptures declare him “the Prince of this world” (John 14:30); and again, “the god of this world” (2 Cor. 4:4). Nevertheless, his victory was not so great a one as he doubtless expected it to be. No doubt he expected that he was capturing an immortal race. Quite probably he believed the falsehood he told mother Eve, when he contradicted the Word of God that sin, that disobedience in eating the forbidden fruit, would bring upon them the penalty of death, “dying thou shalt die.”

Satan's charge was that God had misrepresented the facts for the purpose of holding His creatures in mental slavery to Himself; that He did not wish them to be wise, therefore He forbade the eating of this particular kind of fruit and declared the penalty of death for the transgression of His Law. "I, Satan, assure you that you need not be afraid of the fruit; I assure you that it will do you good, and that you will not surely die from the eating of it."

Alas! Mother Eve believed the Adversary and disbelieved her God, and then enticed her husband, still thinking, no doubt, that she would not die and that the serpent had told her the truth and that God had been the deceiver. St. Paul tells us that father Adam knew better and ate the fruit, knowing that it would cause his death, willing thus to disobey in order to maintain the fellowship of his wife, whose life, he realized, was already forfeited.

When the Divine sentence began to go into execution, when our first parents were driven out of Eden to battle with the thorns and thistles until they should return to the dust, no doubt Satan was disappointed. He would rather be the Prince of a noble, living family of angels or of humans than the Emperor of a weak and dying race. However, from that day to the present time he has been fighting upon the same line; he has been contending with mankind that the Word of God is false when it declares that "the wages of sin is death," and that "the soul that sinneth it shall die." From that day to this he has been using this falsehood to the injury of our race, and surely he has succeeded wonderfully.

Today, not only in heathen lands, but amongst the most civilized, it is freely believed (and by many Christians considered Scriptural to believe the nonsensical) that a dead man is more alive than before he died. People of good, sound, reasoning faculties on ordinary subjects seem to be "hoodooed" by this falsehood of Satan, "ye shall not surely die." So true is this, that it seems not inconsistent to them to say that a man hit over the head with a stick and knocked senseless knows nothing, but a man hit over the head harder and killed, knows everything.

THE FALLEN ANGELS

It was sometime after the fall of Satan and the fall of man that the Lord permitted the great test to come upon the angels of heaven, under which test a host of them fell into sin, disobedience, etc. and since then are known in the Scriptures as the fallen angels, and as devils more properly demons. These fallen angels, demons, are under Satan as their great Prince and they have been his active agents for long centuries in deceiving mankind and opposing the Divine Program.

SATAN THE GREAT MURDERER

No less an authority than our great Lord and Redeemer tells us that Satan is a murderer and a liar. He declares that "He was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth; when he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own, for he is the father of lies.” (John 8:44) It is well that we keep this Divine testimony in our minds. It is well that we note just what the first great lie was, namely, Satan’s misrepresentation saying, “Ye shall not surely die.” It is important that we notice this, because so thoroughly has Satan accomplished his deceptive work that practically everybody, heathen and civilized, accepts Satan’s version of the matter and discredits that of the Almighty.

Let us notice that Satan is a murderer; that he murdered Father Adam and Mother Eve, and that his lie is still murdering our race, under the just laws of heredity. The error of believing Satan instead of God has gotten many into the confused situation of disclaiming that God proposed that man should live forever on earth in a Paradise, and, as his family would increase and continue in harmony with His wise regulations, the boundaries of his Paradise would be enlarged and be a Paradise filled with the knowledge of God and the home of a perfect humanity, in accord with God, privileged to maintain everlasting life here. And, says this theory, by Satan’s lie and our first parents’ fall, we die and by dying become more alive and some of us go to heaven and the mass to some eternal, fiery hell, of which we have no knowledge.

THE GIFT OF GOD IS ETERNAL LIFE

God, while permitting Satan and sin and depravity and death to take their course, has not been idle. He has had, and still has, a great plan for human salvation a plan for recovering man from sin and from death and from all of his fallen conditions, a plan of restitution to human perfection, a plan by which the Seed of the woman shall yet, literally, crush the Serpent’s head, and undo Satan’s great original misdeed recover man from his murdered condition and from his fallen estate to all that he had at first plus the knowledge and experiences of the present life and plus the experience incidental to his uplift, during the reign of Messiah, for which we pray, “Thy Kingdom come.”

The Scriptures clearly show us that all of this recovery is to be accomplished through the merit of Jesus’ sacrifice—“the just for the unjust.” That the work has not yet begun is evident. We are still living under the reign of sin and death. The Messianic Kingdom must come in power and great glory and be established, the Scriptures tell us, in a great time of trouble. Then the earth will be made to blossom as the rose, and the wilderness and the solitary places will be made glad, and all mankind will receive Divine blessing and opportunity to return to Divine favor and eternal life as human beings. And the willfully disobedient and the negligent of those opportunities will die the Second Death, from which there will be no recovery, no resurrection, no hope.

THE SAINTS SHALL JUDGE THE WORLD

These great blessings of restitution, for which Israel and the whole world are waiting, cannot be brought about until first the special salvation of a special class, the salvation of the very elect not to human nature, but to a heavenly nature, as the Bride of Christ shall be accomplished. The selecting of these has progressed for nearly nineteen centuries and, apparently, is about complete. The Divine blessing and work then to be inaugurated will be restitution to earthy nature and perfection—"to the Jew first."

SATAN SERVES THE SAINTS

During all these centuries, while Satan has been the Prince of ruler amongst the children of this world, and while he has blinded them with his sophistries and falsehoods, he has also done another work for the saintly few now being called to the heavenly places. For these he has, so to speak, turned a polishing grindstone to prepare them for the riches of the heavenly glory as New Creatures, as heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ their Lord. Quite unwittingly, we may be sure, he has served the Creator's purposes and helped to prepare, through trials, this class for the glorious things which God has in reservation for those that love Him.

SATAN AS AN ANGEL OF LIGHT

St. Paul declares of Satan, "We are not ignorant of his devices," and he tells us that Satan and his servants transform themselves into servants of righteousness, etc. We see this principle in operation as we read Church history. Satan, all through this Age, has sought to pervert Christian hopes and distort Christian doctrines by presenting counterfeits of Bible truths. Thus, for instance, the Scriptures tell us that eventually the Church, "a little flock," will be associated with Messiah in His Kingdom of glory, to reign a thousand years. It was Satan's method to counterfeit this hope, to suggest to men the establishment of an earthly Kingdom with an earthly little flock, an earthly glory, an earthly reign. This was set forth as the fulfillment of the second Psalm.

And when later on some of Satan's dupes began to get free from some of his snares, he became their leader in an opposite direction, called them Reformers and led them to claim that all the civilized kingdoms of the earth are the kingdoms of Christ. This is the status of affairs today. The world in general believes that Christ's Kingdom has come, even though they are still praying, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Satan has led them away from careful attention to making their own calling and election sure by Christian character development, into the various reform movements of the world, whose trial time has not yet come. Thus Christians of all denominations have been bewildered, confused by the artful wiles of our enemy. Now, however, as the morning of the New Dispensation dawns, our eyes of understanding are opening. We perceive that our Adversary has but a short time until he must be bound for a thousand years; that the Messianic Kingdom must prevail that all the families of the earth may be blessed through the Seed of Abraham. Finally, at the close of that reign of righteousness, the Scriptures declare, Satan shall be destroyed.

The Church is the Body of Christ, of Messiah. Hence the Apostle's words of our text apply to the Church in glory—"The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly".

YOUR REASONABLE SERVICE

"What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?" Mic. 6:8.

Who could find fault with these requirements? Who could say that in setting such a standard for His creatures the Almighty required too much? On the other hand, how could we imagine a just and loving Heavenly Father requiring less than is here stipulated. God's law, variously stated, always amounts to the same thing. The statement of it, as given to the Jews at Mt. Sinai, embodied in the Decalogue, corresponds with this statement, as does also the presentation of it set forth by the great Teacher, saying, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind, soul and strength; and thy neighbor as thyself".

Many of us, after confessing with St. Paul that the Divine Law is holy and just and good, have been surprised to find that that which our minds heartily approve, we are unable to obey to the full. For thirty-five hundred years the Jews have sought to keep that Divine Law, under the promise of eternal life for so doing, but none of them have been able to gain the prize. When as a nation they realize their inability, and not sooner, they will be ready to receive at God's hands, as a free gift through the Redeemer, the forgiveness of their violations of the Divine Law. And then, under their New Covenant (Jer. 31:31; Heb. 8:8-13), they will have Messiah's assistance in regaining that perfection of mind and body and a "new heart," which will enable them to obey in every particular the Divine Law, which all our minds recognize as just and true, but which, because of heredity, we are unable to perfectly obey in the flesh.

That blessing, which is soon to come to natural Israel, under Messiah's Kingdom and the New Covenant, will be extended through them, as the natural seed of Abraham, to every nation, kindred and tongue, in harmony with the Divine promise made to Abraham.

A different, although a corresponding favor, is now, in advance, bestowed upon a small class gathered from Jews and Gentiles, and Scripturally known as the “Church of the First-Borns, whose names are written in Heaven.” These, in advance, realize their inability to keep the Divine Law, and by faith lay hold upon the Redeemer’s merit and consecrate their all to God through Him. In the Redeemer they are accepted of the Father; their heart endeavors for righteousness are recognized, and the flesh and its imperfections are renounced and counted as dead and are offset by the merit of the Redeemer. These are Scripturally classed as members of the Great Prophet, Priest, King and Mediator between God and men. The thought of our text will be completed when all the faithful, as members of the Messiah, “the little flock,” shall be made joint heirs with him, as “the Bride, the Lamb’s Wife.”

ANALYZING OUR SUBJECT

We may demonstrate to ourselves the truthfulness of the foregoing: What is it to do justly? It means much more than not to overcharge our neighbor for the goods he may purchase of us. It means much more than not to defraud him in the making of change. To deal justly means justice between servant and master, mistress and maid, buyer and seller that we should do to others as we would that they should do to us; it means the strict following of the Golden Rule enjoined by the Great Teacher.

Applying this principle of justice to our words, it means that we should not speak evil of either friend or foe; that we should not even insinuate evil. It means that we should not tell unnecessarily what we know to be the truth, if it would harm our neighbor, disparage him and discredit him in the eyes of others. It means that we should love our neighbor and his interests as we love our own, and should defend his interests and guard them as carefully as we would our own.

Justice, in order to thus operate in our words and deeds, must operate in our hearts in our minds. “As a man thinketh, so is he.” If he thinks unkindly, ungenerously, unjustly, he will find it impossible always to avoid unkind, unjust, unloving words or actions. “Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh.” It follows then, that to do justly signifies absolute righteousness in thought, in word, in conduct. Of this none of us is capable. The nearest approach to this is the perfect or just intention of the heart, covenanted by all those who become followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. The intentions and good endeavors of these are accepted of the Father.

As for the world, it will require long years of assistance and uplifting out of weaknesses and imperfections of the flesh to bring them to where their thoughts, words and deeds will be absolutely just and in full accordance with the Golden Rule. Their attainment of this will mean their getting rid of all the imperfections of the flesh and, by full restitution, returning to the image and likeness of God lost in Adam.

TO LOVE MERCY

All recognize mercy as a very proper, a very desirable quality. All realize their need of Divine mercy. All should know that the Divine purpose is that only those who show mercy to others will themselves receive mercy at the Lord's hands. Many, however, while admitting all this and while seeking to practice mercy, do not love it. Rather, they love vengeance, and are merely constrained to mercy by the laws of the land, public sentiment and the Word of God. Time and again this has been shown in the case of lynchings. Mobs have gathered for the infliction of punishment, glad of an opportunity for setting aside mercy and letting loose justice, as they might express it. And in those mobs have been many guilty of perhaps as great crimes as the one who was mobbed. "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

WALK HUMBLY WITH THY GOD

By a strange perversity of our fallen nature, those most able and willing to follow the first two requirements are apt to be the most delinquent in this third requirement. In a word, the just and merciful are very apt to find themselves possessed of a spirit of pride, a feeling of superiority to their fellows, a hindrance to their having a humble walk with God. Those most humble toward the Almighty are frequently those who have had great sins and great weaknesses, which have helped to humble them. Thus the Great Apostle, St. Paul, was allowed to retain a measure of visual weakness as a reminder of the time when he was a persecutor of Christ of the "Church which is his Body" as a reminder of how the grace of God apprehended him on the way to Damascus, and that without the Divine interposition he might have continued hopelessly blind.

The Apostle refers to his weakness of eyes as a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan permitted to buffet him. The Lord declined to remove the affliction, doubtless because it would keep the Apostle humble enough to attend properly to the great work God had for him to do without being puffed up to his own injury. The Divine message was, "My grace is sufficient for thee; my strength is made perfect in weakness." Realizing the import of this the Apostle cried out, "Rather, therefore, will I glory in mine infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

And so may all God's people, while realizing their inability to live up to these Divine requirements, rejoice in the Divine provision on their behalf that God's grace is sufficient for them, where their weakness is recognized and confessed and abhorred, and his mercy appreciated, sought and accepted.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE NOT THE CHRISTIAN'S HEAVEN

“For David is not ascended into the heavens.” Acts 2:34

The Old Testament Scriptures we accept as of equal authority with the New Testament, said Pastor Russell, because Jesus and the Apostles so accepted them, and indeed based all of their teachings upon them. The false impression which has gone abroad amongst Christian people, that the Old Testament Scriptures are obsolete, that their predictions have all been fulfilled, is very erroneous. This has greatly hindered Bible study, and has paved the way to grievous errors. It should be remembered that the Old Testament represents the only Divine revelation made to man during the 4158 years from the creation to the time when Jesus at His baptism was proclaimed “the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world.”

In all the Old Testament, from Genesis to Malachi, not a single suggestion is offered of a change of nature from human to spiritual, nor of any other heaven than that which God had originally provided for man the Garden of Eden. The hopes inspired in Israel by the Divine promises pointed them forward to the time when God's blessing would obliterate the curse of sin and death and uplift mankind from present degradation, back to the original perfection. The Seed of the woman, it was promised, should ultimately “crush the Serpent's head,” destroying the evil that is in the world, and establishing a reign of righteousness instead of the reign of sin and death. Messiah, as Emmanuel, would bring these great blessings to Israel; and, through Israel, they would be spread amongst all nations by Divine power. Paradise, lost through disobedience, will be restored by Messiah.

Instead of expecting a change of nature from human to spiritual, the teachings of the Old Testament led the Israelites to expect that God would make no change from His original purpose. He made not the earth to be destroyed by fire nor to be perpetually under the cloud of sin and death (Ecc. 1:4). He formed it to be inhabited by a human race, in His own image and likeness, Adam in his original purity being a sample.

DAVID'S SOUL IN HELL

As the Old Testament tells nothing about a heavenly condition, likewise it tells nothing about a hell of fire or torment. Such devilish theories were invented by the heathen, from whom many Christians have since absorbed more or less of the false doctrines. The Law and the Prophets do refer to hell some sixty-six times, but the hell which they teach is the grave, the tomb, the state of death. From first to last all mankind, both good and bad, go to hell, sheol, the tomb. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the Prophets died without giving the slightest intimation of Purgatorial suffering for anybody, or a hell of eternal torture.

The writers of the New Testament were also Jews, and it might here be noted that nowhere did they describe the Hell and Purgatory which we Protestants and Catholics conjured up during the Dark Ages. The New Testament, written in Greek, is in full accord with the Old Testament, written in Hebrew the sheol of the latter is the hades of the former. Unfortunately our translators have, in the English Bible, mixed things up in a terrible fashion, giving us hell and pit and grave as synonymous interpretations of sheol and hades. "Orthodoxy" made hell fiery and thus our eyes of understanding have been darkened through the machinations of our great Adversary, "the Prince of darkness."

But all this demoniacal misrepresentation of the Divine character and Plan is soon to be scattered. The morning is at hand; the Prince of Light, the Savior, Messiah and His glorious Church, will soon shine forth as the Sun in the Kingdom of the Father, while Satan will be bound for that thousand years that he may deceive the people no more. "Then all the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped," and "the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall fill the whole earth;" and "to Jesus every knee shall bow and every tongue confess, to the glory of God."

SLEPT WITH HIS FATHERS

All through the Scriptures natural sleep is used as a figure for death, as the present time of the reign of sin is represented as a night time, and the coming reign of Messiah is prophetically described as the morning of a New Day, a New Epoch. "Weeping may endure for a night" wrote David. The night has lasted for six thousand years; the New Day is the seventh-thousand, the Sabbath of the great week. It will be the awakening time, as the six thousand years of the reign of sin and sorrow are the time in which our race has been going down into death into the deep sleep from which none will come forth except by the call of Messiah.

The penalty of death upon our race would have blotted us out of existence like the brute beasts had not God's mercy from the beginning made provision for a Redeemer and for His Church and Joint-heir; and for the Messianic Kingdom; and for the resurrection, the awakening of all mankind, through this Kingdom. It was in view of that hope of a resurrection of the dead that believers spoke of their deceased friends as falling asleep.

This expression is used frequently in the New Testament. St. Stephen fell asleep in death; St. Paul, having in mind the great work of Christ on behalf of the world and the eventual awakening of all, declared that believers need not sorrow as others over the death of their friends and neighbors, but might realize that all “sleep in Jesus,” and that eventually God, through Him, will bring to pass the general awakening of the dead, all of whom are yet to be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Pastor Russell quoted the Scripture, “Abraham slept with his fathers,” and declared that Abraham’s fathers were heathen. He called attention to the fact that good and bad, kings and princes and others, are, in the Scriptures, declared to have fallen asleep. So it was with David. These all slept in the Bible hell in the tomb. They are all unconscious; as the Scriptures declare, “The dead know not anything; their sons come to honor and they know it not; they come to dishonor and they perceive it not of them”; “There is neither wisdom nor knowledge nor device in sheol (hell, the grave) whither thou goest” whither all go (Job 14:21; Ecc. 9:10).

THOU WILT NOT LEAVE MY SOUL IN SHEOL

The Prophet David declared his faith in a resurrection of the dead when he wrote, “Thou wilt not leave My Soul in hell (sheol, the grave), nor suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption” (Psa. 16:10). St. Peter (Acts 2:25-31) calls our attention to the fact that the Prophet David did see corruption, and hence that this statement was not in regard to himself but Jesus that the soul of Jesus was not left in sheol (Greek, hades); and, additionally, the flesh of Jesus was not allowed to corrupt.

St. Peter was pointing out the fulfillment of this prophecy of the resurrection of Jesus from the dead on the third day, when he made use of our text, “David is not ascended into the heavens;... his sepulchre is with us unto this day.” St. Peter’s argument is that David was in his sepulchre and was still dead, but that his words were a prophetic reference to Jesus’ resurrection.

Many Christian people repeat every Sunday what is styled the Apostles’ Creed, which declares the crucifixion and death of Jesus and His descent into hell into hades and that “God raised Him from the dead on the third day.” All intelligent Christians understand that the hell to which Jesus went was not Purgatory nor a place of eternal suffering, but the grave, sheol, the tomb, the state of death. This is proved to be the Apostle's thought by the words, "God raised Him from the dead, for it was not possible that He should be holden" of death.

DAVID WILL NOT GO TO HEAVEN

King David will not go to heaven, said Pastor Russell, and he will not desire to go to heaven, for the same reason that a fish has no desire to perch upon the limb of a tree nor a bird to make its home under the water. As these animals have natures distinct and are adapted to the conditions which God has provided, so the nature of man, even when brought to human perfection, will enjoy and appreciate more the earthly blessings which God has provided for him than he would enjoy the heavenly blessings which God has provided for the Elect "little flock"—"the Church of the First-Borns" (Heb. 12:23).

The reason for this is plain when we remember the Apostle's words. He declares, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know (appreciate) them, for they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14). Only those who have been begotten of the Holy Spirit are enabled to understand the deep things, the spiritual things of the Divine promise, and to rejoice therein as the Apostle explains (1 Cor. 2:9, 10).

And even when thus Spirit-begotten and with their affections set on things above, the Lord's consecrated "little flock" experience difficulty in keeping their affections of the Heavenly things and off of the earthly things, because the latter appeal to them continually through all of their earthly senses. They are therefore exhorted to "look not at the things that are seen, but at the things that are unseen," which "eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the great things which God has in reservation for those that love Him" love Him more than they love houses or lands, parents or children, or self.

We can plainly see, then, that without this begetting of the Holy Spirit, which belongs, of course, to the servants and handmaidens of God during this Gospel Age, none are able to appreciate the things unseen. And hence the world of mankind in general, brought back to perfection and all the way back, appreciating human perfection will be willing not to sacrifice their earthly nature to obtain a heavenly, but will enjoy the earthly, under perfect conditions, in a Paradise restored (Isa. 35; Ezek. 37).

DAVID WAS A PROPHET

On a previous occasion we saw the teaching of the Scriptures to be that the first to be blessed by Messiah's Kingdom will be the Ancient Worthies Enoch, Abraham, Moses, David, and the Prophets and that these will be made Princes in the earth. As one of these Princes, the Prophet David will have a very glorious station. His long career, his "ups and downs," said the Pastor, show us the lights and shadows of the Prophet's character more particularly, perhaps, than in the case of any other Bible character. And they show us a noble character, despite David's human weaknesses and the frailties of his flesh, augmented in power by his kingly office and the misconceptions of kingly prerogatives which prevailed in his day.

The beautiful traits of the character of David on account of which he was declared to be, not a "new creature," not a "son of God," not an "heir of God and joint-heir with Messiah," but "a man after God's own heart" these traits were his loyal obedience and his repentance of everything which in any degree was displeasing to God and interrupted the fellowship Divine.

God's Spirit-begotten children may not, therefore, take the Prophet David or any of the Ancients as their pattern. Only Spirit-begotten ones can serve as examples to the Church. They should walk in the footsteps of Jesus, and may even take the Apostles and other faithful brethren for examples. The Apostle, however, suggests that the Church may look back with profit upon the Worthies of the past, to note their degree of faith in God and their obedience to that faith. St. Paul, however, explicitly reminds us that God has provided some better thing for us the Church than the Ancient Worthies, without us (members of the Messiah), cannot be made perfect (Heb. 11:38-40).

JOINT-HEIRSHIP WITH CHRIST THE BETTER THING RESERVED FOR CHRISTIANS

The "better thing" reserved "for us" who are called of God during this Gospel Age is the joint-heirship with Christ, Jehovah's Only-Begotten Son and Heir of all things, the partaking with Him in all His future work for the blessing of God's intelligent creation. Therefore it is, as the Apostle states, that the reward of the Ancient Worthies tarries until first the overcoming Gospel Church is exalted to the throne with Christ in the dawn of the New Dispensation, now so close at hand.

As soon as the spiritual phase of the Kingdom is established in power the setting up of the human phase will begin. In humble recognition, therefore, of the Divine purpose and order in the superior exaltation of the Gospel Church, we repeat the Apostle's statement that "they (those noble, loyal, righteous, faithful Ancient Worthies) without us shall not be made perfect."

But as to whether we shall be numbered among the "us" depends upon our successful running of the race set before us. Surely, no less faithfulness and nobility of character can be expected of us than of those who ran for the earthly prize. And since all the blessings of God's Plan the exaltation of the Ancient Worthies, the liberation of the whole world from the bondage of sin and death and the final judgment of angels await the manifestation of the spiritual sons of God, the Gospel Church, therefore the Apostle (chapter 12), in forceful metaphor, points us back to those Ancient worthies as a stimulus for faith and zeal, saying:—

“Therefore also we, being compassed about with so great a cloud of martyrs (Greek marturon who so nobly witnessed for God and righteousness), let us (emulate them and) lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the (higher, heavenly) race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.”

Jesus, our Ransomer, is also our Forerunner and Pattern in this race. He ran successfully, and, in consequence, is even now at the right hand of the throne of God, whither we also may go to Him.

Jesus’ way to the crown was the way of the shameful cross, and He said, If any man love Me, let him take up his cross daily and follow Me; the servant is not above his Lord, etc. Persecution and shame and grief and loss are our portion in this present world, but exaltation and glory will follow in due time, if we faint not. Therefore we are urged to consider His example and teaching lest we be weary and faint in our minds under the trials of faith, patience and endurance of this “evil day.”

CHRIST IN YOU, THE HOPE OF GLORY

This expression in various slightly different forms occurs many times in the New Testament. The consecrated children of God are spoken of as being “in Christ Jesus,” whom God gave to be Head over the Church which is His body. We are “baptized into Christ.” This the Apostle explains as the Mystery hidden from the Ages, but now made known to us that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself. 2 Cor. 5:19; Col. 1:26.

This Christ is composed of many members. (1 Cor. 12:12.) The Greek word Christ corresponds to the Hebrew word Messiah. In either language the significance of the word is, The Anointed. In olden times the Priests were anointed with oil, as were also the kings of Israel. This ceremony seems to typify the anointing of the antitypical kings and priests. The Messiah, therefore, is the anointed King and Priest, whom God hath foreordained from before the foundation of the world for putting some down and lifting up all who will be obedient to His arrangements.

This Gospel Age is the time in which the Messiah is prepared. The Head of the Messiah, therefore, very properly, is first; and following Him the Apostles and all down through the Age the various members of the Body. This Age will end when the full number of the “elect” shall have been found and tested. Then the Body will have been completed. When The Messiah is complete, The Christ will be complete.

This part of God’s Plan is hidden from the natural man, who sees nothing in it. Only those who reverence God sufficiently and who are in close touch with His arrangement can see. It was hidden from the Jews, who saw not that Jesus was the Head of this Messianic Body, and was to be a Spirit-being, not human; and that God is taking from them and from all nations those who shall compose this Body.

“YE HAVE AN UNCTION FROM THE HOLY ONE AND YE ALL KNOW IT”

In view of the various statements of Scripture relating to this subject, we see how Christ is represented in us. In proportion as we have the Holy Spirit, in that proportion we are faithful members of His Body, and have the anointing in us. As the Apostle says, “The anointing that ye have received of Him abideth in you”; “Ye have an unction (or anointing) from the Holy One, and ye all know it.” (1 John 2:27, 20.) It manifests itself to us as it would not to the world. We know that we have the mind of Christ the opposite of selfishness. This we can more and more discern in others better than in ourselves. As every good seed will bring forth good fruit, so we, if we abide in the Vine, shall bring forth the fruits thereof meekness, patience, brotherly-kindness, long-suffering, love.

Christ in you is the hope of glory in the sense that to this Christ, this Anointed One, God has promised glory, honor and immortality, the divine nature. Only those who possess this anointing, the Spirit of Christ, can properly possess this hope; for what we now have is merely an earnest of our inheritance and a foretaste of what is to come. But this call is to ignominy now. “They shall say all manner of evil against you” who have this anointing. The world will know you not, even as it “knew Him not.” (1 John 3:1.) This, which we have now, is a bitter foretaste; but coupled with this there is a joy which the world cannot give.

GOD’S KINGDOM

“Of those born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist, but the least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he” Luke 7:28

There can be no better illustration of the sharp line of distinction between the earthly and the heavenly classes and their calling than is shown by our text. The great Teacher freely attested to the loyalty and courage and saintliness of His cousin John, as evidenced by the words of our text. But if so great and honorable a Prophet, why could not John be a member of the Bride class? Why could he not be numbered with the disciples of Jesus and be an Apostle, or at least a footstep follower? The Answer--is that he was not called to the heavenly plane, but to the earthly. He was honored of God in being made one of the Prophets of the Jewish Age the last of them. Although a different honor from that conferred upon the Apostles, John's was a great honor, and we have reason to believe that, under Divine providence, when perfected in the resurrection, he will appreciate the earthly blessings and privileges which will be his, more than the spiritual and heavenly privileges bestowed upon the Apostles and the less prominent members of the Church.

The Lord "will choose our inheritance for us," we read (Psa. 47:4). Happy are those who repose implicit confidence in Divine goodness and who seek to obtain whatever may be God's choice for them. If we have been called with the heavenly calling, let us not shrink back and declare ourselves unworthy and decline to accept the favors of God and to choose an inferior position. Let us, rather, be glad to say, Thy will be done in my heart, in my life, in all my future. "Order Thou my steps in Thy Word."

A FRIEND OF THE BRIDEGROOM

Jesus had a two-fold mission: (1) He came "that the world through Him might be saved" that He might give Himself "a ransom for all, to be testified in due time" (1 Tim. 2:6).

(2) Incidentally His mission was to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord the time in which God is willing to accept the sacrifices of such as desire to walk in the Redeemer's footsteps, and to constitute these the Bride and Joint-heir of Messiah.

John the Baptist referred to the latter feature of our Lord's work, saying, He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom, but the friend of the Bridegroom heareth His voice and rejoiceth greatly. This, my joy, therefore, is fulfilled (John 3:29). It was not for him to be a member of the Bride, but he rejoiced to be a friend of the Bridegroom. As our Lord's forerunner he announced the Bridegroom; he called upon the nation of Israel to turn from sin, to purify their hearts, to come back into harmony with God and thus to be prepared to receive the Bridegroom and to become the Bride. So far as the nation was concerned John's mission was a failure, as God had foreknown and foretold. but so far as the Bride class was concerned John's mission was a success, for, as the Scriptures intimate, those who believed John's testimony accepted Jesus and He accepted them.

GREATEST IN THE KINGDOM

We must remember that the Church is the Kingdom of God now in a formative or embryotic state, but in the end, by “the resurrection,” to be spirit beings and partakers with Jesus, their Bridegroom, in His wonderful glory, honor, immortality and Kingdom work. This Kingdom class is not reigning now, but merely forming. It is joined “on probation,” after the Methodist style. If the probationary period of the present life be faithfully used, the full induction into the Kingdom, its glories, honors and immortality, will surely follow by participation in the First Resurrection.

Amongst the faithful followers of the Master there will be differences, as St. Paul explains, “as one star differeth from another star in glory” (1 Cor. 15:41). We cannot know, and it is not necessary for us to guess, who shall occupy the chief places in the Kingdom. These shall be given to those whom the Father prefers, as the Redeemer explained to the woman who asked that her two sons might sit, one on His right hand and the other on His left hand in the Kingdom (Matt. 20:21).

If we were to guess who shall be closest in position to the Master we would suppose that St. Paul would be first, with St. John, St. Peter and St. James near by in glorious excellence. And yet we know not how nearly up to the Apostolic standard some may be who have lived very humble and obscure lives, have fought a good fight and finished their course with joy. Indeed, the twelve Apostles seem to occupy, by Divine decision in advance, the very highest stations in the Kingdom, next to that of the Redeemer, Who said of them, “Ye who have followed Me, in the regeneration... shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel” (Matt. 19:28). Again, they are pictured to us as the “crown of twelve stars” to the Church in her future glory, and again they are pictured to us as the twelve precious foundation stones of the Church in future glory, as the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:14).

Those called of God to this high salvation, as members of the spiritual Kingdom which shall bless natural Israel and through her all the nations, are required to demonstrate their loyalty to God by faithfulness even unto death in the narrow way of self-sacrifice. As there is no other name than that of Jesus whereby any may be saved to eternal life, so, likewise, there is no other path whereby any may reach the Kingdom except the narrow way, “and few there be that find it.” All who attain to the Kingdom must be overcomers of the world to the extent of self-sacrifice. The gradations of glory will be because of special manifestations of zeal for the Lord and His cause of righteousness and Truth against sin and error.

A LESSER SPIRITUAL SALVATION

The Scriptures clearly show another class in process of salvation during this Gospel Age, quite separate and distinct from the Bride class. These are referred to in various parts of the Scriptures. They will all be loyal, to the extent that they would not deny the Lord nor willfully practice sin. Their failure to reach the status of the Bride is indicated in an insufficiency of zeal in connection with their loyalty. This class is described in Rev. 7:14. They are represented as having failed to keep their garments unspotted from the world failed to live circumspectly, carefully enough.

Hence in a great time of trouble in the end of this Age these are represented as washing their robes and making them white in the blood of the Lamb and then coming up through that tribulation to glory and honor, but not to immortality, nor to the same degree of glory and honor as the Church, the Bride. The distinction in their glory is indicated in that instead of being in the Throne they are before it; instead of being the Bride, they will serve; instead of wearing the crown, they will bear palm branches; instead of being the Temple, they will be servants in the Temple.

This same class is referred to by the Apostle in his declaration respecting the end of this Age. He intimates that some will have an abundant entrance (2 Pet. 1:11) into the Kingdom, while others will be “saved so as by fire” (1 Cor. 3:15). The fire of this Day will test every man’s work of what sort it is. Some will be proved to be gold, silver, precious stones. These the “fire” will not consume. Others will be proved to be an admixture of hay and stubble, which will be consumed, though themselves will be saved so as by fire (1 Cor. 3:12,13).

The tribe of Levi pictured the entire “Church of the First-born,” but it contained two classes the “little flock” of priests and the “great company” of

Levites the Bride class and the servant class, none of whom have any inheritance in the earth, all of whom have the heavenly inheritance.

As Isaac typified our Lord, the Redeemer, and as Rebecca typified the Bride class, so Rebecca’s maidens typified this “great company” class. This same thought is brought to our attention in Psa. 45, where the Bride class is pictured as being presented to Jehovah in the end of this Age in glory, honor and immortality, illustrated by raiment of fine needlework and gold. Following the Bride come “the virgins, her companions, who follow her.” These also will be greatly honored, greatly blessed, though theirs will be a lesser honor. This “great company” will not constitute the Kingdom, although they will be identified with it and its wonderful salvation and blessing for mankind.

KEEPING OR BREAKING COMMANDMENTS

The great Teacher's declaration that they who break God's commandments and teach others so to do shall be called "least in the Kingdom" has caused considerable perplexity in the past. The question has been, How could anyone be fit at all for the Kingdom who breaks God's commandments and teaches others so to do? The Answer--is that many of God's people have labored under more or less of blindness and have done things which they ought not to have done and left undone the things which they ought to have done. As an illustration, John Calvin, noble man as he was, burned his Christian brother, Servetus. Such violation of the Divine commands and such wrong teaching must, according to our human judgment, assign Brother Calvin to a lesser place in the Kingdom than if he had more carefully, more earnestly sought the will and Spirit of God. However, it is not for us to judge. We are merely seeking to ascertain the spirit of our Lord's words.

Begotten of the Holy Spirit and privileged of the Lord to be disciples and to be guided of the Holy Spirit, we should be so faithful in the study of the Scriptures as not to be mistaken in respect to the general application of their meaning. Wrong practice and false teachings do not always represent disloyalty to God, but they surely do always represent slackness or inattention to the Divine message; though we may be sure of the Lord's faithfulness in enlightening all who are of the proper, teachable spirit.

JOHN THE BAPTIST CLASS

To what class does John the Baptist belong, and what will be his share in the Kingdom, according to our text?

Since the call of God began with the call of the Church, and since the Church began at the First Advent of Jesus, it follows that no one was called of God to salvation prior to Jesus' time none for forty-one hundred and fifty years after sin entered the world.

God did, however, recognize the loyalty of heart of His Prophet Enoch and communed with him and blessed him, etc. God also recognized Abraham's faith and spirit of obedience, and Isaac's and Jacob's, and that of Moses and Aaron and numerous prophets and other faithful ones less notable.

Did He not call these? We Answer--that He did not call them to salvation, for no salvation could be positively offered until the Redeemer had sacrificed; nor were they called to the Kingdom, for the same reason, God did tell them that in due time He would bless all the world. He did tell them that in due time the great Ruler of the world would come forth from Abraham's posterity in the line of Isaac and Jacob and the nation of Israel. But telling them of a coming blessing and giving them eternal life are different matters. St. Paul declares that none of them got everlasting life, and that “by the deeds of the Law no flesh can be justified before God.”

Israel’s Law Covenant served to instruct the Chosen People. It was a call to do right, and a promise of eternal life if they would keep the Law. “He that doeth these things shall live.” Israel learned the lesson that a perfect Law could not be kept by imperfect beings. Some of them and some of the Gentiles in due time heard of Jesus and how God has provided justification through His sacrificial death.

SOME BETTER THING FOR THE CHURCH THAN FOR ANCIENT WORTHIES

St. Paul tells us the status of those noble characters, of whom John the Baptist was the last. They were volunteer servants of God, so to speak. Those of them who were born under the Law Covenant, by their faith lived above it and will be fully rewarded, although they lived before any specific call or offer of eternal life was made. Their faith and obedience were pleasing to God; as St. Paul relates, “All these died in faith, not having received the things promised (them), God having provided some better thing for us (the Gospel Church), that they without us should not be made perfect” (Heb. 11:13,40).

“The Church of the First-born” is to be perfected first, and on the spirit plane, “partakers of the divine nature” (2 Pet. 1:4). In due time those Ancient Worthies will come forth from the tomb to receive the blessing which God declares shall be the reward of their loyalty. As the Church will have the “better resurrection” on the spirit plane, so those Ancient Worthies will have the “better resurrection” on the earthly plane. They will come forth from the tomb actually perfect, while the remainder of mankind will be obliged to attain perfection by the slow process of faith, works, obedience, during the thousand years of the Kingdom.

ANCIENT WORTHIES WILL BE PRINCES IN ALL THE EARTH

Moreover, those Ancient Worthies, while not members of the Kingdom, per se, which will be spiritual, will be members of that Kingdom in its earthly phase. They will be the Kingdom’s earthly representatives, princes or rulers, in all the earth, as the Scriptures declare (Psa. 45:16). We remember the words of Jesus to this effect: “Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the Prophets in the Kingdom,” but He said not a word about Himself or His disciples being seen; properly so, because they, as spirit beings, will be invisible to men.

The Scriptures still further intimate that during the thousand years of Messiah's reign, all the faithful of mankind, all the obedient, will be privileged to come into relationship with the King. This is figuratively represented in the statement that the great ones of the earth "will bring their glory and honor into the New Jerusalem."

With such glorious hopes before us, with such appreciation of our Heavenly Father's glorious character and wonderful

Plan, with such a grand view of our Savior's work, with such a hope of a share with Him in His Kingdom, what manner of persons ought we to be in holy living and godliness! Nor should it be thought strange that any of the spirit-begotten now, or the restored of the future, who would turn their backs upon the gracious provisions made for their salvation, would be considered unworthy of further favor or blessing at the hands of God and should die the Second Death annihilation. As Paul says they shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His power (2 Thess. 1:9).

Soon the disciples of the Master will be one with Him beyond the veil, sharers of His glory and Kingdom. Then will come the time when the world will believe. The knowledge of the Lord will fill the earth and all the blinding and stumbling influences of the present will be at an end. The Savior will then exercise His power on behalf of the world, overthrowing evil and uplifting every good principle and all who love righteousness, and destroying those who would corrupt the earth. Rev. 11:18

ANCIENT GARDEN OF EDEN ARABIA THE CRADLE OF MANKIND

"As all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive; every man in his own order." 1 Cor. 15:22, 23

Arabia is accredited with being the ancient Eden, eastward in which was the specially prepared Garden wherein our first parents had their trial not for a reward of Heaven or a punishment of eternal torment, but for a reward of everlasting life under perfect earthly conditions, or for a penalty of death. Here man, created "very good," in the image of his Creator, sinned and became subject to the penalty of sin—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Here also is Mount Ararat, on which the Ark rested after the Flood, and from which came forth the family of Noah to people the earth afresh. Thus was Arabia twice the Cradle of mankind.

Here is the fertile Mesopotamia, which Father Abraham left at the Divine invitation, to sojourn in Palestine to the north, under promise to become the heir of Divine favor, the father of the faithful, whose now glorified Seed, the great Messiah, has already redeemed the world and is yet to take the Throne of earth and, during the thousand years, conquer sin and death and lift up from degradation and the grave Adam and his race.

This is the same Arabia made famous by the tales of the Arabian Nights, and where also is the tomb of Mohammed, whose followers rival in numbers the followers of Jesus, and still trust in the promise made to Abraham, and, like the Jews, wait for the glorious appearing of Messiah. Like the Israelites they are blind to the fact that, before Messiah could bless and heal and uplift the world, it was necessary that He redeem them with His own life, and select from amongst men a spiritual class to be His Bride and Joint-heir in His glorious Kingdom.

And now as the Day draws near that the Curse shall be lifted from the world, when “the wilderness shall blossom as the rose” and “the solitary place shall be glad,” we behold this land of the most ancient civilization awaking. The ruins of its ancient cities, Nineveh and Babylon, are yielding to modern research the records of thirty-five hundred years ago, while modern engineers and modern capital are at work upon vast irrigation schemes costing millions of dollars which they tell us will make that land fruitful and fertile as the Garden of the Lord. Are we not thus witnesses of the beginning of the long-promised “times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the Holy Prophets since the world began”? Acts 3:19-21.

REDEMPTION BY HIS BLOOD

When could we more appropriately consider the Divine provision for our race than when considering this land, the Cradle of our Race, where the fall took place, where the ruin began which has filled the earth with sin, selfishness, sorrow and dying? Ah, surely we greatly erred when we supposed that a greater penalty for sin was needed or intended by our Maker than the penalty we are experiencing! What more could man lose than our race as a whole has lost? Created in relationship with God as a son and heir of the appropriate blessings of the Almighty Father, Adam and his race lost that precious relationship lost Divine favor, Divine communion, Divine care, and were plunged into death condemnation as strangers, aliens, convicts, tarrying in life merely to fulfill the verdict, “Dying, thou shalt die.”

How sternly Divine Justice held to that verdict! How relentlessly, how pitilessly the forces of nature were allowed to play havoc with man in earthquakes, drouths, famines, pestilences and hereditary diseases! For more than two thousand years the great Heavenly Parent showed mankind only His Justice and naught of His Love. And then the first declaration of the Gospel the first mention that Divine favor would yet rescue mankind from the reign of sin and death was made, not publicly, not to all of the race, but merely to one man the friend of God Abraham. To him it was disclosed as a secret that the great Creator, although permitting Justice to hold full sway in a relentless exhibition of Divine wrath against the sinner, had a loving purpose in His heart which would yet find expression and include all the human family in the blessing it would bring. How astonished we are to learn of such

Like the wideness of the sea!”*

But God gave Abraham words only, “Wonderful words of life” that in him and in his posterity eventually all the families of the earth should be blessed. But there was not a sign of change so far as the Divine dealings were concerned. Sin and Death were still allowed to reign, and their reign, and their reign has continued century after century since Abraham’s day. Doubtless it was because God foreknew that approximately four thousand years would intervene before the blessing of the world, that He added His Oath in corroboration of His promise. St. Paul tells us that He so did in order that by these two immutable, unchangeable things the Word of God and the Oath of God we who by faith are become the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, might have strong consolation we “who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us” in that Gospel Message which God gave to Abraham.

“ISRAEL HATH NOT OBTAINED”

Centuries passed, Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, to whom that promise was successively made, all died; and Jacob on his death-bed handed down the gracious inheritance of the wonderful Promise to his twelve sons, who there became the nation of Israel. The foundation of Israel’s hopes as a nation is that Promise made to Abraham, in which they still trust. The spectacle of a faith triumphing for four thousand years is a glorious one, and it will shortly have its reward.

In due time, at Mount Sinai, God entered into a Covenant with the children of Israel, by which He agreed to bless them and to fulfill in them the Abrahamic Promise that they, as Abraham’s seed, should bless all the nations of the earth. The only condition connected with the promise was that they were to show their fitness to be the Divine channel of blessing to the world and their obedience to the Divine Law which was delivered to them on two tables of stone. Full of joy and faith the Israelites obligated themselves thus.

Ah! much they knew not. They did not realize their own weakness and imperfection through the fall and their inability to fulfill the Divine requirements, the spirit of the Law of their Covenant. They soon found that while the law said, "He that doeth these things shall live," they were not able to do those things; and therefore they were all dying like other men. Had God deceived them and entrapped them? No. God's proposition was simple enough. He was merely teaching them a great lesson that sin as a disease had taken hold upon humanity, and that, however willing they might be, all were weak and perverse in the flesh and unable to fulfill their good intentions.

ISRAEL'S PROMISED DELIVERER

As a consolation God assured Israel that He would send the Deliverer, One still greater than Moses who had delivered them from the Egyptian bondage. This greater Deliverer would deliver them from the greater bondage of sin and death, so that they would be able to obey the Divine Law and be used of God in blessing and instructing other nations. This Greater than Moses they were assured would inaugurate a New Law Covenant, based upon better sacrifices than the blood of bulls and goats, and He was known to them as Messiah, the Messenger of the New Covenant. In Him, therefore, they came to hope; for Him they waited; in the prospect of His coming they delighted.

But although the Law Covenant made nothing perfect although it did not accomplish the thing Israel had hoped, it did accomplish much. It served to lift that one nation, religiously, high above all the other nations of their day, so that when the time came for God to send His Son into the world to be man's Redeemer to die, the Just for the unjust, for man's reconciliation, as the Atonement for his sin at that time there were a few thousand saintly Jews who waited for the consolation, the comfort, the blessing which God had promised them through Messiah release from the bondage of sin and death.

Thus the Law was pedagogue, a servant, to lead the Israelites to the Great Teacher; and at Pentecost and subsequently, several thousand of them thus led entered the School of Christ to be His disciples, to walk in His steps, to suffer with Him and later on, in due time, to reign with Him.

Moreover, during the sixteen centuries between Moses and Jesus a saintly class was manifested, all of whose names are written in the book of God's remembrance. It is not theirs to be the Bride of Messiah; it is not theirs to be counted in as members of the Body of Christ, which is the Church, for those members all followed the Head, none of them preceded Him.

These Ancient Worthies were not begotten of the Holy Spirit to a new nature, to be new creatures, in Christ, but "They had this testimony that they pleased God." They have the Scriptural testimony, therefore, that they shall be accounted worthy of "a better resurrection" than the remainder of mankind although their resurrection will not be with the Bride of Christ will not be the Chief Resurrection, to spirit nature, spirit bodies, etc. Those Ancient Worthies will come forth from the tomb after the completion of the Church, after her establishment in glory. They will come forth perfect men, of human nature, the image and likeness of God in the flesh, as was Adam. Great will be their degree of honor as they shall be used of Messiah as “princes in all the earth,” for the blessing of Israel and all of every nation, people, kindred and tongue.

ABRAHAM’S SEED THE ELECT

But Abraham was to have a still higher Seed, numerically less, for it is written. “Thy Seed shall be as the stars of heaven, and as the sand of the seashore.” That superior Abrahamic Seed “as the stars of Heaven,” a Spiritual Seed must be developed and glorified first, before the blessing can come to his earthly seed.

St. Paul, explaining the situation, says that the Law Covenant was added to fill up the time between Abraham and the proper time for the Spiritual Seed, The Christ. It “was added because of transgression” because sin had abounded in the world and so degraded humanity that it was necessary to lift up as a standard of righteousness the Law of the Ten Commandments, to take the place of the Divine Law which was originally written in Adam’s character. When he was created in the image and likeness of God Adam needed no Tables of Law to teach him right from wrong, even as God needs none.

St. Paul explains further, saying, “Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the Election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded.” (Romans 11:7.) Israel desired to be the Bride of Messiah to have the very choicest blessings which God had to give. And Israel got that so far as its people were prepared therefor. The “Elect” obtained it a remnant of Israel, numerically small as compared to the whole, were found upon test to be “Israelites indeed in whom was no guile”; and these became the nucleus of Messiah’s Bride class.

GOSPEL PREACHED FIRST TO JEWS

That every “Israelite indeed” might be found, the Gospel Message at first was exclusively theirs, and the first Gentile convert, Cornelius, was not admitted to Divine favor in this respect until three and a half years after the cross. Yea, still later, when the Apostles preached the Gospel to every creature, to people of every country and nationality, as well as to the Jew to whom it was originally confined, they still gave the Jew the preference up to the year A. D. 70, when the Jewish polity perished. St. Paul declared this publicly to the Jews, saying “It was necessary that the Gospel be preached first to you, but seeing ye count yourselves unworthy of the grace of God, lo, we turn unto the Gentiles, for thus it is written in the Prophets.”

We see, then, that the nucleus of the elect Church which should become the Bride of Christ at His Second Coming was Jewish, and that God's favor to the Gentiles was His permitting of them to come in and fill up the foreordained number of the elect Church, though only after all worthy Jews had been called and accepted. And now, as Jesus foretold, the Gospel or good news of His coming Kingdom is being preached in all the world "for a witness," to gather from every nation people, kindred and tongue the saintly ones to be sharers with the Jewish nucleus in the great honor of becoming Messiah's Bride and Joint-heir. We are to clearly distinguish between the witnessing of these matters amongst all nations, for the gathering out of an "elect" few, and the blessing of all nations under the Kingdom which will come later on. A failure to see this has caused confusion in many minds.

HEIRS OF THE PROMISE

We must never lose sight of the kernel of this Gospel Message. The ultimate blessing of the Messianic Kingdom, through the Seed of Abraham, will be to all the families of the earth, but, previously, the Divine work is the calling of the Seed of Abraham, which is to do that work of blessing. The promise was not made to all the families of the earth but to Abraham and his Seed. Hence the heirs of the promise are not all the families of the earth, but the Seed of Abraham.

To the saints of Galatia, who had been Gentiles but had accepted Jesus and were trusting to become joint-heirs with God's dear Son in His Messianic Kingdom, as members of His Bride Elect, St. Paul writes, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's Seed, and heirs according to the Promise." (Gal. 3:29) How strange that we should have lost sight of this great inheritance! With our Lord, as Abraham's Seed, we shall inherit the earth; as it is written, "I will give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession."

No wonder the Apostles frequently reminded the brethren of this great inheritance which God has in reservation for the faithful. No wonder one of them writes, "All things are yours, for ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's"! Adam and his entire race are to be turned over to Christ Jesus the Redeemer purchased by His precious blood. Then we, as His Bride Consort, are to share with Him that great inheritance, and to co-labor with Him in bringing order out of present confusion. Satan is to be bound; all the forces of darkness are to be overthrown and restrained. The light of the knowledge of God, as a glorious Sun of Righteousness, is to arise; and its healing beams are to flood the earth, carrying with them life, peace, joy, rest to the Jew first, but eventually to every nation, people, kindred and tongue.

THE GREAT PYRAMID A DIVINE ORACLE

ITS SYMBOLIC TEACHINGS CORROBORATE BIBLE'S STATEMENTS

The following article is contributed by PASTOR RUSSELL, who has made repeated visits to the GREAT PYRAMID of Gizeh, and has been the discoverer of many valuable symbolisms, hitherto hidden in its mysterious passages. For a complete and detailed study of the subject we commend his illustrated book entitled "THE DIVINE PLAN AND THE GREAT PYRAMID."

"In that day there shall be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, for a sign and for a witness." (Isa. 19:19, 20.) Not only did God mention prophetically the great Pyramid in Isaiah, but also in Jer. 32:20, where we read that "He set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day."

It is intensely interesting to visit this land of the Pharaohs, at one time so intimately associated with God's "chosen people" Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph and his brethren. It is interesting to imagine ourselves back at the period of the Exodus of the Israelites, to note the place where the Israelites probably crossed the tongue of the Red Sea upon the sandbar made bare by a strong wind. It was interesting to visit what the Arabs still designate the "Wells of Moses," and to note that they are still brackish or bitter springs, "Waters of Marah."

But to me the most interesting thing in this ancient land is the Great Pyramid referred to in our text. Its location is remarkable, and its size centuries ago marked it as one of the Seven Wonders of the world a building covering nearly thirteen acres. Its scientific lessons brought forth during the past fifty years by astronomers and other scientists are still more wonderful, but most wonderful of all to us are its prophetic teachings, first brought to our attention by Prof. Piazzzi Smyth, Astronomer Royal for Scotland, and others.

The Pyramid is located on an elevated, level plain overlooking the river Nile. Peculiarly, the delta of the Nile forms a sea coast, which in shape is a true quarter circle, with the Great Pyramid marking the center angle. This was discovered by Mr. Mitchell, of the United States Coast Survey, in 1868. He observed the regularity of the curvature around the whole of Egypt's northern coast, and, seeking the explanation found that the fan-like delta started from the Pyramid; and he exclaimed, "That stone witness is in a more important physical situation than any other building erected by man.” This fits Isaiah’s description, “An altar in the midst of the land of Egypt, a pillar at the border thereof.”

SOME SCIENTIFIC LESSONS

I must not attempt here a presentation of the scientific details of this great Monument which is now speaking to the world, both on scientific and religious subjects. I can only hope to arouse sufficient interest to lead you, dear readers, to learn the particulars. I will merely offer some suggestions by way of bringing your curiosity to the point of investigation.

Scientists tell us that the measurement of its base on the four sides, at the level of its sockets, when added, gives as many pyramid cubits as there are days in four years, to the fraction including the leap-year fraction. The diagonal measurements across the base, N. E. to S. W., and N. W. to S. E., give as many inches as there are years in the processional cycle of the stars. This cycle astronomers had already concluded to be 25,827 years, and the Pyramid corroborates the conclusion. The distance to the sun is indicated by the height and angle of the Pyramid to the 91,840,270 miles, which almost exactly corresponds with the latest figures reached by astronomers. The Pyramid also has its own way of indicating standards of weights and measures, based upon the size and weight of the earth.

The Rev. Joseph Seiss observed, “There is yet a grander thought embodied in this wonderful structure. Of its five points there is one of special preeminence, in which all its sides and exterior lines terminate. It is the summit corner, which lifts its solemn index finger to the sun at midday, and by its distance from the base tells the mean distance to the sun from the earth. And is we go back to the date which the Pyramid gives itself, we find a far sublimer indication. Science has at last discovered that the sun is not a dead center, with planets wheeling about it, but itself stationary. It is now ascertained that the sun also is in motion, carrying with it its splendid retinue of comets, planets, its satellites and theirs, around some other and vastly mightier Center.

“Astronomers are not yet fully agreed as to what or where the Center is. Some, however, believe that they have found the direction of it to be The Pleiades, and particularly of Alcyone, the central one of the renowned Pleiadic stars.... Alcyone, then, as far as Science has been able to perceive, would seem to be “the midnight throne’ in which the whole system of gravitation has its Central Seat, and from which the Almighty governs His Universe. And here if the wonderful corresponding fact, that at the date of the Great Pyramid’s building... the Pleiades were distributed over the meridian of this Pyramid, with Alcyone precisely on the line. Here, then, is a pointing of the highest and sublimest character that mere human Science has ever been able to so much as hint, and which would seem to breathe an unsuspected and mighty meaning into that speech of Job, when he demanded “Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades?”

SIN'S DOWNWARD COURSE

Prof. Smyth tells us that he finds astronomically, that the Pyramid was built in 2170 B. C. He tells us that at that particular time the Dragon Star, the personification of evil, was in line with its Descending Passage. The inference is plain when once we perceive that the Pyramid pictures the history of the world. The Downward Passage represents the downward course of sin and death of the human race under “the Prince of the power of the air,” under “the god of this world.”

History in general corroborates this. The lower part of the passage ceases to be downward, and becomes horizontal to the large chamber in which it ends. That chamber, wide and high, but with troubled floor, may well be understood to represent the time in which we are living the time in which the downwardness of our race has been measurably arrested, and when mankind are comparatively freed from the superstition which bowed down our forefathers; but the uneven floor indicates “a time of trouble,” into which we believe we have already entered. Theological, social, political and financial troubles are in the pathway of humanity, and this means such anarchy as has been threatening in China and other Eastern lands, and which the Scriptures clearly declare will overwhelm Christendom.

BRIGHTER AND BETTER THINGS

Centuries ago an Arabian Caliph, Al Mamoun, believing the Pyramid to contain great wealth, spent a fortune in digging into its interior, not knowing of its Entrance Passage, which at that time may have been covered with the casing stones. He finally reached the Downward Passageway, but behold, the strenuous labors of his workmen dislodged a stone in the roof of the Downward Passage, and showed an Upward Passage, left concealed when building the Pyramid.

Al Mamoun’s men found that Upward Passage blocked with a large granite block which they were unable to dislodge; and it is still there. Eager for treasure, they worked their way around it and found above it an Ascending Passage of about the same height as the Descending Passage, which ends in what is known as the Grand Gallery. It has the same steep grade as the Ascending Passage. It is narrow at the base, but wider higher up, and seven times as lofty as the Ascending Passage.

The interior of the walls of these passages is of creamy marble or limestone, and the Grand Gallery has seven overlappings on each of its side walls, and both the lower and end walls overhang. At its upper end is the Ante-Chamber. Through another low Passage we enter what is known as the King’s Chamber. At the juncture of the low Ascending Passage with the Grand Gallery, is a level Passage which leads off to what is known as the Queen's Chamber, directly under the King's Chamber.

Thus the low Ascending Passage, the low Horizontal Passage, and the floor of the Grand Gallery, all come together at one point, and there we find what is known as the Well, an irregular Passage which leads downward and connects with the Downward Passage toward its lower end. This Well and the Passage leading to the Queen's Chamber apparently were secreted by the builders; but something like an explosion tore away the top stones covering the Well and the lower portion of the Grand Gallery, and thus disclosed the Well and also the Passage to the Queen's Chamber. So far for our description.

SPIRITUAL LESSONS HERE TAUGHT

A key suggested in 1868 by a young Scotchman, Robert Menzies, and which began to open the Pyramid's religious lessons, was the Well. He wrote to Prof. Smyth, "From the north beginning of the Grand Gallery, in upward progression, begin the years of our Savior's life, expressed at the rate of a year for an inch. Three and thirty inch-years therefore bring us right over against the mouth of the Well." In other words, that Well and the appearance of an explosion, picture our Lord's death and resurrection. In harmony with this the Downward Passage represents the course of sin and death, leading to destruction. The low Ascending Passage, blocked by the Granite "Plug," represents the Law Covenant given to the Jews, but which none of them were able to keep perfectly, because "there is none righteous, no not one" none capable of fulfilling the demands of God's Law because of hereditary weaknesses.

From the time of our Savior the Gospel Dispensation began, symbolically represented by the Grand Gallery. It is a Dispensation of grace or favor; nevertheless, its Passageway is steep and narrow, leading to the "Goal" at the farther end. As the Grand Gallery has an end, so this Gospel Age will have an end. It will accomplish its purpose which is the gathering of the "elect" of God, to be the Bride of Christ and His joint-heirs in His Kingdom, which is to bless the world.

Another interesting feature is that the Ascending Passage with its Plug represents exactly the length of the Jewish Age! And, similarly, the Grand Gallery represents, an inch to a year, the length of this Gospel Dispensation! It indicates that at a certain time the great favor of becoming joint-sacrificers with the Redeemer, and thus becoming joint-heirs with Him in His Heavenly Kingdom, will terminate. The privilege of walking in the "narrow way" of self-sacrifice, in the footsteps of Jesus, for the Truth's sake, will thus end. "Now is the acceptable time" now is the time when God is willing to accept these living sacrifices, which He declares are "holy and acceptable to God" (Rom. 12:1), through the imputation of Jesus' merit.

THE KING'S CHAMBER GRANITE

But while the Grand Gallery as a whole stands as a representative of the entire Gospel Age, at its top we have illustrated the steps necessary to be taken by each and every one who would constitute a member of the Bride class, to become new creatures, to become partakers of the divine nature, sacrificing all that appertains to our human nature. The Ante-Chamber represents the present life of God's consecrated children. Its peculiar wainscoting seems to symbolically say that lessons must be learned by each one who enters in other words, it symbolizes the School of Christ, in which consecrated believers have lessons of faith, experience, patience and fortitude to prove their worthiness to pass beyond into Heaven itself, represented by the Kings' Chamber.

Before entering this Ante-Chamber, or school, the pupil must stoop low, for it is entered by a low Passage, implying humility.

And no sooner has he risen than he finds himself confronted by a huge granite obstruction, known as the Granite Leaf, and he can make no further progress except by bowing low to pass under it. Granite seems to be used in the Pyramid in much the same way that Gold was used in the Israel's Tabernacle to symbolize things Divine. This Granite obstruction threatens to block our way, and requires us to bow low before it. Symbolically, it says, it is not sufficient that you have a desire for Godliness, and faith in Jesus, and a desire to be taught of Him; you cannot go further unless you make a full surrender to God unless you bow to the Divine will absolutely, in consecration to God.

And here another lesson is taught. From the moment the pupil bows under the Granite obstruction he begins to tread on the same Granite floor which constitutes the floor of the King's Chamber. The lesson seems to be that from the moment of full consecration the disciple of Christ is begotten of the Holy Spirit to the divine nature, symbolized by the Granite. His new standing thus declares him in Scriptural language a New Creature.

The passage leading from the Ante-Chamber to the King's Chamber is just as low as the Granite obstruction, which seems to say that as the one represents a condition of death of the will, the other represents actual death only by actual death could our Savior or any of His followers pass into the heavenly state, symbolized by the King's Chamber; for, as St. Paul declares, "We must all be changed," because "flesh and blood cannot enter the Kingdom of God."

We understand the Horizontal Passageway leading to the Queen's Chamber to symbolically represent the trials and testings that will be upon the human family incidental to attaining human perfection under the glorious reign of Messiah, when the Church as the Bride of Christ will be associated with her Lord in effecting human restitution to all the willing and obedient. Acts 3:19-23.

If, as we believe, God has in this great mountain of stone caused, to be outlined the Divine Plan of the Ages, it undoubtedly will tell its wonderful story in trumpet tones, "in that day." What we can appreciate of its teachings in harmony with the Bible we find wonder-fully comforting in this day when skepticism is so rife.

At this time, particularly, it is refreshing to Christian faith to find not only the Bible itself opening before us, and one quotation illuminating another and all uniting in the testimony that God is Love, but that the Messianic Kingdom so long promised is at hand, and that it will bring, as foretold, great joy to all people, with the best opportunity for returning to Divine favor and everlasting life. At this time it refreshes our hearts to note the Testimony of God's great Stone Witness in the land of Egypt testifying to Divine foreknowledge of the evil that has been upon the world, and respecting the Divine arrangement for the election of the Church, and through it, as Messiah's Kingdom, the blessing of every creature.

FLIES IN THE OINTMENT

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Mark 16:15, 16.

There is wisdom in the Proverb which says that dead flies cause precious ointment to stink. This is particularly true in respect to the Bible. It is a precious ointment of sweet odor, but certain "flies" have gotten into it whose corruptions have destroyed the perfume of the Divine records in the estimation of many an intelligent and growing number. Some of these "dead flies" were mistranslations; some of them misinterpretations, and some of them, including the text, were interpolations unauthorized additions to the Scriptures as originally written.

MANY USE SPURIOUS TEXTS

All of the sixteenth chapter of Mark, from the ninth verse to the end, is now well known to all scholars as an addition made to what St. Mark wrote. It has been known for years to all Bible scholars that the two oldest Greek manuscripts known to the world end the Book of Mark with the preceding verse (8). And these two oldest manuscripts belong to the Fourth Century. Evidently, therefore, this addition to the Scriptures was made about four hundred years after St. Mark's death.

Why the ministers of Christendom fail to inform the Christian public of what they all know or should know we do not here pretend to say. Why many of them use these spurious verses as texts to sermons without explaining that they are spurious is not for us to judge. We would say, however, that some use these verses because they suit their theories as no other verses in the Bible would do.

Some zealous Christians use this text as a club upon other Christians, claiming that if they are not baptized with water they will surely be damned, millions of them even claiming that it must be by an immersion in water. And by "damned" they mean eternally, everlastingly tormented by fire-proof devils! They go further and make this spurious addition to God's Word the basis of the theory that the Church is responsible for the Christianization of the world, and that every heathen who does not believe and who is not baptized some say, immersed will be damned to eternal torture for his unbelief and lack of baptism. Thus this spurious statement dishonors God, antagonizes all sensible minds, and makes narrower and harder those who can and do believe.

ABILITY TO DRINK POISON

Many Christian people have their faith shaken in respect to their own relationship to God because of the statements following this text to the effect that all believers should have the power to cast out devils, to speak with new tongues, to handle serpents without injury, to drink deadly poison without injury, and to lay hands on the sick and cause recovery. Many worldly-minded people, reading these statements, declare them to be "buncombe," or else that the Church of Christ has lost a power which it should still possess. And yet intelligent ministers quote these spurious words instead of informing the people that they are no part of God's Message and that they are not true.

The Scriptures do teach that miracles of tongues, healings, etc., were permitted in the days of the Apostles for the purpose of establishing the infant Church. But it is true that such powers were communicated, according to the Scriptures, by the laying on of the Apostles' hands; and hence, as soon as the Apostles were dead and those upon whom they had laid their hands, and consecutively those who had received the Apostolic blessing and gifts of the Holy Spirit were dead, all those miracles and healings naturally ceased, as St. Paul foretold. 1 Cor. 13:8

LET HIM THAT HATH AN EAR HEAR THE GOOD NEWS

While the Gospel is to be preached in every nation, it is not with a view to converting all of mankind, but, as many Scriptures show, as a witness to the world and for the selection from among the world of a “little flock” of saints—“called, chosen and faithful” to constitute Messiah’s associates in His Mediatorial Kingdom, which shortly is to bless humanity with glorious opportunities of knowledge and uplifting influences, which will restore the willing and obedient to full harmony with God, full release from sin and death, sorrow and pain, to life eternal as perfect men in a world-wide “Paradise restored.”

The object and purpose of the Gospel everywhere not to the Jew only, but to every people can be easily demonstrated to all having faith in God. To claim that God intended the Gospel to convert the world, and to know that it has not done so, is to destroy faith in God and to destroy hope in respect to any glorious outcome to the Divine Plan of Salvation; for those who claim that God intended the preaching of the Gospel to accomplish the world’s conversion must admit that it has accomplished no such purpose; and if God’s Plan has been a failure for eighteen centuries what hope could any one have that it ever would be a success?

On the contrary, however, the Scriptures declare that the purpose and object of the Gospel is to gather out an “elect” or select class from amongst humanity to test and approve this “little flock” as to their willingness to follow in the footsteps of their Redeemer, and to glorify these by the power of the “First Resurrection” in the end of this Age, when the foreordained number shall have been selected. This, the proper view of the Gospel of Christ, is fully upheld and substantiated as true by the history of eighteen centuries. Thus we are seeing fulfilled the Divine Message through the Prophet, “My Word that has gone forth out of My mouth shall not return unto Me void. It shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.” It is sent to gather the elect and it will accomplish the Divine intention.

WHEN SIN AND DEATH WILL CEASE

After the Gospel Message shall have selected the saints, and after God shall have glorified them as joint-heirs with Christ in His Kingdom, a totally different salvation will begin and operate along quite different lines! No longer will matters be left to the stammering tongues and to the dull and deaf ears and blinded eyes of the understanding! No longer will sin and death reign! No longer will darkness, ignorance and superstition cover the earth! On the contrary, then the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His beams. The whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God. The King shall reign in righteousness on the spirit plane and His Princes in all the earth.

3H17

END OF THE AGE A PERILOUS TIME

“In the last days perilous times shall come; men shall be traitors, heady,... lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.” 2 Tim. 3:4

The expression, “the last days,” refers, not to the end of the world as many expect this event, but is a Scriptural designation of the present time, the end of this Age, when the Reign of Righteousness is about to begin. “The Harvest is the end of the Age.” (Matt. 13:39 Diaglott.) The warning given by the Apostle is that instead of the world’s being converted to God at this time, the reverse condition will prevail. It will be a time of great peril for those who have started out to follow Christ. It will not be so perilous a time for the world.

The only ones who are on trial for life or death are those who have been released from the Adamic condemnation. To these the time described by St. Paul will be one of severe testing. The whole course of the world will be turned aside from the high standard that might have been expected. Men will be traitors. Only as long as it will be of advantage to them to perform a contract will they do so. It will be a time when every man’s hand will be lifted against his neighbor. Selfishness will be rampant. There will be manifest headiness and self-conceit. Men will be “lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.” This condition is to be a sign of the end of the Age.

PREVALENCE OF THESE CONDITIONS

Every thoughtful person must perceive that this condition of things is prevailing now. Whenever a contract is found to be unsatisfactory whether it be a marriage contract or a business contract the dissatisfied contractor is liable to break the agreement. This party to the contract then assumes the attitude of one who declares, Force me to keep it if you can. The Lord’s people will be firm for principle and true to their contracts, even when these prove disadvantageous. This attitude is pleasing to the Lord.

We find headiness of spirit in the world everywhere a loss of respect for authority. No doubt there has been too much respect for authority in the past. Now there is none. This condition has been brought about by a lack of reverence for God the inevitable result of loss of faith in the Bible as the Word of God. As people lose faith in the Bible, they lose faith in God, and become more selfish and more self-willed. This condition of affairs has been brought about by false doctrine. People think that God is purposing to do them harm.

The Higher Critics have been seeking to put away what they consider the absurdities of religious thought, and to this end have done away with the Bible. Bible students see that the absurdities have been brought about by the creeds and not by the Bible. But the world, losing confidence in God, are becoming more heady than ever before. Even the reverential fear which once held them is departing, and there is a disposition to doubt everything. People are in the condition of mind where they say, "Let us eat, drink and be merry"; nobody knows about the future; the preachers are all confused. Everything has come about by evolutionary processes. Let us enjoy the present. Let pleasure be our aim in life. This would seem to be the attitude of the world. They are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

These conditions of our day make it a perilous time for the Church. Do you ask, Would not the Church, on the contrary, be more than ever led to love God? And would this not guard them and keep them from danger? We Answer--that some of God's people are becoming more and more immersed in the world. The spirit of the world surges all around them. With great difficulty could these come to realize that the whole world is astray in their ideas and ways. The tendency of all such is to have the mind of the world, even though they be spirit-begotten.

This worldly spirit, the Apostle suggests, will affect the Church to some extent. Consequently some of the Lord's people will thus come into special peril at this time, because of neglecting their Covenant with the Lord. Others will watch and pray, and, for this reason, develop in mind and heart. But these are few.

The Great Company class, while still loving the Lord, are becoming immersed in the spirit of the world. Even those who are living nearest to the Divine standard will be more or less imperiled through this spirit, unless they continue diligent in prayer and the study of God's Word. What we see going on about us seems natural to our minds. The way in which other people spend time and money is a temptation to the Lord's people which must be steadfastly resisted.

THE SUBTLE TEST

The Lord's people spend and are being spent in His service, according to opportunity. They are living lives of consecration. The world now has an eight-hour day. The Lord's faithful people would, on the contrary, make theirs a sixteen-hour day. But all these present-day conditions constitute perils. For us to devote to the Lord's service only what the world considers a reasonable day's work, would not be fulfilling our Covenant. Those who seek merely to do right will obtain a place in the Great Company.

But the Little Flock will serve the Lord with such delight that they will scarcely know how to cease their efforts. They recognize that their bodies are fully consecrated to the Lord, and they are daily putting them to death. In view of these perilous times, let each ask himself, To which class do I belong ?

THE FIRST RESURRECTION

“But the rest of the Dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished” Rev. 20:5

The resurrection of the dead seems to be the most difficult thing in the Bible for the worldly-minded to grasp by faith. This must be because the human mind instinctively realizes the majesty of the Power and Wisdom necessary to the reproduction of the same individuality which lived and thought centuries ago, before passing into the silence of the tomb. The Bible makes no denial of the stupendousness of the resurrection miracle—so far beyond the wildest flights of human imagination; it confesses this and calls upon us to exercise faith in the great Creator, the Omnipotent One, whose greatness we can but feebly sense and surely cannot comprehend.

Hence, the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, from its first announcement in the Scriptures, has called for the strong-est faith on the part of believers and has excited the general resentment of unbelievers, who seem to find it easier to believe anything else respecting the dead. Undoubtedly this is the reason why so many who give evidence of general intelligence accept the absurd theory that when a dog dies he is dead, but when a man dies he is more alive than ever.

These properly claim to hope for everlasting life, but not having faith enough to believe in the Divine power to perform the resurrection of the dead, they are driven to the theory of Plato. Indeed, who has not heard Plato quoted by ministers and other learned men when discussing the future life? They do not quote Jesus and the Apostles, because the explanations of Jesus and the Apostles are all to the contrary, proving that the dead are dead, and that the only hope of a future existence is by a resurrection.

JESUS' ANSWER--TO THE SADDUCEES

Note the Answer--of Jesus to the Sadducees of His day, who, we are told, specially denied the resurrection of the dead. Jesus answered, “That the dead are (to be) raised was shown to Moses at the burning bush,” when God’s message was, “I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob.” (Mark 12:26; Acts 7:32) Jesus commented that God would not declare Himself to be their God if they were dead in the absolute sense that brutes die. Jesus' argument was that the fact that God still recognized them as persons while dead implied that their souls merely slept and will be granted a resurrection of the dead, in God's due time and in better bodies under more favorable conditions than those under which they died.

We remember that St. Paul's letters and sermons abound in references to the dead. We call to mind his great resurrection chapter (1 Cor. 15), in which he declares that "As all die in Adam, so all shall be made alive in Christ every man in his own order." (Verses 22, 23) He does not say that every man is alive, but that they shall be made alive in the resurrection. The intermediate state he declares is a sleep, from which, by Divine arrangement through Jesus, they will all be awakened in the resurrection morning, at and after the Second Coming of Christ.

We remind you afresh of his positive statement that if there be no resurrection of the dead, then all who we have supposed have fallen asleep have perished. (Verses 16-18) But that God is able to raise all the dead he declares is demonstrated by the fact that He raised up Jesus from the dead on the third day; and likewise on the Third Day of a larger scale the third thousand-year day from the time Jesus was raised God will raise up all those who have died because of Adam's sin.

That Third Great Day, the Millennium, will be the Great Seventh Day, or Sabbath. So to speak, our Lord gave Himself a Ransom-price in the Fifth Day, from which the Seventh would be the Third Day, the day of the world's resurrection—"the last Day" the end of the present Week of 1,000-year days in which sin and death have reigned, ushering in the glorious Epoch when God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in Heaven.

THE CHIEF RESURRECTION

The tenor of all the Scriptures is that the Church alone will participate in the First or Chief Resurrection the world in general will have no share in it. Harken to Jesus' words on this subject, and note their explicitness of statement to the effect that all who participate in this First Resurrection will be the elect overcomers of this Age, and they will be the Royal Priests, or Priestly Kings, of the next Age, in which the world will be dealt with and, so far as willing, uplifted from sin and death. He says, "Blessed and holy are all they that have part in the First Resurrection; on such the Second Death hath no power; they shall be priests unto God, and unto Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." Rev. 20:6

The word in this text rendered first signifies chief, foremost, superior. It will indeed be first in order of time, too; but the particular thought is that it is superior. Its superiority rests in the fact that all who share in its blessings will not only attain life, full, perfect and everlasting, but additionally they will receive life on the highest plane, being made partakers of the Divine nature, by the “change” which this resurrection will bring to them. 2 Pet. 1:4

The sharers of this resurrection will not only receive everlasting life, but more; they will thereby be made death-proof immortal in the Bible sense, in which it is declared that God alone hath immortality. God has also given immortality to our Redeemer in His resurrection, and has promised the same to the elect Church, the Bride, the Lamb’s Wife, in this First Resurrection. Aside from these, so far as the Bible teaches, immortality goes to no other creatures in the Universe.

Even angels, both the holy and the fallen, possess only the ordinary immortality known as everlasting life an immortality or deathlessness dependent upon the Divine pleasure and supported by necessary elements of Divine provision. The Church, on the contrary, sharing in this Chief Resurrection, will possess inherency of life, the same kind of immortality possessed by Jehovah Himself.

From the context it will be seen that none will participate in this Chief Resurrection except such as shall successfully pass their trial and be accounted worthy of joint-heirship with Messiah in His glorious Kingdom, for it is distinctly stated that they are to “reign with Him a thousand years.”

SHARING “HIS RESURRECTION”

From what we have seen it must be evident to all of us that to gain a share in this Chief Resurrection is to gain the great Prize held out before us in the Gospel Age the Prize which our Lord referred to as the “Pearl of great price,” for which a man would be well justified in selling all that he has that he might purchase it.

St. Paul declares that because of His obedience in carrying out the Divine Program as our Redeemer even unto death—”Therefore, God hath highly exalted Him, and hath given Him a name (honor, station) above every name (except His own He is excepted), that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, those in Heaven and those on the earth.” (Phil. 2:9, 10.) To this end we must all be changed from earthly to heavenly nature, because “Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom”.

It seems a long time indeed between our Lord’s resurrection and the resurrection of His Mystical Body, the Church class (Col. 1:18, 24), but the period is long only from our limited human standpoint not long from the Divine standpoint, in which a thousand years are as one day. (2 Pet. 3:8.) He who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, will bring us also (from the dead) by Him”, and with Him, as members of His Body.

It is to this that St. Paul refers saying, I count all (earthly) things but loss, that I may win Christ (win a membership in His glorified Body in the Kingdom class),... that I might know Him and the power of His resurrection [that I might experience that great power of God which in the Redeemer’s case lifted Him not only out of death, but to the very highest plane of existence, the Divine Nature, with its glory, honor and immortality],... being made conformable unto His death, that I might share also in His resurrection”. Phil. 3:7-11

Oh, the Apostle gives us the key to his hopes; he did not hope that the Heavenly Father, who had required of Jesus a manifestation of His loyalty unto death before He would crown Him with immortality at His own right hand he did not expect that this same God would give him a share in that great glory and honor, except as he should have the mind of Christ and should demonstrate similarly his loyalty to the extent of his ability in being conformed to Christ’s death.

There is a lesson here for us. It is in vain that we shall hope to share the Master’s glory if we fail to share His loyalty, His ignominy to be dead with Him to the world, its praises, its ambitions, its rewards. “If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him”. And the only way to enter into that reign of glory will be through the power of “His Resurrection” the Chief Resurrection.

“BUT THE REST OF THE DEAD”

The statement of our text that the rest of the dead will not live until the thousand years of Christ’s reign are finished has proven a stumbling block to many who have studied superficially. Let us not forget that the Spirit does not reveal the deep things of God, except to those who search for Truth “as men search for silver” patiently, persistently, delving deeply.

It is very easy for all to grasp the thought that Messiah’s Kingdom is to last a thousand years, and that all who shall be alive at that time, all who shall be born during that period, will participate in the wonderful blessings and privileges which it will bring to the human family. They are ready, too, to admit the reasonableness of giving an equal opportunity to those of our race who have gone down into death with either no knowledge of Christ, as was the case for four thousand years, or with the too limited knowledge to benefit them, as has been the case during the past two thousand years, and today only this text respecting the “rest of the dead” stands in their way.

Of course, it is not necessary for us to set this Scripture aside, even though all Bible scholars know, or should know, that this portion of Rev. 20:4, 5, which relates to “the rest of the dead which live not again until the thousand years are finished”, is spurious that it is not found in any of the old Greek manuscripts. It is supposed that it got into the text, not through any desire to corrupt the same and falsify the record, but that in the days when the manuscripts were copied by pen, some copyist made this memorandum on the margin of his manuscript as a helpful thought, and that other copyists, using his manuscript, supposed it to be a part of the original and incorporated it in the text.

However, the additional words are in no sense in conflict with the facts, which are these: Adam, created in his Maker’s likeness, perfect, was alive in the sense that he enjoyed perfection of life and that he had a right to a life everlasting, except as he should forfeit the same by disobedience. The moment he disobeyed God’s command he came under the sentence for sin, namely, death. From that moment onward he was judicially dead, even though the dying process lasted for more than nine hundred years.

FALLEN HUMANITY LEGALLY DEAD

Similarly, all of his posterity, from the Divine standpoint, are dead, “children of wrath”. Jesus carried out this same thought in His teaching, saying “Let the dead bury their dead”. Only those who have accepted Him as their Life-giver are even reconedly considered alive, from the Divine standpoint.

And so, throughout the thousand years of Messiah’s reign, “All in their graves shall come forth”, “every man in his own order”; but they will still be, from the Divine standpoint, judicially dead without the right to everlasting life. The work of the Lord Jesus, as the Great Prophet, Priest, King and Judge, and the Church with Him, will be the instruction and assistance of these for their gradual uplifting out of sin and weakness and imperfection toward perfection toward acceptance with God toward everlasting life. Such as reject the assistance offered will die the Second Death. Such as avail themselves of the blessed privileges of that time will attain human perfection. But still they will not have everlasting life accorded to them.

They will merely be in a good, suitable and ready condition for God to grant them everlasting life, if they shall stand His tests.

The tests for eternal life will come at the close of the Messianic reign when the great Mediator between God and men, having accomplished His work of restitution of the race, shall deliver over everything into the hands of the Father the hands of Justice. Everlasting life will not be given as a matter of mercy, but as a matter of justice to those who will demonstrate their loyalty and worthiness of everlasting life. The mercy of God will be exercised in the bringing of them to this condition, where perfection in word, deed and thought will be possible.

The great temptation which will then come to all the world, through the loosing of Satan the temporary permission of evil in the world will demonstrate which of these resurrected from the dead God can approve and consistently grant the great gift of eternal life. All those who fail in their trial will be destroyed with Satan in the Second Death, while all who prove their loyalty will be acknowledged worthy of everlasting life.

Thus the rest of the dead, aside from those now on trial, the Church class, will not live in the full sense of Divine recognition as worthy of everlasting life until the thousand years of Messiah's reign shall have ended.

SPIRITUAL ISRAEL THEN NATURAL ISRAEL

The Oath-Bound Promise to Abraham the Hope of Jews, Christians and all Mankind.

"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's Seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3:29

The issues of life, death and a hereafter are all in the power of the Lord. He took counsel of none of us, and holds Himself fully responsible, declaring that all of His purposes shall be accomplished, and that His Word that has gone forth shall not return to Him void, but shall accomplish that which He pleases. Isa. 40:10, 11. He owed us nothing in the beginning, and will be under no obligations to us in the end. God gave our race life in Adam, but, as he had foreseen, they lost it by disobedience and came under the penalty death.

A ray of hope came with the giving of the Oath-Bound Promise to Abraham, which declared "In thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. 22:18.

ASSURANCE OF ALMIGHTY'S OATH

Doubtless Abraham and all of his family, Israel after the flesh, drew a certain amount of blessing and encouragement from this Covenant or promise and the oath of the Almighty, which doubly sealed it, and which gave double assurance of its certainty of accomplishment; but the Apostle Paul intimates that God's special design in giving that Covenant and in binding it solemnly with an oath, was to encourage Spiritual Israel to give us a firm foundation for faith. He says (Heb. 6:13-18), "That by two immutable things (two unalterable things), in which it was impossible for God to lie, we (the Gospel Church) might have a strong consolation, (we) who have fled for refuge (to Christ), to lay hold upon the hope set before us.” The context show distinctly that the Apostles and the early Christian Church drew comfort from the Oath-Bound Covenant, and clearly implies that this same comfort belongs to every true Christian down to the end of this age.

God well knew that, although 3,000 years from His own standpoint would be but a brief space, “as a watch in the night,” nevertheless to us the time would appear long, and the strain upon faith would be sever; hence the positive statement and the still more deliberate oath that bound it. We cannot but wonder at such condescension upon the part of the great Creator that He would stoop to His fallen creatures and, above all, that He should condescend to give His oath on the subject.

Our Lord Jesus was the great heir of the Abrahamic promise, and the faithful of His consecrated people of this Gospel Age are declared to be His joint-heirs in that promise, which is not yet fulfilled. For its fulfillment, not only the Church is waiting, as the Bride or fellow-members of the Body of Christ, to be participants with the Lord in the glories implied in the Promise, but additionally, the whole creation (the entire human family) is groaning and travailing in pain together waiting for the great fulfillment of that Oath-Bound Promise or Covenant. Romans 8:19-23.

Those who follow the Apostle’s argument and realize that all true Christians are still waiting for the fulfillment of this Promise, will be anxious to know what are the terms of this Covenant which is the hope of the world, the hope of the Church, and the object of so much solicitude and care on the part of God, in that He would promise and then back His Word with an Oath. We Answer--that every Christian should know what this promise is, since it lies at the very foundation of every Christian’s hope.

How can this hope be an anchor to our soul in all the storms and trials and difficulties of life, in all the opposition of the world, the flesh and the Adversary, if we do not know what the hope is, if we have not even recognized the promise upon which this hope is based?

THE SEED WHICH WILL BLESS ALL

The Apostle Paul referred to this very promise, declaring that the Seed of Abraham mentioned therein is Christ. All Christians agree to this, although they have not distinctively and properly associated it with the declarations of the Promise. But the Apostle makes clear to us that in saying that Christ is the Seed of Abraham, he had in mind not only the Lord Jesus as the Head of the Body, the Head of The Christ, but also the overcoming saints of this Gospel Age as the Body of Christ. This he distinctly states in many places, for instance Gal. 3:16-29. Here he declares the matter expressly, saying: “if ye be Christ’s then are ye Abraham’s Seed, and heirs according to the Promise.”

3H21

“The Seed of Abraham” is the Gospel Church, with her Head, the Lord Jesus; as the Apostle states again saying: “We brethren, as Isaac was (typified by Isaac), are the children of promise.” (Gal. 4:28.) It follows that the Seed of Abraham mentioned in the promise is not complete and will not be until the full close of this Gospel Age in the Harvest time of which we now are.

But what a wonderful thought is involved in this plain interpretation of the Divine Word! It is big with hope for Spiritual Israel, the Spiritual Seed, and no less, it means a blessing for the natural seed, fleshly Israel, and ultimately the Millennial blessings to all the families of the earth. Let us examine these three hopes, which Center in the Oath-Bound Covenant the Anchor to the Soul.

THE CHRISTIAN HOPE

Now what hope and interest has the Church of Christ in this promise made to Abraham? To us belongs the very cream of the promise, “the riches of God’s grace.” The promise implies the greatness of the Seed of Abraham, which Seed is Christ and the overcoming Church. This greatness is so wonderful as to be almost beyond human comprehension. The overcomers of this Gospel Age who “make their calling and election sure” in Christ, are to be joint-heirs with Him in the glorious Millennial Kingdom which is to be God’s agency or channel for bringing about the promised blessings the blessing of all the families of the earth. Be it distinctly noted that the Promise to Abraham divided his “Seed” into two parts, (first) “as the stars of Heaven,” (second) “as the sands of the seashore.” From this it is apparent that there was to be a Heavenly, spiritual seed as well as the Natural, earthly seed. Through the Spiritual Seed, during the Messianic Reign, the whole world is to be blessed.

The great blessing of forgiveness of past sins, and even the blessing of being awakened from the sleep of death, would profit mankind but little, if the arrangements of that future time the Millennial Age were not on such a scale as to permit a thorough recovery from present mental, moral and physical weaknesses. Hence we are rejoiced to learn that in that time Satan will be bound, every evil influence and every unfavorable condition will be brought under restraint, and the favor of God through the knowledge of God will be turned upon the people—“The knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep.” Blessing, aye, favor upon favor, blessing upon blessing, is the Lord’s arrangement and provision! All shall know Him from the least unto the greatest, and none shall need to say to his neighbor or his brother, "Know thou the Lord?" Isa. 11:9; Jer. 31:34.

The prophets spoke repeatedly of these blessings due to the world in the future. Mark how Joel tells that, as during this Gospel Age, the Lord pours out His Spirit upon His servants and hand-maidens, so after these days, in the Millennial Age, He will pour out His Spirit upon all flesh. There will be world-wide blessing through the knowledge of the Truth. Mark how Moses, the Prophet, spoke of these coming blessings, and told how God would raise up a greater Lawgiver than Himself, a greater Teacher, a better Mediator, and under the better Covenant of the Lord, would bring blessings worldwide! Mark again how he represents the Atonement for the Sins of the whole world in the Atonement Day sacrificial arrangements! Mark how again he typically foretold the blessings of the Millennial Age, representing them in Israel's "Year of Jubilee," in which every man went free and every possession was returned to its original ownership, thus representing the blessings of the future, man's release from the servitude of sin and Satan, and the return to him of all that was lost through Adam. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, Micah, have spoken of these coming times, so that the Apostle Peter, pointing to the future, could truthfully declare that the coming Times of Restitution of all things have been spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. Acts 3:19-21.

HOPE FOR JEWS AND OTHERS

The second class to be blessed under this Abrahamic Covenant is Natural Israel. We are not forgetting that the Jews were a stiff-necked and rebellious people; that they slew the prophets and stoned the Lord's ministers and caused the crucifixion of our Redeemer. Nevertheless, the Scriptures clearly hold for the fact that after they have had a period of chastisement, which they have been undergoing as a nation since our Lord's crucifixion, and after Spiritual Israel shall have been glorified in the Kingdom, then a blessing from the Lord will come upon Natural Israel; they shall be saved or recovered from their blindness, and, as the Prophet declares, they shall look upon Him whom they have pierced and shall mourn for Him because the eyes of their understanding shall be opened. We rejoice, too, that the promise is clear and distinct that the Lord will pour upon them the "spirit of prayer and the supplication." (Zech. 12:10.) See also Romans 11:25-32.

But if God is to have mercy upon the natural Israelite, whom He declares to have been stiff-necked and hard-hearted and rebellious, would it surprise us that the Divine, benevolent intention should be to also bless others than the Jews others who had not in the past the favors and privileges of this favored nation, and whose course, therefore, was less in opposition to the Light? It should not surprise us. And so we find in this great Oath-Bound Covenant a blessing for all nations all peoples.

POOR, IMPERFECT CREATURES

*“We make God’s Love too narrow
By false standards of our own.”*

Do not misapprehend us. We are not teaching that heathen and imbeciles and unregenerate in general shall be taken to Heaven, where they would be utterly out of harmony with their surroundings and require to be converted and to be taught. Such an inconsistent view we leave to those who are now claiming the heathen will be saved in their ignorance. We stand by the Word of God that there is no present salvation without faith in Christ Jesus, and that the heathen and the imbecile have neither part nor lot in the salvation of the present time. We stand by the Scriptures which say that salvation at the present time is only for the Little Flock, who, through much tribulation, shall enter the Kingdom. We stand by the Scriptures which say that this Kingdom class now being developed is the Spiritual Seed of Abraham under the Lord, their Head, their Elder Brother, the Bridegroom.

The period in which opportunity will be granted to man is in the Scriptures termed the Day of Judgment a thousand-year day, the Millennial Day. It will be a day of trial, a day of testing, a day of proving the world to see whether, with a full knowledge of God and of righteousness, which He requires, they will choose righteousness in preference to sin, choose life in preference to the Second Death everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His Power.

Thank God for that wonderful judgment, the trial day for the world, secured for all through the precious blood of Christ. “When the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.” Isa. 26:9.

WHAT PASTOR RUSSELL PREACHED

Reprinted from The Jewish Advocate

Who is this Pastor Charles T. Russell, who through one medium and another is making an appeal to the Jews, in fact, is going to the lengths of advising them on internal affairs, from a Kehillah to Zionism? And if he appeals to the Jews why does he do it? The average Jew, without reading a word about Mr. Russell, would Answer--any question of this kind by the curt observation, “another missionary.” Some have indeed so branded Mr. Russell, but Mr. Russell hotly denies the whole business. He makes a point of advertising the fact that he is in no way connected with any of the missionary movements; and those who have aided him in some measure to get a Jewish hearing he spoke to thousands of Jews in the New York Hippodrome would prefer helping a thief to steal, to aiding a missionary in any of his nefarious designs. It was therefore largely in the interest of fair play that the editor of THE JEWISH ADVOCATE paid a flying visit to New York to spend a day with Mr. Russell, determined to report his conclusions whatever they might be. And let us at once set forward the conclusion, in justice to the man: Pastor Russell is not a missionary to the Jews, he has no desire to convert them to Christianity in any form, in fact, he could not be an ordinary Christian and be Pastor Russell at the same time.

He is a realist of the resurrection idea, and has separated himself from all other forms of Christianity, even from the Adventists by certain peculiarities. His doctrine concerned the writer in so far as this, that the doctrine would show whether or not Mr. Russell has a subconscious conversionist purpose in seeking contact with the Jews.

Seated in his study he permitted himself to be questioned by the hour, and the questioner was hostile and critical, but the answers came freely and without reserve. His teachings are curiously akin to the doctrines of the Chassidim, of whose existence the Pastor and his friends know nothing. Of course the Pastor believes in the Nazarene, but it is not the common Christian conception, and what concerns us most his Christ is for the Christians, not for the Jews. He does not believe in the Trinity and regards the doctrine as contrary to all Scriptures.

Reading his Bible literally, and particularly the Psalms, he believes that the dead are all dead till the resurrection, and Sheol is the grave and nothing more. Calculating from the Book of Daniel he has some idea of the actual date of "the things to come," and his teaching and his life and that of his disciples are entirely a preparation for "the latter days." He and they and all those who are good and accept his teaching are to be, or seek to be, among the 144,000 who are to have a special resurrection, and whose Kingdom is to be invisible, in the sky. For the rest of us there is to be a physical, material resurrection embracing all generations since man began.

The fervid enthusiasm with which all this is related would surprise most Jews who take the hereafter, and the future life, as a matter of course. With Pastor Russell and his followers it is a matter of a burning quest. They seek to be among the saints; they want for themselves something more than that physical resurrection which they hold out with assurance to all mankind. And because of this desire they approach the Jews, and more particularly the Zionists, in a peculiar spirit of fellowship. Pastor Russell is not looking for the resettlement of all the Jews in Palestine. He is quite satisfied if in numbers and effort they repeat what is related in Ezra and Nehemiah, but the more they move in that direction, the more they accomplish towards rebuilding Zion. Pastor Russell believes that all nations will, under the Millennial Reign, become Jews.

So Pastor Russell neither practically nor theoretically favors the conversion of the Jews. But our interest in him does not quite end there. The removal of the fundamental cause for suspicion brings him, as a matter of fact, on an entirely new plane of relations with Jews. He is the possible philo-Semite. His particular creed teaches him that the Jews are entitled to their own creed, and therefore he has not the usual Christian reason for assuming an attitude of spiritual superiority towards the Jews. Thus his form of Christianity permits the Jew to be himself, and offers him a measure of praise if he will be it. In the words of Pastor Russell:

“My writings and teachings in general are addressed to Christians. I am striving my utmost to help fellow-Christians out of the blindness of error and superstition and away from the misconceptions of the Divine Word which led our forefathers to persecute your race in dense ignorance of the teachings of the holy Scriptures and the spirit thereof. From an unsectarian standpoint I am speaking to the little remnant of true Christians in the great heterogeneous mass. Those true Christians I am endeavoring to instruct from the word of God respecting the spiritual privileges and hopes which the Bible holds out to them.

“All the good promises of His Word are sure to be fulfilled. I see it in your prophecies. I urge upon the Jew that he turn to the Voice of God speaking through Moses and the Prophets. The time for this is ripe. Set before your minds the glorious heights and depths and lengths and breadths of your Law love to God with all your hearts, and love to your fellows as to yourself.

“Assuredly, I do not urge Jews to join any Christian sect or party, nor to accept the crudities of Christian creeds. My message to them is “To the Law and to the Prophets (testimony). If they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them.” (Isa. 8:20.) True Christians and true Jews should not be very far apart in their love for God and in their well-wishes toward each other, even though they differ in their views relative to certain modes of belief.”

PASTOR RUSSELL CHEERED BY AUDIENCE OF HEBREWS

Four Thousand in Hippodrome Applaud When Venerable Brooklyn Clergyman Advocates Establishment of A Jewish Nation Astonished at His Profound Knowledge of the Hebrew Prophecies.

Hearers Who Came to Question Gentile's Views on Their Religion Find He Agrees in Their Most Important Beliefs
A History-Making Gathering.

The unusual spectacle of 4,000 Hebrews enthusiastically applauding a Gentile preacher, after having listened to a sermon he addressed to them concerning their own religion, was presented at the Hippodrome yesterday afternoon, where Pastor Russell, the famous head of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, conducted a most unusual service.

In his time the venerable pastor has done many unconventional things. His religion is bounded by no particular denomination, and encompasses, as he says, all mankind. His ways of teaching it are his own. But he never did a more unconventional thing than this nor a more successful one.

He won over an audience that had come some of it, at least prepared to debate with him, to resent, perhaps, what might have appeared like a possible intrusion. "Pastor Russell is going to try to convert the Jews to Christianity," was the word that many had received before the meeting. "He wants to proselyte us."

RECEIVED AT FIRST IN SILENCE

In the crowd that filled the big showhouse were scores of rabbis and teachers, who had come to speak out in case the Christian attacked their religion or sought to win them from it. They had questions and criticisms ready for him. He was received at first in a dead silence.

But the pastor did not seek to convert the Jews. To their unbounded delight, he pointed out the good things of their religion, agreed with them in their most important beliefs as to their salvation, and finally after a warm advocacy of the plan of the Jews establishing a nation of their own, brought about a tumult of applause by leading a choir in the Zionist anthem: "Hatikva Our Hope."

A more interesting audience the Hippodrome never held, perhaps. From all parts of the city came serious minded Hebrews to hear what it was an alien, a Gentile, might have to say to them at a service, held during their week of feasting, Rosh Hoshana. They were quiet, well dressed, thinking men and women.

Among them were many prominent figures of the Hebrew literary world. Some of these escorted Pastor Russell to the Hippodrome in a motor car and then took places in the auditorium. The literary men recognized the pastor as a writer and investigator of international fame on the subject of Judaism and Zionism. Some of those present were Dr. Jacobs, editor of the "American Hebrew"; W. J. Solomon, of the "Hebrew Standard"; J. Brosky, associate editor of the same; Louis Lipsky, editor of the "Maccabean"; A. B. Landau, of the "Warheit"; Leo Wolfson, president of the Federation of Romanian Societies; J. Pfeffer, of the "Jewish Weekly"; S. Diamont, editor of the "Jewish Spirit"; S. Goldberg, editor of the "American Hebrew"; J. Barrondess, of the "Jewish Big Stick"; and Mr. Goldman, editor of "H'Yom," the only Jewish daily.

WHAT RELIGIOUS SYMBOLS THERE

No symbol of any religion at all greeted them when they gazed at the Hip podrome stage. It was entirely empty save for a small lectern and three peace flags hanging from silken cords above. One was the familiar white silk banner with the Stars and Stripes in its center, together with the words "Peace Among Nations" in letters of gold. Another bore a rainbow and the word "Pax." The third was a silken strip bearing miniature representations of all the nations' flags.

There were no preliminaries. Pastor Russell, tall, erect and white bearded, walked across the stage without introduction, raised his hand, and his double quartette from the "Brooklyn Tabernacle sang the hymn "Zion's Glad Day."

Mrs. E. W. Brenneisen, Mrs. E. J. Detweiler, Miss Blanche Raymond, and Mrs. Raymond, Emil Hirscher, C. Myers, J. P. MacPherson, and J. Mock ridge. Their voices blended perfectly, and the hymn, without any instrumental accompaniment, was impressive. The members of this organization are Mrs. E. W. Brenneisen, Mrs. E. J. Detweiler, Miss Blanche Raymond, and Mrs. Raymond, Emil Hirscher, C. Myers, J. P. MacPherson, and J. Mockridge. Their voices blended perfectly, and the hymn, without any instrumental accompaniment, was impressive.

But still there seemed an air of aloofness about the audience. They did not applaud, but sat silently watching the stalwart figure of the pastor. When he began to talk, however, they gave him respectful attention.

With a powerful, yet charming voice, that filled the great playhouse, the unconventional clergyman made his every word audible to every hearer. His tones pleased their ears, his graceful gestures soon captivated their eyes, and in a few moments his apparently thorough knowledge of his subject appealed to their minds. Though still silent, the 4,000 were “warming up” to him.

RESERVE AND DOUBT VANISH

It was not long before all reserve, and all possible doubt of Pastor Russell’s entire sincerity and friendliness were worn away. Then the mention of the name of a great Jewish leader who, the speaker declared, had been raised by God for the cause—brought a burst of applause.

From that moment on the audience was his. The Jews became as enthusiastic over him as though he had been a great rabbi or famous orator of their own religion. He hailed them as one of the bravest races of the earth having kept their faith through the persecutions and cruelties of all other people for thousands of years. And he predicted that before very long they would be the greatest of the earth not merely a people, any longer, but a nation. By a system of deductions based upon the prophecies of old, the pastor declared that the return of the kingdom of the Jews might occur at so near a period as the year 1914. Persecution would then soon be over and peace and universal happiness would triumph.

As he brought his address to a conclusion the pastor raised his hand again to his choir. This time they raised the quaint, foreign-sounding strains of the Zion hymn, “Our Hope,” one of the masterpieces of the eccentric East Side poet, Imber.

The unprecedented incident of Christian voices singing the Jewish anthem came as a tremendous surprise. For a moment the Hebrew auditors could scarcely believe their ears. Then, making sure it was their own hymn, they first cheered and clapped with much such ardor that the music was drowned out, and then, with the second verse, joined in by hundreds.

WHAT PASTOR RUSSELL SAID

The speaker read to his audience many quotations from the prophecies of the Bible relating to Zionism, the first one of which was Psa. 102:13-18—“Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is come. For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof. Then shall the Gentiles fear the name of Jehovah, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory.”

Pastor Russell declared that while once he had been inclined to discard the Bible as unreliable, along the lines of Higher Criticism, he had subsequently given it very earnest study, entirely apart from all creeds and theories of men. This study had greatly enlightened his mind and had given him a very different view of the sacred Book. He now has absolute confidence in it. He now realizes, not only that there is a great Creator, but that he is definite, orderly, in his dealings with humanity, in his shaping of earth's affairs. For instance, the first Psalm quoted mentions the time, yea, the set time, for the return of Divine favor to Zion.

So he finds matters everywhere through the Holy Scriptures. In due time David, Solomon and others represented Jehovah in the Kingdom of Israel and "sat upon the throne of the Kingdom of the Lord" Later the Kingdom was taken from Zedekiah, the last of the line of David to sit upon the throne of God's typical Kingdom. When the dominion was taken from him the Gentile governments were recognized, but not in the same manner as was Israel. None of them was designated the Kingdom of God. None of them was given perpetuity of rule.

But Gentile governments were promised a lease of power during the period when Israel would be cast off from God's favor. Then at the appointed time the Gentile lease of earthly power would terminate, and God's original provision for Israel to represent his Kingdom in the world, would return.

These are certainly the set times referred to by the Psalmist. God's promise to David—"The sure mercies of David" were that of the fruit of his loins one should sit on the throne of the Lord forever. The real purport of this promise was that Messiah, the long-promised King of Israel, would be the root and off-shoot of the Davidic line and blessed of the Lord; his Kingdom should be and everlasting one and fully competent to fulfill all of the Divine promises made to Abraham—"In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

ZEDEKIAH REJECTED— NEBUCHADNEZZAR ACKNOWLEDGED

So long as God acknowledged the nation of Israel as his Kingdom their kings were his representatives; but when Zedekiah was rejected it was not inconsistent on the Lord's part to recognize the Gentile governments, as above suggested. Of King Zedekiah we read, "O thou profane and wicked Prince, whose time has come that iniquity should have an end. Remove the diadem. Take off the crown. This shall not be the same. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it until he come whose right it is (Messiah), and I will give it unto him" (Ezek. 21:25, 26, 27).

It was at this very time that God gave the lease of earthly power to Nebuchadnezzar and his successors, as is related in Daniel's prophecy. Nebuchadnezzar dreamed, but disremembered his vision. Daniel the Prophet, made prisoner at an earlier date, was, by Divine providence, introduced to the king as the one person in all the world able to rehearse the King's dream and to give its interpretation, and his power so to do is declared to have been of the Lord.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S VISION OF GENTILE DOMINION

The vision was of a stupendous image. Its head of gold represented Nebuchadnezzar's Empire Babylon. Its breast and arms of silver represented the Medo-Persian Empire. Its belly and thighs of brass represented the Grecian Empire. Its strong legs of iron represented the Roman Empire, East and West. Its feet of iron and clay represented Papal Rome. The iron continues to represent civil governments, and the miry clay, making them appear like stone, represented ecclesiasticism as it is now mixed up with the politics of the ten kingdoms of Europe.

The whole period of time in which these various Gentile governments would dominate the world would last until Messiah's promised Kingdom. And this period is symbolically stated to have been "seven times"; that is, seven years evidently not literal years, but symbolical.

At their end the lease of earthly power of Gentile governments will terminate in the great time of trouble foretold by Dan. (12:1). Then Messiah shall stand up in the sense of assuming control of earth's affairs and Gentile governments will cease, for all nations shall serve and obey Messiah. And then God's Chosen People, Israel, will come to the front in the world's affairs, because they will become the representatives and instruments amongst men of Messiah's Kingdom, which will be spiritual and invisible, as is that of the Prince of this world, the Prince of darkness, whom Messiah will bind or restrain during the thousand years of his reign of righteousness and destroy at the conclusion, when he shall deliver over the Kingdom of the earth to the Father. Mankind will then be perfect, because all willful sinners will be destroyed in the Second Death. Meantime, Messiah's reign will not only bless and uplift Israel, but through Israel the blessing will extend to every nation, people, kindred and tongue in full accord with the Divine promise and oath made to Abraham more than thirty centuries ago.

All this is briefly and beautifully represented in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, as explained by Daniel. He saw a stone taken from the mountain without human aid. He watched and saw the stone smite the image on its feet and beheld, as the result, complete demolition of the Gentile systems. This smiting of the image in the feet symbolically represents that it will be by Divine power that present institutions will all come to naught preparatory to the establishment of the Kingdom of God in their stead.

MESSIAH'S KINGDOM IN THE VISION

Then Messiah's Kingdom, symbolized by the stone, will not only fill the place where the image stood, but, gradually increasing, will fill the whole earth. From this standpoint, said the speaker, it is not difficult for us to believe the words of the Psalmist that there is a time for God's regathering Zion, yea, a set time fixed and unalterable. The speaker would not pretend to say the day or month or year in which these things would be accomplished in which the Gentile lease of earth's dominion would expire and Messiah's Kingdom assume control.

He did, however, offer a suggestion: So far as he could discern, the time for these stupendous events is very much closer than many of us had supposed. The seven times, or years of Gentile domination, reckoned on the basis suggested in the Scriptures themselves, should be interpreted a day for a year, lunar time. Seven years in lunar time would represent 2,520 days and these, symbolically interpreted, would mean 2,520 years from the time Nebuchadnezzar, the head of the image, was recognized down to the time of the expiration of the lease of Gentile power, when the stone shall smite the image in the feet. So far as Pastor Russell has been able to determine, the year of Zedekiah's dethronement was 606 B. C. Thus calculated the 2,520 years of Gentile lease of power will expire in October, 1914. There are some who claim that Zedekiah's dethronement should be dated B. C. 588. If this be true it could make a difference of but eighteen years and give the date 1932. Pastor Russell's convictions, however, favor the 1914 date.

ZIONISM'S FUTURE ASSURED BEYOND QUESTION OF DOUBT

For more than thirty years I have been presenting to Christian people the views I am today presenting specially to Jews, at the invitation of your Committee. Thirty years ago I attempted to tell to Israel the good tidings that God's set time to remember Zion had come. But that seemingly was too early. God's set time for Israel to hear was still future. I waited and am still waiting for God's own time and way for the fulfillment of Isa. 40:1, 2— "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people; speak ye comfortingly to Jerusalem. Cry unto her that her appointed time is accomplished, and her iniquity pardoned, for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all of her sins."

*"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."*

About twenty years ago providence raised up for your people a great leader, Dr. Herzl, whose name is now a household word with your race. While your people were unready for any message that I could give them they were ready for what God sent them through Dr. Herzl a message of hope, a message of national aspiration which quickened the pulse of your people into new hope respecting the future of the Jews. Dr. Herzl's endeavor was to have all loyal sons of Israel rise from the dust and aspire to be a nation amongst nations and to provide a home for the persecuted of their race in Russia and Eastern Europe. Dr. Herzl struck a popular chord in the hearts of the people. At first it was purely political, and the name Zion meant little of anything religious; but gradually Dr. Herzl and all the leaders of the counsels of your people began to see that the religious element of the movement was the strongest, the most powerful.

Dr. Herzl has been succeeded by Dr. Nordau, also evidently a man of great talent and great patriotism; but Zionism languishes. I am disclosing no secret when I tell you that amongst the leaders, as well as amongst the rank and file, Zionism is trembling in the balances and fearful of coming to naught. It has spent its force along the lines originally inaugurated; but it will not fail, as many fear. Without assuming the role of a seer, I answer--you that Zionism is about to take on fresh vigor; that its most prosperous days are yet to come. According to my understanding of the Hebrew prophets the time of "Jacob's trouble" is not yet ended. Further pogroms of Russia may be expected and further atrocities in the land of Romania and elsewhere.

It is sad indeed to be obliged to admit that these tribulations will probably come to you from professed Christians. How ashamed I feel of those who thus dishonor the name and the teachings of my Master, I cannot find words to express! They are deluded. They have misunderstood the Teacher whom they profess to follow. Their thought is that God will torment eternally all who do not profess the name of Christ. Controlled by delusions they are serving the god Adversary and dishonoring Jesus. But as the trials and difficulties of the patriarch Joseph were God's providences to lead him on to influence and power and honor, so will all these experiences and persecutions work blessings for your race and tend to drive them out of their present satisfaction and make them long for home--for Palestine. These experiences, in connection with the voice of the prophets, which will henceforth more and more ring in your ears, will be the providences of God to accomplish for you more along the lines of Zionism than personal pride and national patriotism. It is not my thought that the eight millions of Jews in the world will return to Palestine, even though it has been estimated that, under most favorable conditions, the land could support more than twice that many.

It is my thought that some of your most earnest and saintly people will go to Palestine quickly, that the rejuvenation there will be astonishing to the world. Further, it is my thought that Jews in every part of the world, in proportion as they come under the holy influence of God's promises through the prophets, will go to Palestine sympathetically by encouraging those who can better go than themselves and by financial assistance and the establishment there of great enterprises.

Permit me to suggest that in the time of trouble, incidental to the transfer of Gentile rule to the power of Messiah, all financial interests will be jeopardized. Many of your race, growing wealthy, will surely take pleasure in forwarding the work of Zionism, and soon as they shall realize that it is of God, foretold through the prophets. And those of your people of insufficient faith to use their means in forwarding the Lord's work at this important juncture will, before very long find themselves in the condition pictured by the Prophet Ezekiel, who declares (8:19) that in this great day of trouble—"They shall cast their silver in the streets and their gold shall be removed; their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of wrath of the Lord." The great Messenger of the Covenant who you delight in (Mal. 3:1-3) will test and prove you as a people. Those who worship idols of gold and silver, stocks and bonds, will receive severe chastisement at his hand that they may learn a great lesson before he will grant them a share in the fast approaching blessing.

SIGNS OF THE KING'S PRESENCE

The words of the Prophet, given in our text refer to the close of the present Gospel Age. It is the same Day prophesied by the Apostle Paul when he declared, "The fire of that Day shall try every man's work of what sort it is." (1 Cor. 3:13.) It is the Day of which the Apostle Peter wrote so graphically when he said that in that great Day of the Lord the heavens should be on fire and the elements should melt with fervent heat, and that the earth and all the works therein should be burned up. (2 Pet. 3:10.) It is the Day of which the Prophet Zephaniah spoke when he said that in the great Day of the Lord all the earth should be devoured with the fire of God's jealousy. (Zeph. 3:8) Isaiah, Jeremiah, and many of the faithful Prophets of God prophesied of this Day. The Prophet Daniel was instructed by the angel of the Lord that in that Day there should be a "Time of Trouble such as never was since there was a nation." (Dan. 12:1) Our Lord Jesus Himself verified this prophecy, and added that never afterwards should there be such a time. Matt. 24:21, 22

The Scriptures call this Day "the Day of the Lord," "the Day of Jehovah," "the Day of God," "the Day of Christ," "the Day of Vengeance," "that great and notable Day," etc. It is the Day in which the Old Order is to perish and the glorious New Order is to be ushered in. In foretelling this Day, both the Prophets and the Apostles speak of the class which will stand in this Day when all others shall fall. St. Paul says that everything which can be shaken down will be; and that only the Kingdom which will then be set up, and which cannot be shaken, will remain. (Heb. 12:25-29) The present order of society the nominal church systems, financial institutions, political institutions all—will go down in this time of trouble.

During this Gospel Age many who have not been Christians have associated themselves with the Church. The civilized world of today call themselves “Christians,” in contradistinction to the nations, which they call “heathen,” though from the Scriptural standpoint they are all heathen Gentiles. Among all these various nations we find many religions, whose devotees claim that they have consecrated themselves to God. But the touch-stone by which these claims may be tested is the Word of God. See Gal. 1:6-9. To the true Church of Christ alone will God give the Messianic Kingdom. Some who really have Christ and His work of sacrifice as their foundation will be saved, but at the expense of all their works, their character-structure, which the “fire” of this Day will consume. The tare class in the nominal churches will be bundled and “burned,” not as individuals, but as professed Christians; that is to say, their professions will be seen to be without foundation.

SAVED AS THROUGH FIRE

The ones who are upon the Rock Christ Jesus, the only true Foundation, are those who have accepted Jesus as their Ransom-sacrifice, and have consecrated themselves wholly to God through Him. All these “have been called in one hope of their calling.” (Eph. 4:4) Many of these will fail to make their calling and election sure and will suffer great loss. They did not build properly upon this Foundation, Christ, a structure of gold, silver and precious stones of Truth and of whole-hearted loyalty to the Lord. They will suffer the loss of the Kingdom, and through much tribulation will take a lower place, before the Throne not rulers, but honorable servants of the ruling class. All who have been begotten of the Holy Spirit must, as we have shown elsewhere, either be born upon the spirit plane or lose life altogether. Those who prove wholly faithful will be born Divine beings. Those not wholly faithful, and who miss the great “prize,” though not denying the Lord that bought them, will be born spirit beings of a lower order.

The tribulations which characterize the end of this Age will thoroughly awaken these careless ones. Certain special tribulations, we understand, have come to those who were of this class all through the Age. But apparently a larger number of these are living now, at the close of the Age; and these must go through “the great tribulation,” and must wash their soiled robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb. (Rev. 7:9-17) They will have a blessed portion after their purification, but far less glorious than that to which they were called.

The Apostle Paul in his writings lays special emphasis upon the fundamental importance of correct doctrinal teaching. It made no difference whether Paul or Apollos or even an angel from Heaven taught anything, it must be in harmony with the foundation doctrines which had been given them by the Lord. (Gal. 1:6-12) He assured the Church that what he had taught them was from God; and that even if an angel should bring them another gospel, it would be a proof that such angel had deflected from loyalty to the Lord. That Jesus Christ died to secure the Redemption-price for Adam and his race is the foundation doctrine of the church, which was received from Jesus Himself and from His faithful mouthpieces and which was shown in the Divinely given types of the Law. Whoever taught this fundamental truth faithfully was a real help to the people of God. Yet even such a teacher might help them to build, even on this proper foundation, a faith and character structure which would not stand the tests of the great Day of the Lord.

INVULNERABILITY OF THE TRUTH

This prophecy of our text is still in process of fulfillment. The “refiners fire” is even now doing its work, and thousands and tens of thousands are falling all about us. The Prophet’s query is very pertinent at this time. We see that the false teachings which have come down during these many centuries since the Apostles fell asleep have made humanity incapable of reasoning correctly on religious subjects. In the past we have had our own experiences along this line. Whenever anything religious was mentioned we seemed to lose our common sense. Now we have lost our fear of the dread penalty of using our reason. We have come back to the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles, and we find them grand and beautiful.

Those who have been teaching errors will soon be ashamed (Isa. 66:5), while the fire of this Day will only manifest the Truth to all. No power, no tongue, no pen, can successfully contradict the Truth, the great Divine Plan of the Ages. It is strong before its enemies and before all who make assaults upon it, and ere long the folly of its foes shall be made known to the whole world. “There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE PRESENCE OF THE KING

The coming of the King to possess His Kingdom will mean a personal as well as a national and a church examination, judgment and treatment. It will mean, when the Kingdom is fully inaugurated, the suppression of vice in a manner and to a degree never attempted by any earthly reformer. There will be no license to do evil in any form. The only liberty granted will be liberty to do right. It is no wonder that so few experience joy at the proclamation of the return of earth's rightful King to reign! To many it will mean the loss of their present advantages over their fellowmen. To many it will mean the prohibition and cutting off of sins now indulged in and enjoyed.

Nevertheless, both the King and the Kingdom are not only coming, but are here; and the present troubles and shakiness in church and state, and the general awakening of the people are the results of influences emanating from that King and Kingdom. Though men know it not, it is the work of the Kingdom of God that is even now preparing for the wreck of all the kingdoms of the earth, that the way may be opened for the establishment of righteousness in the world, that men's hearts may be humbled and prepared for the righteous Government which is to take control of earth. Worldly men cannot realize this; for this Kingdom cometh not with outward observation with outward show and display. Therefore they cannot say, "Lo, here," or "Lo, there."

In spite of the awful war now raging, growing fiercer and more deadly every day, these continue to hope for peace, trying to convince themselves and others that the trouble must soon be brought to an end, and that matters will then go on as formerly. They blind themselves to the true conditions and refuse to believe that God has determined to permit this trouble to spread and involve the entire world and to bring about the utter overthrow of the Present Order of things. Selfishness, pride and love of money have closed their eyes. We give here an extract from a poem written some years ago by a Christian minister, which forcefully describes present conditions and the judgment of God which is now to be visited upon the world for their lasting good:

*"Woe to the Age when gold is god, and law a solemn jest,
That helps the boldly vile to crush the noblest and the best!
When Mammon o'er cheap millions flings,
his gilded harness strong,
And drives them tame beneath his lash, down broad highways of wrong;
While Truth's shrill clarion down the sky
peals faintly o'er the rout,
And dust and fumes of earth and sin shut Heaven's blest sunlight out!
Then look for lightning! God's red bolts must cleave the stifling gloom,
In righteous wrath to purge the world in Sodom's fearful doom!"*

But we are thankful that while the judgments of a righteous God against sin must come at this time, yet the ultimate results will be glorious, when the world will come forth chastened, subdued, purified by the awful baptism of fire and blood; when they shall come to see that sin, selfishness and corruption have wrought their legitimate outcome. Then mankind will be ready to cry to the Lord and to long for His deliverance, and He will be entreated of them and will lift them up and bless them.

But the coming of the King means much trouble and the general overturning of the kingdoms of this world which, while professing to be kingdoms of God, are really under the control of the "prince of this world," Satan, "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." (John 14:30; 16:11; Eph. 2:2) It means the shaking of society in a manner and to an extent never before known, and so thoroughly that another shaking will never be necessary. (Heb. 12:26,27) It means the breaking in pieces of the empires and governments of the world as a potter's vessel. It means the passing away of the present ecclesiastical "heavens," and the fall of many of its bright "stars." At present the sunlight of the true Gospel, and the moonlight of the Law with its types and shadows, are obscured by the thick clouds of worldly wisdom. "The sun shall be turned into darkness, the moon into blood." Joel 2:30, 31

While many would rejoice to see society relieved of many of its selfish, life-sapping ulcers, they seem to realize that so just and impartial a Judge as the Lord Himself might cut off certain long-cherished sins to which they desire to cling; they fear to have their personal selfishness touched. And their fears are well founded. He will bring to light all the hidden things of darkness, and correct and suppress private as well as public sin and selfishness. He will expose depths of corruption never before realized. He will make "Justice the line and righteousness the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." (R. V.) He will "bring down them that dwell on high, the lofty city (Babylon). He layeth low,...even to the dust." He will bring down them who have "made lies their refuge." Isa. 28:15, 17, 18; 26:5, 6

LIFT UP TRUTH'S GLORIOUS BANNER

It is written that the Day of the Lord would come as a thief and a snare upon the whole world, and that only God's fully consecrated Church would be in the light and not be taken unawares. Many of the consecrated have been deceived by looking for the Heavenly King to come again in the flesh. They forgot that the only reason for His coming in the flesh at His First Advent was "for the suffering of death" as man's corresponding-price; and that now He is highly exalted, a glorious spirit Being. "He was put to death in flesh, but made alive in Spirit." (1 Pet. 3:18) They forgot that the Apostle Paul also said," Though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet henceforth know we Him (so) no more." (2 Cor.5:16) The true children of God are coming more and more to see how the Master comes at His Second Advent, and are not expecting to see Him in the flesh and with their natural eyes.

We who know that the King of Glory and His blessed Kingdom are the only remedy for the wrongs and woes of man should be pointing the groaning creation to this Kingdom, rather than to the poultices of their own contriving which can do no real good. Tell them the meaning of present world-wide conditions, and how, beyond the troubles now overspreading the world, will come the glorious Times of Restitution foretold by all the holy Prophets since the world began. Tell them that the death of Jesus was the Redemption price for the entire race of Adam, and that His return is for the purpose not only of delivering His Church, but to bind Satan and set free all his captives, including all who are in the graves, giving all who will an opportunity to come into the liberty of sons of God, under the terms of the New Covenant, soon to be established.

LESSON OF THE LILIES

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow." Matthew 6:28

Fear and anxiety are amongst the most serious foes of our human family. They wear upon the gray matter of the brain; they produce nervous exhaustion and are very injurious to health. For those who would seek to walk in the Divine path which God has marked out for the Gospel Church, fear and anxiety are special hindrances. The Savior had this fact in mind when he spoke thus to His disciples. He would have His followers to be without worry, to be restful of heart. But he would not have them be without carefulness. There is a carefulness which is entirely proper, yea, necessary, on our part, but not this extreme worry this inability to enjoy the blessings of the present moment because of thoughts, fears, respecting tomorrow. When the Apostle said (Phil. 4:6), "Be careful for nothing," he was not referring to a proper care and sense of responsibility, but to an anxiety which would rob the soul of rest and peace, and which would indicate a lack of faith in the Lord, and in His care for His people. The word rendered "careful" here is from a Greek word meaning over anxious.

In giving a forceful lesson to His disciples on trustfulness in God, the Master used the illustration of the lilies of the field. The lilies of Palestine are quite common rather a small flower, many of them red. They persist, live, grow, notwithstanding that no special provision is made for their cultivation, and that they are trodden down by those who pass through the fields. Yet they develop and mature and blossom, and have an exquisite organism, which microscopic examination shows is very beautiful. Jesus declared that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. There is a perfection in the texture of a flower that is wonderful. The finest clothing cannot approximate the delicate structure of the flower, created by an Infinite Hand.

The lesson seems to be that although the flowers may be in an unfavorable environment, unable to do for themselves or to take any anxious thought in the matter, nevertheless, God's providence has so arranged for them that they thrive and become very beautiful. These lilies did not look up and wish that they might become great trees nor wish that they might climb up higher in the world and near the sun, as do the vines. On the contrary, they were content with the lot chosen for them by their Infinite Creator. Matt. 6:30

THE LESSON OF TRUST IMPERATIVE

And so God's people are to take a lesson from the lilies. They too are to be content with the Lord's arrangement for them.

Since 'tis my God that leadeth me.”*

In proportion as we approximate this condition it will give us peace and rest of mind. We are not to worry, and not to be slothful, but are to be diligent, “fervent in spirit serving the Lord,” doing with our might what our hands find to do. When doing this, we are to be content and trustful that He will work out all things for our good. He wishes us to learn this lesson of trust.

Those who neglect to learn this lesson will be unprepared for the great work God has in mind for our future under Messiah's Kingdom. God will not have any in that Kingdom who are not full of trust. As the flowers flourish under God's providential care, so are all of His people to flourish to grow in knowledge and beauty of spirit, in beauty of character. And this is not accomplished by some great things that they do, but by the spirit in which they meet the little things, all the experiences of life. God's people are to grow steadily, though unobtrusively.

AN APPALLING LACK IN EVERY DAY LIFE

“Awake to righteousness and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God. I speak to your shame.” 1 Corinthians 15:34

This exhortation is not addressed to the world of sinners, but to Christians, as are all of the Apostolic writings. If we were to translate the text a little differently, it might better give the Apostle’s thought. For instance, “Awake to a proper appreciation of justice. Do not sin against justice in your lives; for some have not a knowledge of God respecting justice, the principles of righteousness. And this is to your shame.”

We who are in the School of Christ recognize that the Lord is teaching us and is preparing us for a great work in the future. The work of the Church during the incoming Age is, according to the Bible, to be kings, priests and judges, to be God’s representatives in the Messianic Kingdom. As kings, they will be sharers with our Lord Jesus in the ruling of the world. As priests, they share in the work of healing, instructing and sympathizing with the world. As judges, they will administer justice, will give stripes or rewards to mankind, during the thousand years of Messiah’s Reign. Manifestly, therefore, it is proper that whoever hopes to be of these kings, priests and judges should now attain the qualifications of heart and mind which will make him competent for the work; for we may be very sure that God will not appoint any who are not properly qualified.

It is for this reason that God has been calling His Church out from the world during the last nineteen hundred years, and has been giving us the glorious instructions of our Lord Jesus and the Apostles and of the Law and the Prophets. All these things have been for our upbuilding in those qualities of heart and mind which will fit us for the great service to which God has called us.

But God is not testing His children according to their imperfect bodies; for He knows that we cannot do the things we would. He is dealing with our spirits, our minds. Through the transforming influences of His Word, He is giving us a new mind; and it is this new mind which He receives into His family. This becomes the New Creature. (Rom. 12:1,2; 2 Cor. 5:17) We accept a new will, the will of God, instead of our own wills, and the Divine arrangements instead of our own plans and purposes. Thus God is dealing with us as His children, according to this new relationship into which we have come by faith and obedience; and through Christ our Lord we are reckoned perfect in God’s sight.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD'S WILL

But how can we be perfect in will when our bodies are imperfect? We answer, as did the Apostle, "To will is present with me, but how to perform I find not." (Rom. 7:18) He did not always succeed in carrying out his will for righteousness. So it is with every one who seeks to walk in the footsteps of Jesus. We all know how to WILL right, but how to DO right is the problem!

Gradually we learn that God will not judge us according to the imperfections of our flesh; for so long as we remain faithful, these blemishes are covered with the robe of Christ's imputed righteousness. Therefore we do our best to show our Heavenly Father that we are trying hard to do right in every act, word and thought. And since He expects every member of His family to have a perfect will, it becomes a personal question as to what is the will of God for us. So we seek to prove "what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

To prove what is God's will means to come to a knowledge of His will, to demonstrate it for ourselves. If we are faithful, we are progressing in this more and more as the days go by. At first we had a little knowledge, and this we put into practice. As we grew in grace and in knowledge, we became better acquainted with the will of God; and it was for us to put this increased knowledge into practice also. This knowledge of the will of God we obtained, not in any supernatural way, but through the study of the Bible.

Whoever has come into the family of God has given up his own will and accepted instead God's will. Whoever has not given up his own will to the Lord is not His child. As the Apostle declares, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." (Rom. 8, 9.) The Spirit of Christ is the spirit of full surrender to the Father's will; and as we come to this same condition, we give up our own wills and take instead the Divine will. This we do because it is the proper course for all who desire to follow in our Redeemer's steps, and because our own wills have proved to be unsatisfactory to ourselves. Our minds and our bodies are so imperfect that we have frequently gotten into difficulty through doing our own will. Therefore we are glad to know and to do the will of God, especially since we see that it is so gracious a will.

During the present time it is the will of God that His children shall have trials, difficulties and polishings, in order that these experiences may develop in us a God-likeness of character, a crystalization of character, that will render us fit to be used of God in the great work which He has appointed to the Lord Jesus, that we might thus become joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord in that Heavenly Kingdom which is designed of the Father for the blessing of all the families of the earth.

JUSTICE FIRST, THEN LOVE

Sometimes Christian people see the doctrine of love in the Bible, and forget that there is a lesson which precedes love. This primary lesson is the one to which we draw your attention today. It is the lesson of justice righteousness. Our text really signifies, "Awake to justice!" We must all learn to distinguish right from wrong and to practice what is just, right. Justice is righteousness.

The Law of God was given to the Israelites at Mount Sinai to show what justice means. They were not asked to do anything more than justice. "Thou shalt not kill," said the Law; for to take another's life is wrong, except when God's own Law demands it. "Thou shalt not steal." To do so is wrong, unjust. "Thou shalt not bear false witness." To do so would be an injustice.

Thus we see that the Law of God given to the children of Israel amounted to this: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, mind and strength; and thy neighbor as thyself." To do justice to your neighbor as you wish that neighbor to do justice to you is the essence of the Law of God given to the Jews for their treatment of others.

Did God give this same Law to the Church? Yes, so far as the spirit of the Law is concerned. God's Law is over all of His creatures. But during the Law Dispensation there was a special Law Covenant which God had made with Natural Israel. No others have ever been under that Law Covenant. The Jew who could keep that Law perfectly could live forever; and, having everlasting life at his command, he might have the opportunity of becoming a part of that great antitypical Spiritual Israel which was to bless all the families of the earth. This our Lord Jesus did. Moreover, in His statement of the Divine Law of Spiritual Israel, He "has magnified the Law and made it honorable," by showing how far-reaching and comprehensive are its requirements.

No intelligent person will question the propriety of dealing justly with every one in the world. This subject has many ramifications in all the affairs of our daily life. The principle of justice enters into every transaction, even the most trivial. It applies not only to our dealings with the world at large, but with every member of our own family. The principle of justice must be recognized with our own as well as with others. If all might get this thought of the Golden Rule firmly fixed in the mind, if each one could awake to righteousness, to justice, the whole world would be revolutionized.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF JUSTICE

If this principle of justice were recognized and followed, men would not be shooting one another today over in Europe. On the contrary, they would be doing something better, something good one toward another, just as they would wish others to do toward them. But men are not living up to this standard of righteousness, of justice. It is entirely ignored by governments and by individuals. The general excuse for violating the Golden Rule is, "It would never do for us to grant to others what we would expect for ourselves; for others would take advantage of us; they would not do their part; they would not reciprocate." Say the British, "It would not do for us to practice the Golden Rule toward the Germans; for we do not know what they would do to us." The Germans advance the same kind of argument.

This course of conduct is not the fear of God, but the fear of man; it ignores the fear of God. God says that if Christians are afraid of men and of nations and of what these may do, we are carnal, are living according to the flesh, are like the unbelieving world. How shall we who have come into relationship with God through the Lord Jesus Christ, we who have given our lives to Him, do under such circumstances? Shall we say that we fear to trust this principle of justice in our lives, that we do not dare to carry it out in every word, thought and act? Are we afraid to trust God and to obey Him?

God did not say that we were to observe the Golden Rule whenever others observed it toward us, and to ignore it whenever others failed to observe it toward us. On the contrary we are to practice it on every occasion, regardless of what others do. Then we shall know that all things shall work together for good toward us, because we shall be in line with God and His arrangements. He has power to overrule in all of life's affairs. The very least that we must do is to give justice to one another; and to do so will upbuild our own characters.

Whoever is violating the principle of Justice, the Golden Rule, in his home or in the Church of Christ or in business or social relations should, if he is a Christian, examine the matter earnestly and prayerfully, and "awake to righteousness (justice), and sin not." Thus to do violence to justice is sin; and so far as our knowledge goes, it is a sin that prevails everywhere. Many have not a proper appreciation of this fact. They do not see that justice is the very foundation of all character, of all right living. It is the foundation of the Throne of God. (Psa. 89:14) In vain does any one practice love to his fellow creatures or even toward God while he is at the same time violating the principle of justice toward that one. Only after we have rendered justice are we at liberty to practice love toward another. Then we may do as much as we are able along the line of love. Justice first, love afterwards.

RESPONSIBILITY OF GOD'S PEOPLE

Those who are children of God are expecting shortly to be made the judges of the world. As the Apostle says, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?" (1 Cor. 6:2, 3) Moreover, God is seeking now to develop in our hearts and lives, in our characters, those principles which He desires. Therefore, unless we are just in our very hearts, unless we appreciate this principle of justice and rejoice to practice it, we shall not be fit for the Kingdom. We should not be unjust even to an animal. Every creature has its rights; and we should give each creature the rights which belong to it. The results are with God. Thus doing, shall we not be preparing our minds, our hearts, for the glorious condition which the Lord has in store for His faithful children?

We are not to think that the Kingdom of God is to be given on the basis of mercy or favor. There will be neither mercy nor favor in connection with the bestowal of the Heavenly reward. God shows mercy in connection with our sins and the weaknesses against which we are striving; but He will not allow in that Kingdom one individual whose character is not suitable. Those whom He approves for joint-heirs and rulers with our Lord Jesus must represent the principles of righteousness and must know how to apply those principles now. Whoever is not disposed to justice to such an extent as to be willing to suffer loss rather than do an injustice will not have a share in the Kingdom.

THE WORLD ON FIRE!

"And the earth shall be devoured with the fire of My jealousy. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve Him with one consent." Zephaniah 3:8, 9

The symbolic language of the Bible is in common use amongst the people. For instance, the Bible for 2,500 years has been telling about the great war in Europe, and has likened it to a consuming fire which will eventually destroy completely our present civilization; and, behold! the Editors of our great Journals are writing freely about the great conflagration now raging in Europe, and our honorable President, similarly, has declared the world is on fire and our nation will be fortunate if we do not share in the conflagration also.

The time was when our forefathers read the Bible without realizing that it contained figures of speech and symbolisms such as we use in our ordinary conversation. Hence the mistake that was so generally made of supposing the Bible to teach that our earth is to be literally consumed with literal fire. Not merely Adventists have so believed and taught, but all the creeds of all the denominations contain the same teachings that at the Second Coming of Christ the world is to be burned up. This erroneous thought has helped to blind God's people to the general teachings of the Bible that at the Second Coming of Jesus the world will enter upon the grandest epoch ever styled by St. Peter, "Times of Restitution" literally, years of Restitution Acts 3:19-21

Practically all the creeds of Christendom Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, all teach this doctrine, that the world is to be burned up. The Bible, all the while, has been telling us plainly "The earth abideth forever," and again, "God formed not the earth in vain; He formed it to be inhabited." (Ecc. 1:4; Isa. 45:18) Our earth has never yet been inhabited, and is not even fit for habitation, as a whole. Millions of acres are, as yet, untouched; and other millions are desert wilds. The Bible tells us that "the wilderness shall blossom as a rose," "solitary places shall be glad," and "streams shall come forth from the desert" in Messiah's Day. Isa. 35:1-10; 11:1-9; etc.

MESSIAH'S DAY DRAWS NEAR

Messiah's Day is the great Sabbath Day, a thousands years long, which is to follow the Six Great Days of man's Work Week.

These six Days six thousand years ended forty-four years ago; consequently the great Seventh Day. This accounts to us for the wonderful inventions, developments and increase of knowledge, wealth and blessings of every kind which have come to the world during these forty-four years. Sewing machines, labor saving agricultural machinery, human comforts and conveniences, electric lighting, and motors, automobiles, electric railways, shortened hours of labor, with the passing of the "sweat of face" which was a part of the curse. And our scientific men in full accord with the Bible, though unaware of it, are telling us that we are just on the eve of the most wonderful scientific discoveries that will still further enrich and bless the world. The Bible explains that all this increase of knowledge was foreknown of the Lord and purposed; and that He is taking away the veil of ignorance and superstition which so long has hindered us.

WINDS OF STRIFE, EARTHQUAKES OF REVOLUTION, AND FIRE OF ANARCHY, THE BIBLE PROGRAM

The same Bible which foretold the present great war in Europe, and symbolically pictured it as a letting loose of the four winds of Heaven to the injury of the earth, points us to the next stage of this great trouble, symbolically styling it an earthquake, and declaring that it will be “a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great.” Rev. 16:18

This earthquake of revolution is what we might naturally have expected, even without the Divine Message on the subject. It is scarcely supposable, but that this terrible war, bringing only sorrow, misery, distress and death to all the parties engaged, will be a disappointment to them all. Chagrin and discontent will be general. The heaviness of the taxation to meet the interest on great debts will be burdensome. Many agree with us that the people will never submit to such taxation, that neither the interest nor the principal will be paid, and that this will bring revolution; for the wealthy people, holders of the bonds, will attempt to enforce payment. Britain, the richest of the nations, has a stream of $500,000,000 a year income from India; but this great amount will not be even one-half the interest-charge on her enormous debt of $22,000,000,000 as estimated by the lord of her Treasury. And what is true of Britain in this respect, is still more true of the other nations which have no such incomes.

But the great climax of the trouble that is before them, the Bible represents as a symbolic fire following the great symbolic earthquake of revolution. Fire in Bible language symbolically represents destruction in this case the destruction of the symbolic earth, political, financial, social and the religious heavens. This the picture which St. Peter gives us, saying, “The Day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up;...the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved.... Nevertheless we, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.” 2 Pet. 3:10, 12, 13

CHRIST WILL MAKE ALL THINGS NEW

The new heavens and earth represent the new order of things of Messiah’s Kingdom. The new heavens will be the glorified Church, consisting of Jesus and His Bride class, which He has been selecting from the world during the past nearly nineteen centuries a Royal Priesthood. The new earth will be the new social order of things under the control and direction of the new heavens. The great King declares, “Behold, I make all things new.” (Rev. 21:1-5.) There will be no patching of present institutions, but a clean sweep of them by the fire of God's anger, which will precede the establishment of the new heavens and the new earth wherein only that which is righteous, equitable, just, true, will be recognized.

Equally symbolic is the statement that then "there will be no more sea." In the symbolic language of the Bible "sea" represents the restless masses of mankind, while the "earth" represents the social order, or structure, and the "mountains" represent the kingdoms or governments. When the new order of things shall have come into power, Socialists, Anarchists and others, discontented with the present order of things symbolically represented by the sea will be no more; for the new order of things will fully and more than meet their desires and expectations. "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." Hag. 2:7

In the symbolic language of the Bible, all the mountains will be brought low, and the valleys will be exalted. These statements do not refer to the literal earth, to the literal mountains and literal valleys any more than to the literal sea, but signify the great revolutionary processes by which the new order of things will be inaugurated. The high ones will be brought down, the humble ones will be lifted up, and general human equality will be established along the lines of righteousness, however. Some of the rich and favored of the present time may at first feel greatly discontented; but so surely as they are just men, or are amenable to the instructions along the line of justice, they will eventually come to see, appreciate and rejoice in the new Divine order of things, which will be for the blessing of all the families of the earth.

THE FIRE OF THAT DAY

St. Paul prophetically pointed down to our day, and styled it "that evil day." He urged God's people, saying, "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day." (Eph. 6:13.) We are already in this evil day; and already thousands of Christians have fallen away from faith in the Lord. They did not have on the whole armor of God. They were unprepared. The day of the Lord, came upon them as a thief (1 Thess. 5:2) and as a snare. Luke 21:35

It sounds paradoxical to say that we are living in the most wonderful time in the world's history, and yet that it is the evil day that the Apostle mentions. This is so because we were in such darkness that, coming into such great light suddenly, many have lost their mental balance. Only those prepared by the armor of the Lord's Word have been enabled to stand.

Notice how fully and distinctly the Apostle has pictured our present distress. He says, pointing exactly to our time, "The fire (of that Day) shall try every man's work of what sort it is." (1 Cor. 3:13) He is not referring to the world, but to the people of God. He proceeds to explain that God's people build upon the Rock Christ Jesus, but that each should be careful to build his faith structure of the proper material the gold, silver and precious stones of the Divine promises. He tells, however, that some do build otherwise with wood, hay and stubble of human traditions and philosophies and speculations.

The Apostle declares that the fire of this Day shall try, or test, all these faith structures; and that those built of human philosophies and the creeds of the Dark Ages will be consumed as wood, hay and stubble would go down before a fire. But those who have built their faith upon the promises of God's Word will not suffer loss in this fiery ordeal. The Apostle further intimates that those who suffer the loss by fire may, if they still abide upon the Rock Christ Jesus, themselves be saved so as by fire; for to such the fire will really prove a profitable experience in that it will sweep away the errors and leave them opportunity for building up a holy faith on the Divine promises.

The trouble with the majority is that, while trusting in Jesus, they have had a false faith, a faith built of human traditions and not of God's promises. The reason they do not know what they believe is that their faith structure has been burnt down.

EARTHLY VS. HEAVENLY WISDOM

The fire which is consuming this wood, hay and stubble of human philosophy and tradition has emanated from our great schools and colleges. They have been inculcating what is termed Higher Criticism as respects the Bible, and this is merely a refined modern name for infidelity. They have been teaching also Evolution, which is as far from the teaching of the Bible as day is from night.

According to Evolutionists, Nature is a great impersonal God, whose first production of life on the earth was in the form of protoplasm. After thousands of years, they say, an ambitious family of protoplasm evolved and became tadpoles. For some thousands of years the tadpoles, reigned as an aristocracy on the earth; and then an ambitious family of tadpoles concluded to evolve and become frogs. Thousands of years later there arose an aristocracy among the frogs, which evolved and became monkies. After other thousands of years an aristocracy among the monkies evolved and became college professors; and that is the attainment of our day. In Answer--to our queries they boast of their ancestry and also of their posterity, telling us that, in perhaps a million years in the future they will live everlastingly in a representative sense in that their children will have evolved to a condition of wisdom and discretion wherein they will not need to die.

Contrast this nonsense, the wisdom of this world, with the Wisdom from Above, which tells us the opposite. The Bible declares that God made man in His own image, only a little lower than the angels; that He crowned man with glory and honor, and made him the king of the earth; that Adam became through disobedience a rebel against the Divine Law and consequently came under a death sentence; that God's foreknowledge had already arranged for this catastrophe, and, in due time, provided a Redeemer who gave His life to meet the penalty first imposed on Adam and who thus redeemed Adam and all his race from the penalty which was upon them a death penalty, not an eternal torment penalty. Thus the Bible assures us that, unless Christ had died for our sins, there would have been no resurrection of the dead, and men would have been as extinct in death as a brute beast. But the Bible assures us that, "Since by man came death, by man (Jesus) came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order." 1 Cor. 15:21-23

The Bible tells us that the whole world is asleep in death during the long night of sin, darkness and superstition. The Bible tells us that as soon as the Church shall be complete and glorified with her Redeemer and Lord, the Sun of Righteousness will arise to scatter all the ignorance, superstition and sin of the world of mankind. The Bible tells us that for a thousand years Christ and His elect Church in glory will be Priests, Kings and Judges for the very purpose of uplifting Adam and his race out of their fallen, vain, sinful, weak condition back to the image and likeness of God, as at first. The Bible tells us that the earth shall be filled with the Lord's glory; and that, as His footstool He will make it glorious. Paradise lost will be Paradise restored worldwide. The Bible tells us that those who will either refuse or neglect the opportunities of Messiah's Kingdom will be destroyed in the Second Death absolutely, "as natural brute beasts." 2 Pet. 2:12

THE FIRE OF OUR TEXT

When we see the glorious blessings that are just at hand, the fact that they shall be entered upon through the doorway of trouble, seems the less important. Our Socialist friends urge us to join with them, saying, "We are tired of preaching about what God will do by and by; come and join us; be Socialists and do something now." We reply that, we appreciate the fact that many Socialists are intelligent; and that many of them are sincere; but in our opinion their wisdom is the wisdom of this world, which, from God's viewpoint, is foolishness. They are not able to bring about the great changes which they desire, and if they could bring them about, they would be unable to maintain those changes so long as sin and death reign in this world. What the world needs is what God has provided, a Savior and a Great One, able to save to the uttermost completely.

We tell our Socialist friends that we know they will succeed beyond their expectations. Like Samson of old they will pull down the house not only upon others, but also upon themselves—" There shall be a Time of Trouble such as never was since there was a nation," as our Lord Jesus foretold. Matt. 24:21

We should follow the course directed by God's Word, and urge God's people everywhere to do the same to wait upon the Lord to bring about the great change of dispensations which He has purposed and promised. Hear the words of the Prophet: "Therefore wait ye upon Me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for My determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them Mine indignation, even all My fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of My jealousy." The fire of God's jealousy, or anger, is not literal fire. It will be the fire of anarchy, by which He will permit humanity to destroy its grandest achievements of civilization.

That the fire of God's jealousy is not literal fire is demonstrated by the next verse, which declares that, after this fire shall have done its work, then the Lord will turn unto the people a pure Message that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve Him with one consent. If the whole earth were devoured with a literal fire, there would be no people left to receive God's pure Message and turn to Him. But after the fire of anarchy and of trouble shall have spent itself, and after the New Dispensation shall have been inaugurated, the "light of the knowledge of the glory of God" will fill the whole earth. Eventually every knee will bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God the Father." Hab. 2:14; Phil. 2:10, 11

A NEW DAY DAWNS AS DARK NIGHT ENDS

"Watchman what of the night?... The Morning cometh, and a night also." Isaiah 21:11, 12

The literature of the world shows that intelligent men have refused to believe that the Divine Purpose in the creation of our earth has yet been attained. Continually we find references to "the Morning of the New Day," to the "Golden Age," etc., etc. Yet not to the longings of men's hearts, but to the promises of our God, do we look for real instruction on this subject. The Bible most emphatically declares that the entire period of human history thus far has been a night time.

The Prophet David explains, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the Morning." (Psa. 30:5). Thus prophetically we are assured that there will be a Morning whose glory, brightness and blessings will fully compensate for all the dark shadows of the Night time past. Our text is another prophecy along the same line. The message of the Lord is, "The Morning cometh!" St. Paul writes that up to his time the world had been under a reign of Sin and Death, not under a Reign of Righteousness and Life.

All of the Apostles assure us that it is not God's purpose to permit the reign of Sin and Death to continue forever. They tell us that the Divine Program is that Messiah, in the Father's appointed time, will take to Himself His great power and reign King of kings and Lord of lords putting down sin and every evil thing, uplifting humanity and granting a Divine blessing where for six thousand years there has been a Divine curse. The Bible writers explain that this does not signify a change in the Divine Purpose, but that God had planned this thing in Himself from before the foundation of the world; and that although He had permitted Sin to enter and death to reign, He had made fullest provision for the Redeemer to die for our sins and eventually to become the Restorer and Life-giver to Adam and his race to as many of them as will accept everlasting life on the Divine terms.

The Apostles tell us that during the "night time," since Jesus' death, God has been doing a special work selecting from mankind a special class, a saintly few—"the Church of the First-borns, whose names are written in Heaven." These are not taken from any one nation or denomination. This "little flock," to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom (Luke 12:32), is composed of all the saintly followers of Jesus, who walk in His steps in the narrow way during this Gospel Age. Their experiences are to qualify them for association with their Redeemer in His Messianic Kingdom. Their trials, their obedience and their sufferings for righteousness' sake are to work out for these a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Suffering with the Master for the Truth's sake in the present life, they are to share His glory, honor and immortality in the life to come. They are to be His joint-heirs in His Kingdom. Gal. 3:29; 2 Tim. 2:11, 12

THE KINGDOM SUNRISE NEARING

Amongst the Lord's people even, few yet understand that Jesus distinctly teaches that the "Sun of Righteousness," who will arise with healing in His beams and whose light will constitute the New Day, will be composed of the Church of Christ glorified changed from human to Divine nature by participation in the First Resurrection. Our Lord Jesus tells this in the parable of the Wheat and the Tares. He declares that in the end of this Gospel

Age all of the wheat class will be gathered into the Heavenly Garner, and that “then shall the righteous shine forth as the SUN in the Kingdom of their Father.”

How wonderful, how beautiful, how appropriate are the word-pictures of the Bible! No one but the Lord knew of the great Divine Plan. No one but Him, therefore, could give these pictures of its development. In various terms and figures of speech the Bible attempts to give us a little glimpse of the glorious conditions of that Day. The New Day and the Kingdom will be “the desire of all peoples.” In that Day the righteous will flourish, and evil-doers will be cut off from life. During that thousand-year Day of Messiah’s Kingdom, Satan is to be bound, “that he may deceive the nations no more.” (Rev. 20:2, 3) Landlordism will come to an end; for “They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat the fruit thereof,” but “shall long enjoy the work of their hands.” Isa. 65:22

WONDERFUL FOREGLEAMS OF LIGHT

The most wonderful thing that the Bible tells us respecting that New Day is that it will bring great intelligence and enlightenment to every creature. The light of the knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the face of the great deep. (Isa. 11:9; Hab. 2:14) “And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest, saith the Lord.” (Jer. 31:34) Ultimately every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess, to the glory of God. Phil. 2:11, Isa. 45:23

What an enthusing prospect the Bible holds out before the Church and before as many of the world as can exercise a measure of faith to believe! The world indeed sees to some extent that great blessings are coming; but just what these are and how they are to come mankind know not; for “the world by wisdom knows not God.” (1 Cor. 1:21) The worldly wise have rejected the Bible, and do not trust it as a Revelation from God. Thus the wise are caught in their own craftiness. 1 Cor. 3:19

THE DAWNING BEGAN IN A. D. 1874

Let us not stop now to discuss the darkness of the Night and its weeping. Let us awake, and take note of the fact that the dawning of the New Age is already here. For the past forty-two years we have been in it and enjoying many of its blessings. But those blessings came so stealthily “like a thief in the night” that few recognized their import. Some few have been calling attention to the fact that we have been in the Millennial dawn ever since 1874.

Bible chronology quite clearly teaches that the six thousand years since Adam's creation have ended six great Days of a thousand years each, mentioned by St. Peter—"a Day with the Lord is as a thousand years." (2 Pet. 3:8) Now the great Seventh Day, also a thousand years long, has commenced. We have been enjoying its dawning. It is to be a grand Day! What wonder if the dawning be remarkable!

It may surprise some to be told that the past forty-two years mean more to the world in increase of education, increase of wealth, increase of all manner of labor-saving inventions and conveniences, increase of safe-guards and protections for human life, than did all the six thousand years which preceded them many times over. The world has probably created a thousand times as much wealth during these forty-two years as during the entire six thousand years preceding. Yet these changes have come so gradually that few have noticed them.

FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY EVERYWHERE

Forty-two years ago man labored from sun to sun; today we are rapidly approaching an eight-hour day. Forty-two years ago nearly all the labor of the world was done with sweat of face; today it is nearly all accomplished by machinery. Forty-two years ago the sewing-machine was just reaching perfection; today it is everywhere indispensable. So with the thousand household conveniences. So with nearly all of our sanitary and plumbing arrangements. So with farming implements. Reapers and binders, mowers, automobiles, gas engines, etc., etc., all belong to these forty-two years.

Prophecies respecting streams in the desert and the wilderness blossoming as the rose are having fulfillment not miraculously, but in harmony with the Divine order of an increased intelligence amongst men. Artesian wells are being drilled, irrigating canals constructed, not only in the western part of the United States and Canada, but also in far-off Mesopotamia. The results are marvelous. Land previously not worth fencing is valued at $500 per acre today. The increase of knowledge has been supplemented by governmental arrangements for the distribution of that knowledge amongst the people. The soils of various localities are being analyzed at public expense; and tillers of the soil are given knowledge as respects what kind of fertilizers are required to bring satisfactory results.

Under these conditions it does not surprise us to know that as much as 156 bushels of corn have been raised to one acre, and that 600 bushels of potatoes and over are not an uncommon record. Is not the Bible being fulfilled? Who can dispute these facts? What do they signify? We Answer--that they exactly corroborate the Divine declaration which describes our day:

Many shall run to and fro; knowledge shall be increased; the wise of God's people shall understand; and there shall be a Time of Trouble such as never was since there was a nation." Dan. 12:4, 10, 1; Matt. 24:21

INCREASE OF WORLD-WIDE DISCONTENT

We are in the Morning of our text. Ah, what a glorious Morning! How changed the human conditions from those of our grandfathers! How thankful the whole world should be! Paeans of praise should be rising from all the people of the favored lands of civilization; and helping hands should be outstretched to carry the same blessings to heathen lands. But is it so? Are the people happy and rejoicing? Are they appreciative of the New Day? of the gifts of Divine Providence?

No! In proportion as the blessings of God have come, the discontent of humanity has increased; and unbelief, not only in respect to the Bible as the Divine Revelation, but in many instances in respect to the very existence of an intelligent Creator. Notwithstanding the great increase in the world's wealth, and the fact that there are some noble souls who are using their share of the wealth in a praiseworthy manner, nevertheless the general operation of the law of selfishness prevails; and all the legislation which has been enacted, or which can be enacted, fails to restrain the giant institutions corporations of our day, fails to hinder them from exploiting the masses in the interests of the comparatively few.

Did God know all these things? What will He do about them? Will He bring in the Millennial blessings, and risk that men shall take for granted that they have won the secrets of nature by their own wisdom and perseverance, and forget God entirely?

THE DARK NIGHT ALREADY SETTLING

According to the Bible, God foreknew the conditions of our day as we are now entering them; and in our text He gives a key to the situation elsewhere in the Scriptures made very plain. Through the Prophet, God tells of the Dark Night coming after the Morning Dawn had been well ushered in a dark storm-cloud just at sunrise.

Bible students see this great Time of Trouble already beginning in the letting loose of the winds of strife in Europe. In the light of the Bible they perceive that the result of this present war will be the great awakening of the nations, an increased knowledge and discontent amongst the people.

The next phase of the Trouble, according to the Bible, is to be the "great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great." (Rev. 16:18) This is not a literal earthquake, but a symbolic one revolution. Then the third phase of the calamity the darkest of all will be the symbolic fire of anarchy, which will utterly destroy our present civilization. Then, in the midst of that most awful Time of Trouble, Messiah, the great King, will take His great power and will exercise it, with the result that the raging waves of the sea of human passion will all be quieted, the fires of anarchy will all be extinguished, and the Reign of Righteousness and Peace will begin.

Cannot we see the wisdom of the great Creator's Program? He has determined to permit mankind to convince themselves of their own impotency, of their need of a God, and of the fact that there is a God, and that His glorious purposes for humanity are revealed in His Word. Ah, it is no wonder that the Bible speaks of that revelation of the Lord as the "still small voice of God," speaking to mankind through Messiah's Kingdom! No wonder the Lord declares that "then He will turn to the people a pure Message, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve Him with one consent!" Zeph. 3:8, 9.

WHY DO THE NATIONS WAR?

The greatest crisis of all the ages is upon the world, and the worst phase of it has not yet been reached. The situation demands sober reflection.

All Europe is afire, and the flames have spread to America! Within less than three years, thirty millions of men have faced each other upon the battlefields of Europe, and approximately seven millions of them have already fallen victims to the murderous war. The wanton destruction of human life and treasure has staggered humanity. The neutral nations are suffering, and the peoples of the countries at war are enduring untold hardships. Countless widow and orphans bemoan the untimely fate of their loved ones, and now face famine and pestilence enemies even more cruel and relentless than cannon or sword. Even in America the conditions in many places are becoming intolerable; the people are restless, and many women and children are frantically crying for bread. The conditions prevailing are leading on to certain revolution and anarchy, the like of which the world has never before known.

The Twentieth Century opened with the brightest prospects of all times. The Clergy told us there could be no more war. Why, then, has this horrible war come upon the world? Has it come because of the love of the people for blood-shedding? We answer, No! for the common people did not desire the war. Is the war, then, the result of unrighteousness, and unholy conditions prevailing in Christendom? And, if so, who is the more to blame the kings and rulers or the clergy? In the Bible alone we have the clear and conclusive answer. Foreknowing the course of men and nations, Jehovah, through His Prophet, more than three thousand years ago, said: "Why do the nations war, and the people imagine vain schemes?" Here the word "scheme" means plan or arrangement, looking to the accomplishment of a given purpose.

THE DIVINE PLAN

The entire race came under the condemnation of death as a result of Adam's disobedience. Since Adam was driven from Eden man has vainly sought life everlasting, a happy home and a government of equity and righteousness. God has a great Scheme, or Plan, to give these very things to man, and is causing it to be worked out in His own due time.

When Jesus came to earth this Scheme, or Plan, for the first time was presented by Him and the Apostles, as outlined in the Scriptures. Briefly, it is this:

- ◆ That the wages of sin is death not eternal torture;
- ◆ That redemption and forgiveness of sins come through the sacrificial merit of Jesus, the acceptance of which is the only way to life, happiness of home and other righteous desires;
- ◆ That it was necessary for Jesus to die and to arise from the dead to provide the Purchase-Price for man's redemption;
- ◆ That Jesus, as a Divine being would come a second time, to establish His Kingdom;
- ◆ That during the period from His First Coming to His Second Coming He would gather out from the world the members of His Body, called the Church, regardless of creed or denomination;
- ◆ That His Kingdom could not be established until His Second Coming;
- ◆ That His Kingdom is not of "this present evil world," or order of things;
- ◆ That all of His followers should pray, "Thy Kingdom come," and keep themselves separate and distinct from worldly schemes;
- ◆ That all Christians who faithfully follow the Master are His ambassadors, and their duty is to declare the Message of His Kingdom and the blessings it will bring to all mankind.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CLERGY

The lawyer who deceives his client, suppresses the truth concerning the case, and causes him to lose his property, is properly denounced as a fraud. The ambassador of a nation who suppresses the truth concerning his government, or delivers its secrets to another government, is justly labeled a traitor and is prosecuted for treason.

The highest office that any man can hold on this earth is that of an honest preacher of the Gospel. It is equally true that the disloyal and unfaithful minister who suppresses the Truth and leads the people into darkness is the most reprehensible of all wrong-doers. There are good lawyers and bad lawyers, and there are good preachers and bad preachers. Any preacher who objects to an examination and discussion of his teachings places himself in the category of bad ones, because his attitude proves that his teachings will not bear the light.

Every man who has assumed to be a minister of the Gospel has thereby assumed the office of ambassador of the Lord Jesus Christ and His Kingdom. The solemn duty then devolves upon him to lead the people in the right way, according to the teachings of the great Master.

There have been and there are yet some good, faithful preachers; but alas, the great majority of them have been and are disloyal to the Lord and His cause and have suppressed the Truth and led the people into darkness!

The fixed laws of Jehovah cannot be violated with impunity, either by individuals or by nations. The Apostles were faithful teachers of the Message of Messiah's Kingdom. Many Christians who followed them likewise faithfully taught the Truth. Early in the Fourth Century, ambitious men, claiming to be teachers of the Bible and ambassadors of Christ, put aside the Plan of God and began to teach their own schemes, contrary to God's arrangement. Christian people of this day, whether Catholic or Protestant, are in no wise responsible for the schemes, or plans, of men promulgated centuries ago, when first the Catholic and later the Protestant churches were organized. But every fair-minded person should examine these schemes, or plans, with a view to seeing whether or not they are in harmony with God; and, if not, to consider what relation they bear to the great trouble that is now upon the world.

The Clergy, as distinguished from the laity, or common people, were organized about the year 325. In 529 the Clergy System, claiming to be the Church, assumed temporal power, organized armies and went forth to fight and destroy those who dared resist their unrighteous schemes. They deprived the common people of the Bible, issued their own statements of belief, or creeds, and required the people to believe and follow these. Briefly stated, the scheme, or plan, put forth by the Clergy of that day and followed since is:

That the wages of sin is not death, but purgatory or eternal torture; that the Clergy have power to forgive sins and to pray men out of purgatory, which they pretend to do for a money consideration; that the Pope rules as the Vicegerent of Christ, and therefore Christ's Kingdom, or Government, has long been in operation in the earth; that the kings rule by Divine right, and that this right to rule is derived from the clergy, as the representatives of the Lord; that the province of the Church, composed of the clergy, is to convert all the world to believe in their doctrines.

SPURIOUSNESS OF RULING BY DIVINE RIGHT

In the year 1517, Protestantism had its birth. For a time the Protestant Church sought to reform and to teach the Bible, as best its teachers understood; but later the Protestant clergy began to mix religion and politics, and the kings of Europe were taught by them, as well as by the Catholic hierarchy, that they held their thrones by Divine right and that the Clergy were the proper spiritual advisors of the kings of earth. Every kingdom of Europe has its national religion, and those kingdoms among whom the name of Christ is held, are designated as "Christendom," which, in short, means Christ's Kingdom.

The Clergy, both Catholic and Protestant, have taught the kings of earth that they rule by Divine right and hence can do no wrong. Long ago it was incorporated in the common law of England, "The king can do no wrong." Every student of Blackstone will recall reading this statement when he began to study law. It seemed strange that a man could do no wrong but the explanation has been, and is, that the king, ruling by Divine Right, and deriving this right through the clergy, is the Lord's representative, and therefore all his acts are right.

Relying upon the advice of their spiritual advisers, the kings have reasoned thus: We must extend our territory and increase our commerce, and to accomplish this we must have great armies and navies. War may be necessary, and much property may be destroyed and many of our subjects lose their lives; but our course is right, because our spiritual advisers have told us so. The rulers, therefore, forced the people to bear the burden of taxation to provide navies and armies, and then sent their respective subjects forth to kill each other in a Christian (?) manner.

As these have gone to war, the clergy have stood by the kings and said, in substance, "Push on your war of destruction; God is with you, and we will pray His blessings upon your army." In Germany the Clergy pray God that He will bless their armies and enable them to destroy the English; in Great Britain the clergymen pray God for a blessing upon the British armies, that they may be enabled to wipe the Germans off the face of the earth. Which class of the clergy does He hear?

The clergy have urged the young men to enter this war; and in order that other generations might be born to fight and die, they have called upon the young men to first marry and beget children before going to the battle-field, offering to perform the marriage ceremony free of charge. To perform any service free is an unusual thing for preachers. What a moral degeneracy has come upon the nations at the advice of the clergy! Notwithstanding the fact that the Lord has taught that no murderer shall enter His Kingdom, the clergy teach that he who dies while engaged in war upon the battle-field has an abundant entrance into Heaven. As an example of this, the public press reports a recent discourse by Dr. Gordon, the leading clergyman of Canada, in which he said in substance:

“The uniform of King George upon a soldier boy is a sure passport to Heaven, and God Himself cannot keep a young man out of Heaven who dies with this uniform upon him.”

And yet that clergyman claims to be an ambassador of the Prince of Peace!

For a long time, claiming to teach the Bible, and posing as preachers of the Gospel, which men so sorely need for their comfort, the great majority of the modern clergymen have departed therefrom, and now hold to and teach doctrines utterly subversive of the Bible. For the past quarter of a century a great tidal wave of infidelity has swept over the so-called “Christian world” not the blasphemous atheism advocated by Ingersoll and Payne, but an infidelity of a more subtle character, represented in the scholarship of the modern clergymen, generally known as “Higher Criticism” and “Evolution.” The teaching of such doctrines has destroyed faith in the inspiration of the Bible as God’s Word of Truth, and has turned the people away from the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles. Our colleges and universities are hotbeds of such dangerous brands of infidelity, and its blighting influence has permeated our public schools.

PROTESTANTISM NOW MERELY THE “ISM” WITHOUT THE “PROTEST”

The Protestantism of our day is not the result of the great Reformation, but of its decline and failure. It is merely the “ism” without the “protest.”

The Apostle Paul points out that the statements of prophecy set forth in the Old Testament would have a special application and fulfillment at the close of the Gospel Age. We are now in that time. The word “prophet” means preacher, or one who proclaims; whereas it is the word “seer” that represents those who predict things to come. Concerning those who suppress the Truth, teaching faith-destroying doctrines and thereby ensnaring the people, the Lord has said: “Among My (professed) people are found wicked men; they lie in wait as he who sets a snare; they set a trap (Higher Criticism, Evolution and other worldly theories destructive of faith in the Bible) to catch men; they are waxen fat; they shine (modern clergymen claim to be rich in wisdom and need no teaching, and they love to shine before men); they pass by the deeds of the wicked (they approve the wrongful acts of kings and rulers against the interests of the common people and keep silent respecting the sins of their wealthy and influential members). Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the Lord. Shall not My soul be avenged on such a nation as this? A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets (preachers) preach falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and the people love to have it so.” Jer. 5:26-29

Thus the Lord fearfully arraigns those who suppress the Truth and by their selfish schemes ensnare men in their doctrines, contrary to God’s way. The Lord points out that if these professed ambassadors of Christ had been faithful in teaching His Word of Truth the present great and horrible war would have been averted. Jer. 23:19-22

CLERGY MORE REPREHENSIBLE THAN THE KINGS

Of course, there are exceptions to the rule, and there are some good, honest clergymen in the world. But alas, the majority of them, we fear, belong to the other class! The Scriptures point out that both the kings and the clergy are responsible for this war, but that the clergy are even more reprehensible, because it was their duty to know God’s Plan and to tell it to the people. But they have refused to learn it and failed to tell it to others.

Concerning the responsibility for this war, Rabbi Wise, of New York City, recently said:

“The failure of the churches and synagogues to maintain leadership over the people was the cause of the present war. They have enthroned a war devil in place of God. They are satisfied to be a mere item of social organization and to defend their countries and rulers, just or unjust.”

Rev. Dr. Peter Ainslie, Pastor of the Christian Temple at Baltimore, recently said in a public sermon:

“More than to any other source the cause of the great war lies at the door of the Church.”

UNRIGHTEOUS ECCLESIASTICAL SCHEMES AN ABOMINATION TO JEHOVAH

So numerous are the schemes of men that they are bewildering and confusing. God has named these unrighteous, ecclesiastical schemes “Babylon,” which means confusion; and He refers to the Catholic system as the “Mother of Harlots.” The other ecclesiastical systems sprang from her, and are, therefore, the daughters referred to by the Revelator. Rev. 17:1-6

The Book of Revelation is written largely in symbols. "Wine" is a symbol of doctrine; "fornication," a symbol of illicit relationship between church and politics. The Lord, speaking through the Revelator, says: "Babylon the Great is fallen, is fallen (fallen from God's favor), and is become the habitation of devils (those possessing a devilish spirit), and the hold of every foul spirit (impure principle), and the cage of every hateful and unclean bird (nearly every "jail-bird" is a member of some nominal church system). For all the nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication; and all the kings have committed fornication with her; and the merchants of earth have waxen rich through the abundance of her delicacies."

Clearly this prophetic statement has been fulfilled by the illicit mixing of religion and politics in the name of Christ by those who claim to be His ambassadors, and the whole arrangement is an abomination in the sight of the Lord. Continuing, He says: "For her sins have reached unto Heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities; therefore shall her plagues come in one day death and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire (symbol of destruction); for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Rev. 18:18

PRESENT WAR FORETOLD IN SCRIPTURE

Foreknowing the course that men would take, the Lord foretold the present great conflict through the Prophet Joel more than 2500 years ago, as follows: "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw nigh; let them come up! Beat your plowshares into swords and your pruning-hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong! Assemble yourselves and come, all ye nations, and gather yourselves round about; thither cause thy mighty ones to come down. Let the nations be wakened and come to the Valley of Jehoshaphat (the valley of graves the literal valley of Jehoshaphat outside of Jerusalem being the burial ground of the Jews, picturing the burying grounds of the armies engaged in the world-war)... The sun and the moon shall be darkened and the stars shall withdraw their shining." Joel 3:9-15.

The Scriptures point out that the "sun" symbolizes the Gospel of Christ's Kingdom; that the "moon" represents the Mosaic Law; and that the stars are symbols of ecclesiastical teachers. Thus we see that at the time the world-conflict has come the Gospel of Messiah's Kingdom is darkened in the nominal churches. No longer do the clergy teach the coming of Messiah's Kingdom to bless all the families of the earth. No longer do they tell the people that the Mosaic Law foreshadowed the development of this great Kingdom. And they, as the "stars," have fallen from their exalted position in the spiritual heavens as teachers of the Divine Word, and have allied themselves with the common politics of the world.

THE END OF THE WORLD HAS COME

The word “world,” as used symbolically in the Scriptures, means Dispensation, or period of time. The time of Gentile dominion has been, according to the Scriptures, a period of 2520 years. The Bible clearly points out, and this is corroborated by secular history, that the Gentile Times began with the overthrow of the Jewish king, Zedekiah, and the enthronement of Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, in the autumn season, 606 years before Christ. It follows, then, that the full period of 2520 years would expire in the autumn of 1914. Referring to this time the great Master said, “And the nations were angry, and Thy wrath is come.” Exactly on time, when the Gentile dominion legally ended, the nations were angry, and God’s wrath upon the nations expressed itself in permitting them to begin the destruction of one another. Our Lord Jesus, in His great prophecy concerning the end of this present age, or world, pointed out that the beginning of this trouble would be when “nation shall rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom,” and that it would end with “a Time of Trouble such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.” The Prophet Daniel gives similar testimony. Matt. 24:21; Dan. 12:1

It is a well-known fact that the clergymen speak of their congregations as their “flock,” and of themselves as “watchmen.” A true watchman of the flock should be highly commended; but the Lord said of those who are of the contrary spirit: “What has thou to do to declare My statutes, or that thou shouldst take My Covenant into thy mouth, seeing thou hatest instruction and castest My words behind thee? When thou sawest a thief (Satan, stealing the hearts and minds of the people away from God’s Plan), then thou consentest with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers. Thou givest thy mouth to evil and thy tongue frameth deceit.” (Psa. 50:17-19.) Again, says the Prophet Isaiah: “His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant; they are all dumb dogs (D. Ds.); they cannot bark sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs, which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their own way, every one for his gain from his quarter (denomination).” Isa. 56:10,11

Summing up the situation, we see that the Gentile Times have ended, that the kings of earth have had their day. God gave them an opportunity to make good, and they have failed. He is now putting them out of possession of earthly dominion. Sin and selfishness have predominated. The kings and rulers, being ill-advised by their spiritual counselors, have come to a sorry end.

Soon revolution will be upon the world, terminating in anarchy, which will completely overthrow all the Babylonish systems ecclesiastical and political.

A BETTER DAY COMING

But let us leave the dark picture for a moment. The Apostle Peter, after describing this trouble time, says: "Nevertheless, we, according to His promise, look for a new heavens (spiritual ruling powers) and a new earth (earthly government, order of society), wherein dwelleth righteousness." The promise here referred to is that Promise made by Jehovah to Abraham, saying, "In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." The Seed of Abraham must first be brought forth before the blessings can come. That Seed is Christ Jesus the Head, and the Church His Body. Gal. 3:16, 27-29

During the entire Gospel Age God has been gathering out from the world those who would constitute this Body who would become truly consecrated Christians. Some of these have been clergymen; some have been members of church denominations; others not. The true test has been full faith in Jesus as the great Redeemer in His sacrificial death as man's great Redemption price; then complete consecration to do God's holy will, and faithful obedience thereafter even unto death. All who are of this class are promised a share in the Chief Resurrection and that they shall reign with Christ to bless all the families of the earth. Rev. 20:6

The Scriptures abound with promises that a righteous Government is to be established in the earth, and that such Government shall rest upon the shoulders of the Great Messiah (Isa. 9:6); that He shall then be called "Wonderful," "Counselor," "the Everlasting Father," "the Prince of Peace." Under His Reign wars shall cease, and wickedness and crime shall be completely obliterated from the human race. Every man who loves peace and righteousness shall then sit under his own "vine and fig-tree," he will have his own peaceful habitation, where he may dwell with his loved ones in happiness.

Our Lord Jesus Himself promised that during His Reign all who are in the tomb shall come forth and that all shall have a fair and impartial trial for life. The Scriptures abound with promises that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust. (John 5:28, 29, R. V.; Acts 24:15; 17:31) When Christ reigns, though Himself invisible to man, He will, through His visible representative on the earth, establish a Government of equity and justice, bringing the desire of every honest heart.

At the end of the thousand years Reign of Christ, the entire earth will have been brought to a state of Edenic Paradise (Isa. 35; Ezek. 36:34-36), and all the incorrigible, the willfully wicked, shall have been forever destroyed. All others shall have been completely restored to that perfect condition enjoyed by Father

Adam in the Garden of Eden. Then Christ will turn over the Kingdom to the Father, and all will be given a final test. Those who then shall prove their loyalty to God and the principles of righteousness will be granted everlasting life; those who fail will suffer everlasting destruction. God will then have a clean Universe.

*“Lift up, lift up thy voice with singing!
O earth, with strength lift up thy voice!
God’s Kingdom to the earth is coming;
The King is at the gates rejoice!”*

DENYING THE SON OF GOD PUTS DARKNESS FOR LIGHT

New York, March 7 Speaking at the New York City Temple today, Pastor Russell took for his text John 1:34, "I saw and bare record that this is the Son of God." He declared that about three-fourths of all the preachers are his enemies. Because they cannot resist the force of his Bible teachings, they misrepresent them and vilify his reputation, that thus they may hinder good people from hearing and from reading. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said the Master; and evidently many clergymen must be seriously wrong of heart; else they would not bear these unscriptural fruits unmanly fruits—"works of the flesh and of the Devil." Gal. 5:19-21; 1 John 3:8

But the Pastor would not slack his efforts to make known the true character of the God of the Bible, so in contrast with the Satanic god of the creeds. Thousands of letters from all parts of the world tell him of new life, new joy in the Lord, through his efforts; and he is encouraged to go on in the narrow way which the Master and the Apostles trod. He would not render personal abuse in retaliation. To do so would be contrary to the Word and Spirit of the Lord. But the creeds and false doctrines he would continue to smash with all the power granted him, that thus hungering, thirsting souls might be delivered from error into the joyous liberty of the children of God.

DENYING THE SON OF GOD

Billy Sunday has joined other evangelists and preachers in the slanderous misstatements that Pastor Russell denies that Jesus is the Son of God. By such false statements, said the Pastor, they seek to prevent people from coming to hear me and from reading my Bible expositions. Yet how foolish it is for them to make such deliberate misstatements; for eventually their falsehoods will be found out! People who learn of the gross misrepresentation realize that only desperation, attempting to support a weak cause, could lead men professing to ministers of the Truth to thus do it violence. Really, it is I who believe that Jesus is the Son of God, while the great majority of preachers and evangelists do not clearly so teach. They confuse their argument and bewilder their hearers by telling in one breath that Jesus is the Son of God, and in the next breath that He is His own Father.

According to them, He is Jehovah God, who sent His Son into the world to die, and He is the Son who sent Himself, as God. When He prayed to the Father it was a mockery; for He was the Father—"one in person." When he said, "The Father is greater than I," He misrepresented the facts, according to these preachers, evangelists and creed-makers. He spoke of the Cup which the Father had poured for Him, and said He could do nothing of Himself, and that He would return to the Father. He prayed, "My God! My God! Why hast Thou forsaken Me?" and said to Mary, "I have not yet ascended to My Father and your Father, to My God and your God." But these wiser-than-the-Bible teachers contradict Him, and feel like saying, "Jesus must have been a Millennial Dawner! But we know better."

Such teachers make void the Word of God through their traditions. In claiming that Jesus is Jehovah God, they really deny that He is the Son of God; for common sense tells everybody that a son receives his life from the father. This is exactly what the Bible tells us respecting Jesus.

TRUTHFUL CRITICISMS INVITED

I invite truthful criticisms of my teachings; but my opponents know that to treat me fairly, justly, would be to turn all thinking people to my side the Bible side the reasonable side. For thirty years they ignored my presentations, lest people should find out; but as my sermons now reach millions, they are alarmed for the safety of their musty creeds, and resort to rank falsehoods, misrepresentations and slanders the weapons of moral cowards, who realize their own weakness.

If they would charge me with disbelieving the doctrine of the Trinity that three ones are one I would cheerfully admit it, and point them to the fact that the word Trinity is not found in the Bible, and that the thought of a trinity is not there, except in one passage, which all scholars of all denominations admit is a forgery of the Seventh Century 1 John 5:7, 8. See Revised Version

I believe in the Heavenly Father, Jehovah God. I believe in His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who left the Heavenly nature, took the human nature, died for our sins, and was afterward highly exalted to the Divine nature. I believe in the holy Spirit, the Spirit of the Truth, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ. My crime is that I do not believe that the Father, the Son, and the holy Spirit are "one in person, equal in power and glory," neither one existing before the others, neither one the Son and neither the Father, really. The Bible says nothing of this kind; and I am glad that my head is not so illogical as to lead me to deny the Bible and common sense for the sake of being in harmony with creeds made in the Dark Ages.

THE MAN, CHRIST JESUS

The Bible makes no mystery of who Jesus is; and we would not have been in confusion had we relied solely upon the testimony of Jesus, the Apostles and the Prophets. Our misleading came during the twelve hundred years when the Bible was ignored, because it was believed that the living bishops were Apostolic and had the plenary powers of the original Apostles. This serious error Jesus emphatically warned against in advance. Rev. 2:2

The Bible tells of Jesus' present glorious station, "far above angels," "partaker of the Divine nature." But many ignore this, and claim that Jesus is a man in Heaven, completely out of touch with His surroundings; for a man, according to the Bible, is "a little lower than angels," whereas the Apostle declares that Jesus, at His resurrection, was exalted far above angels. This glorious One, although of a different nature, is the same One who, while on earth, was "the Man Christ Jesus," "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." St. Paul tells us how Jesus left the Heavenly glory, how He humbled Himself to take a bondman's form to take the same nature as humanity, which had come into bondage to sin.

The Bible explains how Jesus could be of our race, and yet be "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." It tells us plainly that Jesus had a human mother, but that His life came not from a human father; and that therefore He was perfect, and able to be the Ransomer of the race by giving to God sacrificially a full corresponding price for Adam, whose life was forfeited because of sin. Thus the Bible explains that Jesus' death is sufficient for Adam's sin and the sins of the whole world; for the world was not condemned individually, but merely partook of Adam's condemnation to death.

Whoever thinks of Jesus as being the Father and also the holy Spirit all one in person must be confronted with nonsensical errors such as these: How did the Universe manage to progress during the period leading up to Jesus' birth and on to manhood? How did the affairs of the Universe prosper during Jesus' ministry, when He was fully engaged with earthly affairs to the extent of weariness? How did the Universe get along when Jesus died, and until He arose from death?

Some even go to this absurd length: to wit, that Jesus raised Himself from death; whereas the Apostle declares positively that the Father raised Him from the dead on the third day. How refreshing it is to get out of the fog into the clear statements of God's Word, which declare (1) "To us there is one God, the Father," (2) "and on Lord, Jesus Christ!" 1 Cor. 8:6

BEGINNING OF GOD'S CREATION

It seems astounding if my opponents have never heard the plain Bible statement that our glorious Redeemer was "the First-born of all creation" (Col. 1:15), "the beginning of the creation of God." (Rev. 3:14) If they have read these simple, plain Bible statements, why do they prefer confusing views of the Dark Ages respecting a Trinity of three persons, yet one person? Some say one God in three persons; others say three Gods in one person. Both propositions are alike unscriptural and absurd.

Jesus Himself, in His last Message to His Church, declared, "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last." (Rev. 1:8, 11) Thus He clearly differentiates between Himself and the Father; for the Father had no beginning—"From everlasting to everlasting Thou art God."

Do our opponents claim that Jesus is God? We agree most heartily, provided the word God is understood in the sense in which the Bible uses it. Throughout the Old Testament the word for God is elohim mighty one. It is applied to Jehovah, the Almighty One; it is also applied to angels and to men whom He sent as His messengers. According to this view, our Lord Jesus Christ is a God. The Bible clearly indicates that He is above all other gods except Jehovah.

In harmony with this we read respecting Messiah and His Kingdom: "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever." The Apostle applies these words distinctly to Jesus, but does not say this proves that Jesus was His own Father, nor does he ignore the Almighty God, of whom are all things. On the contrary, the context tells us explicitly that the Father, who always was above all, as a reward exalted His Son to his glorious Kingship and Headship, declaring that even the angels of Heaven should worship Him. Heb. 1:5-8

One very simple statement confuses some needlessly. It reads, "I and My Father are one." It does not say one person. It refers to the oneness of spirit, or harmony, between the Father and the Son; and this oneness is explained by our Lord, assuring us that He came not to do His own will, but the will of the Father, since He accepted the Father's will in everything. He and the Father were always one in purpose. Jesus prayed for the Church, saying, I pray for them that Thou hast given Me, that they all may be one in Us, even as Thou, Father, and I are one. (John 17:9, 20-24) Surely no one would claim that Jesus expected His Church to become one person! And it is equally absurd to think that He and the Father are one person.

Because Jesus was thus the Father's Representative, in the only sense that men could see the invisible Jehovah, He answered Philip on one occasion, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Thus the President's secretary would say to a caller, "I represent the President."

"IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE LOGOS"

As Matthew's and Luke's Gospels make very plain how the glorious Son of God was made flesh, yet not a partaker of human sin, so St. John's Gospel provides us with information still further back, pointing out and explaining clearly the glorious prehuman nature of the Son of God. The translation, however, is slightly defective, and hides from the English reader the full import of the opening verses which, literally translated, reads:

“In the beginning was the Logos, and the Logos was with the God, and the Logos was a god. The same was in the beginning with the God. By Him were all things made, and without Him was not one thing made... And the Logos was made flesh and dwelt among us; and we beheld His glory, the glory of an Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth” John 1:1-3, 14

The beautiful simplicity of this account is wonderful. The beginning it mentions was not that of Jehovah’s existence, which the Bible declares was without beginning. The word refers to the beginning of creation, and immediately introduces us to the great Logos, “the Beginning of the creation of God.” (Rev. 3:14) While the name Logos may be not improperly translated Word, it has a much fuller significance; namely, representative, messenger, mouthpiece.

Jehovah’s entire Message has been, and will be, given to angels and to men through the great Logos. He was the Alpha, the first; the Father created none before Him. He is the Omega, the last; the Father has directly created none like Him. This explains simply, satisfactorily, that all subsequent creations, while executed by Jehovah’s Power, were worked out by His great Son, the Logos. “By Him were all things made that were made.”

When the time came for the outworking of the great Divine Plan for human salvation, and, incidentally, the showing forth of God’s Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power, the offer properly came first to the Logos. The proposition to be man’s Redeemer carried with it a great blessing, as St. Paul explains. (Heb. 12:2; Col. 1:18) This exaltation to God’s right hand, far above all other creatures, was an advance step. Although originally higher than all the others, the Logos was not so “far above” them.

It was God’s purpose to have a New Creation; and the Logos, through the redemptive Plan, was to be the first and chiefest on that highest plane the Divine nature. During this Gospel Age, God has been calling and accepting the honest seekers, lovers of righteousness, haters of iniquity to be associates with Jesus in the Kingdom and participants with Him in the highest nature of all the Divine. So, St. Peter declares, “God hath given unto us, (the truly consecrated, the Church) exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might become partakers of the Divine nature.” 2 Pet. 1:4; Heb. 2:10

It is right, is it Christian, is it true, is it manly, to charge my teachings with denying that Jesus is the Son of God? What object could there be in so doing except to keep the Lord's hungry sheep away from the green pastures of Divine Truth? Well do my traducers know that they have nothing Biblical, sane or sensible to give instead. The very bitterness manifested by ministers against me is being used of the Lord to arouse investigation amongst those who are truly His people. If my reputation must be thus assassinated in order that the true sheep may hear the Master's voice, I shall acquiesce as joyfully as possible, remembering that it will be difficult for them to say bitterer or untruer things of me than they said of my Master.

The crime is the same that incited the Pharisees against Jesus and the Apostles. "They were angry that they taught the people." Preachers who do not believe in eternal torment any more than I do are angry that I am informing the people; for they fear that the people will justly think that their ministers deal dishonestly, receiving wages for keeping them in darkness. The time has come when all who are for the right, the Truth, should manifest themselves. I have many letters from ministers, marked personal, and private, assuring me of their sympathy with my work, but fearful to come out boldly. I am sorry for these. The Lord exhorts, "Be thou very courageous." "He that hath a dream (an imagination), let him tell the dream (if he has nothing better to tell); but he that hath My Word, let him speak my Word fearlessly." Jer. 23:28

As our knowledge of God and of His glorious Son, and our true understanding of the holy Spirit, becomes clearer, we can the better worship God, for the eyes of our understanding opening wider and wider, we shall comprehend with all saints the lengths and breadths, the heights and depths, and know the love of God whom to know aright implies fitness for life everlasting. BOSTON'S RELIGIOUS REVIVAL SURELY A BLESSING

Matthew 13:18-30

HOW TO MAKE REVIVAL EFFECTS PERMANENT

News of the Boston revival of religious interest has spread far and wide. Lovers of God and lovers of humanity must be deeply interested in a movement which has taken so great a hold of so large a number of intelligent people. To the thoughtful it shows what should never have been disputed, namely that notwithstanding the fact that we are a fallen race, "Prone to sin as the sparks to fly upward," nevertheless there is still remaining in us something of the character of our Creator, in whose image our father Adam was made. The fall affected some of us from the one standpoint and some from another; but left us, as a whole, in that undone condition from which we cannot extricate ourselves, because it is a part of our human nature. As the Scriptures declare, "We were born in sin and shapen in iniquity, in sin did our mothers conceive us." If every trace of the Divine likeness had been obliterated from our hearts and heads, there would be nothing left upon which truth and grace might operate. We are glad that we have been forced to vacate the thought of "total depravity," once inculcated as the essence of our orthodoxy. The fact that we are not "totally depraved" is the mainspring of hope and endeavor on behalf of mankind on the part of God and those who have enlisted on his side in the warfare against Sin and Satan.

Possibly the revival preaching did not include as much of a reference to Christ crucified as some of us could have wished; but it certainly did not ignore this basic feature of salvation. In any event, to have awakened thinking minds to the fact that the things of eternity are worthy of more time and thought and endeavor than the things of this present life this alone is a great achievement, and the engineers of the revival movement deserve considerable credit from this standpoint alone.

But already we hear protests from various quarters to the effect that revival influences are not permanent; that those thus reached almost as quickly fall away, and that it is more difficult than ever to reach them again. But admitting that this has been the general record of revivals, we hold that it is no reason why we should complain and sit idly by and watch the slipping and sliding away of those who for a time at least have taken a stand for righteousness, for God, for manhood, for Christ. Rather, Christian people should take such steps as will assist these multitudes who have indicated their desire to henceforth walk in the ways of righteousness. Our Christian knowledge should be put at their disposal, that they might thus be enabled to stand.

STONY GROUND, THORNY GROUND, GOOD GROUND

Our Lord, the great Teacher, gives us the key to the situation. In the parable of the sower he explains to us that men's hearts have much to do with their reception of the Truth. It is not enough that we have seed and ground and that the seed be properly planted. The ground must be of the proper kind and, if certain elements be lacking, these should be supplied, or weeds eradicated, in order to have the proper yield.

Without controverting the thought that our Lord referred to different classes of hearts and intended to show by this parable that some of them could not possibly be expected to bring forth the fruitage desired in this Gospel Age, we may safely apply the parable to Boston and vicinity, as though all those reached by the revival belong to the stony ground, the thorny ground and the good ground classes of the parable. Those of shallow soil must, perforce, wither away, because they have not a sufficiency of depth of character to bring forth the fruitage of this Gospel Age. Those now called by Divine grace, who will “make their calling and election sure,” must be “able to stand” trials and persecutions. Such as cannot endure these are in the parable represented as stony-ground hearers, who at first rejoice, but because of their shallowness the Truth perishes with them as they are exposed to trials and persecutions on its account. The thorny ground is rich and might bring forth as largely as any of the good ground thirty, sixty or a hundred fold but the thorns are there and must be combated, must be uprooted. These thorns, as our Lord explains, do not represent gambling, intoxication, and various atrocious wrongs, but rather, as he explained, they symbolize in the parable the cares of the present life and the deceitfulness of riches. Matt. 13:22

HOW WE MAY ASSIST NEW CONVERTS

The new convert needs instruction in the Word of God in the hopes and promises therein set forth. As St. Peter declares, God has “given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that we might become partakers of the Divine nature and escape the corruption that is in the world through selfish desire.” We urge, therefore, upon all God’s people, ministers and laymen, that they seek to indoctrinate the new converts not with sectarianism, which has proved unsatisfactory to everybody, almost to the degree of nausea, but with the doctrine (teaching) of Christ, the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets the doctrine of the Bible pure and simple. To the extent that we give them these unadulterated, we communicate to them “The power of God unto salvation,” able to keep them from falling.

Accordingly we should introduce them to “Studies in the Scriptures,” that they may thus be fortified, prepared, for the assaults of the world, the flesh and the Adversary, which are sure to come upon them. We must show them what the Apostle refers to as “the prize of our high calling in Christ.” We must explain to them the glorious privilege that is ours, of becoming members of the “elect” Church the “Bride, the Lamb’s Wife.” (Rev. 21:9) We must tell them of the glorious Kingdom in which our Lord promised that his faithful should share, saying, “To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne” (Rev. 3:21), and “Fear not, little flock, it is your Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.” We must get them to pray for this Kingdom as our Lord taught us, “Pray ye, thy Kingdom come, thy will be done in earth, as it is done in heaven.” Matt. 6:10

To the extent that we can get these doctrines fed into the minds and hearts of new converts we will be successful in supplying them with a weed destroyer that will kill the seeds of the thorns and thistles of earthly ambitions and pleasures, because only as those ambitions perish can “the good seed of the Kingdom” flourish, and the heart be fully enlisted in the things of the Kingdom the “things not seen as yet.” Only those who obtain the opening of the eyes of their understanding to the wonderful truths of the Divine Word can have the right appreciation of the “length and breadth and height and depth of the love of God, which passeth all understanding.” (Eph. 3:19) And only such can appreciate “the things which the natural eye hath not seen and the ear hath not heard, the things which God hath in reservation for them that love him.”

These love God more than they love houses or lands or parents or children or anything more than they love themselves so that they are willing to lay down their lives in his service. To so many as we shall be able to communicate these glorious hopes and promises to these we may be sure the blessings of the revival will not be temporary, but permanent, glorious!

BREAD FOR THE HUNGRY

We must hope that some of those who have been induced by this revival to turn over a “new leaf” are really “hungering and thirsting for righteousness”; for only to such is the promise, “They shall be filled.” To these hungry ones food must be supplied or they will become faint by the way, if, indeed, they do not perish. The Apostle suggests that they need first “The sincere milk of the Word, that they may grow thereby.” This milk of the Truth consists of the first doctrines of Christ; how that we were all sinners, born such, inheriting imperfection, mental, moral and physical, under father Adam’s death sentence. (Rom. 5:12) They must realize the meaning of this alienation from the Father, the unfitness for the heavenly Kingdom, the need of the Savior to die on our behalf as our Redeemer, and that through the merit of his sacrifice we are permitted to return to Divine fellowship. They must learn that this is what the Apostle calls justification by faith a heavenly harmony with God, based upon a sinless will, however imperfectly we may be able to control our mortal flesh. We may rest in the assurance that in the Father’s sight the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin.

After digesting this milk and rejoicing in the reconciliation to the Father, the new beginners were invited to take another step to consecrate themselves their wills, minds, bodies, time, influence, money, talents, to God, to Christ, to the service of the Truth and righteousness. Properly enough such a sacrifice calls for a reason. Why should we do this? What is to be gained? The reply is that during this Gospel Age the heavenly Father is seeking a “little flock” of the same character likeness as His Son, our Redeemer.

THE BIBLE IN PERFECT ACCORD

The Bible, and it alone, explains certain phenomena, and all of the Bible explanations, although written, some of them centuries apart, are in most perfect accord. Thus in Genesis the Bible tells us respecting Satan's deflection, and the book of Revelation, written more than three thousand years later, tells us of his binding for a thousand years, of Messiah's reign and Satan's ultimate destruction. Isaiah and Ezekiel tell us of his being at one time in full harmony with God, and that then he was the "covering cherub," glorious, grand, beautiful, and that his name was Lucifer, which signifies the Morning Star.

All of the angelic, heavenly hosts are termed stars, bright ones; but Lucifer, being of a higher order, was styled the Morning Star, the Brightest Star. It was at that time, while in Divine favor, that Satan permitted the lodgment in his mind of a disloyal thought of how, indirectly, by being in higher responsibility, he could work some wonders and do some things better than the Almighty. He craved the opportunity to make a demonstration of what he could do. But the Scriptures declare that, first of all, he said this merely in his heart and uttered it not. "He said in his heart, I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of God (still farther above his angelic associates), I will be as the Most High" a ruler.

THE OPPORTUNE TIME CAME

Never had there been sin in heaven. Satan was the first of all its inhabitants to cherish, to entertain, a rebellious thought and to bring it to a consummation. He held the thought in abeyance until the opportunity afforded, and God Himself afforded the opportunity, with full knowledge of the consequences, and with the desire that this test of the entire heavenly host, and of a human race as well, should be effected, because God seeketh not the worship of constraint, but "seeketh such for worshipers as worship Him in spirit and in truth," voluntarily, joyfully.

It was when Satan beheld our first parents, in the image and likeness of God, yet not spirit but flesh, earthly, that he perceived the opportunity of gaining the coveted power for an empire, separate from that of Jehovah. In the first pair the Adversary beheld a new thing, a creature of Godlike qualities and possessed of the power to propagate his own species. Satan realized that the conquest of this pair and the bringing of them into subjection to himself would signify the capture of a world full of people eventually that the enslavement of the parents would signify the enslavement eventually of the race.

SATAN'S METHODS WERE SUCCESSFUL

We cannot deny that Satan's plans were logical and that he has carried them out with great success so that the Scriptures declare him "the Prince of this world" (John 14:30); and again, "the god of this world" (2 Cor. 4:4). Nevertheless, his victory was not so great a one as he doubtless expected it to be. No doubt he expected that he was capturing an immortal race. Quite probably he believed the falsehood he told mother Eve, when he contradicted the Word of God that sin, that disobedience in eating the forbidden fruit, would bring upon them the penalty of death, "dying thou shalt die."

Satan's charge was that God had misrepresented the facts for the purpose of holding His creatures in mental slavery to Himself; that He did not wish them to be wise, therefore He forbade the eating of this particular kind of fruit and declared the penalty of death for the transgression of His Law. "I, Satan, assure you that you need not be afraid of the fruit; I assure you that it will do you good, and that you will not surely die from the eating of it."

Alas! Mother Eve believed the Adversary and disbelieved her God, and then enticed her husband, still thinking, no doubt, that she would not die and that the serpent had told her the truth and that God had been the deceiver. St. Paul tells us that father Adam knew better and ate the fruit, knowing that it would cause his death, willing thus to disobey in order to maintain the fellowship of his wife, whose life, he realized, was already forfeited.

When the Divine sentence began to go into execution, when our first parents were driven out of Eden to battle with the thorns and thistles until they should return to the dust, no doubt Satan was disappointed. He would rather be the Prince of a noble, living family of angels or of humans than the Emperor of a weak and dying race. However, from that day to the present time he has been fighting upon the same line; he has been contending with mankind that the Word of God is false when it declares that "the wages of sin is death," and that "the soul that sinneth it shall die." From that day to this he has been using this falsehood to the injury of our race, and surely he has succeeded wonderfully.

Today, not only in heathen lands, but amongst the most civilized, it is freely believed (and by many Christians considered Scriptural to believe the nonsensical) that a dead man is more alive than before he died. People of good, sound reasoning faculties on ordinary subjects seem to be "hoodooed" by this falsehood of Satan, "ye shall not surely die." So true is this, that it seems not inconsistent to them to say that a man hit over the head with a stick and knocked senseless knows nothing, but a man hit over the head harder and killed, knows everything.

THE FALLEN ANGELS

It was sometime after the fall of Satan and the fall of man that the Lord permitted the great test to come upon the angels of heaven, under which test a host of them fell into sin, disobedience, etc., and since then are known in the Scriptures as the fallen angels, and as devils more properly demons. These fallen angels, demons, are under Satan as their great Prince and they have been his active agents for long centuries in deceiving mankind and opposing the Divine Program.

SATAN THE GREAT MURDERER

No less an authority than our great Lord and Redeemer tells us that Satan is a murderer and a liar. He declares that “He was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth; when he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own, for he is the father of lies” (John 8:44). It is well that we keep this Divine testimony in our minds. It is well that we note just what the first great lie was, namely, Satan’s misrepresentation, saying, “Ye shall not surely die.” It is important that we notice this, because so thoroughly has Satan accomplished his deceptive work that practically everybody, heathen and civilized, accepts Satan’s version of the matter and discredits that of the Almighty.

Let us notice that Satan is a murderer; that he murdered Father Adam and Mother Eve, and that his lie is still murdering our race, under the just laws of heredity. The error of believing Satan instead of God has gotten many into the confused situation of disclaiming that God proposed that man should live forever on earth in a Paradise, and, as his family would increase and continue in harmony with His wise regulations, the boundaries of his Paradise would be enlarged and be a Paradise filled with the knowledge of God and the home of a perfect humanity, in accord with God, privileged to maintain everlasting life here. And, says this theory, by Satan’s lie and our first parents’ fall, we die and by dying become more alive and some of us go to heaven and the mass to some eternal, fiery hell, of which we have no knowledge.

THE GIFT OF GOD IS ETERNAL LIFE

(Romans 6:23)

God, while permitting Satan and sin and depravity and death to take their course, has not been idle. He has had, and still has, a great plan for human salvation a plan for recovering man from sin and from death and from all of his fallen conditions, a plan of restitution to human perfection, a plan by which the Seed of the woman shall yet, literally, crush the Serpent’s head, and undo Satan’s great original misdeed recover man from his murdered condition and from his fallen estate to all that he had at first (plus the knowledge and experiences of the present life and plus the experience incidental to his uplift) during the reign of Messiah, for which we pray, "Thy Kingdom come."

The Scriptures clearly show us that all of this recovery is to be accomplished through the merit of Jesus' sacrifice—"the just for the unjust." That the work has not yet begun is evident. We are still living under the reign of sin and death. The Messianic Kingdom must come in power and great glory and be established, the Scriptures tell us, in a great time of trouble. Then the earth will be made to blossom as the rose, and the wilderness and the solitary places will be made glad, and all mankind will receive Divine blessing and opportunity to return to Divine favor and eternal life as human beings. And the willfully disobedient and negligent of those opportunities will die the Second Death, from which there will be no recovery, no resurrection, no hope.

THE SAINTS SHALL JUDGE THE WORLD

(1 Corinthians 6:2)

These great blessings of restitution, for which Israel and the whole world are waiting, cannot be brought about until first the special salvation of a special class, the salvation of the very elect not to human nature, but to a heavenly nature, as the Bride of Christ shall be accomplished. The selecting of these has progressed for nearly nineteen centuries and, apparently, is about complete. The Divine blessing and work then to be inaugurated will be restitution to earthly nature and perfection—"to the Jew first." Rom. 1:16; 2:9,10.

SATAN SERVES THE SAINTS

During all these centuries, while Satan has been the Prince or ruler amongst the children of this world, and while he has blinded them with his sophistries and falsehoods, he has also done another work for the saintly few now being called to the heavenly places. For these he has, so to speak, turned a polishing grindstone to prepare them for the riches of the heavenly glory as New Creatures, as heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ their Lord. Quite unwittingly, we may be sure, he has served the Creator's purposes and helped to prepare, through trials, this class for the glorious things which God has in reservation for those that love Him.

SATAN AS AN ANGEL OF LIGHT

St. Paul declares of Satan, "We are not ignorant of his devices," and he tells us that Satan and his servants transform themselves into servants of righteousness, etc. We see this principle in operation as we read Church history. Satan, all through this Age, has sought to pervert Christian hopes and distort Christian doctrines by presenting counterfeits of Bible truths. Thus, for instance, the Scriptures tell us that eventually the Church, "a little flock,” will be associated with Messiah in His Kingdom of glory, to reign a thousand years. It was Satan’s method to counterfeit this hope, to suggest to men the establishment of an earthly Kingdom with an earthly little flock, an earthly glory, an earthly reign. This was set forth as the fulfillment of the second Psalm.

And when later as some as Satan’s dupes began to get free from some of his snares, he became their leader in an opposite direction, called them Reformers and led them to claim that all the civilized kingdoms of the earth are the kingdoms of Christ. This is the status of affairs today. The world in general believes that Christ’s Kingdom has come, even though they are still praying, “Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.” Satan has led them away from careful attention to making their own calling and election sure by Christian character development, into the various reform movements of the world, whose trial time has not yet come. Thus Christians of all denominations have been bewildered, confused by the artful wiles of our enemy.

Now, however, as the morning of the New Dispensation dawns, our eyes of understanding are opening. We perceive that our Adversary has but a short time until he must be bound for a thousand years; that the Messianic Kingdom must prevail that all the families of the earth may be blessed through the Seed of Abraham. Finally, at the close of that reign of righteousness, the Scriptures declare, Satan shall be destroyed.

STRENGTH IN THE LORD PROPORTIONATE TO KNOWLEDGE

Romans 15:1

No one can grow strong in the Lord unless he grows also in knowledge. We properly esteem most highly those whose love for the Lord and for His Truth are evidenced by their zeal in the study of His Word, and whose favor with God is manifested by their being guided more into the deep things of God.

Nevertheless, the weaker ones of the household of faith are to be cared for and loved and helped that they may grow strong in the Lord. And just here the Apostle offers another word of counsel, saying, “We, then, that are strong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.” (Rom. 15:1) This does not imply that we should not expostulate with such a one and endeavor to help him get rid of his infirmity. This we should do, in the spirit of meekness and kindness, while we endure with gentleness the trial of our patience, not seeking to please ourselves, but rather to help a weaker brother or sister. "Let every one of us," as the Apostle enjoins, "please his neighbor (brother) for his good, to edification" i. e., not by simply ignoring his fault as though we considered it all right, but, while kindly urging him to strive against it, still humbly and patiently submitting to the discomfort it brings to us.

If this spirit prevails among the members of the Lord's Body, the members will all have a mutual love and a mutual care one for another a care which seeks to encourage and strengthen all that is good and to discourage all that is unbecoming, and a love which throws its mantle over a deformity and endeavors to conceal a fault, rather than to expose the weaker brother to the reproach of others.

For such self-sacrificing love how necessary is the spirit of humility and gentleness and patience and faith! How forceful are the Master's words, "Except ye be converted (from the spirit of the world to the Spirit of Christ) and become as little children (in meekness and teachableness), ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of heaven." Matt. 18:1-6

We should not only have this love, but we should have it with fervency, warmth, ardor; not with a semi-indifference, but with a real interest in each other's welfare the rich as well as the poor; the educated as well as the ignorant. Our love should go out to these as we see any lack in them that we could supply rendering assistance of any kind; using always, of course, discretion, for love learns to be wise, and to take into consideration our motives while we endeavor to do them good.

The Apostle suggests that we see to it that this is our own experience; not merely that it is a principle which we recognize, but that we should give heed to ourselves that this should be accomplished in us, in our own lives. It would not be natural to have that benevolence of mind which would practice forgiveness of those who trespass against us. But when we think of the fact that the whole race is fallen and degraded through heredity, it should make us sympathetic; if some are more depraved, we should have the more sympathy for them. As we think sympathetically along those lines, our sympathetic love will increase; as we practice sympathetic love the New Creature develops.

RESPONSIBILITY TO CREEDS

DR. HILLIS ON HERESY HINTS HIS RESIGNATION

Recently in the "N. Y. Evening Journal," Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, Pastor of the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, expressed himself very honestly in respect to the inalienable right to mental freedom of every human being; but while he stands free, with no lack of individual freedom, as soon as he joins sect, party, or club, thenceforth personal liberty is restricted to the declared or understood principles or tenets or doctrine of the party to which he owes allegiance.

We cannot too highly commend Dr. Hillis' pronouncement on this subject. It is exactly right and should be recognized and followed by everybody. But if it were followed there would be a great revolution along religious lines. It would mean, when applied to Christianity, that every Christian would examine the creed to which he has assented either actively or passively, and would recognize his responsibility accordingly. If the creed did not fully represent his faith he would promptly renounce that creed and find one that he could agree with, or else resume his personal, individual liberty of thought. It will not do to say that creeds are no longer believed by three-fourths of their adherents; for those three-fourths are stultifying themselves by their dishonesty in even tacitly acknowledging the creeds they do not believe. Not only would the ranks of the ministers thus be thinned out fully three-fourths, but likewise the membership in all denominations, we believe basing our judgment upon confessions to this effect freely made everywhere by clergy and laity.

Here are the manly words of Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis on this subject extracted from his recent article in the "New York Evening Journal":

DR. HILLIS ON HERESY

"As an individual, every man has a right to absolute liberty of thought on every subject. Second, as a teacher, every man has a right to absolute liberty of teaching so long as anybody will listen to him; but, third, whenever a man accepts an overture to become the representative of a political society, State government or religious body, he voluntarily resigns some of the details of his personal liberty when he pledges allegiance to the code and creed of the institution.

"For example, when the Governor takes the oath of allegiance to the Constitution, what he does as Governor is determined by a pre-existing code, for the people of the State have done the governor's thinking in advance. Whenever the individual Governor finds that he cannot carry out the decree of the people as expressed in their Constitution, he must resign his position, to maintain his honor and preserve his liberty of thought.

"When a man joins a church and accepts its creeds, he surrenders some of the details of his personal liberty, and whenever he decides that the creed in general is no longer in a reasonable sense fairly representative of his view, to maintain his personal liberty he must resign his position, in all honor and fairness."

DR. HILLIS' RESIGNATION HINTED

The above honest and courageous expression from the Pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church of Brooklyn some understand to be a hint that Dr. Hillis is about to resign as Pastor. It is assumed that the above is merely an advance statement showing his reasons therefore. It has long been noticed by his friends and the public that Dr. Hillis' sermons clearly show that he does not believe that the Bible is the inspired Word of God, nor that Jesus had a miraculous birth, nor that He is the world's Redeemer in the sense of satisfying Justice for the sins of the world. Indeed, his sermons seem very clearly to show that he does not believe that man ever fell from the image of God, but rather, along Evolutionary lines, he seems to believe and teach that our race is rising from monkeyhood to manhood by an Evolutionary process, which has been maintained from the first, and in which redemption would have no place.

As for his profession along these lines, we were handed copies of Dr. Hillis' sermons published in the "Brooklyn Eagle," with the following extracts marked. The Scripture quotations in brackets, are ours:

EXTRACT OF SERMON, FEBRUARY 6TH, 1910.

"The Answer--to the question, What is it to be saved? depends upon the way in which man is lost. If man is lost in ignorance, he will be saved by books, by schools and study. If man is lost in poverty, he will be saved by industry and thrift. If the youth is lost through sickness, he will be saved by rest, food and exercises, etc. (The Scriptures say that all are lost through Adam's disobedience. 1 Cor. 15:21,22)

"First of all, we must sweep away the misconception of salvation, based upon the vengeance and wrath of God. Hardly less grievous is that misconception of salvation that is based upon the fictitious fall of man in Adam. (Compare St. Paul's statements in Rom. 5:12 and 5:19 as follows: "As by one man (Adam) sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned"; "as by one man's disobedience (Adam's disobedience" many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one (Jesus) shall many be made righteous.")

"Men in their folly and ignorance charged God with imputing Adam's sin to his descendants, and making this river of corruption to flow on and on for six thousand years."

Undoubtedly many will regret it if Dr. Hillis vacates his present charge; nevertheless, all must concede the honesty and logic of his own argument on the subject and are bound to admire honesty, even though it be a little delayed.

THE TRUTH IN THE BIBLE

Dr. Hillis' words are being freely quoted in the newspapers as follows:

"No Assembly or Conference need worry about defending the truth. The truth in the Bible defends and protects men and shall prevail."

No one must think, after reading the above words, that Dr. Hillis by them is denying his previous declarations for years to the effect that the Bible is full of inconsistencies and inaccuracies and not in any sense the inspired Word of God. We hold no authority to defend Dr. Hillis and to prove the consistency of this last statement with previous ones; but for the sake of those who are confused on the subject we offer a suggestion. We presume that Dr. Hillis, by the above quotation, means that whatever truth there is in the Bible defends and protects men and shall prevail, in the very same sense that whatever truth there is in Dickens' or Shakespeare's writings defend and protect men and shall prevail. Unfortunately, there are many wise and good men of our day who are taking this same stand that Dr. Hillis takes. They could clip out a few passages here and there in the Bible which they would pronounce good and helpful, just as they would pick out a few passages from the Koran or from any other book, heathen or Christian.

In our humble opinion the work of Higher Critics in Colleges and in the chief pulpits of the civilized world is a terrible destruction, subversive to the "faith once delivered to the saints." With the loss of faith in the Bible there is a loss of a God to the majority. Only the few are able to think of God abstractly as the great Creator and Upholder of all things. Only a few can reason upon matters, that He must be All-wise, All-powerful, All-just and All-loving. And even these must feel perplexed to know why a gracious Creator would fail to give some explanation of His will and purpose in human creation.

The masses surely need the Bible and they need assistance in understanding it. It seems a pity that our so richly endowed colleges and seminaries are busily engaged in destroying faith in the blessed Book which has exercised such a power for good in the world. It seems a pity, too, that young men sent to college by devoted parents can get their education only in conjunction with a loss of such faith--sproutings as they receive at the home fireside.

There is a soul hunger, however, which neither Darwin nor Huxley nor the Higher Critics can satisfy. And with the growth of Higher Criticism we note the growth of graft and dishonesty, from the highest circles to the lowest from the life insurance exposures of a few years ago to the manifestation of political corruption on every hand. Surely men and women without God, without Christ, without religion, without a "faith once delivered to the saints," are much more likely to succumb to temptations than when they believed in the All-seeing Eye and in the promises to the faithful recorded in the Scriptures.

PERISH FOR LACK OF KNOWLEDGE

God declares, "My people perish for lack of knowledge." Civilization has brought to millions of people power to read and incentive to reason. Consequently, there never was a period in the world's history when correct knowledge of God was so greatly needed by so many people. In the ignorance and lethargy of the "Dark Ages" people thought less, either of good or bad. Now is the time when there is a special need for a clear, explicit, harmonious understanding of the Bible, and we have it. Now, as St. Peter said, We are able to give an Answer--to every man that asketh of us a reason for the hope that is in us. But, alas! that so many have gone the way of unbelief and Higher Criticism and are using their talents to destroy the Bible and to undermine faith in it. Alas, too, for those who still maintain their reverence for the Bible and continue to wear the creed spectacles of the "Dark Ages" which distort and discolor all the precious promises, as well as threatenings, of God's Word! Now is the time to make use of the wonderful assistances that God has given us, both in the study of His Word and in the teaching of it to others, that it may be seen in its beauty and harmony, its simplicity and strength. Thus seen, no other book in the world can compare with the Bible.

To such as have not seen the consistency and beauty of God's Word we recommend a careful and prayerful reading of a book entitled "The Divine Plan of the Ages." It is from the pen of the well-known Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle, who, according to newspaper reports, has recently consented also to serve the London Tabernacle about one-third of each year. He charges no royalty to the publishers of his books, but insists, on the contrary, that they shall be sold at barely cost price. Some of these peculiarities of his are sneered at by his enemies, but, nevertheless, to many these facts commend the Pastor, his sermons and his books. He certainly conceals nothing respecting his own faith. And he certainly has lifted a great cloud of fear and doubt from the minds of many and thus helped them nearer to God, to the Bible and to holiness. Perhaps we cannot do better here than to quote the words of a deceased editor of the Atlanta Constitution, Mr. C. T. Smith. Reviewing one of Pastor Russell's volumes, "The Divine Plan of the Ages," in his Journal, Mr. Smith said:—

STRONG WORDS OF COMMENDATION

But it is impossible to read this book without loving the writer and pondering his wonderful solution of the great mysteries that have troubled us all our lives. There is hardly a family to be found that has not lost some loved one who died outside the church outside the plan of salvation, and, if Calvinism be true, outside of all hope and inside of eternal torment and despair. We smother our feelings and turn away from the horrible picture. We dare not deny the faith of our fathers, and yet can it be possible that the good mother and the wandering child are forever separated? forever and forever?

"I believe it is the rigidity of these teachings that makes atheists and infidels and skeptics makes Christians unhappy and brings their gray hairs down in sorrow to the grave a lost child, a lost soul!

"This wonderful book makes no assertions that are not well sustained by the Scriptures. It is built up stone by stone, and upon every stone is the text, and it becomes a pyramid of God's love, and mercy, and wisdom."

"There is nothing in the Bible that the author denies or doubts, but there are many texts that he throws a flood of light upon that seems to remove from them the dark and gloomy meaning. I see that editors of leading journals and many orthodox ministers of different denominations have endorsed it and have confessed to this new and comforting light that has dawned upon the interpretation of God's Book. Then let every man read and ponder and take comfort, for we are all prisoners of hope. This is an age of advanced thought, and more thinking is done than ever before men dare to think now. Light, more light is the watchword." C. T. Smith ("B. Arp").

This wonderful book is in its fourth million, so doubtless it is unnecessary to advertise it; nevertheless we should not wonder if it is in the libraries of many of our readers who are not aware of its priceless value; it is a valuable Bible key

Darwinism is Dying

*“For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls.”
Leviticus 17:11*

All the trend of religious scholarship in recent years is away from the Bible and in line with the Evolution theory. The Bible sets forth that the first man was created perfect, in the image and likeness of his Creator, and that when on trial for life or death everlasting he was disobedient, and came under the sentence of death; and that all trouble, all sin and sorrow, pain and death for the past six thousand years, is the penalty, the result, of that fall from obedience and harmony with God. The Bible teaches the necessity for an Atonement for sin, and this lesson was shown in the typical sacrifices of bullocks and goats, which Israelites for centuries commemorated, especially upon their Atonement Day, at the beginning of each year.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION OPPOSED

Evolution claims that man started as a cousin to the monkey, and that instead of falling into sin and death, an evolution process has been bringing him up, up, up to his present high elevation. This theory, having no place for sin or a fall, finds, of course, no place or need for a recovery, through a Redeemer, a Savior. The two theories are absolutely opposed. Whoever believes the Darwinian theory cannot, logically, be a Christian. Whoever is a Christian cannot, logically, hold to the Darwin theory. And yet the pulpits of Christendom are well stocked with Higher Critics and Evolutionists, and all of our colleges and theological seminaries are graduating others, all antagonistic to the Bible and its presentations. For years the fight has been conducted on the quiet. The unbelievers hold the best and most influential pulpits and professorships in Christendom, and insidiously, craftily, undermine the faith of those who are paying them their salaries.

It is time that the battle between truth and error should come out into the open, because the majority of those who are being misled do not realize the situation until their faith is entirely undermined--until their minds are so entrenched in error that the verities of God's Word, including the words of Jesus and the Apostles, have passed with them into the list of absurdities, amongst these, the stories of Jonah and the whale, Noah and the flood, etc., endorsed by Jesus and the Apostles.

HIGHER CRITICISM MEANS HIGHER INFIDELITY

Today every college, every theological seminary throughout the whole civilized world is teaching what is known as Higher Criticism of the Bible--though the proper name for it would be higher infidelity--infidelity amongst the high ones of all Christendom. These Higher Critics are doing the same work exactly that Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll did, only they are carrying on their work on a higher plane--appealing not to the gross and the vile, but to the refined, intelligent and truth seeking. As a result their influence is a thousand fold more injurious. Those to whom Paine and Ingersoll appealed were very rarely Christians at all; hence they destroyed very little faith--they merely made the unbelief more rank and foul.

But these Higher Critic infidels of his "evil day" are making use of all the vast machinery of Christendom in all denominations, especially through theological seminaries, to undermine and overthrow the faith of all who have named the name of Christ, great and small, rich and poor, cultured and ignorant. It is being done systematically, too, craftily, deceitfully, in a manner that the masses of the people would scarcely credit. It is safe to say that fully four out of five who graduate from theological seminaries of all denominations are Higher Critic infidels, who are instructed that their main business is to promote morality amongst the people, especially to build up Churchianity, particularly their own denomination, and to gradually, stealthily, craftily wean the people away from the faith of the Bible to their higher critical dogmas. And they are succeeding most wonderfully. A "pestilence" is the only figure of speech which readily fits to this pernicious influence.

OUT OF THINE OWN MOUTH WILL I JUDGE THEE,

said the Lord, and in harmony with this we find that in the Lord's providence these Higher Critics are gradually more and more telling on themselves, and many of the true Christians, as the Apostle explains, are merely "babes in Christ," unable to use the strong meat of the Word, and capable only of enjoying or using the "milk of the Word," incapable of assimilating the strong meat. Hence the open declarations of these wolves in sheep's clothing, who masquerade as sheep, are not taken seriously. If the sheep are startled by the words, they are soothed again by the thought, "This is our kind of minister, polished in manner and well educated, and he surely would not lead us astray, he surely would not deceive us. If he had ceased to believe the Bible and become an infidel he surely would have left the pulpit." Poor innocents.

BLOOD ATONEMENT FOR SIN

Our text refers to blood-atonement for sin. The Law Covenant required the death of a bullock and a goat, but the repetition of these sacrifices every year indicated that no cancellation was effected thereby--merely a typical covering of sin for a year. The Law required an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a man's life for a man's life, which implies that a perfect man must of necessity die in order to be a Redeemer of Adam and the race which shared his condemnation. The bullock of the sin-offering, therefore, was merely a type of a better sacrifice. The true sacrifice was provided in the death of the Man Christ Jesus. He was a man and yet not a sinful man, because, although born of a woman, His life was from above. Had He received His life from an earthly father, He would have been a blemished, imperfect, sinful man, and as such could not have paid the ransom-price for another.

As in the type the blood of the bullock was used to make a typical atonement, so in the antitype the blood of Jesus is efficacious to make atonement for the sins of the whole world. In the type an earthly priest offered the blood in an earthly tabernacle; in the antitype, He who became the Sin-Offering, begotten of the Holy Spirit, at the time of His consecration, was therefore recognized as the great Antitypical High Priest. After His resurrection He ascended on high, "to appear in the presence of God for us"--for the Church first; and when the Church shall be completed, He will appear for the world. Then as the great Mediator of that New Covenant (Jer. 31:31), He will for a thousand years reign as King of the earth, the Antitype of Melchisedec—a Priest upon His throne—a Royal Priest, possessed of necessary power to put down sin and to uplift humanity.

TO REGAIN PARADISE LOST

The paradise lost when Adam sinned was a miniature one. It is to be restored and to be world-wide in extent. "God will make his earthly footstool glorious."—"He has promised to make his footstool glorious"—"he formed it not in vain, He formed it to be inhabited." Isa. 60:13; 66:1; 45:18

As the earthly Eden it will be inhabited by its master, man; the restored earth would be naught without its master restored. And this is the Divine provision, that as by a man came death, sin, sorrow, pain, trouble, "by a Man also came the resurrection of the dead," the uplifting of Adam's race, mentally, morally, physically, to human perfection, happiness and everlasting life. Earth's blessing will be for all except two classes: (1) Those who love sin and hate righteousness, after having been brought to a full knowledge of both good and evil, will have no further Divine favor, but will die the Second Death. (2) The others who will not get human perfection will be a spiritual class, a saintly class whom God is now selecting from among mankind to be His co-laborers with Christ in the uplifting and restoration of humanity.

Unquestionably the Almighty could have arranged a plan for dealing with humanity differently—He could have put a different penalty upon Father Adam. The present arrangement was made so as to display (1) Divine Justice, (2) Divine Love, (3) Divine Power, (4) Divine Wisdom. Man's fall and degradation under the death sentence witnessed to men and to angels the downward tendency of sin and Divine Justice in man's condemnation. Divine Love is manifested in the work of redemption. Divine Power will be manifested, during the reign of Messiah, in the uplifting of humanity from sin and death—the resurrection of the dead. Divine Wisdom will finally be seen by all when the great work of reconciliation and regeneration shall have been effected.

THE LIFE IS IN THE BLOOD

We have always known that in a very important sense the life of every creature is in the blood, as our text declares. But we are continually finding that the Bible contains such a superhuman wisdom that many of its statements grow in importance as our knowledge increases. Our text is no exception to this rule. The latest findings of science are to the effect that life and nature are more particularly represented in the blood than in any other manner.

If the theory of Evolution seemed supported by Mr. Darwin's careful inter-breeding of his pigeons, we are not to forget the difficulty he encountered in maintaining his fancy breeds. The complete tendency appeared to be to turn back to the original stock. We are now informed that this is a rule, a law of nature, which applies both to animal and vegetable life. We are informed that all such breedings return to their original species in the third or fourth generation. It is even pointed out now that diseases of the blood proceed no further than the third or fourth generation, and this most fortunately, otherwise the physical health of humanity might be much more impaired than it is.

Is not this a direct corroboration of that Bible statement which some of us once thought so ungracious—God's declaration that He would "visit the sins of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation?" (Exod. 20:5) It now appears that, instead of being a mark of Divine disfavor, it is a mark of Divine mercy that hereditary taint in the blood is limited to the third or fourth generation.

A celebrated physician and scientist, Dr. William Hanna Thompson, promulgating this theory, said:--

"Professor George H.F. Nuttall, of the University of Cambridge, took up the subject and has so extended its application, that a single drop of blood from any animal suffices, not only to show by its own peculiar chemical reaction what animal it comes from, but how nearly related an animal is by blood to other animals. It begins, therefore, to look as if the whole classification of zoology might have to be rearranged according to these blood tests. Thus a drop of blood from a walrus shows no relation to a drop of whale's blood, or the blood of any other cetacean, such as seals, or porpoises, which, like the walrus, are mammals that have taken to the sea."

We may be sure that those who hold fast to the teachings of the Bible will come out on the right side of the argument in the long run. The endeavor of worldly-wise men to get away from God's Book has led many of them to extremes of thought and of statement, which some day will be fully rectified to their shame. The Bible foretells this, saying, "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." (Isa. 29:14). St. Paul refers to science, falsely so-called, which will ultimately be proven wrong.

COMPLETE SIN-ATONEMENT

For nearly six thousand years the reign of sin and death has prevailed. It is nearly two thousand years since the Redeemer came to give His life as man's redemption price, yet still the reign of sin and death continues. It is not because the blood of Christ was insufficient to satisfy the claims of Justice for the sins of the world, but because, before the merit of Christ could be given to Adam and his race, it must have a previous use. That use has been in progress for the past eighteen centuries, during which it has been the basis of the Church's justification by faith.

ATONEMENT FOR THE SOUL

In our text the word SOUL is a synonym for PERSON or BEING. Father Adam was a human soul, a human being, so also his children. He alone, however, had a standing before Justice. He alone was perfect, he alone was on trial, and through his disobedience and fall his children are involved. Jesus was, originally, a spirit being, personality or soul, the LOGOS. He became a partaker of flesh and blood; He was not, previously, a HUMAN soul, hence it was that it was necessary for Him to lay aside the glory of His higher nature or order of being, and become a human soul, "that He, by the grace of God, might taste death for every man." (Heb. 2:9). He gave his blood, his LIFE, a Ransom for all, and thus we see the fulfillment of our text, the exhibition of Divine favor and love, with the resultant blessing to the world during Messiah's reign, and the exaltation of the Church, which must precede.

THE GREATEST THING IN THE UNIVERSE

*“That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His loving-kindness toward us in Jesus Christ”
Eph. 2:7*

Following in the footsteps of our fathers, who handed down to us our pre sent day creeds, we have misunderstood our gracious Creator. We studied astronomy and declared the Creator Almighty; we studied geology and confirmed the decision. We studied zoology and anthropology and declared that the Creator was All-Wise, as we came to appreciate Him. We noted the adaptation of our various organs to our use and comfort the hand, the foot, the eye, the ear, the circulatory system, the nervous system and the power of the will over these.

We said to ourselves, truly man is fearfully and wonderfully made, truly his Maker is a God infinite in wisdom and skill. We examined the subject of man's moral sense, and although we found it impaired we have been astonished to note how even the most selfish and depraved have an instinct of justice, a sense of right, whether they follow it or not.

“LOVE DIVINE ALL LOVE EXCELLING”

Then we said, Whence came this noble principle of Justice as the backbone or moral quality in our race? The only reply was that in this particular God originally created man in His own moral likeness, and that a measure of this moral quality has persisted notwithstanding the fall through disobedience into death and its consequent demoralization through sin and weakness.

Looking further we perceived that the noblest specimens of our race possess still other qualities closely associated with Justice, but outranking it. The noble quality which overtops all the rest we term Love. It is Love which makes the heart tender, sympathetic, helpful and happy; it is Love that makes home, whether exercised in a palace or a hovel. It is Love which backs up Justice and insists that no ill shall be worked toward a neighbor. It is love that is on the alert to assist by word or act all of those needing aid. It is Love that inspires us to the boldest acts of heroism. It is Love that prompts the giving of time and strength, of means and even life itself on behalf of its object.

All freely admit that Love is the greatest, the most blessed quality possessed by humanity, and that without it even paradise could not bring happiness. We ask, Whence came this quality of Love, and from what fountain can we receive the fresh supplies so much needed by so many of our race? The Answer--is that the great Creator Himself is the Fountain. "God is love." This All-Wise and All-Powerful and All-Just One is pre-eminently the "God of all grace," "The Father of mercies," the Fountain of blessing."

*"Love Divine, all love excelling,
Joy of heaven, to earth come down;
Fix in us Thy humble dwelling,
All Thy faithful mercies crown."*

"SHOW ME THY GLORY"

The ancients had the correct thought, that they had caught but a glimpse of the Divine character and its glory; hence their prayer, "Show me Thy glory." The same should be our sentiment. In the clear light now shining upon God's Word we perceive that it will require the entire out working of the Divine Plan of the Ages to illustrate or make known to humanity the real character of the Heavenly Father. Only the very few can by faith accept the Divine promises and trust in their ultimate fulfillment and see far down into the future the full shining forth of God's character, perfect in its Wisdom, Justice, Power and Love.

We may not judge the infinite love in all respects by human comparison, but we may know that our difficulty in the matter is that the human comparisons can only imperfectly represent the Infinite. We see the excavation or perhaps the foundation walls or perhaps the first story of a structure; but if we were to judge wholly by these imperfect parts it would be manifestly unfair and we should be deceiving ourselves. The only way to judge of the builder's capacity and intentions would be to see the architectural drawing and to study the details and then we may but very imperfectly appreciate the whole. Is it not thus in respect to the great Maker's present work and ultimate designs? The poet has well said:

*"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust Him for His grace,
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.*

*"His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower."*

If we stand beside a great sculptor with his freshly chosen block of marble, we may at first feel shocked to note the apparent roughness and carelessness with which he smites off large pieces of the stone, as though bent on its destruction. But let patience have her perfect work, and gradually we will see that the sculptor has not been careless or indifferent in respect to a single blow.

All the while that he seemed so reckless he was working according to the ideal before his own mind. With his mind's eye he saw his ideal in the stone, and blow after blow, chip after chip merely revealed to our eyes what he had purposed in himself from the beginning of his work. Not until his work was finished could we comprehend fully the ideal. Is not this principle still more true of our Creator? He tells us that He is "working all things according to the counsel of His own will," which He purposed in Himself "before the world was." (Eph. 1:11; 3:10,11.)

The great Master Workman of the Universe will eventually show both to angels and men all the various attributes of His perfection His Wisdom, Justice, Power and Love. Meantime, "None of the wicked shall understand," but in the End of this Age the wise will increasingly understand His purposes, hidden from all except His saints, of whom it is written, "The secret of the Lord is with them that reverence Him;" "He will show you things to come." Psa. 25:14; John 16:13.

NOW APPLY THE PRINCIPLE

Let us apply this principle to the work of our great Creator. Let us see how far it has already progressed. In what state of development is the Divine Plan today? What will be required to complete it and to manifest Divine Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power? Only by a careful examination of the Great Architect's revealed plan can we judge at all of the degree to which His purposes have already attained perfection.

3H53

The wreck and blight of human interests resulting from Father Adams disobedience progressed for twenty-five hundred years before the first step was taken in the Divine Program on man's behalf. That first step was merely the making of a rough outline drawing with various crude illustrations which merely hinted at one or another of the Creator's glorious purposes. This rough outlining was done during the sixteen hundred years we call the Jewish Age.

Israel as a nation pictured all the world of mankind who will ultimately come into fellowship with God. Their one tribe of Levi typified the Household of Faith, "the Church of the First-born" of this Gospel Age, through whom all blessings will come to the remainder. The select Levites, the priests, typified the Royal Priesthood of the better Mediator. The sacrifices by which that Covenant was established, and that people brought into harmony with God, typified the better sacrifices of Christ, which began with our Lord and have continued in His faithful followers who present their bodies living sacrifices, wholly and acceptable to God through Him. (Rom. 12:1.)

Israel's Jubilee year typified the great Times of Jubilation soon to come, "the blessing of all the families of the earth" the "Times of Restitution of all things," to be inaugurated at the second coming of Christ and the establishment of His kingdom. Manifestly only those who could understand those roughly sketched drawings could comprehend to any degree the great Divine Plan of the Ages.

With this Gospel Age God began a great work which is yet far from finished and which as yet does not show forth fully to mankind in general His Justice, Wisdom, Power or Love. The work of this Age, according to the Scriptures, is the selection of both the "Lamb's Wife," and "the virgins, her companions, who follow her." (Psa. 14:8-18.)

The Bible declares that Jesus, the Redeemer, having finished His sacrifice, passed into glory beyond the veil to the right hand of Divine Majesty. It declares also that when this Age shall be completed all the faithful followers of Jesus will pass to Him beyond the veil and share His glory and His Kingdom and immortality on the heavenly plane. But how few there are who see this much of the Divine Plan; and if they cannot see this much how could they be expected to see still further into the future developments of the Divine Program?

As the sentence of death came as the result of one transgression, but involved the race, so one sacrifice for sin, by the "man Christ Jesus," was sufficient to be a Ransom-Price for the sins of the whole world a man's life for a man's life. Thus a condemnation came through one man unto death, so justification is provided through this other man unto everlasting life. Rom. 5:16, 18.

CHRIST'S SACRIFICE OFFSETS ADAM'S SIN

But although so broad a foundation for human salvation was laid by the great Master Workman, the Message and the blessing therein have not been granted as yet to the majority, but to the few—"He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear;" "As many as the Lord your God shall call;" "No man can come unto Me, except the Father which sent Me draw him." And this calling and drawing, though in one sense free, is in another sense restricted to those who are in the heart condition of being drawn and of hearing the call. All others remain blinded to the Divine invitation by the god of this world. (2 Cor. 4:4.)

Evidently those now being drawn and "called" are not the whole world, but a select class. Those who prove themselves faithful to the end are styled "the very elect." These are the Royal Priesthood who, as priestly Kings, will be associated with Messiah in His glorious, world-wide Empire which "shall rule from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth," for the binding of Satan, the overthrow of sin, and the uplifting of sinners. But we are to clearly distinguish between the present work of selecting the Royal Priests, the Bride, the Lamb's Wife, and the work for the world, which these will accomplish after their glorification on the spirit plane.

We must thus distinguish, because looking upon the revealed plans of the great Architect of the Universe, we perceive that thus He has arranged the Church, as the Bride of Christ, is to constitute “a New Creation,” partakers of the divine nature like unto her Lord. These on the plane of glory will have a station “far above principalities and powers and every name that is named.” Eph. 1:21; Rev. 3:21.

Whoever can see this to be the Divine Plan must with the eye of faith look down to the future and behold the Church—“changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,” because “flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God.” Here is love, wondrous love, in lifting up members of the sinner race to glory, honor and immortality. Who can comprehend such love as this which the Father has bestowed upon Jesus and the “little flock” of His followers who walk in His steps?

HUMAN RESTITUTION IN THE FUTURE

The earthly sculptor seemed wasteful to prodigality when he broke off one portion of his stone and dealt merely with it, but when subsequently he explained that he intended to deal also with the large remainder of the stone, and to make thereof a wonderful group, we began to understand him better. So the Almighty is now showing to His people that the Church now being selected is merely “a first-fruits of His creatures” and that, after their perfection in glory, His great work for the masses of mankind will begin.

The fact that only a few of earth’s families were recognized of God for twenty-five hundred years, and that only one nation was recognized for the following sixteen hundred years, and that only a small proportion have had any recognition during this Gospel Age, seems strange to us until we learn that God has not intended to put the world on trial for life or death everlasting, until first He shall have selected the “Church of the First-borns, whose names are written in heaven.” These now are required to prove and perfect their loyalty by walking by faith and not by sight. Soon, we trust, the Church will be completed and the New Dispensation, already dawning, will be fully inaugurated. “He that shall come will come and will not tarry.” Soon our prayer, “Thy Kingdom come,” will be answered. Then for a thousand years the conquering of the world will progress until God’s will shall be done as thoroughly on earth as now in heaven.

Well may the glorified saints sing, “Who shall not come and worship before Thee, O Lord, when Thy righteous dealings are made manifest?” Then the clouds of ignorance, superstition, doctrines of devils, fire and torture, horrors which have beclouded the eyes of our understanding and driven so many of the best specimens of humanity away from God and from His Book, will flee away.

While now only those who have the hearing ear can hear, and these are few, the saintly, the Scriptures declare that the full knowledge of God shall fill the earth "in due time." We must have patience for God's time, as well as for God's blessing.

*"Blind unbelief is sure to err
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain."*

CONSIDER THE TEXT

Throughout the discourse we have been working our way toward the glorious fullness of God's love declared in our text. We have traced the Divine Program in full harmony with the Apostle's statement into the "Ages to come." Not until those Ages shall have come will the Divine Plan have been fully shown forth nor the riches of Divine Love.

In the thousand years' reign of Messiah's glorious Empire, colaboring with Him in the overthrow of Sin and Death in the release of humanity from these powers of evil, by restoring them to human perfection, the Bride of Jesus (the Church) will have a glorious share. Glory, honor and immortality will be her portion. The Great Architect has not further revealed his plans in respect to the work of Christ and His Bride during the eternity beyond His Messianic reign. We merely know that when He shall have finished that work He will deliver up the Kingdom to God, even with the Father (1 Cor. 15:24.)

But then, in the "Ages to come," God will show forth the exceeding riches of His grace and His loving kindness toward us in Christ Jesus." Oh! how much is meant by those words, "exceeding riches of His grace!" Mind, heart nor tongue can measure the depths of those words, when we remember the infinite greatness of the Father's mercy which guarantees His promise. Can any one imagine anything more mighty, more influential in all the universe than Love Divine?

ALL TRUE CHRISTIANS ARE IMMersed, SAYS PASTOR C. T. RUSSELL

The second installment of Pastor C. T. Russell's "Discourse on Baptism," delivered in Carnegie Hall, Allegheny, Sunday last, is printed below this morning as a continuation of the matter which appeared last Monday morning:

ALL TRUE CHRISTIANS IMMersed

From this standpoint it will be observed that there may be members of the true church baptized into Jesus Christ by being baptized into His Church among Presbyterians, Methodists, Lutherans, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, Roman Catholics, etc., as well as among Disciples and Baptists. On the other hand, undoubtedly the great majority in all denominations (including Disciples and Baptists immersed in water) have neither part nor lot in "the body of Christ," the true Ecclesia, because of not having come through the real door into the real Church by the real baptism into "His death." This proposition is incontrovertible.

Having thus laid all the stress, as the apostles do, upon the true baptism, we turn to the symbol of it, water baptism, and inquire, first, is the symbol proper or necessary to those who have the real baptism? Second, if so, which is the proper symbol?

The testimony of the Lord and the apostles clearly indicates the propriety of the symbolical or water baptism, because not only they themselves were baptized with water, but taught water baptism in respect to others not Jews only, but also Gentile converts. We have already shown that our Lord Jesus' baptism was separate and distinct from that of John's baptism to the Jews in general; that it was not unto repentance for remission of sins; that John did not understand the matter, and that our Lord in thus instituting a symbol of His own death, did not attempt to explain what John and others of that time could not have understood, because the Holy Spirit was not given, for Jesus had not yet accomplished His sacrifice for our sins, nor been glorified so as to present the sacrifice on our behalf.

We note the commission given by our Lord to the apostles, and to us through them, as recorded in Matt. 28:19-20: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name (by the authority) of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." This commission has applied to this entire gospel age, and under it all the ministers of the Truth to-day labor. The Lord did not here refer to the Pentecostal baptism of the Spirit, because it was not in the power of the Apostle thus to baptize anyone. The Lord Himself, and He alone, had this authority and retained it. It was, however, granted to the apostles, and to all the faithful teachers of the Lord's Word, to instruct people respecting the grace of God in Christ, respecting their justification and respecting their sanctification, or consecration, or baptism into death with Christ, if they would be partakers of His new nature and coming glory. And the baptizing included also the symbolical, or water baptism, which was to be the outward sign by which the inward or heart consecration of the believer would be made known unto his fellows, even as our Lord Himself first made the heart-consecration to the Father and then symbolized it in water.

TEACHINGS OF THE APOSTLES

That the inspired apostles so understood their commission and ours is evident from all their teachings. They first taught the people respecting the grace of God in the work of redemption, encouraging them to believe unto justification of life. They next urged upon them a full consecration of heart, saying, "Beseech you, brethren (no longer sinners and aliens, but justified through faith in Christ, and, hence, designated members of the "household of faith" or "brethren"), that ye present your bodies living sacrifices, holy (justified), acceptable to God, your reasonable service." This was the invitation to consecrate, or sacrifice, or to be "baptized into His death." So many as heard the word gladly, in the proper condition of heart, appreciatively, were baptized not only really baptized in their consecration vow, but also symbolically baptized in water, as an outward testimony of this.

Notice the following testimonies that baptism was the custom of all the Apostles not merely with the Jews, but also with the Gentiles. We read of the people of Samaria, "When they believed Philip... they were baptized, both men and women (not children)." Acts 8:12 The Ethiopian eunuch converted by the preaching of Philip was also baptized in water (Acts 8:35-38). After Peter had preached to Cornelius and his household, "The Holy Spirit fell upon all them that heard (appreciated) the word (no infants, therefore)... and he commanded them to be baptized." (Acts 10:44-48) Again we read, "Many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were baptized." (Acts 18:8.) Again we read, "Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, one that worshipped God, heard us; whose heart the Lord opened to give heed unto the things spoken by Paul.... She was baptized and her household."(Acts 16:14-15) The Philippian jailer, when he had believed, was baptized by Paul and Silas in the prison. (Acts 16:33) Again we read, "I baptized also the house of Stephanus." (1 Cor. 1:16)

True, the apostle in this last case mentions how few he had baptized, but this undoubtedly was because of his thorn in the flesh, his imperfect eyesight; and a few whom he baptized probably received this service at his hands because no one else suitable to perform it was conveniently at hand. He thanked God that he baptized so few; but this does not imply that he had changed his mind in respect to the fact that a dispute had arisen in the church a sectarian or faction spirit leading some to say, "I am of Paul," others, "I am of Apollos," others, "I am of Peter," etc. the Apostle was glad that he could say he had baptized very few of them himself, lest any of them might be led to claim that he had been making personal disciples, baptizing them in his own name instead of making disciples for Christ, and baptizing them into the name of Christ.

BAPTISM A DIVINE INSTITUTION

In the light of these plain declarations of Scripture respecting the precept and practice of the Lord and the Apostles, it would be a bold man indeed who would declare that symbolical or water baptism is not taught in the Scriptures, or that it was taught as applicable to the Jews, or that it was intended only as an introductory work. It is surely with good reason that all Christian people respect water baptism as of Divine institution. If any are inclined to still controvert this question, we have no quarrel with them; but believe that if such a one is honest and has performed in his heart the true baptism of his will into the will of the Lord if he has become dead to self, and to the world, and alive toward God through Jesus Christ our Lord, God will reveal this matter also unto him in due season. (Phil. 3:15.)

Meantime we shall rejoice with such that they have found the real baptism and become participators in it; and we congratulate them upon the truth that it is far better to see and enjoy the real baptism while blind to the symbol than it would be to see the symbol and be blind to the reality. In view of this, however strongly we favor the symbolical baptism we could not base Christian fellowship upon it, but only upon the real baptism into death with Christ. All, therefore, who confess the Lord as their Redeemer, and confess a full consecration of heart and life to Him, we accept as brethren in Christ Jesus, members of the Ecclesia, whose names are written in heaven, new creatures in Christ, whether by birth Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, male or female, baptized with water or not baptized with water.

KNOWLEDGE MEANS RESPONSIBILITY

On the other hand, let it not be forgotten that every item of knowledge brings not only an increase of privilege and joy, but also an increase of responsibility. Whoever, therefore, comes to see the beauty and authority of the water symbol comes at the same time to another test as respects the deadness of his will respecting his real baptism into death with the Lord. A failure to obey as to the symbol under these circumstances it will readily be seen would mean a withdrawal of the sacrifice and thus a failure to make the calling and election sure.

We will not attempt a discussion of the multitudinous pros and cons as between sprinkling, pouring and immersion as to which was the original apostolic mode of performing symbolical baptism. We will suggest, however, that no infant could possibly be in the condition of mind and heart which would permit it to make a consecration or baptism of its will into the will of Christ, so as to become dead with him to self and to the world: We will insist further that the symbolical baptism could not be performed prior to the real baptism with any validity, because symbolical baptism is intended to be merely the outward expression or confession of what has already transpired between our hearts, our wills and the Lord in secret.

These things being true, it follows that the great majority of Christian people have never had symbolical or water baptism, since they could receive it only after intelligently making their consecration vow. The immersion of adults prior to consecration would be no more efficacious than an ordinary bath, no more of a symbolic baptism than the sprinkling of an unconsecrated infant. It behooves all, therefore, to inquire earnestly which is the true water baptism, the true symbol designed by our Lord, and to obey it promptly. And every consecrated heart, "dead indeed" to self will and worldly opinion, will be on the alert to know and to do the will of the Lord in this and in every other matter. Such alertness is implied in the expression "Alive toward God, through Jesus Christ, our Lord" Rom. 6:11.

Suppose that the confusion on the subject of the mode of baptism were so complete and the testimony concerning the procedure of the early church so bewildering that we had nothing whatever to guide us in determining whether the apostolic mode of water baptism was by sprinkling or pouring or immersing, we are now in a place where, seeing clearly what constitutes the real baptism, it is possible for us to discern clearly what would and what would not constitute symbols or pictures of it. Scrutinizing every form practiced one only seems at all to picture death and burial with Christ. We fail to see any symbol of death to the world and self, and with Christ, in many or few drops of water upon the forehead or in a pail full of water poured over the person. If there is any symbolical likeness of death in either of these we are unable to perceive it.

But when we come to consider immersion we see at a glance a wonderful, a striking, a remarkable, a fitting illustration of all that is implied in the real baptism to death. Not only does the Greek word baptizo signify submergence, covering, burying, overwhelming but the whole procedure connected with one immersion backward into the water in the name of Christ is a most striking picture of a burial, fitting in every particular. The administrator in the symbol represents our Lord. As the candidate goes to him so we in our hearts go to the Lord for baptism. Confessing that we cannot of ourselves become dead to self and to the world, we give ourselves into the hand of the Lord, asking Him to accept the will for the deed and requesting that, our wills being given up, He will bury us into His death that He will cause such experiences, such disciplines, assistances and chastisements as will best enable us to carry out our covenant of consecration.

When the candidate has surrendered his will the administrator gently lets him down into the water, and while he is thus on his back, helpless in the water, he furnishes a complete illustration of our powerlessness to assist ourselves while in death; and as the administrator raises him to his feet again we see in the picture just what our Lord promised to us to raise us up from the dead in due time by His own power. We make no attempt to constrain the consciences of others who differ with us, but it seems to us evident from the fitness of this symbol that its author was the Lord. Who else could have arranged so complete a picture or symbol of the entire matter?

Whoever has already performed the real baptism whoever has already given himself into the hands of Christ, to become dead with Him, buried in the likeness of His death, and then sees the beauty of this symbolic picture, must, we believe, feel an intense desire to fulfill it in his own case. The language of his heart must surely be "I delight to do Thy will, O my God."

What advantages will accrue from obedience to this symbol? We Answer--that the advantage does not accrue on the fulfillment of any one part of our consecration vow, but will only be ours if we seek to fulfill all the requirements, first and last everything included in the full surrender of our wills to the Lord's will and a full endeavor to walk in His steps. But while the full advantage will accrue at the end of the journey, in the first resurrection and its glory, honor and immortality, there is a measure of advantage to be enjoyed even now. The satisfaction of mind, the peace of heart, the fact that like our Lord, we have endeavored to "fulfill all righteousness," these contribute to that peace of God which flows like a river, regularly and steadily and forcefully, through the lives of those who are His the peace of God that passeth all understanding in our hearts.

TESTIMONY FROM EVERY QUARTER

The apostle's testimony is that there is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." (Eph. 4:4-6) It follows that as there is only one proper baptism, so there can be but one proper symbol of it; and Christian people in general are agreed that immersion in water corresponds most closely to the meaning of the Scriptural language. As illustrations of this agreement note the following comments from persons who, though probably really baptized into Christ's death, had become confused, so that they did not know how to identify its water symbol, and concluded that it is immaterial.

John Calvin, Presbyterian, says: "The very word 'baptize' signifies to immerse. It is certain that immersion was the practice of the primitive church." Institutes, Book 4, chapter 15, par. 19.

Dr. MacKnight, Presbyterian: "In baptism the baptized person is buried under the water." "Christ submitted to be baptized; that is, to be buried under the water."

Dr. Philip Schaff, Presbyterian: "Immersion, and not sprinkling, was unquestionably the original, normal form. This is shown by the very meaning of the Greek words 'baptizo,' 'baptisma,' 'baptismos.'" (History of Apostolic Church, p. 568.)

In a later publication (1885) he writes further on these "comparisons" that they "are all in favor of immersion, rather than sprinkling, as is fully admitted by the best exegetes, Catholic and Protestant, English and German." (Teachings of the Twelve Apostles, pp. 55-56.)

Martin Luther, Lutheran: "'Baptism' is a Greek word, and may be translated 'immersion.'" "I would have those who are to be baptized to be altogether dipped into the water." (Luther's Works, vol. 1, p. 336.)

John Wesley, Methodist: "'Buried with Him by baptism' alluding to the ancient method of immersion."

Wall, Episcopalian: "Immersion was in all probability the way in which our blessed Savior, and for certain was the most usual and ordinary way by which the ancient Christians did receive their baptism." (History Infant Baptism, vol. 1, p. 571, Oxford, 1862.)

Dean Stanley, Episcopalian: "For the first thirteen centuries the almost universal practice of baptism was that of which we read in the New Testament and which is the very meaning of the word 'baptize' that those who were baptized were plunged, submerged, immersed into the water." (Christian Institutions, p. 17.)

Brenner, Roman Catholic: "Thirteen hundred years was baptism generally and regularly an immersion of the person under water." (Historical Exhibition of the Administration of Baptism, p. 306.)

“TO HELL AND BACK”

Pastor C. T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., whose sermons appear each week in The Fort Wayne News, who visited this city Sunday and whose sermon of Sunday evening appeared in this paper yesterday, delivered the following sermon at the afternoon service at the Majestic theater.

The large house was crowded and many were turned away and this sermon is printed by request for the accommodation of those who were unable to hear it and those who heard and desire to keep it for reference.

Announcing his topic as above, Pastor Russell took as his text the words of the prophet: “The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.” (Psa. 19:7.) He explained, however, that he expected to use many scriptures in the elucidation of this subject. His discourse follows:

I rarely have so sensational a topic as the one announced for this occasion, but before we conclude our examination of it we hope to convince you all that whatever seems to be sensational in the topic is not of our origination that the cause of the sensation lies in certain erroneous views very generally entertained respecting the subject of hell. We assure you that we will treat our subject most literally and prove our propositions beyond peradventure from the Word of God.

Many will be inclined perhaps to say: “What does anyone know about hell? Surely no one has ever returned from there that we may know what it is like. Surely, therefore, the discussion of this subject must be purely fanciful.” Our Answer--to such is that they are mistaken. We will prove to them that a great deal indeed is known about hell where it is, what it is, its conditions and who are there. Indeed, we will demonstrate that we know all about the subject that could be reasonably expected to be known. There is a very ancient book in existence; its writers were holy men, who claimed to have been guided in respect to what they wrote by the holy spirit of God. This book discusses the subject of hell most exhaustively, but it is written in two different languages that are not now in vogue; and hence many earnest people, who would dearly love to examine this subject from the standpoint of this book and to obtain its clear elucidation of the matter, are unable to do so. They are dependent upon translators, and the translators have been guilty of certain gross inconsistencies of translation which have tended to becloud the subject, so clearly presented in the original. Dear friends, the ancient book to which I refer you doubtless recognize as the Bible, and the inconsistencies of the translation of the Bible in respect to this subject of hell we invite you to consider carefully and prayerfully at this time.

The errors, the inconsistencies of translation in connection with this word, to which we call your attention, will necessarily reflect to some extent against the good men who, doubtless with good intentions, performed a great service for the world in the translation. We should therefore say to their credit that it is our belief that they did not err with full willfulness and intention, but that they were beclouded by the superstition and error prevalent throughout the Dark Ages and at the time when the translation was made. Their endeavor to conform the translation of the book to the false theories which beclouded their minds is doubtless responsible for the inaccuracies we shall point out.

WHAT AND WHERE HELL IS

In the Old Testament there is but one original Hebrew word which has been translated hell in our common version of the Bible that word is "sheol." It occurs from Genesis to Malachi, in all 65 times, and, of course, must have the same meaning in every instance. If it means a place of fire and smoke and torture and anguish, it must mean all these things in every instance in which it is used; but it means nothing of the kind. It means the grave the state of the dead. Out of the 65 occurrences of the word it is three times translated "pit," 31 times translated "grave" and 31 times translated "hell;" and in two instances where the word is translated hell in the text the marginal reading is "grave." Thus we have sheol translated pit and grave altogether, with the marginal readings, 36 times, the translated hell 29 times. The fact is, dear friends, that with the understood meaning of the word hell as it is used today, "sheol" should never be translated "hell" nothing could be farther from the meaning of the word than the ordinary idea attaching to the word "hell" today.

In defense of the honesty of the translators, however, let me explain a fact that is well known to all scholars, but a fact that they sedulously keep from those whom they designate the common people. It is this: In the old English the word hell has the meaning of pit or grave or covered place. Look into Webster's Unabridged Dictionary and you will find this as the primary meaning of the word hell the secret place, the pit. In the old English literature you can read of the farmer helling his potatoes that is to say, putting them in a pit; or you may read of his helling his house that is, covering it or thatching it. A false theology took hold upon this word and is today using it dishonestly to deceive the people and to misrepresent our Almighty Creator blaspheming His holy name by misrepresentations of His character and of His purposes toward men.

At first you may think it too strong a statement that this doctrine of eternal punishment is a "blasphemy" against the name and character of our God; but the more you consider the matter the more, I am sure, you will be convinced that the unscriptural proposition is thoroughly blasphemous. Should anyone tell that either you or your parents had done or purposed to do what it is freely declared the Almighty has done, has purposed to do, is doing and will continue for an eternity to do in the way of tormenting His creatures, you would feel yourself grossly insulted. You would feel indignant. You would say that your name, your character, had been misrepresented blasphemed. In this proper use of the word blaspheme, I charge that not only the heathen are blaspheming God's name, but that throughout Christendom, in thought and in word and in print, God's name has been continually blasphemed for centuries ever since the great apostasy, the great falling away, during "the dark ages" and since.

HELL AS JACOB KNEW IT

By the help of God, dear friends, we want to get this subject so clearly before our minds this afternoon that whoever may blaspheme the holy name henceforth, it shall not be us; neither will we have sympathy with such traduction and blasphemy. Let me prove to you the meaning of this Hebrew word "sheol," the only Hebrew word in the Bible ever rendered "hell." Let me call to your attention the instances in which the word is translated "grave," and you will perceive that the translators have rendered it "hell" whenever the context would seem to obscure the matter in any degree, so that the ordinary English reader might be deceived by it; and whenever the context was manifestly clear and explicit, there they properly rendered the word "grave." For instance take the first use of this word sheol in the scriptures, in Gen. 37:35. It is found in the remarks of the Patriarch Jacob to his sons and daughters, who were seeking to comfort him respecting the supposed death of his favorite son, Joseph. We read: "He refused to be comforted and he said, For I shall go down into the grave (sheol) unto my son mourning."

The translators evidently concluded that it would not do to use the word hell in this place, for with the sentiment abroad that the word hell represented a place of torment, this passage would make it appear that Jacob thought that his best boy had gone to eternal torment, and that he proposed to go there, too. The matter from this standpoint was too absurd to be entertained, and hence a more properly understood English word was used to represent the state of death, namely, the word grave. We should have distinguished between the word quebar, which stands for a particular grave, and the word sheol, which represents the grave in a general way the death state. Jacob had no thought of being buried in the same tomb with his son, Joseph, for his supposition was that Joseph was not in a tomb at all, but had been devoured by wild beasts. What he did mean was that he would go down into the death state mourning, because he had lost his beloved son.

The second use of the word sheol occurs in Genesis 42:38. Jacob is here speaking about Benjamin, his youngest son, whom he loved next to Joseph. He says, "His brother is dead and he alone is left; if mischief shall befall him by the way in which ye go, then shall ye bring down my gray hairs in sorrow to the grave (sheol.)" Similar reasons prevailed with the translators and hindered them from using the word hell in this case. It would sound very peculiarly if "sheol" were translated "hell" in this verse; it would then read, "Ye shall bring down my gray hairs in sorrow in hell." The translators were averse to the thought that Jacob would go into eternal torment or have anything appear so to teach; they were averse also to the thought that "gray hairs" go to that place of torment. The unscriptural teaching is that, while the body and the gray hairs go into the grave, the real man somehow or other steps out and goes somewhere, nobody knows where, and nobody knows how, to some place called hell, there to be tormented eternally by fireproof devils with an unlimited stock of fuel prepared from all eternity to last for an eternity. Are not such ideas totally out of keeping with enlightened common sense, as well as out of harmony with the word of God?

JOB'S PRAYER TO BE HID IN SHEOL

Take another instance of the use of the word sheol. We quote the words of the Prophet Job. He was in trouble; God had permitted adversity to come to him; his wealth, flocks, herds, and children had all been destroyed; he was smitten with disease until his condition was not only loathsome to himself, but to his friends, and the wife of his bosom had joined with the enemies in denouncing him, saying, "Die, thou cursed of God," considering that his calamities meant divine disfavor. Under these circumstances Job longed for death and said, "O that Thou wouldst hide me in the grave (sheol), that Thou wouldst keep me secret, until Thy wrath be past, that Thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me.” (Job 14:13)

Does anyone in his sane mind suppose that Job meant that he would like to be hidden in a place of eternal torment until God’s wrath would be past, until the “curse” which is upon the world shall be removed in the glorious times of restitution which God has promised shall come as the result of the redemption work, the sacrifice of our Lord Jesus? Surely not; and so the translators did not here risk placing such an absurdity before their readers; and, though the statement as it stands is very contrary to the teachings of all the creeds of Christendom, they were obliged to render it as it is to make it a declaration of Job’s desire to be hidden in the solitude of death until after the millennial kingdom shall be established and the “curse” be rolled away, that then he might be remembered and participate in the glorious resurrection privileges which are to come to the world of mankind through Him who loved us and bought us with His own precious blood.

Take another illustration from the words of the prophet, David, (Psa. 6:4, 5) realizing himself to be under the chastening hand of the Lord, and fearing death, he prays, “O save me for Thy mercies’ sake. For in death there is no remembrance of Thee; in the grave (sheol) who shall give Thee thanks?” Here again the sense of the prophet is too apparent for contradiction. He was urging before the Lord that if permitted to live, he could remember and praise Him, but if he died there would be no remembrance. If permitted to live he would give Him thanks, but if he went into the grave (sheol) he could give no thanks. How different is this teaching from the one which prevails in all the creeds of Christendom, and amongst all the heathen, which teaches that death brings an increase of knowledge, remembrance and opportunity for thanksgiving or for pain, suffering and blasphemy. If we stick to this old book, dear friends, we will be safe. It has already stood the test of ages and the calumnies and misrepresentations both of its enemies and its friends.

DAVID’S AND SOLOMON’S VIEW

Take another illustration from David’s Psa. (18:5). “The sorrows of hell (sheol) compassed me about.” The prophet does not refer to any fear on his part of eternal torment. On the contrary, in the context he has just said, “I will love Thee, O Lord, my strength; the Lord is my rock, and my fortress and my deliverer.” His thought is in respect to death, and in the fourth verse he expresses it thus, “The sorrows of death compassed me, the floods (hosts) of ungodly men made me afraid.” Another similar illustration is found in Psa. 116:3. Here the prophet is narrating his narrow escape from death at the hands of his enemies and his rejoicing that the Lord has spared his life. He says, "The sorrows of death compassed me, the pangs of hell (sheol, the death state) got hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow."

Take another illustration from Psa. 139:8, the prophet is speaking of the Lord's thorough knowledge of him, and we read, "If I ascend up into heaven, Thou art there; if I make my bed in hell (sheol, the grave) behold Thou art there." David had no thought of a hell of devils' flames and torment he surely had no desire to make a bed there; it would be about the last place in which any one would think of making a bed or resting, and the last place in which any one would think of finding the Heavenly Father present. What he does mean most evidently is, that Divine power extends to every part of the universe. Could he go to heaven, he would there find God and His power manifest, and though he should go down into death God's power would still encompass him. He recognized the power of God respecting the recovery of the dead from the tomb; he believed as did Job, that the dead would ultimately be called forth from the tomb. Job expresses the matter thus, "Thou wilt call, and I will Answer--Thee; for Thou wilt have a desire to the work of Thine hands." (Job 14:15.) Our Lord in the same strain declares, "All that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and shall come forth."

Solomon, the wise, gave advice generally recognized as excellent saying, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave (sheol), whither thou goest." Eccl. 9:10 It should be noticed that Solomon, in company with the others quoted, refers to the death state as the prospect for all good or bad and specifically states that it is a place of unconsciousness, where there is neither wisdom nor knowledge nor work nor device.

Where, then, comes the thought that this word sheol indicates that the abode of the wicked is full of knowledge, wicked works, and blasphemy against God under torments of demons? This misconception was undoubtedly foisted upon humanity by the great adversary, Satan, who, so far from being confined in any place of fear or torment, "goeth about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour." As the apostle says, "We are not ignorant of his `devices' and `wiles. '" In these deceptions he is but following up his original misstatement to our first parents when, contradicting the Almighty, he said, "Ye shall not surely die." The difficulty with people in general seems to be that they like mother Eve, believe Satan believe that they do not die when they appear to die, but really become more alive than ever before. The scriptures, to the contrary, insist that there can be no further life except by a resurrection from the dead and that "the dead know not anything." Eccl. 9:5

HEZEKIAH'S VISIT TO HELL DELAYED

Note the case of the godly king of Judah, Hezekiah, and his sentiments respecting "sheol." He was sick and expected to die, and prayed to the Lord for a prolongation of his life and was heard, his life being spared for fifteen years. In his account of the matter he says, "I said, in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave (sheol): I am deprived of the residue of my years... But Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption, for Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back. For the grave (sheol) cannot praise thee, death can not celebrate thee." Isa. 38:10, 17, 18

Take another illustration in Hosea's prophecy. The Lord speaks of the great blessing he purposes to bring in due time to the world the blessing that was secured by our dear Redeemer's sacrifice the blessing of the millennial age, which our Lord referred to, saying, "All that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and shall come forth" to trial, to judgment, to testing, as to worthiness or unworthiness of life according to their obedience or disobedience to the divine regulations of that millennial kingdom. Speaking of this prophetically the Lord says, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol)." Then repeating the matter poetically, and personifying death as an enemy, he says, "I will redeem them from Death!" "O, Death, I will be thy plagues (subduing) O, grave (sheol), I will be thy destruction!" Hos. 13:14

From this text, dear friends, we have the assurance that whatever is meant by this word "sheol," whether it mean that death state (as we claim), or whether it mean a place of eternal torment (as others claim), the Lord's assurance is that mankind has been ransomed from it, redeemed by the precious blood. His assurance further is that sheol shall be utterly destroyed. "O sheol, I will be thy destruction." This thoroughly offsets every thought to the effect that "sheol" is an eternal condition of any kind, and all the scriptures agree with those we have already cited in testifying that the death condition, the sheol condition to which all mankind, good and bad alike, go, is to be utterly destroyed destroyed by resurrection processes, by the lifting of mankind out of the death condition.

We cannot do better than to follow this last quotation from Hosea to the New Testament, where we find it quoted by the Apostle Paul in his celebrated discourse on the resurrection (1 Cor. 15:54-56). After explaining in the chapter that "As all die in Adam, even so in Christ all shall be made alive" after explaining that there will be different orders in the resurrection, "every man in his own order" after explaining the first of these orders, the Lord's resurrection of which our Lord was the first fruits and which shall be shared in by all those who are His, all the overcomers, all the joint heirs in the kingdom the apostle proceeds to explain what is to be expected after the church shall have thus experienced her resurrection change. His words are:

HADES, SHEOL AND GRAVE ARE EQUIVALENTS

“When this corruption shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality (when the entire church of the first born shall have been completed), then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, ‘Death is swallowed up in victory. ’ O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?’” The word “grave” in this last quotation (1 Cor. 15:55) is “hades,” the Greek equivalent to the Hebrew word “sheol.” The apostle here translated the word “sheol” into Greek, in which the New Testament is written. Do we need any further evidences, dear friends, as to what the scriptures mean when they use the word “sheol” in the Old Testament in the Hebrew and “hades” in the New Testament in the Greek? And when these are translated in our English language in both texts by the word “grave,” no one needs to be in doubt on the subject. The only persons who will question the matter are those who are prejudiced, and prejudiced, too, in favor of that which they will admit is the most God-dishonoring and doubt-inspiring theory of Christendom, brought down from the dark ages and only supported in the Old and New Testaments by mistranslations such as we have called attention to.

Note another use of the word “sheol” in the Old Testament that is quoted in the New. The prophet, speaking under inspiration of Christ, personifies Him, saying, “Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (sheol, the death state), neither wilt Thou suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption.” (Psa. 16:10.) The Apostle Paul quotes this expression (Acts 2:27), translating the Hebrew word “sheol” into the Greek word “hades,” and then explaining its meaning that it referred to our Lord Jesus, that He was not left in death, but was raised from the dead on the third day. The apostle’s words are: “Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day (he is not alive anywhere he is both dead and buried). Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on His throne; he foreseeing this, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that His soul was not left in hell (hades, the death state), neither did His flesh see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up (from death), whereof we all are witnesses.... For David is not ascended into the heavens (he is both dead and buried).” (Acts 2:27)

In almost every instance the word “hades” of the New Testament is translated hell in our English common version Bible. The one exception we have already referred to is 1 Cor. 15:55, “O grave, where is thy victory?” But its signification in every case is the death state. This may not appear to the ordinary reader until he learns to read critically. As for instance, the Lord pronounces woe or tribulation upon the city of Capernaum, saying, “Thou hast been exalted up to heaven, thou shalt be cast down to hell.” In what sense had the city of Capernaum been exalted to heaven? Assuredly in the figurative sense, that it had been favored by the Lord’s presence and teachings. In what sense would it be brought down to hell, to hades, to the death state? Assuredly in the sense that it would be utterly deprived of these favors and destroyed from the earth. And so it is today. The very site of Capernaum is difficult to locate; it has been brought down to the grave to destruction.

Take another illustration: Our Lord said to Peter respecting a great truth which He had confessed, “On this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell (hades) shall not prevail against it.” The thought here is that the Lord will gather His church out of the world on the basis of the truth which Peter declared; and although death would prevail against the Lord’s people century after century, and one after another they would go down into the great prison house of death, and the strong bars of oblivion would close over them, nevertheless eventually, in the Lord’s due time, there should be a resurrection of the dead and the gates of death should open, the bars of oblivion should be broken, divine power should bring forth the church glorious in the first resurrection the gates of the grave should not prevail against it forever. They have prevailed for a time, but, as the apostle intimates, eventually the glad song of triumph shall go forth, “O death, where is thy sting? O grave, (hades) where is thy victory?” Hades shall not prevail against the Lord’s people. The Lord Himself declared, “I am the resurrection and the life.”

THE KEYS OF HELL IN GOOD HANDS

The same thought is enunciated by our Lord in His last message to His people (Rev. 1:18). He says, “I am He that was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and of hell (hades, the grave, the death state)”. What a grand thought is contained in these words. Our Lord and the prophets have likened death to a great prison house, into which the whole human family has gone under the original penalty pronounced against Father Adam. The prison is crowded with thousands of millions and they are all helpless, but the Lord has laid help upon one who is mighty to save. That one is our Lord Jesus Christ, who has bought us with His precious blood. He paid our death penalty for us and He, therefore, has a right to the keys a right to open the prison doors, a right to say to the prisoners, Come forth! He has the keys of hades, the tomb, the death state. It is by virtue of His merit and power and right that He is able to assure us that the “gates of hades (the tomb) shall not prevail against any whom He has bought, for ”all who are in their graves shall hear

His voice and shall come forth" to trial, to judgment, to testing; that those found worthy of everlasting life may enter into it, and those found unworthy may be destroyed in the second death.

We cannot take time to go into every instance of the use of these words "sheol" and "hades," but we have a little pamphlet which does examine every text in any sense related to this subject, and we are pleased to supply it free to the interested. You may ask the ushers for the "Hell Pamphlet" as you pass out, or if you address me a postal card to Allegheny, Pa., a copy will be mailed to you from there. While dealing with the subject, however, I will add that in the New Testament two other words occur with a different meaning from "hades." The word tartarus is translated hell, but it occurs but once and is used in respect to the ostracized condition of the fallen angels and has no reference to mankind whatever. The other word is Gehenna. Outside the city of Jerusalem in olden times was a valley owned by the sons of Hinnom and therefore called the valley Gahinnom, and this name transferred to the Greek becomes the word Gehenna. Garbage furnaces are a modern institution, but they had in those times what served a similar purpose, for in this valley of Hinnom, Gehenna, it was customary to burn the rubbish of the city of Jerusalem, its offal, etc., and persons guilty of gross crimes were sometimes sentenced to be executed and then, as a mark of peculiar disrespect and of there being no resurrection hope for them, their corpses were burned with the city offal.

From our Lord's parables and discourses, as well as from the symbols of the book of Revelation, we learn that this Valley of Hinnom, "Gehenna," was typical of the second death typical of the utter destruction of any and every thing that shall ultimately be out of harmony with God and His righteous arrangements. This is in perfect accord with everything else that was there. The Jewish Temple was a symbol of the glorious Temple the glorified church; the city of Jerusalem, the millennial kingdom; and it was very appropriate, therefore, that the valley outside of the symbolical city should represent the destruction that shall eventually be visited upon all who will not avail themselves of the gracious opportunities which will ultimately come to all mankind in full measure, purchased by the precious blood of Christ. All these matters and all these texts you will find amply treated in the little pamphlet which I have proffered you free. And if still there is any matter that is not clear to you, write me about it at Allegheny, Pa. We conduct a Bible study correspondence school, free for all who give evidence of hunger and thirst for the truth as it is revealed in the Bible.

Returning to our particular subject, "To Hell and Back," my hearers doubtless agree with me by this time that there is not one whit of sentimentalism in my topic. We have demonstrated that the word hell, as it occurs in the Scriptures, translations of sheol and hades, occurring 76 times, really signifies the grave, the death state. We have seen that all mankind go into this great prison house the good and the bad, the rich and the poor, go down to hell, to sheol, to hades, to the death condition. The majority are without divine revelation on the subject; the heathen speculate that when they die devils catch them, or they go through the River Styx or to more or less of tribulation and misery. Christians have absorbed much of the heathen doctrines and have engrafted them in their creeds, thereby confusing their minds and controverting the plain statements of the Bible, much to their injury and the shaking and unsettling of their faith. We have seen also that the Lord's people, both of Old Testament times and of New Testament times, had every faith in the resurrection, so that the Prophet Job could desire to be hidden in sheol until God's wrath, the curse of sin and death, should be rolled away and the time of blessing, the millennial kingdom, should be ushered in, when he was assured that the Lord would call for him call him forth by divine power from oblivion, from death.

Now we come to the inquiry: (Has anyone gone to hell, sheol, hades the death state) and returned?" We answer, Yes, several have done so. We call to mind the son of the widow of Nain, whom our Lord awakened, and the daughter of Jairus and our Lord's friend and disciple, Lazarus. All of these came back from sheol, hades, hell, the death state. There is not a word from one of them respecting heaven and its glories; not a word from one of them respecting any place of horror and lurid flame and terrifying groans. We could not think that anyone who had ever been to such a place as hell is ordinarily understood to be could come back to life and not be a most interesting witness, talked about and talked to through the remainder of his lifetime concerning the things which he had seen and heard if he had seen and heard anything while dead.

Nor is it supposable that Lazarus or others of these, having attained to heavenly conditions, would be brought back to earthly conditions and to further association with pain, sorrow, trials, etc., and yet, this bringing back be considered by our Lord and the resuscitated ones and their friends to have been a great boon, a great blessing. On the other hand, what we know of these cases of return from sheol is exactly what we would have reason to expect that they would know nothing whatever to tell respecting the time they were dead, and that they would consider it a great boon to be resuscitated. All this is in full agreement with the Scriptural declaration that there is “no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in sheol,” whither all go. Eccl. 9:10

ALL UNCONSCIOUS IN HELL

The same arguments apply exactly to our Lord’s resurrection and to the awakening of Dorcas and of the young man who fell from the window while the Apostle Paul was preaching.

We are able to judge quite well of the experiences of these awakened ones. The first thought upon their awakening would be in connection with their last acts, words and thoughts in the moment of dying. It is because of this similarity between death and unconsciousness, which we call sleep, that death is so frequently in the Scriptures called sleep. As for instance, when our Lord said of Lazarus: “Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.” Afterward, when His disciples did not understand him, he said plainly: “Lazarus is dead.” So the kings and prophets of old were all said to fall asleep. Acts 7:60; 1 Cor. 15:6; 1 Thess. 4:14; 2 Pet. 3:4

We have doubtless all heard of soldiers who in battle received injury to the brain which threw them into a comatose condition, and how upon a successful operation of trepanning the man recovered consciousness and finished the sentence or exclamation which he was in process of making when he received the injury. Others dying in such an operation would never be conscious of anything until their awakening in the resurrection morning, when “all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and shall come forth.” When they revive they will be totally unconscious of the length of time that has elapsed. It will seem to them but the next moment, but they will soon learn of the great changes which transpired soon learn that they were redeemed from the power of sheol by the precious blood of Christ, that they are awakened by divine favor through him; and that the object of this will be that they may come to a full knowledge of the truth that they may be saved everlastingly saved. (1 Tim. 2:4) In accord with these thoughts note the words of inspiration respecting the dead, proving that they are totally unconscious of the affairs of life, we read: “His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them.” Why? Because there is neither work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave in sheol.

Our proposition is before you, dear friends. We have shown that some have gone to hell, sheol, hades, the death state, and have come back. We have shown who are there, the good and the bad, the rich and the poor, all mankind except Enoch and Elijah, and we who remain this side of the tomb. We have shown that Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man that he has redeemed our souls from the power of sheol, from hades, from the grave, from the state of death. We have shown that as a result there is hope for many for all except those who have sinned the sin unto death unto the second death, extinction. If time permitted we could scripturally show that those who are totally without hope are comparatively few those mentioned by the apostle in Heb. 6:4-9; 10:26-31. The class referred to here and elsewhere in the scriptures as incurring the second death, are such as have experienced God's favor and grace in full. After having thus enjoyed so great privileges and mercies and blessings they sin willfully, deliberately, in the face of knowledge to the contrary for these there remaineth no hope.

The hope of the church during this gospel age is that through faith and obedience we may make our calling and election sure to joint-heirship with our dear Redeemer in the kingdom which is to bless the world. For the remainder of mankind there is hope that they shall come to a knowledge of divine goodness and the terms of salvation during the millennial age, and that thus many of them may lay hold upon the opportunities, the blessings, the favors proffered them, and gain restitution to earthly blessings, earthly perfection and everlasting life, such as Adam had in the beginning, but under still more favorable conditions quite inferior, however, to the exceeding great and precious things God hath in reservation for the church the spiritual things of the divine nature.

PRESENT OPPORTUNITIES GLORIOUS

Let no one misunderstand us; we speak no word of encouragement toward neglect of the Lord's grace in the present time. On the contrary, while not holding forth the unscriptural, blasphemous teachings of some respecting an eternity of torture, too horrible to think of without insanity and which has caused the insanity of thousands, we do hold forth the scriptural threat of "a just recompense of reward to every soul of man that doeth evil," as well as the promised reward in the proportion as each one shall seek to do well. While only the consecrated, the church class, are specifically on trial now for eternal life in the kingdom, nevertheless the world, in proportion as they have knowledge, are either making character or undermining character. To whatever extent they form character, they bless themselves for the present time and lay the better foundation for the opportunities that will come to them in the future, and in proportion as they neglect and do violence to their knowledge of right in the present life, they undermine character, produce unhappiness in themselves, make experiences of the future that much more difficult. "A just recompense of reward" will appeal to the judgment of every reasonable man and woman, while an unjust one does not and should not so appeal to us.

A word in conclusion: Some dear people of God have said to me, "Brother Russell, I fully concur with what you say respecting the teachings of the scripture, but should we not hold our peace on the subject lest the truth should be taken advantage of by the wickedly disposed and they should thereby become more wicked? If the fear of hell torment does not control people, what might we have to fear if they knew of God's love and merciful provision as you show the scriptures to teach?" Our reply to such fearful souls is: Do not join in blaspheming God's character through fear; do not do evil that good may result; determine with the apostle that God should be shown to be true, though it make every man a liar and break down every sectarian creed.

For the encouragement of such fearful ones, let me contrast the influence of the truth and of error. For centuries the error has prevailed, and it prevails now throughout Christendom. What is the result? Has it produced holiness, sanctification, upon the part of all who heard or on the part of the majority? By no means; error never sanctifies; error always injures. Our dear Redeemer was right when He prayed the Father, "Sanctify them through Thy truth." Wherever we go we hear God's name taken in vain, and people damning each other to eternal torment. The horrible doctrine has not intimidated them, does not intimidate them. Look at all the prisons and reformatory institutions of Christendom. They far outnumber similar institutions even amongst the heathen; and yet these men and women, culprits found guilty of every crime in the calendar have been taught and have believed the doctrine of eternal torment. It has not reformed them. Why not try upon them the power of the truth? Why not tell them of the love of God? What is it that has constrained our hearts to the love and service of God and righteousness? The apostle tells us, "The love of Christ constraineth us." Why not try this love of God and the power of the truth for a while? It could not result worse than the influence of error has resulted.

Let me give you an instance. Some of our publications found their way into the Ohio penitentiary, and there found men who, as believers in eternal torment, had been guilty of various crimes, and the truth has transformed them into saints—"pure in heart." The truth has had a sanctifying power which has been recognized by the managers of the prison, so that several of these prisoners, though under life sentence, presumably for murder are now what is known as "trusties;" they are trusted to do the service of the prison without wearing the prisoner's garb, and are sent on errands outside the prison, on their honor. Prayer meetings and Bible study meetings have been established in the prison, hundreds of tracts are being read by the prisoners, and we now have 16 regular subscribers to our Journal in that prison, and, so far as we have reason to know, these are as true and faithful Christians on the average as are to be found anywhere in the world.

How do you know that the truth would not have a power upon your son or your daughter, upon your friend, upon your neighbor, where the error has failed? But whatever the consequences, those who rightly understand the matter will feel that as children of God it is our duty to bear witness to the truth and to expose error especially all errors pertaining to the divine word. The Lord puts Himself and His word on a parity, saying "He that is ashamed of Me and of My word, of him will I be ashamed when I come in the glory of the Father with the holy angels." (Mark 8:38).

HOLDS HOPE FOR MANY—" THE RESURRECTION OF LIFE AND THE RESURRECTION OF DAMNATION."

John 5:29

Our text has been one of the bugbears and ignorance of superstition, chaining us to an irrational and blasphemous view of our Creator's character and plan. Thanks be unto God that in the dawn of the Millennial morning, which is bringing us blessings of a material kind on every hand, the eyes of our understanding are gradually opening to a discernment of the grandeur of the divine purpose respecting our race to a realization of the same precious truths which enthused the apostles and the early church, but which were so sadly buried under ignorance and superstition during the "dark ages."

The merest glance at our text shows it a poor translation. It declares a resurrection of life and a resurrection of damnation. Has life been dead that it needs a resurrection? Is damnation a thing which died and also needs a resurrection? What sense is there in this translation anyway? It is nonsensical! There is not the slightest ground for the word damnation in this text; the Greek word krisis is the word here imperfectly rendered damnation, in utter violation of the Greek and out of all harmony with the various renderings of the same form elsewhere. This word krisis occurs four other times in the same chapter with our text and is properly translated judgment. For instance, in the very next verse our Lord uses the same word, saying, "My judgment (krisis) is just" not my damnation is just. Why the translators rendered it damnation is utterly inexplicable, except upon the hypothesis that they thought they knew the mind of the Lord on the subject and that they could explain it better than he did. Such a course is always a mistake.

The translators had the fog of the “dark ages” in their minds. Their thought was that the judgment of every man is past when he dies, and that hence our Lord must have made a mistake when referring to any as coming forth to a resurrection of judgment. They were evidently trying to help the Lord to state matters according to their understanding of his plan. Our only safety is in holding fast to the word of the Lord.

THIS TEXT IN THE REVISED VERSION

In the revised version of the New Testament you will find a better translation, in that it renders krisis judgment instead of damnation. It also, however, labors with the false thought in speaking of a resurrection of life and a resurrection of judgment. The proper translation of the verse would be, “They that have done good unto a life-resurrection and they that have done evil unto a judgment-resurrection.” Let no one get the impression from our vigorous opposition to the doctrine of eternal torment that we believe the Scriptures to teach that there is no punishment for sin. Quite to the contrary; our teaching is in accord with the Bible, that the Lord will render a just recompense of reward to every soul of man that doeth evil that they who sin against much light shall receive many stripes, while those doing evil and sinning against little light will receive correspondingly fewer stripes or lesser punishment.

It is a mistake to suppose that the horrible doctrines which have been taught us have drawn men to righteousness. It is truth and not error that sanctifies and draws us to God. As an illustration: In Atlanta, Ga., a man whom I had never before seen approached me and said, “I want to tell you, Pastor Russell, that I am a new man; that I have given my heart to God; that I hate the sins which I once indulged in. Your presentations of the Scriptures affected this change. I was a very, very wicked man, a liquor dealer; I indulged in every kind of sin. On the basis of my ignorance of the true teaching of God’s Word I supposed that my eternal future was sealed; that God would never recognize me; that I would spend an eternity of torture. I determined that I would merit all that I might get, and went from bad to worse, until your teaching showed me the real wages of sin, the real stripes, the real punishments, which every wrongdoer would receive according to the Scriptures. Now by God’s grace I shall endeavor to spend the remainder of my life seeking to build up character, and trusting to His grace to assist me. With a better knowledge of my Creator’s character I can praise Him for the blessings and mercies and forgiveness which He has promised me.”

There are twelve readers of Zion’s Watch Tower in the Columbus, Ohio, penitentiary, earnestly striving to cultivate the spirit of Christ, because they have learned the way of the Lord more perfectly. They are doing mission work among the other prisoners. When they entered that prison as criminals they held the usual view that eternal torment was the wages of sin, yet it did not deter them from sin. The love of God and the justice of God as seen in a proper view of His Word will change the heart and transform the life where error fails to do so. Hearken upon the streets as you pass how men damn one another to eternal torture, and reflect that faith in that wrong doctrine has probably driven them to their present attitude of mind and blasphemy.

Notice that almost every murderer executed professes to have been reared under the dogma of eternal torture and to be a full believer in it, yet the mischief did not hinder him from being a murderer. On the other hand, note the transforming influence of the truth upon the hearts, the characters, the lives of those who receive it into good and honest hearts. Let us remember, however, that according to the Scriptures a certain attitude of heart is necessary before the truth can be received and appropriated that, as the Scriptures declare, "None of the wicked shall understand." (Dan. 12:10.)

THE GOOD UNTO LIFE RESURRECTION

Our text divides the world of mankind into two classes, the good and evil. Similarly the apostle writes of a "resurrection of the just and of the unjust." Acts 24:15. That neither the Lord nor the apostle meant to intimate that any of mankind are good, perfect in the absolute sense, is most evident from the trend of the Scriptures, which assure us in various forms that the whole race is fallen, that "there is none righteous, no not one." (Rom. 3:10.) The "good" of our Lord's statement, the "just" of the apostle's statement are those who are justified in God's sight through faith, justified from sin, their sins covered, not imputed to them, because of their accepting the divine arrangement and because they are seeking to walk in the Lord's way. The apostle explains the situation elsewhere, saying, "The righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." Rom. 8:4. These cannot walk up to the spirit of God's law, because of their inherited blemishes under the fall; but since these are covered by God's grace in Christ, such as are walking to the best of their ability after the spirit of God's law are reckoned as though walking up to the spirit of that law.

We might say something in defense of those here listed as doing evil. Many of them are heathen who know not God, whose eyes of understanding have never opened to a knowledge of the grace of God in Christ, and the hope there is before them of eternal life through the precious blood. Many of this class even in civilized lands could have something said on their behalf, as, for instance, that, although they have heard something respecting God and the Redeemer, what they have heard has not been good tidings of great joy to all people, but in the main the very reverse bad tidings of great misery for all people. They have thus been deceived by the confusion which abounds in all the creeds of Christendom on this subject, as the Lord declares through the prophet, "Their fear towards me is not of me, but is taught by the precepts of men." (Isa. 29:13)

Moreover the entire race is mentally, morally and physically impaired through the fall, and God alone knows how to make proper allowances for these conditions as they bear upon the various members of our race. It is for this reason that He warns us that we shall not attempt a final judgment of one another, "Judge nothing before the time." (1 Cor. 4:5)

THE RESURRECTION OF DAMNATION

How our translators fell into the mistake of giving this dreadful mistranslation of the word krisis is difficult to understand. The Greek word here rendered "damnation" is krisis, and, whether Greek scholars or not, you all know the meaning of the word crisis. Our English language absorbs words and phrases from all languages, and thus it has absorbed crisis from the Greek. We frequently use it, especially in connection with fevers. The physician when asked about the patient will sometimes say: "On the fourteenth day or twenty-first day we will expect the fever to reach its crisis, and the decision for better or worse will be prompt." This is the legitimate meaning of the word crisis wherever it occurs, and it is the meaning of it in our text. The crisis or judgment of the unjust will be reached at the time of their coming forth from the dead in that day in the Millennial day.

An explanation is here necessary, because the majority of people seem not to discern between awakening or coming forth and resurrection. Notice carefully that the implication of our text is that they who have done evil shall come forth unto or in order that they may have a resurrection by judgments. The coming forth is not the resurrection, but merely the awakening, such as Lazarus and others of that time had. They were not resurrected in the scriptural sense of the term; they were not brought to the full perfection of life; they were not lifted completely out of death. Indeed, the Scriptures in so many words assure us that Jesus was the "first that should rise from the dead" (Acts 26:23); that he "was the first-born from the dead." Col. 1:18.

Those referred to as having done evil that is, as not having come up to the divine standard of worthiness for the life resurrection will include many fine, noble men and women who, like Confucius, for instance, had never even heard of the only name given whereby we must be saved; and it will include also the depraved characters who have never yet received their share of the glorious opportunity secured through the great atonement sacrifice for sin. The intimation is not that all these shall come forth at the same time, but rather that the awakening of the world during the millennial age will be a gradual one, in the reverse order to which they went down to sleep in death. In other words, that Adam and his contemporaries will probably be among the last of the race to be awakened. Nor can we suppose that any of them will be awakened until the knowledge of the Lord shall have been well established among the living of the nations.

RESURRECTION BY JUDGMENTS

But we are especially interested in the resurrection which will be their privilege, their opportunity, after they shall have been brought forth from the tomb by the voice and call, the authority and power of our Lord. We notice the contrast between the resurrection promised to these and the promise to those who have passed divine approval. These are to have a resurrection by judgment. What does this mean? Notice first the meaning of the word resurrection, in the Greek anastasis. It signifies to raise up again. It implies that a thing was once up and got down, and is to be brought up again to the place where it originally was, if not higher. Applying this to the human family, we see that Adam was created perfect, in the image of God; that by disobedience he came under divine condemnation, and fell from that high position into sin, degradation, death, mental, moral and physical decrepitude and blemish into absolute extinction, for such was his penalty, and from such extinction he was saved by the great Atonement sacrifice of Christ, and because of this redemption he is not only to be awakened from the tomb under the favorable conditions of the Millennial age, with Satan and all evil under restraint, and the knowledge of the Lord filling and enlightening the whole earth, but he is to have the opportunity of coming back again to all that was originally lost.

If we take the place of Adam himself we have no difficulty in seeing that he lost the image and likeness of God, mentally, morally and in every way, under the sentence, "Dying thou shalt die," and that for him to be raised up again to what he was before would mean a wonderful blessing of restitution, restoration. Thank God! We shall be glad to see Father Adam come back again to all that he lost. But more than this, although his children were born in sin and shapen in iniquity, as the Scriptures declare although they never were on the mountain heights of perfection of life as he was nevertheless they were counted in him in his sentence, and are counted in with him also in the redemption accomplished by Jesus. Hence the uplift that is coming will not only bring Father Adam back to all that he lost, but will bring all the willing and obedient of his children as well back to the original perfection, to all that was lost. Those who will refuse to come back under favorable conditions and the clear knowledge of that Millennial day will die the death not again on Adam's account, however, not the Adamic death, but on their own accounts; and this death for their own sins is Scripturally called the Second Death.

THE JUDGMENTS OF THAT DAY

Our text tells us that this resurrection will be by judgments, and we want to understand what this means. The apostle comes to our assistance, declaring, respecting the Millennial age, "God hath appointed a (thousand-year) day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, the church will be associate judges. His words are, "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" (1 Cor. 6:2.) We see, then, that the judgment of the world is separate from the judgment of the saints. That the judgment of the saints takes place during this Gospel age is evident, and it will be after they have been judged and found worthy of the life resurrection, after the little flock shall be with the Lord as his bride and joint-heir in his throne and in his kingdom that the judgment of the world will proceed.

But this judgment which is recorded in the characters of men is not the judgment referred to in the Scriptures as belonging to the Millennial age. The whole world will start in the Millennial age on a footing of forgiveness under the terms of the New Covenant, just as believers by faith have such a justified start in their trial now during this Gospel age. As our sins and iniquities are passed over by the Lord, so will also the sins and iniquities of the world be passed over not held against them for future retribution. But as our past wrongdoings still trouble us through the aggravated disorder and degradation of our mortal bodies, so with the world in its flesh, awakened in practically the same condition in which it went into death, they will have the harvest of the present life according to their degree of unrighteousness.

When the Scriptures speak of the Millennial age as a day or age or epoch of judgment of the world they are contrasting that time with the present time, thus: Now the Lord does not judge amongst men. Earthly prosperity is not proof of divine favor and earthly adversity is not a proof of divine disfavor. On the contrary, as the Scriptures point out, it is "he that will live godly that shall suffer persecution in this present time, while, as for the wicked, "their eyes stand out with fatness and they have more than heart could wish. (2 Tim. 3:12; Psa. 73:7.) The divine judgments are not now in the earth, but they will be everywhere manifest during the Millennial age.

SOME TO SHAME AND CONTEMPT

The Lord speaking through the prophet (Dan. 12:2) declares respecting this coming forth from the tomb, that some shall come forth to "shame and everlasting contempt." The word everlasting here is an inaccurate translation; the Hebrew word signifies to an end instead of without an end. The thought would be more accurately rendered in English if "ever" were omitted. The awakening of those who have not made good use of opportunities will certainly mean shame to them, and in proportion as they in the present life have gone downward instead of upward they will deserve and have the contempt of all the right minded. We can imagine for instance, Nero, the murderer of his own mother, the murderer of many of the Lord's faithful disciples, coming forth, his history known to the world, his own meanness of disposition recognized by himself he would surely be an object of shame and contempt.

Nevertheless the great atonement sacrifice in redeeming the race included Nero, and he must have a share, an opportunity, for profiting thereby. Whatever measure of light and knowledge he lacked previously he will surely get in the world to come, in the Millennial age, when he shall have been awakened under the favorable conditions then prevailing. And his shame and contempt, thank God, may gradually be lifted, until he will be free from them provided he shall be responsive to the blessed conditions of that time. He will have a hard road to travel because of his miserable use of opportunities in the past; but his shame and contempt will culminate either in his full acceptance of the Divine blessing of restitution to perfection or to his utter destruction in the second death, and this illustrates the blessed righteous judgments which God has arranged for the day of Christ.

WHY DOES THE LORD PERMIT EVIL?

"The secret of the Lord is with them that reverence Him; and He will show them His Covenant." Psa. 25:14

THE QUESTION of the Ages is, Why did the Almighty, originally, permit Evil Sin? And why has an Omnipotent Ruler such as He, for more than sixty centuries, permitted Satan to continue his reign of sin and death? Leaving out entirely the unscriptural theory so prevalent, respecting a purgatory of centuries, or a torment everlasting, and considering merely the trials, suffering, sorrow and pain of humanity during the present life, how shall we account for their permission by an All-Powerful Creator, who knew the end from the beginning?

Why does He permit injustice, unrighteousness, headaches, heartaches, etc.? Why does He not deal with humanity graciously, kindly, lovingly, as a Father as He deals with the angelic sons of God? Is it just or loving on the part of our Creator to bring forth millions of His creatures under these admittedly unfavorable conditions beset by weaknesses and sinwardness from their birth and surrounded by others, similarly weak, and beset by Satan and his minions wicked spirits? Is it just that we should thus be in an unequal fight subjected to weaknesses and dying and imperfect conditions on account of the sin of our first parents and then, on the same account, be in danger of an eternity of torture, with nine hundred and ninety-nine chances out of a thousand against us?

Our question is surely too deep for any human philosophy, and those who reject the Bible as of Divine inspiration may as well abandon all hope of an answer. God Himself, and none other, could tell us of His own secrets why He did as He did. Truly we read, "The secret of the Lord is with them that reverence Him; and He will show them His Covenant." Psa. 25:14

The light now shining upon the Word of God shows us that the Divine purpose in connection with mankind is a progressive one, embracing Ages and Dispensations. If we ignore these, we are thereby blinded to the true Answer--to our question. Accepting these, it is the privilege of Bible students today to see the light in God's Word to see matters from the Divine standpoint, to understand the "Mystery of God, hidden from Ages and from generations, and now made known unto His saints," namely, that in the Ages to come all the trials and difficulties, all the sorrows and tears of the past, will be more than compensated for, and proved to be a part of the great Divine Program which will work out to the glory of God and the enlightenment and blessing of angels and men.

MAN'S PRIMARY LESSON

First of all, God chooses to have children possessed of a quality like His own freedom of will. He therefore not only created man perfect in mind and body, but He gave to him a will, the power of choice liberty to choose one course or another. God foresaw that giving man this liberty of will would lead to the seduction of Mother Eve, and to the disobedience of Father Adam, through his love for his wife. Adam's preference was to die with her rather than to live in harmony with God without her; for if he should disobey he would come under the sentence of death. Although Adam and the angels were perfect, they had not a perfect knowledge of their Creator, of His Love, His Wisdom, His Justice, His Power.

God, therefore, without interfering with Adam's liberty, permitted the great calamity of death to come upon him and his race. From the very beginning God premeditated the entire Plan of Salvation, as He has since been working it out; and He will completely accomplish the same ultimately through Messiah's Kingdom. The great lesson which will eventually come both to angels and men will show forth Divine Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power, fully coordinated. In no other way that we can imagine could this great Revelation of the Divine character be so well made. However, in order to comprehend this great Program, it is necessary that we follow strictly the Scriptural teachings, and avoid wholly the nonsense of our creeds, manufactured during the Dark Ages. We must see that “the wages of sin” is not eternal torment, nor purgatory, but death.

God allowed this reign of sin and death from Adam until Moses without so much as making an offer of terms of reconciliation and peace. Then an offer was made to the nation of Israel, and to no other nation. The offer of Israel’s Law Covenant was, “He that doeth these things shall live.” God, of course, knew that Israel could not keep perfectly the conditions of that great and wonderful Law. The offer served as a lesson to that nation respecting the impossibility of any man’s keeping the perfect Law; and the same lesson comes to us of this Gospel Dispensation. We see that what the Jew could not do we cannot do; where he failed we would fail.

Thus through the Law Covenant God taught a great lesson to Israel and to the Church; and He will ultimately teach the same lesson to the world and to angels proving that by the deeds of the Law no fallen flesh could be recovered and re-instated in Divine favor. Four thousand years passed from man’s creation, and death reigned from Moses to Christ as thoroughly as it had previously reigned from Adam to Moses. The Law Covenant did not stop the reign of sin and death. Something more than a Law is necessary. The Divine Program demands recovery from sin and death, and the Divine Program purposes this recovery.

Nearly nineteen centuries have passed since the first advent of our Lord, and still the reign of sin and death is in progress more than ever. The increase of knowledge has brought increase of sin; increase of population has brought increase of death; until today the world is in a terrible condition of mental, moral and physical dilapidation, and ninety thousand go into the tomb every twenty-four hours.

But a Remedy is in sight. It was foretold through the Prophets, but it began to operate in Jesus. His miraculous birth, His faithfulness and consecration unto death, His reward of resurrection and exaltation to the right hand of the Majesty on High, are all essential to man’s recovery essential to the overthrow of this reign of sin and death over our race.

We see still further developments and preparations. The Scriptures inform us that it is the Divine purpose to have a multitudinous Messiah, of which the glorious Jesus is the Head and the Church the Body.

We perceive that God for nearly nineteen centuries has been calling and drawing a special class of mankind to constitute His Elect, the Bride Class, to be joint-heirs with His Son in the Kingdom of Glory which will finally vanquish sin and Satan and deliver the willing and obedient of mankind into the full liberty of the children of God freedom from sin and death, and into the enjoyment of life everlasting and Divine favor.

THE DARK AND NARROW PATH

This special class is required to walk by faith and not by sight to walk in the “narrow way” of self-denial and opposition to the world, the flesh and the Adversary, in the footsteps of Jesus. Ignorance, selfishness, sin, death, all go to make up the deplorable conditions in the world and to constitute the way a narrow one in which this Elect class is required to walk, in order to demonstrate their full loyalty and obedience to the will of God even unto death. Evidently, no such narrow way could have existed had God not permitted evil sin. Evidently, therefore, this Elect class could not be developed and tested except by the Divine permission of sin. The very essence of their character-development is associated with the Divine promise that “all things shall work together for good to those who love God, to the called ones according to His purpose.”

It seemed wise to our Heavenly Father that our Lord Jesus should learn obedience through sufferings and be tested in respect to His willingness to endure suffering for righteousness' sake. How appropriate it is that the same Father should make similar arrangements for all of the Church, whom He will receive from amongst the race of Adam to be members of the Royal Priesthood under Jesus, the High Priest of our order!

We see a necessity for this, not only as respects our own testings and a thorough proof of our own heart-loyalty to the Lord, but additionally we see a wisdom on God's part in thus preparing a priesthood of the future. A priest, as recognized amongst the Jews, was not merely one who offered sacrifices, although every priest was of necessity a sacrificer. The special mission of the priestly tribe amongst the other tribes was that of instructing, helping, healing, teaching. And so God is preparing a Royal Priesthood for the Messianic Age to bless, to heal, to teach, to uplift all the willing and obedient.

The royalty of the Priesthood signifies that it will no longer be a sacrificing class, for all sacrificing will be at an end. It will be a glorious class, royal, of the divine nature, and representatives with our Lord Jesus of the Divine power. As Priests who will have to do with judging and chastening, healing and helping humanity, how much sympathy do we suppose that these Royal Priests should have? Are they not to be on the Divine plane of glory, “members of the Body” of Messiah?

SIN'S LESSON TO HUMANITY

Humanity is learning a great lesson through the permission of sin. Present experiences teach the lesson that “the way of the transgressor is hard”; “The wages of sin is death”; “The soul that sinneth it shall die.” The exceeding sinfulness of sin is thus being demonstrated to humanity. Few profit by the lesson in the present life, and these are chiefly such as are called to the heavenly calling. The great majority of mankind learn to know sin, evil, only. Even God’s provision for the future of mankind is obscured from the masses. “The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of God’s goodness should shine into their hearts.” 2 Cor. 4:4

But with the dawning of the New Dispensation of Messiah’s Kingdom, the true light of the knowledge of the glory of God’s character will shine everywhere. “All the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped.” Messiah’s gracious reign, the manifestation of Divine mercy, will be for the very purpose of uplifting these poor, fallen members of our race the masses. During the thousand years of Messiah’s Kingdom, the whole world will have full opportunity for learning the great desirability of righteousness, as now, for a few years, they have the opportunity of learning the undesirability of sin.

By the close of the Mediatorial reign what wonderful lessons respecting good and evil mankind will have learned! Then will come their final testing. After full knowledge of both good and evil, Which will they choose? God urges all to choose the right and its reward of life eternal. Nevertheless, He will not coerce; He will allow each individual to take his choice, to mark out his own course, whether in harmony with or contrary to the Divine arrangements. Such, however, as come to the point of loving righteousness and hating iniquity, shall be accounted worthy of a place in the glorious Kingdom of Messiah.

THE LESSON TO THE ANGELS

God’s dealings with humanity constitute a great object lesson to the angels. They perceive the inflexibility of Divine Justice —the decree of God. “Dying thou shalt die” has been unflinchingly executed against Adam and his race for six thousand years. They perceive, further, the Love of God, which passeth all understanding. They perceive the Divine provision that the Son of God should die, the Just for the unjust, to bring mankind back to full harmony with the Creator. They see the breadth of the Divine character exemplified in the great reward given to our Lord Jesus Christ for His obedience to the Father’s will, even unto death an exaltation to the divine nature, honor and immortality.

They perceive, too, a still greater manifestation of Divine goodness, in God's invitation to the Church to become joint-heirs with Christ in His glory, honor and immortality, on conditions of obedience and walking in the Master's footsteps to the extent of their ability. Who could have dreamed of such "Love Divine, all love excelling," which stooped down, not only to redeem the race, but also to invite some of the members thereof to these exceeding great and precious things which "God hath in reservation for them that love Him"!

Next in order the world will receive Divine mercy, extended through Jesus, by the Father's arrangement, to Adam and every member of his race, no matter how degraded, no matter how fallen, no matter how mean. The redeeming blood has been shed, "The Just for the unjust," for the sins of the whole world.

DIVINE POWER AND WISDOM

While Divine power is manifested in all the realm of nature and creation, a still greater Divine Power was manifested in the resurrection of our Lord Jesus from the dead, after He had been deceased three days. But even the power manifested in our Lord's resurrection seems small in comparison to the further works of resurrection which the Scriptures assure us our dear Lord's death insures. It will be a still more miraculous work to resurrect the Church to glory, honor and immortality, after many of them have been in the power of death for centuries.

And still more stupendous is the resurrection work which God proposes for the world of mankind thousands of millions to be awakened and restored to the same conditions they formerly enjoyed conditions, however, of imperfection, from which they will be gradually released and uplifted by Messiah This resurrection work for the world, which will be gradually carried forward during that thousand years, will all be accomplished by the Father's power, through the Messiah, the Mediator of the New Covenant. It will be a continuous miracle of awakening and uplifting the race.

DIVINE WISDOM YET TO BE SEEN

Not until the close of the reign of Messiah and the complete uplift from sin and death of all of Adam's race willing to return to Divine favor, will the Wisdom of God be manifested in its full, clear light. Already some may see, partially, obscurely, some of God's wisdom, but the majority are still inquiring, Why was evil permitted? These have not yet seen the Divine wisdom in connection with the permission of evil. Ultimately this shall be clearly seen by the saints, by the angels and by the world of mankind. Well does the Revelator exclaim:

"Who shall not glorify Thee, O Lord, when Thy righteous dealings are made manifest!" "All nations which Thou hast made shall come and worship before Thee!" (Rev. 15:4) As now, "Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge, and there is no place where their voice is not heard” the voice of Nature, acclaiming her God so, eventually, “Every creature in heaven and earth and under the earth shall be heard saying, ”Praise, glory, honor, dominion and might be unto Him that sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb, forever." All this will be the result of God’s permission of sin of His permission of the reign of evil, sin, death. The key is found in the Plan of the Ages showing the work which each Age is to accomplish, and the grand overthrow, eventually, of evil.

BUT ONE CHURCH

“The Church of the First-borns, whose names are written in Heaven.” Heb. 12:23

The Scriptural records refer to the Church of Christ as one, not as many. In this matter the Church of Rome and the Church of England hold aloof from many Protestant denominations. They claim that to recognize them as churches would be unscriptural, since there is but one Church of the Living God. The various Protestant denominations started out with similar views, similar theories, though today they have abandoned them. The Church of England formed an organization separate from that of Rome, believing that the former had been the one true Church but had departed from the faith, and that it was the duty of the faithful to recognize her as Babylon confusion.

The claim to be the true Church they applied to themselves. Similarly, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, Adventists, Disciples, etc., have withdrawn, and many of these originally claimed to be the one true, loyal, faithful Church of Christ. Today, however, the pendulum has swung to the other side. Moreover, the narrowness of the past is rapidly giving way. All are learning that to be a Christian means more than merely to be immersed; more than merely to be sprinkled; more than merely to believe in the doctrine of Election; more than merely to believe in the doctrine of Free Grace; more than to believe in the doctrine of Transubstantiation or Consubstantiation. With this enlargement of mind Christians are indeed in danger of losing sight of the fact that the True Church is the custodian of “the faith once delivered to the saints” which acknowledges “one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all, and one Church of the living God.”

ONE CHURCH IN MANY CHURCHES

The key to the situation is found in our Lord's words: "Not all that say unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven;" not all who call themselves Christians, with one denominational tag or another, are members of the one Church, the Church of the First-borns, mentioned in our text. As good, rich milk is sometimes called cream, so all the members of Christian denominations are sometimes called Christians in a complimentary sense, because not unsympathetic with true Christian principles. Nevertheless, only those in all denominations who have conformed to the conditions required of Christian discipleship, the saintly ones, constitute the True Church—"The Church of the First-born, whose names are written in heaven."

If we had a box of sawdust and scattered through it a paper of tacks until the latter were quite hidden from view, surrounded and covered in the sawdust, we know that we could take a magnet and, by passing it to and fro amongst the sawdust, the magnet would attract to itself every tack.

The tacks of this illustration represent a small class of humanity, zealous at heart for God and righteousness. The magnet represents the Gospel invitation, which is now passed up and down, hither and thither throughout the civilized world, and to some extent, into the heathen world.

NON-ELECT NOT DOOMED TO TORMENT

When we convince our readers that the non-elect of this Age are not doomed to eternal torment, but will have a blessing of inferior degree to that of "the elect," the effect should be to right our minds and to cause us to think carefully and critically of the stringent terms of discipleship which the Bible lays down as conditions for membership in the one true Church.

Heretofore, with the false thought in mind that all except the Church would be eternally tormented, we have all shrunk from making any reasonable application of the Scriptural texts regarding saintship, discipleship, the becoming members of the Church of the First-born. This was partly because of fear for ourselves, lest we might not come up to the standard of saintship, but especially was it because of our realization that the great mass of humanity in Christendom, as well as in heathen lands, come far short of the terms of discipleship laid down in God's Word. Today the matter comes close home to us all, for we realize that many who were very near and dear to us have died outside of the nominal church, and far outside the special line of conditions which marked the Church of the First-born.

Amongst other texts showing the exclusive and high standard of the elect Church, we note the following: “If any man will be My disciple, let him take up his cross and follow Me; and where I am there shall also My disciple be”; “To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne”; “Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it” (Luke 9:23; Matt. 7:14); “Let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race set before us” (Heb. 12:1); “If these things be in you and abound (the graces of the Holy Spirit) they will make you that ye shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.” 2 Pet. 1:8, 11.

LOOKING THROUGH THE TYPE

St. Paul informs us that all the various features of the Jewish Law were types of still higher, still better things. In our text the expression, “Church of the First-born,” has reference to a type instituted in the very beginning of Israel’s history, when God brought that people, by the hand of Moses, the Mediator of the Law Covenant, out of the land of Egypt. To this type the Apostle refers in his expression, “The Church of the First-born.” The entire nation of Israel, twelve tribes, God had separated from the other nations to represent those who would be a blessing to all other nations, under the Abrahamic Covenant. God’s oath to Abraham was: “In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.”

Pharaoh, King of Egypt, was holding back the nation from going into Palestine, the Land of Promise. One chastisement after another failed to move him to submission until finally an intense calamity availed. The tenth plague was the smiting of the first-born of Egypt, while the Israelites were protected, thus showing Divine interest in and care over Israel. Their first-born were miraculously preserved to represent in type the Church of the First-born. The true Church of Christ are not all that will be saved, in the Divine Program, but merely, as St. James says, “These are a kind of first-fruits unto God of His creatures” (Jam. 1:18; Rev. 14:4). The after-fruits will come in due time, under the further development of the Divine Plan of the Ages as the result of Messiah’s reign of a thousand years.

Some time after their deliverance from Egypt, by Divine direction, the first-borns of all the families and tribes of Israel were exchanged, person by person, for the one tribe of Levi. The Levites thereafter represented the First-born of the Church they alone represented the first-borns of Israel passed over in that night. Subsequently the tribe of Levi became the instructors of the nation in religious matters and from them was chosen one family for the Priesthood Aaron and his sons.

The Scriptural picture is plain. In the Antitype we are still in the night of passing over. Soon the Morning of the New Dispensation, under Messiah's reign, will begin, and all desirous of serving God and having His blessings will be delivered from the oppressing power of Satan and his hosts, typified by Pharaoh and his army. God intends to deliver the whole world from Satan's power. Satan shall be bound for a thousand years, during Messiah's reign, and is ultimately to be destroyed, and the people of God all who desire to worship the Lord and to enter into the glorious Land of Promise will be led forth. The First-born of these is the Church of this Gospel Age, which will be associated with Christ in His heavenly Kingdom—"the Church of the First-borns, whose names are written in heaven."

PRIESTS AND LEVITES ANTITYPICAL

The entire tribe of Levi was specially consecrated to the Lord, and specially separate from the other tribes and was given no inheritance in the land. Thus the entire Church of Christ are begotten of the Holy Spirit to a superior, heavenly nature; they will have no inheritance with mankind in general in the earthly blessings restitution to human perfection and participation in the blessings of the world-wide Eden to be. The promise under which they are now being developed is a heavenly, spiritual one. Their change will be a glorious one from earthly nature to a heavenly nature they will all be like Christ. "They will neither marry nor be given in marriage, but will (in this) be like unto the angels; neither can they die any more."

But as from amongst those first-borns of Israel the family of Aaron was selected to be the priests, so from this Church of the First-borns God shows us that He is selecting a Royal Priesthood a "little flock." Aaron and his sons were few in comparison to all the tribe of Levi, so only a saintly few expect to attain to glory, honor and immortality with Christ. These are referred to in the Scriptures as "members of the Body of Christ," even as the under-priests, Aaron's sons, in the type, were members of Aaron. Under another beautiful figure this Priestly few are styled the "Bride of Christ;" they will be His joint-heirs in His Kingdom and work.

CHOSEN TO BLESS THE PEOPLE

As these Levites, including the priests, were elected or selected, for the purpose of being the instructors of Israel, so we perceive the Scriptures to teach that the Church of the First-born, when glorified, will be associated with Messiah in His great work of blessing and instructing all the people all the families of the earth. The knowledge of the Lord at that time will be made known to all mankind; all the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped.

The merit of the death of Jesus, the Just for the unjust, when applied on behalf of the whole world, will be efficacious for the canceling of the sins of the world, and their full reconciliation to the Father. It will be Divine mercy, however, which will prevent mankind from being at once turned over directly to the Father, as soon as the satisfaction for their sins shall have been tendered and accepted at the close of this Age of dealing with the Church. Instead, a New Law Covenant will be sealed and made operative with Israel, and under that New Covenant the whole world will be privileged to come into relationship with Messiah and the blessings of His Kingdom, which will represent to them Divine mercy, power and opportunity for returning to human perfection and an everlasting, earthly home or, rejecting this grace, they will die the Second Death, from which there will be no recovery.

The effect of the New Covenant will be to bring the willing and obedient of all the people of earth fully back into harmony with God; and this, attained at the end of Messiah's reign of a thousand years, will prepare the way for the surrender of everything to the Heavenly Father, that He may be all in all, and that the world thereafter may be dealt with as perfect beings, along the lines of absolute justice and without any further need of a Mediator or other merciful provisions.

THE PITH OF THE ARGUMENT

This is the pith of St. Paul's argument in our text and context. He points us down to the consummation of this Age to the time when the Church of the First-born shall be completed on the plane of glory to the time when Israel and the world of mankind will reach the place where God will introduce the New Covenant, typified in the Law Covenant. As the latter was introduced by the shaking of Sinai, in a general time of darkness, thus, the Apostle intimates, the New Covenant is about to be inaugurated, in the end of this Age, by a time of most awful trouble, of which that at Sinai was merely a symbolic picture or type. God's voice then shook the earth, but in the antitype He will shake everything that can be shaken. Things which are absolutely just, true and righteous will remain unshaken, and we, the Church of the First-born, the antitypical Priesthood, will receive a Kingdom which cannot be shaken.

THE TRUE CHURCH'S GLORY

In the past we failed to see who would be members of the true Church because our eyes of understanding were beclouded by error. Similarly, we have failed to see the grandeur, the honor and blessing which God has promised shall be the portion of the one true Church, the "little flock." We mixed heavenly things with earthly things. We confounded the blessing of Restitution to human perfection and an earthly Eden with the spiritual blessings. We appropriated to ourselves the promises made to the faithful of Israel, that they should "build houses and inhabit them, and plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them, and should long enjoy the work of their hands.” In general we were confused.

Now as we come to see God’s great Plan and the different features of the same, we are able to discriminate and to apply properly the Scriptures relating to each class. The Royal Priesthood are to be joint-heirs with the Redeemer, partakers of the divine nature and sharers of their Lord’s glory, honor and immortality. (Rom. 2:7) The larger company, symbolized by all the Levites, aside from the family of Aaron, are to be the honored servants of the Royal Priesthood; and the world of mankind are to have the glorious opportunities and blessing of earthly restitution.

WHAT “CORRUPT COMMUNICATION” SIGNIFIES

Corrupt communication is the spreading of evil report or message instead of good. Our text might be understood to mean a corrupting communication according to the course of ordinary conversation. Our minds might get us into all kinds of difficulty with ourselves and with others, if we did not keep a rein upon them and hold them within certain bounds; but our tongues might do even more injury than our minds. What we may think injures only ourselves; but if our tongues come into the matter, not only are our own minds defiled, but there is contagion, there is rancor; for the tongue spreads the matter all around. And whether the matter be true or false, the influence is corrupting, degrading, tending at times even toward immorality.

It would appear that not only amongst the worldly, but amongst the Lord’s people there is a tendency to relate little incidents or make little remarks which, while not necessarily sinful, tend to cause sprouts of evil to develop. It is along this line that the Apostle says we should let no corrupt communication proceed out of our mouth. If, by any mischance, any corrupting information has come to our attention, we should see to it that it goes no further. We have sometimes wondered whether it is the quality of the fallen mind to use the tongue to the disadvantage of others, or whether evil spirits have something to do with it.

Let us, as the Apostle enjoins, drop evil communications; shun them, and hold fast only to that which is edifying the word “edifying” having in it the thought of an edifice, a building up of each other.

BROAD SCOPE FOR CONVERSATION ON RICHES OF GOD’S GRACE

But some, even of those who profess to love the Lord and to be trying to walk in His footsteps, will say, “I never speak anything but the truth; and I mean no harm to anybody; but I must have something to talk about when my neighbors come in, and many of them would think me tiresome if I should try to interest them in religious matters.” But it is evil speaking, slander all the same, and the scandal-monger, however refined his methods or words, well knows that so far from the scandal ministering grace to the hearer, it ministers evil; that the hearer, impelled by the forces of his fallen human nature, goes out to tell the scandal to others. The fallen nature feasts and revels in just such things, assuring many that they are thus moralizing, preaching against sin, and that in thus discussing and impliedly denouncing the transgressions of another, they are mentioning matters abhorrent to themselves. Alas! their reasoning is seriously defective when the Lord’s counsels in righteousness are ignored.

There is surely broad scope for conversation among Christian people on the subject of the riches of God’s grace in Christ Jesus our Lord, expressed in the exceeding great and precious promises of the Divine Word. In these things we have indeed that which not only ministers grace to the hearer, but that which adds also to the grace of the speaker. It showers blessing on every hand so far as the New Creature is concerned, and assists in deadening the old nature with its evil desires, tastes and appetites.

This, evidently, is what the Apostle had in mind when he said that the Lord’s people should “show forth the praises of Him who called us out of darkness, into His marvelous light.” And a heart filled with the spirit of love, the spirit of God, the spirit of the Truth, and overflowing with the same will be sure to bestow it upon others; for, “Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh”; “Blessed are the pure in heart.” 1 Pet. 2:9; Matt. 12:34; 5:8

CHRIST'S COMING WORLD'S END 1914

March 22--The widely known Pastor Russell, whose great and free PHOTO-DRAMA OF CREATION is being set before the people daily in many large cities, and everywhere arousing enthusiasm for God, religion and the Bible, chose for his text today, "Thus it shall be in the coming (Parousia presence) of the Son of Man; they shall be eating, drinking, planting and marrying, and know not." (Matt. 24:37,38.) He said in part:

I was prompted in the selection of my text for today by reading an extract from the sermon of a Canadian minister delivered recently. In it he declared that 1914 would witness the Second Coming of Christ, etc. His statement allowed the inference that he holds the view common to nearly all the creeds; namely, that the earth is to be burned up and the human race blotted out; and that, incidentally, Christ will come a second time, to see that none of the Church are included in the destruction.

MISTAKES OF DARK AGES BEING CORRECTED

To my understanding, all such expectations are wholly unscriptural, untrue, misleading, and hindrances to a right understanding of the Bible. They belong to the Dark Ages, when public teachers seemed to lose all appreciation of poetic language, figurative language, mental imagery. They belong to the time when Christ's references to Gehenna Fire, which burned outside the wall of Jerusalem, were understood to mean an eternity of torture for all except the saintly few. They belong to the time when Jesus' words respecting the cutting off of the right hand and the plucking out of a right eye were misunderstood, and taken literally.

St. Peter's words are generally urged to be the foundation for the theory that the world will be destroyed by literal fire at the Second Coming of Christ, when the heavens shall be on fire, and the earth also and the things therein shall be burned up (2 Pet. 3:10). A literal interpretation here overlooks the fact that St. Peter, speaking of the very same time, in Acts 3:19-21, declares that Times of Restitution and blessing not times of world burning will follow the Second Coming of Jesus. It also overlooks the fact that St. Peter and the other Apostles, as well as the Master, frequently used the word fire in a symbolic sense, to represent tribulation. Thus St. Peter, addressing the Church, says, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial that shall try you."

St. Paul says that the fire of that Day shall try the work of every man (the Church), of what sort it is. Those who have built with gold, silver, precious stones (the promises of God's Word), shall be fire-proof in that Day; while those who have built with the wood, hay and stubble of human tradition Higher Criticism, Human Evolution, etc. will find their faith structure amenable to the fire; and they will suffer the loss of faith and have tribulations accordingly. Yet, the Apostle explains, such will themselves be saved, but these very fiery trials will destroy their misconceptions. They will be saved because, in spite of their errors, they built their faith upon Christ. 1 Cor. 3:11-15.

The Apostle, however, urged that all should build with gold, silver and precious stones characteristics which would enable them to pass through the fire of that Day unscathed—"more than conquerors." Similarly, Jesus referred to a testing of faith, by the figure of a flood, telling that those who built upon the sand would suffer loss, but that those who built upon the Rock would be safe. All these Scriptures, however, these references to fiery trials, etc., belong to the end of the Age not the end of the world.

THE EARTH ABIDETH FOREVER

The Bible teaches that in God's great Plan He has provided various epochs, or ages, each for the accomplishment of its own special work; as for instance, the Jewish Age with its work, and the Gospel Age with its work, to be followed by the Millennial Age and its still different work. The Bible declares that "the earth abideth forever" (Ecc. 1:4); that "God created it not in vain; He formed it to be inhabited." (Isa. 45:18.) The earth has never yet been inhabited. There are immense tracts of country still unoccupied. The Divine Plan for the earth has not yet reached consummation. It will require the thousand years of Messiah's glorious Kingdom Power to bring the world out of present sin and death conditions, and into the glorious conditions of Millennial blessings and Restitution, of which the Scriptures so frequently speak, and which St. Peter declares God has spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets.

So then, the basis for thinking of the end of the world, now or ever, is purely a misunderstanding, due largely to the fact that our English translation uses the word world where it would more properly have used the word Age, Epoch, or order of things. In a word, the present order of things, of which the Scriptures declare Satan is the prince, or ruler, is not to be perpetual; it is to pass away. A new order of things, under the control of Messiah, the Prince of Light, is to take the place of the present reign of the Prince of Darkness. A reign of righteousness and life is to succeed the present reign of sin and death, according to St. Paul. Rom. 5:17, 21.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING

The Bible everywhere represents that Christ left a Heavenly glory when He came to earth nearly nineteen centuries ago. "The Logos was made flesh and dwelt among us." The Bible explains that the necessity for this humiliation, this leaving the glory and taking a bondman's form, lay in the fact that God had pronounced a death sentence upon man, which mankind were paying, and from which they could not be released unless someone would become their redeemer and meet the penalty for them a death penalty, not an eternal torment penalty, of which the Scriptures know nothing.

The Bible nowhere tells that Jesus took the human nature to keep it forever, and to return with it to Heaven, where it would be completely out of order and out of place. The Bible teaches, on the contrary, that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 15:50); and that Jesus was made flesh merely "that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man" (Heb. 2:9); and that after doing this work He would "ascend up where He was before" (John 6:62). St. Paul assures us that this, the Divine Program, has been carried out. After telling of our Lord's obedience to the Father's will in humbling Himself to death, even the death of the cross, he adds, "God hath highly exalted Him"—"far above angels, principalities and powers." Phil. 2:5-11; Eph. 1:20-23

The Master declared plainly, "Yet a little while, and the world shall see Me no more"; but He promised that He should be seen by His followers. St. John declares, "We shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." (1 John 3:2) We read: "Every eye shall see Him"; but this, to be in harmony with the other Scriptures, must refer to the eyes of understanding. The Bible declares that eyes of human understanding are blinded now by error and sin, but that shortly all the blind eyes shall be opened. Then all will see Messiah and His Kingdom with the eye of faith, as the Church now see Jesus, the crown of life, and the things which the natural eye hath not seen.

PAROUSIA--PRESENCE; EPIPHANIA--MANIFESTATION

Our English word coming is used to translate several very different Greek words. One of these is Parousia, which means presence, and is used in referring to the first stage of the Lord's Second Advent. He will be invisibly present. For a time none but the saintly few whose eyes of understanding are anointed through the Word and the Spirit will realize His Parousia, His presence while all things earthly will continue as they have been buying, selling, building, marrying, etc. Then, later on, will come the Epiphania; that is to say, the revelation, or manifestation, of the present One. This will not be a manifestation in the flesh, but in a great Time of Trouble, symbolically represented as fire, as when we read, "He shall be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance." 2 Thess. 1:7-10

To my understanding, the Bible teaches that Jesus has been present in the world since 1874. In other words, His Second Advent then began. The wonderful progress in the world since then Bible students thus explain; the wonderful blessing upon them and their study of the Bible they interpret in harmony with this. They understand the Bible to teach that this Parousia will continue for a thousand years; but that the Epiphania, or manifestation to the world, will be due in forty years from the time the Presence began. For this reason they are looking very interestedly to see what the present year may bring forth.

And do we not see everywhere signs of unrest, a time of trouble brewing? It looks as though this year would mark the beginning of the “flaming fire” of judgments upon the world which will mark the closing of this Age and the inauguration of the New Dispensation of Messiah’s Kingdom, when “justice shall be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet,” and when the ignorance, superstition and darkness which so long have hindered us will begin to be broken. The transition may be painful, yet it will be blessed, marking the overthrow of Satan’s empire and reign of sin and death and the inauguration of Messiah’s Kingdom and its Reign of righteousness and life eternal.

EATING, DRINKING, PLANTING AND BUILDING

Our Lord, in describing His Second Presence, clearly indicated that it would be unnoticed by the world until the cataclysm of trouble should come. Thus He likened the earlier days of His presence to that period before the Flood, when the world, unconscious of the impending catastrophe, continued to build, eat, and drink as usual, and knew not. So, says the Master, it will be in the end of this Age. Eating, drinking, building, planting and marrying will proceed as usual; and the world will not know that they are in the presence of the Son of Man. The great Day of Trouble, noted throughout the Scriptures as “the Time of Trouble such as never was since there was a nation,” will come upon them suddenly. St. Paul says like the pangs of a woman in child-birth. A New Dispensation and new order of things is about to be born, and this great trouble is merely incidental to that birth.

St. Paul refers to the matter, saying, “Yourselves know perfectly, brethren, that the Day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. For when they (the world) shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape, But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that Day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all children of the light, children of the Day.” 1 Thess. 5:1-6

CHANGE A CAUSE FOR REJOICING

If this great change from the dominion of Satan to the rule of Christ shall begin to manifest itself this very year, 1914, it will be a cause for rejoicing to all. Although no sufferings are joyous, but rather grievous, nevertheless when we know that our interests are in the hands of a gracious Savior who died for us and who is intent upon doing all that can be done for the recovery of our race from sin and death, we may well be glad in realizing that the Plan which Messiah is about to carry out for the blessing and uplifting of mankind from sin and death conditions is part of the original Divine Plan of the Father. And we have all the more joy, confidence and assurance that all things will work together for good to those that love God.

*“The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower.”*

The trouble will be an awful one, but we believe not of great length. The Bible everywhere tells of the glorious results that will follow, when the shackles of darkness, sin and error shall be broken, and when all the spiritual powers surrounding mankind will be good and helpful, as in contrast with those of the wicked spirits now operating through mediums, by clairvoyant and clairaudient powers, to ensnare, to deceive, to bewilder, mankind.

The fact that our Lord appeared in seven different flesh-forms on various occasions after His resurrection does not contradict other plain statements. Rather, we see that such appearances resembled the appearances of angels in the flesh, to communicate some good message from God to men. Had Jesus not materialized and appeared to His disciples, what proof would they or we ever have had respecting His resurrection? And would not the fact that He saw them for a few moments and then vanished tend to prove to them that He was no longer a flesh being, but a spirit being, who had merely appeared to them for a special purpose? St. Paul declares that he saw the Lord last, and not as a man, but as a spirit being, whose brightness was above that of the sun; and it injured his eyesight; for our Lord was not veiled in the flesh, as when He appeared to the disciples during the forty days.

The Christ who is to come a second time, then, is not the Jesus of the flesh, but the glorified Jesus, who in nature and glory is far above the angels of the Divine nature.

THIS SAME JESUS SHALL COME AGAIN

When Jesus ascended, two angels appeared to the disciples, saying, “This same Jesus, whom ye have seen go into Heaven, shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen Him go.” In the past many of us have misunderstood this statement not scrutinizing it carefully enough. Assuredly it would be the same Jesus that would come again the same One who died for us, the same One who left the glory for us before He was born the Babe of Bethlehem. In all His changes He remains the same personality, as He declared: "I am He that is, and was, and is to come." The angels did not say, however, He will come again in the flesh, or materialized, as you have seen Him go away. Their message related to the manner of His going and the manner of His coming. What was there special about the manner of His going away that would correspond to the manner of His coming again? Many things! He went away quietly, secretly, unknown to the world, unknown to any except His disciples. In like manner has been His Parousia silently, quietly, unknown to the world, not known to any except His disciples. Surely, if we are right in saying that His Parousia began in 1874, the manner would correspond with the manner of His going. He did not come with glorious hosts, blaring trumpets, etc., but as a "thief in the night." If we have the correct date and chronology, Gentile Times will end this year 1914.

What of it? We do not surely know. Our expectation is that the active rule of Messiah will begin about the time of the ending of the lease of power to the Gentiles. Our expectation, true or false, is that there will be wonderful manifestations of Divine judgments against all unrighteousness, and that this will mean the breaking up of many institutions of the present time, if not all. Some Scriptures seem to indicate that this will mean world-wide anarchy, not all beginning at the same moment, nor ending at the same time, but beginning and gradually spreading the world around. The further intimation is that this trouble will eventually prove a blessing to humanity, melting their hearts in the Day of Trouble, teaching them more of sympathy for one another, breaking the power of superstition, wealth, ignorance, etc. preparing them for the glorious Reign of Messiah's Kingdom.

AN OPEN LETTER TO A SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST

Dear Sir and Brother:—

Even though differing from you in my views of the Law, I feel constrained to express admiration for the zeal with which you and your co-workers have endeavored to promulgate what you believe to be the truth of God. If we believe anything to be right we must act upon it until the Lord grants us to see otherwise. I had far rather be wrong and consistent than right and inconsistent, though it is best of all to be both right and consistent.

3H75

I feel justified in addressing you as a Brother in Christ because of the many points upon which we can hold harmonious fellowship. We look to the same Father in heaven. We trust in the merit of the same great sacrifice for sin. We are seeking light from the same inspired Scripture. We are both striving to live in the way that will be to the glory of God. We see eye to eye upon the nature of the soul, the penalty for sin, earth's restitution to Edenic conditions, the Babylonian state of so-called Christendom, and the impending time of trouble along financial, political and social lines. Then last, but not least, we each see the necessity of suffering with Christ if we would be glorified with him, and have already suffered a little of the scorn and derision which the world hurls at the soldier of the cross. The enumeration of all these points on which we are agreed will enable you to realize that what I am about to say respecting our differences is not meant in a spirit of wrangling, but solely for the purpose of sharing with you the blessedness and joy which has dawned in our hearts with this comforting light; and with almost every sentence, I breathe a prayer that the dear Lord will bless and condescend to use this feeble ministry to his glory.

Our differences seem to hinge largely upon the Sabbath question, so I will come immediately to its consideration.

We agree with our Adventist friends that God never authorized anyone to change the Sabbath of the Decalog from the seventh day of the week to the first, but we do believe that just as truly as the Christian has a greater High Priest, and a greater sacrifice, and a greater tabernacle than Israel had, so, too, the follower of Christ has a much greater Sabbath than the follower of Moses. Everything under the Jewish dispensation was typical of "good things to come." (Heb. 10:1.) The Atonement Day, the passover, the sabbatic years, the jubilees, etc., were all figures of more important things; so why should it seem strange that the seventh or Sabbath day was typical any more than the seventh or sabbatic year? But in order that you may see this to be the Scriptural thought hear Paul in Col. 2:16,17: "Let no man therefore judge you, in meat or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days: Which are a shadow of good things to come; but the body is of Christ." The seventh-day keepers will argue that the Sabbath here refers to some of those yearly occasions, which were also called Sabbath, because part of their observance required rest from ordinary labor; for instance, the Day of Atonement. But this cannot be the meaning of Paul's language, for he had already included all these yearly sabbaths under the words, "an holy day." In harmony with his usual systematic forms of expression Paul first spoke of the yearly holy days, then came the monthly festivals, the new moons, and next the weekly rest days. The Christian has a Sabbath too, but, as we shall see, his Sabbath is as much greater than the Jewish Sabbath as the substance of a thing is greater than its shadow

You may ask "Did not the Lord in Ex. 31:16 speak of the seventh day Sabbath as being given for "a perpetual covenant"? I Answer--to this that the very identical language which the Lord used here of the Sabbath he uses elsewhere of the harvest offering (Lev. 23:14), the pentecostal sacrifice (Lev. 23:21), the Day of Atonement (Lev. 23:31,32) and the Feast of Tabernacles. (Lev. 23:41.) The same Hebrew word "olam," which is translated "perpetual" in the seventh day reference, is the word translated "forever" in the other passages. See Young's Analytical Concordance. So if the Advent view is correct we should still be keeping the Feast of Tabernacles as well as the Sabbath, but as some of your own brethren have shown, when dealing with the punishment of the wicked, the word "olam," like the Greek "aion," really means "age-lasting," or "lasting to a consummation." It is sometimes used in the sense of eternal but not necessarily. Thus in Ex. 29:9 we read of the priestly office being given to Aaron and his descendants "for a perpetual statute," the same word "olam" being used. But that it does not properly mean "perpetual" in this passage is evident, for Aaron's family lost the priesthood 1800 years ago. Note Heb. 7:11-14.

We find, then, that Jehovah used the very same language in speaking of the weekly Sabbath which he used respecting other Jewish institutions which passed away when that of which they were typical came; so similarly may not the Jewish Sabbath have passed away, being supplanted by a greater Sabbath? Notice our Lord's words in Matt. 5:17,18, "Think not that I am come to destroy the Law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfill; for verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the Law till all be fulfilled" Our Savior did not say the Law should not pass away, but that it should not pass away until it was fulfilled. But he tells us first that he came to fulfill it; so if it was fulfilled in him it has passed away. There is a vast difference between a thing being destroyed and passing away as a result of fulfillment. The law of circumcision was never destroyed, but it passed away and was abolished when that to which it pointed, circumcision of the heart, was set forth, and it is this higher circumcision we must observe. (Rom. 2:28,29.) Likewise Christ did not destroy the Law, or set it at naught, but his perfect life fulfilled its every requirement, as we imperfect creatures could not, and thus he became the great inheritor of all the promises of the Law, with the right to distribute what he inherited under the Law to all who would become his. Additionally the Law led to Christ and pointed him out as the holy One of whom Moses had said, "Hear ye him." (Acts 7:37; Gal. 3:24,25.) Therefore to consider the Law given through Moses as binding upon the Christian is to doubt whether Christ has accomplished what he came for; “to fulfill” the Law. Of course the Christian must study that Law, and he finds jewels of inspired wisdom in it, but he studies it as a shadow of better things, as typical of the blessings promised under the greater than Moses Christ.

Then is the follower of Christ under no law? Yes, he is under a new law, a higher law. Just as he has a better High Priest, a better sacrifice, a better everything than the Jew had, so he has a better law, and it contains a better Sabbath. Isa. 42:21 foretold that Christ was to “magnify the Law and make it honorable,” and we are now under this magnified law. The Law said: “Thou shalt not kill,” but Christ magnified that when he taught that whosoever hateth his brother without a cause is guilty of murder. (See Matt. 5:21,22,27,28.) The Law said: “Thou shalt not steal,” but Christ taught us that we should not merely refrain from robbing our neighbor, but be ever ready to share with him what we had, even to the extent of laying down our lives for our brethren. (John 13:24; 1 John 3:16.) The Law said: “Honor thy father and thy mother,” but we are instructed to “honor all to whom honor is due.” Rom. 13:7.

Now, dear brother, the Adventists see that Christ magnified the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th commandments, but they fail to realize that he magnified the 4th, the Sabbath commandment, too. To the contrary, they believe he made it smaller. One of your brethren put it to me this way: “Before Christ every little act contrary to the Sabbath commandment, even the building of a fire, was to be severely punished, but since Christ’s sacrifice, so long as we try to do our best to keep the Sabbath, the Lord will pardon and overlook where we come short in our obedience to that command.” That would have magnified God’s mercy, but it would not have magnified the commandment. Would it be magnifying the 6th. commandment if we should say: “Before Christ murder was to be severely punished, but since then, if you try to keep the Law—” thou shalt not kill" it will be all right if you do kill a man once in a while"? Yet that is the only sense in which I have ever been able to find the seventh-day Adventists viewing the Sabbath differently from the Jews of old.

Let me now present our understanding of how Christ magnified the Sabbath Law. The Israelite was to consider one-tenth of what he had as holy unto the Lord; but do we ever hear the Christian advised to give a tithe to the Lord? Not once. How much are we advised to give him? All that we are and have. We are to give all that we can in as direct a way as we can, and the balance is to be given him in a more indirect way; e. g., we give him the money we spend for food and clothing, because our body belongs to him and is being used to glorify and serve him. The food gives us strength to do more for him, therefore the money we spend for food is being spent for our Lord. (Rom. 12:1; 1 Cor. 6:20; 10:31; 2 Cor. 5:15.) In Luke 14:33 our Master does not tell us to forsake or surrender a tenth, but “all that he hath.” But the Christian not only gives the Lord more than the Jew gave; he also gives it in a higher sense. The Jew gave to the Lord by giving to the priests and Levites, but the Christian gives to the Lord by trying to do everything in the way the Lord would approve. “Lord, what wilt thou have me to do with this dollar, or this hour, or with these hands?” is his heart’s constant sentiment.

The Jew sang: “Some of self and some of thee.” The Christian sings: “None of self but all of thee.”

Likewise the Jew gave God one-seventh of his time, but the Christian is to give him seven-sevenths. The Lord said in Lev. 19:30, “Ye shall keep my sabbaths and reverence my sanctuary.” The sanctuary was the holy structure through which God manifested himself to Israel; so to them the word meant a certain definite holy place; but the Christian finds his sanctuary wherever he is; every place is a holy place to him. Similarly every day is a holy day, a Sabbath of rest to him. He has a better sanctuary to reverence and a better Sabbath to keep. But not only does his Sabbath differ from the typical Sabbath, the nature of his rest also differs. It does not merely mean a cessation from manual labor, but a rest from laboring for self in order to work and live for God. It means to rest as God rested after he had completed the work of creation, as the Word expresses it: “To enter into his rest.” God’s rest does not mean idleness, “He sends his rain and causes his sun to shine” on the seventh just as much as on any other day. Then how did he rest? He ceased working for himself in order to work for man through his Son. And how do we rest like him? By ceasing to work for self in order to work for him through Christ. Hear Heb. 4:10, “For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.” And then Paul continues in verse 11, “let us labor therefore,” not let us cease from labor, but labor to put down those selfish propensities which would lead us, contrary to God’s will, to live for self, instead of permitting us “to enter into that rest.” This rest of which the seventh day was a type will not end with this life, but it will continue an eternal rest, begun here and consummated in eternity.

Let me digress here to say that God’s rest day was not a period of 24 hours, but, like the six days of creation, was a long period of time. In our own language this is a very common use of the word “day,” and it is equally frequent in Bible language. (2 Pet. 3:8; Psa. 95:7-10). While the day of salvation of 2 Cor. 6:2 is already over 1800 years long, so it was with the great days of creation; they were long periods of time, and likewise the seventh day, in which God rested, is a long period; it is not over yet. However, time will hardly permit me to give you the Scriptural proofs here on this point, but if you wish I may take it up later.

But to return to the subject of this letter. In Isa. 58:13 we have a description by the inspired Prophet of what constitutes Christian Sabbath keeping. We must refrain from doing our own ways, and from finding our own pleasures, and from speaking our own words. That is Sabbath keeping. But the Christian must do that every day, therefore every day must be a Sabbath to him. For fear you may not apply the latter part of the verse to the Sabbath let me refer you to the Revised Version, which reads: "And shalt honor it, not doing thine own ways," etc. Every day we are to "speak as the oracles of God." (1 Pet. 4:11.) Every day God is to work in us "to do of his good pleasure" (Phil. 2:13). Every day "the steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord." (Psa. 37:23.) So again I say, every day is a Sabbath to him who liveth "not unto himself." Is not this a glorious magnifying of the Law?

We can now see how "Christ is the end of the Law for righteousness to every one that believeth." (Rom. 10:4.) We can understand why Paul could say in Gal. 3:19), "The Law was added * * TILL THE SEED SHOULD COME," and then in verses 23 to 25 he boldly compares the Law to a severe pedagogue to whom they were committed for a season, "but after that faith is come we are no longer under a pedagogue." And we can comprehend why Paul mourns because "ye observe days" (Gal. 4:10,11), and intimates that the brother is weak who "esteems one day above another" (Rom. 14:5 read verses 1 to 7), failing to realize that they are all to be counted as days in which His glory is to be sought.

I know how the seventh-day Adventists divide the Law into two parts, calling the Decalogue "the law of God," and the remainder "the law of Moses," and then claiming that Christ did away with the law of Moses, but not with the law of God. This is an awful mistake; it was all the Law of God, because it came from Him, and it as all the Law of Moses in that it came through him. (Lev. 26:46; Deut. 5:5.) Thus our Savior, in Mark 7:10, quotes one of the ten commandments (Ex. 20:12; Deut. 5:16), and then in the same verse a law which was not in the Decalogue (Ex. 21:17; Lev. 20:9), and yet attributes them both to Moses. He was not the author of either, but he was the agent through whom God delivered both commands. Furthermore, the fact that the Law, which was until John (Luke 16:16; Matt. 11:13), included the Decalog as well as the ceremonial features of the Law, is proved by Rom. 7:6,7; for Paul, after saying, "we are delivered from the law," leaves no doubt as to what law is meant by quoting from the tenth commandment. And as his words show we are no longer under the letter (it was the letter which was on the stones), but under the spirit, the antitype, that which was shadowed forth in the words on stone, the greater law of love. (James 1:26; 2:8.)

When we read, therefore, in the books from Acts to Revelation about the redeemed keeping "the commandments of God," we do not think of the letters in stone given through Moses, but of the magnified law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus." (Rom.8:2.) Notice another passage, viz., 2 Cor. 3:3-11. The expression, "written and engraven in stones," and the reference to Moses' face shining at the time is evidence that Paul is speaking of the Decalog. In verse 7 he tells us how the Law was accompanied with such glory that it even caused Moses' face to shine. Then in verse 8 he refers to something which would be accompanied with more glory, and following this up shows that when "the glory that excelleth" (v. 10) should come then that which was given with glory i. e the Law written and engraven on stones was to be "done away." (v. 11). Note the remarkable similarity between the Revised Version rendering of verse 11 and Matt. 5:18. Then in verses 12 to 18 Paul shows that while Israel had Moses cover his face so they could not see the glorious results of the giving of that glorious Law, yet we should refrain from covering our hearts with the veil of prejudice, etc., as we wish to see the more glorious results of this more glorious law upon the hearts and lives of our brethren, especially as it was reflected in our great Elder Brother, the Lord Jesus. 2 Cor. 3:18.

Dear brother, much more might be written, but I must refrain from more than one or two brief statements. Paul's preaching upon the seventh day, etc., is no endorsement of seventh-day Adventism. That was a day when the cessation from labor brought the Jews together in their synagogues and gave Paul an opportunity he gladly used. Wherever and whenever he found ears to hear he was ready to preach. There were crowds in the synagogues on the seventh day; so Paul went there, and there were numbers at the market every day; so Paul preached there on other days (Acts 17:17.) So just as Paul esteemed those opportunities, so we esteem the opportunities afforded us on the first day, not because there is a divine command to consider that day a Sabbath above other days, although we consider it a very appropriate day for meetings of the people of God, being our Lord's resurrection day. However, refraining from actual labor on the first day is not an endorsement of the wrong ideas many have held about it, any more than a belief in the Bible would mean an endorsement of the many wrong views which have been entertained of its teaching.

I fear the seventh-day keepers have been putting the new wine into the old bottles; let us rather use the new bottles provided through our Savior.(Matt. 9:17.) "Prove all things," including these things, and if found in harmony with the Word of God may you have grace to act upon this fuller light, of which Sinai's light was but a type, and to rest in this better sense. It has been a great comfort to me to find that salvation did not hang upon such a slender cord as the keeping of a weekly rest day.

There are other features of the Sabbath, for instance it is foreshadowing of the Millennium, which I have not touched upon at all. Pastor Chas. T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., has treated that phase of the subject most beautifully. Have you ever read his book, "The Divine Plan of the Ages"? It is a book of 386 pages, cloth bound, for 25 cents. The Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, 612 Arch Street, Allegheny, Pa., supplies them. It puts the Scriptures upon the Millennium in a new light by helping to lay aside that "veil" we have already referred to.

Trusting you will be willing to receive this in the same spirit in which it was written, and asking our heavenly Father's blessing upon its mission, I subscribe myself,

Your Brother in the service of the King of kings,

SABBATH QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Question 1. Were two laws given to Israel, a ceremonial law and a moral law; and was it the former only that was done away by Christ, while the moral law remains?

Answer. There is no Scriptural authority for such a division. On the contrary, there was but one Law, its ceremonial features providing typically for the cleansing away of sins resulting from the violation of its moral precepts. If it could be seen as the Covenant mediated by Moses, it would be evident that all of its parts must stand or fall together. But after comparing Ex. 34:28; Deut. 4:13,14, and Heb. 8:6-8, there should be no question on the part of any one that the Ten Commandments were a part of the Law Covenant which is to be supplanted by the New Covenant sealed with the blood (death) of Christ, its Mediator Jesus the Head and the Church his Body.

When the apostles wrote to the new Gentile converts respecting the Law determined not to put upon them the yoke of the Law which they as Jews had been unable to keep and contradicting certain teachers who had said that they "must be circumcised and keep the Law," James remarked incidentally that the Law of Moses to which they referred was that "read in the synagogue every Sabbath day." Acts 15:9-11, 24, 28, 29, 19-21.

Question 2. We Seventh-day keepers claim that God's commands are, that we labor six days and rest on the seventh; and many of us have gone to prison because of our conviction that it is our duty to labor on the first day and on all days except the seventh. And we believe that the time is coming when the keeping of Sunday will be a yet more severe test, and bring further suffering upon us.

Answer. We have nothing to do with the making of the social laws which prohibit labor on the first day of the week; but we obey them as civil laws, as commanded in the Scriptures (Rom. 13:1-7; 1 Pet. 2:13); and we find it to be to our profit as well as to our pleasure. We sincerely sympathize with the poor people who are deluded by such an argument, and suffer therefor; and we admire their willingness to suffer for what they consider to be the truth. But they are mistaken. The laws of this land do not compel any man to violate his conscience by working on the seventh day or any other day.

And it is not sound reasoning to claim that a man must labor during the other six days. If so, are those days of twenty-four hours, or of how many hours? In such a case, for a man to be sick, or to go on a journey or on a visit, would be to violate the Law, and fall under its curse. What nonsense! False reasoning has surely blinded whoever cannot see that the Fourth Commandment of Moses' Law means, "(Within) six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work!"

As for future persecution on these lines, it is probable; not because of any opposition to Seventh-day-keeping, but because, according to the Scriptures, there will ere long be a federation or union of religious systems which, gaining increased prestige and honor, will make the demands of popular religionists more arrogant supposedly in the interest of peace and the cause of Christ.

Question 3. We Seventh-Day Adventists claim that as the Mosaic Covenant had a tabernacle, with a holy place in which the high priest offered for the sins of the people during the entire year, and a most holy in which he finished that work on the last day of the year, so there is a Holy and Most Holy in heaven; and that Christ has officiated for the sins of his people in the Holy during the Gospel Age, and will for a short time before its close officiate in the Most Holy. This we understand to be the "cleansing of the Sanctuary." We consequently used to teach that all probation ended about 1845, when Christ (we believe) went from the Holy into the Most Holy. We hold, therefore, that the judgment is all over, and that naught remains except for Christ to come forth and receive us Seventh-Day Adventists, and to destroy all the remainder of mankind.

We hold, too, that we Seventh-Day Adventists are fulfilling the "Third Angel's Message" of Rev. 14:9-12. In the Expression, "Fear God and keep his commandments," we place the stress upon the Fourth Commandment. Answer. You err respecting the antitypes of the Jewish Atonement Day and Tabernacle. The antitypical Holy and Most Holy are "heavenly," in the sense of being higher (such is the meaning of the word heavenly). In Israel's typical service these were places: in the antitype they are conditions. All of the antitypical or "royal priesthood" have access to the Holy condition as soon as they consecrate themselves or present their bodies living sacrifices to God's service. (Heb. 9:6.) They at once have access to the antitypical “shewbread” (Lev. 24:9), “meat to eat that the world knoweth not of.” They at once have the light of divine revelation, represented by the “golden candlestick,” which the natural man perceiveth not. (1 Cor. 2:5, 7, 9-12.) They at once have access to the Incense Altar, and their prayers and services are acceptable to God through Christ as sweet incense. Thus the first apartment of the Tabernacle represents the present condition of the Church while still in the flesh; and thus we are now blest with Christ Jesus “in heavenly places (higher conditions).” Eph. 1:3.

But the vail (death) still separates between us and the perfect spiritual condition the divine nature into which Christ has entered, and into which he has promised to conduct all his faithful joint-sacrificers and joint-heirs at the close of the Antitypical Day of Atonement.

You err also in supposing that Israel’s typical Day of Atonement was at the end of the year, to atone for past sins. It was, on the contrary, for the nation, and at the beginning of their year, to make atonement for the whole nation and to bring the whole nation into God’s favor for the year following it. And the thank-offerings, peace-offerings, and trespass-offerings, offered by individuals during the year following, were acceptable upon the basis of that Atonement Day offering. At the close of the year, for which the Atonement Day sacrifices applied, the people were again as defiled as the residue of Adam’s race, and required a new Day of Atonement as a basis for another year’s acceptance with God as a typically justified nation.

You err also in supposing that the coming out of the Great High Priest at the close of the Day of Atonement will be for the blessing of Seventh-Day keepers. He comes out to bless, first, the “royal priesthood,” they that have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. (Psa. 50:5.) “They shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I make up my jewels.” (Mal. 3:17.) But, as in the type, not priests only were blessed, but “all the people,” so in the antitype all the families of the earth shall be blessed at the revelation of Christ Jesus, when he shall come to be “glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that (Millennial) day.” (2 Thess. 1:10.) The sacrifices and offerings subsequent to the typical Day of Atonement will find their antitypes in the Millennial Age, when all those who desire fellowship with God will come to him through the Royal Priesthood; who will offer their sacrifices for them.

You are in serious error also respecting the Cleansing of the Sanctuary; but for our view of this subject we must refer you to DAWN-STUDIES, Vol. 3, Chap. 4.

As to the Third Angel’s message: Suppose we were to admit your claim, that you are fulfilling Rev. 14:9-12. That would prove nothing as to the truth or untruth of your message. The Book of Revelation is a symbolic prophecy, a history written in advance. What is occurring and what will occur are faithfully related, often without comment, just as the Old Testament prophecies relate evil things as well as good things, and often without comment. For instance, Dan. 7:8 tells about the Papal horn “speaking great things,” but does not say whether they are great truths or great untruths. So, too, in Revelation, Papacy is described and its language quoted without adverse criticism.

Question 4. Christ said that he came not to destroy the Law and the prophets, but to fulfill them Matt. 5:17.

Answer. Yes, that is just what we hold: He fulfilled the Law Covenant, met all of its requirements, and obtained its reward, Life. That fulfilled it, for that was the end for which it was intended and given.

Question 5. Christ said, “The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.” (Mark 2:27) We understand this to mean that the Sabbath was made for all mankind.

Answer. Your inference is not reasonable. If the Sabbath were meant for all mankind, the fact should and would have been clearly stated to all mankind. But the facts are that it was commanded only of one nation, and that Christ and the apostles did not so command. In this text our Lord is showing to the Jews, to whom the command was given, that they were putting an extreme construction upon the command when they refused to do good on that day to a fellow creature, as well as to an ox and an ass. The Sabbath was intended for the blessing of the men who were commanded to keep it: they were not created nor called as a nation simply to serve the day.

THE JEWISH LAW AND EARLY CHRISTIANITY

Many Christians do not realize the conditions which existed in the Church in the beginning of the Gospel Age. The Jews as a nation had been typically justified by typical sacrifices, from the Adamic curse, or condemnation, and put under the Law given at Sinai, as a Covenant under which, if obedient, they were to have life. But the Law proved valueless to them so far as giving them the hoped-for life was concerned, though it taught them some good lessons. All the other nations, known as Gentiles (heathen) were still under the original condemnation of Eden. Consequently when our Lord came, both Jews and Gentiles were under condemnation to death, the Jew by the Law from which he had expected so much, but with which he was unable to comply, because of depravity, and the gentile by the original sentence upon father Adam, from which he had in no sense escaped, not even typically as the Jew had. But the Redeemer whom God provided was sufficient for both; for in the one sacrifice of himself he accomplished the redemption of both, and reconciled both unto God in one body by the cross. Eph. 2:16.

The Jewish converts (and they composed the majority of the early Church) could scarcely realize the greatness of the change from the Law Covenant to the new arrangement in Christ, and were continually adding Christ's teachings and his law of love to their Mosaic Law, thus adding to their already heavy burden, instead of accepting the sacrificial death of Christ as the atonement for their sins under the Law, and as the end of the condemnation of that Law Covenant. (Rom. 10:4; 3:20,28.) It is not surprising when we remember their early prejudices in favor of the Law, that the spirit of truth was able to guide them but slowly into the full truth on the subject. Even the apostles were slow to learn, and we find St. Peter so slow to follow the lead of the spirit, that he had to be taught by a special vision that Gentiles needed no longer to become Jews and to conform to the Law of Moses before they could share Divine favor, but that they had access to God through Christ regardless of the Law Covenant.

THE JEWISH LAW COVENANT NOT OURS

Some complained to the other apostles and brethren about St. Paul's recognition of Gentiles, and this brought the question before them all, and led to an investigation of God's dealings in the matter. "When they heard these things they held their peace and glorified God, saying, then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life." Acts 11:18.

St. Paul, most easily led of the spirit, got clear views on the subject earliest, and had to oppose others among the apostles less strong and less spiritually clear sighted. (Gal. 2:11.) Jerusalem was long considered the center of the Christian religion, the largest number and oldest believers and apostles living there; and as St. Paul's views of the changed condition of things became clearer and clearer, and he did not hesitate to preach boldly what he saw to be dispensational truth, some prejudiced ones desired to know whether the brethren at Jerusalem would concur in the advanced views, and St. Paul and Barnabas and others went up to Jerusalem to lay the matter before them and to bring back a report.

A great debate and examination of the question on all sides followed. St. Peter and St. James, finally agreeing with St. Paul, influenced the entire council. St. Peter reminded them of God's wonderful dealing with Cornelius, who was justified and made acceptable to God through faith in Christ, and not through keeping the Law, and urged, "Now, therefore, why tempt ye God, to put a yoke (Moses' Law) upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?" St. James said, "My sentence is that we trouble not them which from among the Gentiles are turned to God." Then the council so decided, and sent a written message to the confused Gentile believers, saying:—" We have heard that certain ones who went out from us (here) have troubled you with words subverting your souls (destroying your faith), saying, `Be circumcised and keep the Law' to whom we gave no such commandment.... It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things: that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." (Acts 15:9-29). And even these suggestions were given as advice, and not as so much of the Mosaic Law, with penalties attached.

THE LAW COVENANT A MINISTRATION OF DEATH

The Apostle Paul's epistle to the Galatians (who had been Gentiles) was written expressly to counteract the influence of the Judaizing teachers who mingled with the believers of Galatia and endeavored to subvert the true faith in Christ by pointing them away from the cross of Christ to a hope of acceptance with God by keeping the Law of Moses in connection with faith in Christ: thus making Christianity merely an addition to the Law Covenant and not instead of it. This he calls "another gospel," yet really not another, for there can be but one; hence it was a perversion of the real Gospel. (Gal. 1:7-9.) And here St. Paul indicates that he knew that the apostles at Jerusalem had at first only a mixed Gospel, and that he went up to see them on the occasion mentioned in Acts 15:4, by revelation, to communicate to them that fuller, purer, unmingled Gospel which he already had been able to receive, and which he had been teaching; and, he says, he communicated it to them privately, lest their reputation should hinder them from receiving the truth and even then some false brethren, spies, sought to compel Titus (a Greek) to be circumcised. Gal. 2:2-5.

It is further along in this same epistle that St. Paul tells of St. Peter's vacillation on the question of the Law (chap. 2:11-16) and his words of reproof to Peter We who are Jews by nature, knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the Law, but on account of faith in Christ, even we have believed in Christ that we might be justified by faith in Christ, and not by obedience to the Law. Why, then, should we attempt to fetter others, or longer bind ourselves, by that which has served its purpose, in bringing us to Christ and the New Covenant?

O foolish Galatians! who has deluded you? As many as are trusting to obedience to the Law are under its condemnation or curse. "Christ hath redeemed us (Israelites) from the curse of the Law, that the blessing of Abraham might come to the Gentiles through Christ Jesus, and that we (Israelites) might receive the promise of the spirit through faith." And surely God's Covenant with Abraham, made four hundred and thirty years before the Law was given, cannot be annulled by that Law. Gal. 3:1,10,13,17.

Next, the apostle answers a supposed inquiry as to what was the object of the Law, and why it was given, if not necessary to the attainment of the Abrahamic promises. He says the Law was added because of sin, to manifest sin in its true light that sin might be seen to be a great and deep-seated malady. The Law was a pedagogue, or servant, to bring to Christ all Israelites who desired to learn the true way of life. Gal. 3:24; Matt. 11:28-30.

As children are under nursery laws and subject to teachers until an appointed time, so were we (Israelites) under the Law, and treated as servants rather than as sons. We were kept under restraints, though we were the heirs through whom, according to the promise, others were to be blessed. But in the fullness of time God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law that we (Israelites), being liberated, might receive the adoption of sons. And so also "because ye (who were not under the Law, but were Gentiles or heathen) are (also now) sons, (therefore) God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts." We were sons under tutelage, and you were aliens, foreigners and strangers, but now you and we, who are accepted of God in Christ, are fully received into sonship and heirship, and neither of us is subject to the Law. Gal. 4:1-7.

Tell me, you that desire to be under the Law Covenant, Do you not understand what it is? It is a bondage, as allegorically shown in Abraham's two sons. Abraham, here, is a figure of God; and Sarah, the real wife, is a figure of God; and Sarah, the real wife, is a figure of the real Covenant of Blessing, out of which the Christ should come as heir of all, to bless the world. For a long time Sarah was barren; so, too, for a long time the original Covenant of God, made with Abraham—"in thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" brought forth no fruit, until Christ Jesus. Hagar, the servant of Sarah, in the meantime was treated as Sarah's representative, and her son as the representative of Sarah's son. Hagar represented the Law Covenant, and fleshly Israel was represented by her child, Ishmael. For the time they represented the true Covenant and the true seed of blessing, though they were always really servants child, as well as mother. When the true son of the real wife, the heir, was born, it was manifest that the son of the bondwoman was not the heir of promise. And to show typically that the Law Covenant was not to have any rule over the spiritual sons of God, Hagar was not allowed to become the governess of Isaac, but in his interest was dismissed entirely. Gal. 4:21-31; Gen. 21:10.

The Apostle's argument, based on this allegory, is, that we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the Seed to whom the promise was made; we are not children of the bondwoman, the Law Covenant, but children of the original Abrahamic Covenant (the Sarah Covenant) born free from the slavery and conditions of the Law Covenant. And not only so born, but the Law is entirely put away from us, and has nothing whatever to do with us—"Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" the Law Covenant. "If ye be led of the spirit, ye are not under the Law (Covenant)." Gal. 5:1-18.

But Paul asks—"Shall we continue in sin (willfully), because we are not under the Law (Covenant)?" (Rom. 6:15.) Shall we take advantage of our liberty to break away into more sin because we are sons and heirs, and no longer commanded as servants, Thou shalt, and thou shalt not? No, no; as sons, begotten of the spirit, partakers of the spirit of holiness, the spirit of the truth, we delight to do our Father's will; and the law of obedience to his will is deeply engraven upon our hearts. (Heb. 8:10; 10:15,16.) We gladly sacrifice our all, even our lives, in opposing sin and error, and in forwarding righteousness and truth; hence we Answer--emphatically, "God forbid." We will not take advantage of our liberty from the Jewish Law Covenant, to commit sin. But if any man should think to do so, let him remember that only those led by the spirit of God are the sons of God. Rom. 8:14.

We are not under the Law Covenant, but under Divine favor, and not only so, but being justified and reconciled to God in Christ, we have gone further and accepted the "high calling," the "heavenly calling," and consecrated our justified lives—"even unto death" and been accepted as members of the Body of Christ and are thus heirs of the Abrahamic (Sarah) Covenant. (Gal. 3:29.) Hence, so far from desiring to use our liberty to indulge in sin, we, having God's spirit, detest sin and love righteousness and delight ourselves in the "Law of Christ" Love. Christ's Word is our Law not a law of bondage, but of Liberty. Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein (free), being not a forgetful hearer, but one who exercises his liberty, this man shall be truly blessed thereby. Such fulfill the royal law, the law of love. James 1:25.

THE LAW OF LOVE

If we have proved that the Ten Commandments were given to Israel, and to Israel only, and that as the basis of a Covenant made only with that nation, and if we have shown that the other nations of the world have been left by God without any Law except such traces as yet remain of the original Law, written in the nature of the first perfect man, who was created in God's image, and that to the Church our Lord gave the Law of Love, then we have proved that the Ten Commandments should not be recognized by the Gospel Church, except as they are in harmony with the law of Love.

Our Lord has a standard for all who accept him, as Moses, the Mediator of the Law Covenant, had ten commands for a standard. The Master said, "A New Commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." (John 13:34.) It is the same law that was expressed in the Ten Commandments, but a more refined and more comprehensive statement of that Law, designed for a more advanced class. The people put under the Law Covenant and baptized into Moses were a household of Servants, while the people of the Law of Love are a household of God's sons. Thus we read, "Moses verily was faithful as a servant over all his House (of Servants), but Christ (was faithful) as a son over his own House (of sons), whose house are we, if...." Heb. 3:6.

The expression of the Divine Law given at Sinai was exactly suited to the House of Servants to whom it was given: it was a series of instructions Thou shalt, and Thou shalt not. The expression of the Law of Love is very different, and implies much more liberty. It simply tells those who are God's sons, and who therefore are begotten of his spirit, You may do or say anything in harmony with love. Pure love for God will lead not only to obedience to his will, but to the study of his will, in his Word. Pure love governing our conduct toward our fellow-men and the lower animals will seldom work to their injury. It will come more and more under the guidance of the Lord's Word, and thus we shall be perfected in love. But from the first it is a safe law: it is a "Law of Liberty," in that it requires us merely to act out, according to our own judgments, that which we voluntarily consecrate ourselves to do, our own wishes as New Creatures.

Since this Royal Law of Love is made only with those whose desires are changed, who no longer love sin but are seeking escape from it as well as from its penalty, who now love God and his righteousness, it would be manifestly improper to give these "sons of God" the statement of God's Law or will in the same form that it was expressed to the House of "Servants." The sons are granted a Law of Liberty, the servants a Law of Bondage. The servants were told what they might and might not do; because they were servants, not sons, not begotten of the Father's spirit; hence, they needed positive commands, restraints and penalties. This is forcibly expressed by the Apostle in his exposition of this very subject in Gal. 3.

How strange you would think it if we were to say, We feel it our duty to tell the readers of this journal who are saints, that they should not make or worship images, that they should not blaspheme God's name, that they should not steal from their neighbors, that they should not murder their neighbors, nor slander them, nor bear false witness against them. The intelligent and consecrated reader would feel offended, and that justly. He would say, The Editor has a very low opinion of his readers, or he would not so address them.

Just so it would be strange indeed if God or Christ had given the Ten Commandments to the Gospel Church as the basis of the Law of Love. And the truly consecrated and spirit-of-love-begotten ones, would have been justified in questioning the wisdom and love of putting them under an expression of the Divine Law so far below their nature and wish and covenant as to be almost an insult.

But the Law of Love, while it is a Law of Liberty and an "easy yoke" to such as have the Lord's spirit, is nevertheless a most searching Law discerning, scrutinizing, judging the very thoughts and intents of our hearts, as well as our actions and words. In that one word Love is expressed the very essence of the Divine Law. Love to God implies full obedience, full recognition of Divine character wisdom, love, justice and power full harmony with and service of God, and the exercise of those qualities of character in all our thoughts, words and deeds.

THE LAW OF THE SPIRIT OF LIFE IN CHRIST JESUS

This Law of Love to God and our fellowmen, which we delight to obey to the extent of our ability, not of compulsion, but of a willing mind, as partakers of the spirit of Christ, is the only Law with which we have to do. While it entirely ignores the Mosaic Law, its "thou shalt," and "thou shalt not," it really accomplishes far more than the Mosaic Law; for, with his heart ruled by love for God and man, who would desire to dishonor God or to injure his fellowman?

But as of the Mosaic Law it was true that its utterances were only to those under it Israelites for "whatsoever the Law saith it saith to them who are under the Law" (Rom. 3:19), so it is true of the Law of Love; it speaks only to those who are under it, and these are only the consecrated believers in Christ. It is a law of liberty, in that all who are under it are under it from choice. They came under it voluntarily, and may leave it when they please. In this it differs greatly from the Law put upon fleshly Israel as a nation, in which they had no individual liberty or choice, being born under bondage to that Law Covenant. Our Law is the Royal Law; because the "little flock," developed under this Law of Liberty and love, is the royal family, the Divine family, selected under their Lord and Head to be heirs of God, joint-heirs with Jesus Christ, partakers of the Divine nature. Rom. 8:17; 2 Pet. 1:4.

Those now being selected as members for the Body of Christ, are only such as delight to do God's will, sons of God and "brethren of Christ," having this likeness to Christ. And at the close of the Millennial Age, when the rod of iron shall have broken the proud hearts, and shall have caused the stiff knees to bend in obedience, and when the obstinate are cut off as incorrigible, wilful sinners, then the Law of Love and liberty will again be virtually in force over all God's creatures. All who shall be permitted to enter upon that grand age of perfection following the Millennial reign of Christ will first have been tested, and will have given abundant proof that they delight to do God's will and that his righteous law is continually their hearts' desire.

ALIVE WITHOUT THE LAW ONCE

In his letter to the Romans (chapter 7), the Apostle reasons to Jewish converts to Christianity: "For," he says, "I speak to them that know the Law."

He then represents the Law Covenant as a husband and Israelites bound by it as a wife to a husband. He shows that as it would be a sin for the woman to unite with another man while her husband lives, so it would be wrong for Israel to leave Moses and his Covenant of the Law, and to unite with Christ unless released by death; either the death of the Law Covenant or their death to the Law Covenant.

It is a common mistake to suppose the Scriptures to teach that the Law Covenant died, or was destroyed by our Lord. It still lives; and all the children of Jacob are still bound by it, unless they have died to it. Only those who realize that they could not gain everlasting life through their union with Moses (the Law covenant) are ready to abandon all hope of saving their life by that union with Moses, to become dead to all such expectations, and to accept the death of Christ, the ransom for Adam and all his race, as the basis of a new hope of a new life. Hence, only such Israelites as by faith reckoned themselves hopelessly dead under the Law Covenant, and as risen with Christ to a new life secured by his sacrifice, and who in will are dead to sin, only such could be united to Christ as the New Husband. Thus, according to the Apostle's reasoning, the thought of blending the two Covenants, and being united to both Moses and Christ, was wholly out of the question. Compare Rom. 6:2.

The text, "Christ is the end (or fulfillment) of the Law (Covenant) for righteousness to everyone (under it) that believeth" (Rom. 10:4), does not conflict with the above, because only believers are specified. (Compare Rom. 3:31; Gal. 2:19.) Eph. 2:15 should be read: "Having abolished in his flesh the enmity of the law of commandments contained in ordinances," etc. Col. 2:13,14 refers to "quickenened" Jewish believers for whom the handwriting of ordinances is blotted out. Verse 20 refers to the Gentile converts who had to become dead to the "rudiments of the world," before becoming members of Christ, the heir of the original Abrahamic Covenant typified by Sarah, even as the Jews must become dead to the rudiments of their Law Covenant, typified by Hagar.

THE LAW COVENANT NOT DEAD

That the Law Covenant with Israel is still binding upon that nation is further evident from the fact that upon their nation rejection of Christ they were nationally blinded until the end of the Gospel Age (Rom. 11:7,25), and that God declares that he has "not cast away his people" of that Covenant, but that under that Covenant he will yet open their eyes to see Christ as the only door of hope, and that of a new life purchased with his own. (Rom. 11:2,27,29; compare Deut. 30:1-9.) Meanwhile, we have the evidence that their Covenant continues in force in the fact that, as a nation, they have for centuries been receiving the very "curses" specified under their Covenant. See Deut. 28:15-67. Verses 49-53 describe the Roman siege, etc.; verses 64-67 describe the condition of Israel since. (Isa. 59:21.) As heretofore shown (See DAWN-STUDIES, Vol. 2, pages 88-93) the Lord in Lev. (26:18-34-45) declared the symbolical "seven times," 2520 years, of Israel's subjection to the Gentiles; and their deliverance A. D. 1914. Thus their present experience was foretold as a part of their Covenant.

Rom. 7:6 is not out of harmony with this explanation (that the Israelite who would unite with Christ must die to his nation's Covenant, and that the Law Covenant is not yet dead); for, properly rendered, (See marginal reading, Revised Version and Diaglott) it reads, "But now we are delivered from the Law (Covenant), being dead to that wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit (with our minds, our wills)," and not (be required to serve) the very letter of the old, Law Covenant, which has passed away.

What was defective in the old or Law Covenant? Was it sinful or bad? No. How came it then that under that Covenant we learned so much about sin?

Because, previous to receiving the Law, Israelites were like the remainder of the world dead in trespasses and sins; and, being already under sentence of death, we were like the remainder, unrecognized of God, and without any special commands; and hence we could not disobey or increase our sin by disobedience, until the Law Covenant began to command us.

But, notwithstanding that death sentence under which we and all the world rested, we Israelites were “alive” before the Law Covenant came, because God had promised our father Abraham that somehow and at some time he would bless his Seed, and through it all the families of earth. Thus, in God’s promise to Abraham, a future life was assured to us all, before the Mosaic Covenant was made; but just as soon as that Law Covenant went into force, and required that we must obey its every command, in order to secure life, that soon we found that we could not absolutely control our poor, fallen bodies, however much we willed to do so with our minds. And, as sin developed, we died our hopes of life expired, because we could not keep that Law covenant. I speak for, or as representing, our whole nation. Thus we found that the Law Covenant, promising life to the obedient, really sentenced us to death, because we could not obey its requirements.

Thus we acknowledge that the Law and the Covenant were good in themselves, but not helpful to us, because we were fallen beings. But God intended that it should show us how imperfect we really are. (Verse 13.) For the Law is adapted to all who are in full harmony with God’s spirit perfect beings and this we Israelites were not; we were and are by nature carnal, depraved, even as others. And if our hearts be right, we can and will admit that we are unable to obey God’s perfect law and that perfection is not to be found in our fallen flesh, even though in our mind we approve God’s Law and would gladly obey it.

This is the wretched condition in which we find ourselves (verse 24), wanting to obey God’s Law, and to have his favor and the everlasting life promised to them that love and obey him, and yet unable to do so because of our dead bodies fallen and sentenced through Adam’s transgression. Oh! How can we get release from this, our difficulty? We cannot obey God’s Law, and God cannot give us an imperfect Law to suit our fallen condition. Oh, wretched, hopeless condition!

But no, brethren, there is hope in Christ! Not a hope of our fulfilling the Law Covenant no hope of doing those things commanded, and living as a result; nor any hope of saving anything out of the wreck of Adam’s fall and sentence. That must all be abandoned. We Israelites must die under the Law Covenant, as unsaved by it as we were before it was made, as unsaved as the Gentiles who never had a share in it. But as we realize ourselves dead under the terms of the Law Covenant, we see that Christ has died for Adam’s sin, paid his penalty and thus redeemed him and all lost through his disobedience Jew and Gentile, bond and free, male and female. And this relieves us Jews, because Christ was a Jew, “born under the Law” Covenant, that he might redeem those who were under it. (Gal.

4:4,5.) In consequence, therefore, God can be just and accept all who serve his Law in their minds and wills, and whose only hindrance from perfect obedience is the weakness of the fallen flesh.

Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift Christ through whom we become heirs of the chiefest of God's blessings on the divine plane and members of the Mediator of the New Covenant (typified in Keturah, Abraham's third wife) by which many will be blest with Restitution during the Millennium.

CREATOR'S PLAN OF SALVATION

Allegheny Carnegie hall was crowded to the doors yesterday afternoon to listen to Pastor C. T. Russell's second "chart-talk." The speaker was powerful in his presentations and held his audience for two hours while he discoursed upon the subject of "Salvation From What and to What?"

The regular subject was preceded by a short resume of the topic of last Sunday, in which the speaker pointed out upon his chart three great periods of time into which the history of the world is divided the first, from creation to the flood; the second from the flood to the second coming of Christ, and the third an unending condition. These periods the Scriptures were declared to refer to under the cognomen "worlds," referring, not to the physical earth, but to dispensations or orders or arrangements successively placed upon the earth. In these three periods, and in the smaller periods, called ages, into which some of the worlds are subdivided, God is carrying out His plan of salvation, the various periods illustrating some special feature of the one entire work of restoring mankind to harmony with God.

THE DOMINATION OF SATAN

The speaker dwelt especially upon the period or dispensation in which the world is at present called "the present evil world," which was declared to be of an evil character because under the domination of Satan, who has been permitted to have as much control in the affairs of mankind as would not interfere with God's purposes, and this in order to the experiencing by the world of the exceeding sinfulness of sin and the desirability of righteousness. In this period evil, of course, predominates, and righteousness is a matter of greater difficulty, Satan, the usurper of control in the present time, exercising his influence against those who would live godly.

The speaker pointed forward to the future period, "the world to come," which he pointed out would be upon the same physical earth (the word world merely signifying the change of dispensation to another arrangement), and in which righteousness would rule, Christ would be the king instead of Satan; Satan would be bound for 1,000 years, and the principles of truth and equity would be applied to the affairs of mankind.

DIVINE VIEWS OF SALVATION

The text for the afternoon was announced to be, “The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost,” and the speaker proceeded to elucidate it as it related to his topic of salvation. He declared that there were various conceptions of salvation in the present time; old ideas are being challenged, and today, more general than any other view, is that expressed by those who are termed higher critics and evolutionists, that the real salvation is a social uplift, a release of the race as a whole from conditions of poverty, ignorance, superstition and degradation. Theological seminaries, colleges and pulpits were declared to be the fathers of this theory, which, while it should be sympathized with, and everything connected with the moral and social advancement of the people should be encouraged, was not the kind of salvation which the Scriptures held forth. The theory was the result of a desire to get rid of the hitherto accepted view that man fell from a condition of innocence and virtue, and that sin is the result of an original direct disobedience of God’s commands; therefore that such a view is antagonistic to the word of God and a species of infidelity, more deadly than the open kind, because the latter was preached outside the pulpits, while the new theory is advocated within them. Such a social-uplift theory could not recognize any force in the text of the discourse.

THE THEORY OF EVOLUTION

According to evolution nothing was lost; according to that theory man was made a little higher than the monkey, while, according to the Scriptures, he was made “a little lower than the angels.” If the gentlemen upholding such wrong views spent as much time looking for the truth as they did for the missing link they would know more of God’s plan as it really is.

The speaker applied the apostle’s words, “As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, in that all are sinners.” (Rom. 5:12) Man was declared to have been originally in a state of innocence, perfection and harmony with God, and that wilful sin resulted in a condemnation to death, which not only affected Adam, the original sinner, but fell upon every member of his race, by heredity, in a natural way. The speaker quoted extracts from the first chapter of Romans to elucidate his point, and to substantiate the claim that the present degradation was the result of sin and a lack of submission and acknowledgment of God in a spirit of desire to do His will. Thus it is that today the Scriptural declaration is applicable. “Darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people.”

GOD’S PLAN OF SALVATION

God has been allowing this condition of degradation, evil, sin and death to continue upon all, ever since Adam’s time, although He has been manifesting His favor toward individuals in the different periods of the world’s history since that time, as illustrated by His dealings with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and the Jewish nation. These exceptions to the race in general were chosen by God for special purposes in connection with His future favors to the world as a whole. Even today, in a time of great enlightenment in the world in general, the speaker declared that out of a population of 1,600,000,000 there are but 300,000,000 who profess to know the Lord in any sense of the word, the other 1,300,000,000 being in gross darkness. But why? Does not God care for them? Oh, yes; because He sent Jesus Christ into the world to die for the members of the race—“Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man.” Has then God something of salvation for every man in His plan? Yes; it was for this reason Jesus Christ came into the world, that He might die on its behalf.

The speaker laid special emphasis on the statement of the Scriptures, “Christ was a propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the world.” The word “our” he applied to the church of the present time, the first subjects of divine grace, and pointed out the significance of the balance of the statement, as intimating that the whole world would ultimately share similar blessings at God’s hands.

GOD’S TEST OF ADAM

To speak of salvation would be to imply that a great catastrophe had occurred from which those involved needed to be saved, otherwise no Redeemer would be needed. When God placed man in the garden of Eden, and gave him His favor and blessing, He placed a test upon him of obedience; the promise of obedience was everlasting life, and the promise of disobedience was everlasting death. The expression stating this was: “In the day that thou eatest, thereof thou shalt surely die.” Satan, the liar from the beginning, in tempting our first parents, controverted this expression of the divine purpose, and declared: “Ye shall not surely die.” The speaker dilated upon this point, to prove death as the wages of willful sin, and attacked with vehemence the representations of theologians of the old school that the sentence was to eternal torture.

The words to Adam in pronouncing the sentence were: “Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,” God, in effect, saying: “I will take from you the life which you were not willing to use in accord with My just and wise directions, and you shall return to the dust as you were.” He had no being before; he was simply dust; was made of it, and when he would return to the dust it would mean the utter loss of his being. The fulfillment of this is noted in the dying condition of the whole race today, and the greater degradation of mankind now, as contrasted with the generations immediately following Adam was shown in the latter, although all eventually dying, were able to survive the curse for several hundred years, while today the average of human life is not more than 35.

THE CURSE OF DEATH

The speaker argued, therefore, that life was the great need of mankind, but that until some remedy had been found which would remove the great curse of death, no life would come to the world. This remedy was declared to be in Jesus Christ, who satisfied the claims of God's justice by dying on behalf of the race, and is to fulfill the purpose of God's love by giving to mankind the life, which it lost through its first parents. The significance of the word "Savior" in the Syriac was dwelt upon as literally meaning "life-giver," to enforce the thought suggested, that only through Christ was a return of the life lost in Adam possible to any. But such a blessing can only come to those who come into accord with the requirements of God's laws, and until these laws are made applicable to the whole world, there can yet be no release from the condition of death, which still exists.

"The wages of sin is death," according to the Scriptures, "but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." "There is none other name given under heaven or amongst men whereby we may be saved but the name of Jesus," hence until those for whom Christ died shall have learned to believe on Jesus as the Redeemer, the life-giver, there is no rescue from death for them. "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth in him."

DEATH THE WRATH OF GOD

Death was the wrath of God God's sentence, which began at the fall and continues to rest on all who know not God and believe not the gospel of Christ. The speaker refuted the theologians who claim that the Scriptural declaration that death was the penalty must have been an error, because the soul cannot die. He quoted the prophet: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" "He poured out his soul unto death," etc., and in Answer--to supposed objections that death would be a very small penalty dwelt at length upon the blessing of life, happiness, perfection and favor with God enjoyed by Adam in the beginning, which were all taken from him as a fulfillment of the death penalty upon the race. He attributed to the dark ages of the past, when intellectual attainments were limited, and spiritual instruction was confined to a priest-ridden church, the promulgation of the theory of eternal torture as the wages of sin, and offered to supply to all his hearers, without charge, a pamphlet considering every passage in the Scriptures which seemed to support any theory of torture as a portion for the sinners. He argued that had God intended such an awful penalty to be the result of sin, it was a gross injustice to our first parents to have kept them in darkness of the real character of it, while expressing the sentence under the terms “thou shalt surely die,” and “unto dust shalt thou return.”

NOT AN UNIVERSALIST THEORY

Pastor Russell denied the charge that in showing the true character of the penalty of death and the fact that Jesus Christ therefore “tasted for every man,” in order to release them from death, he was presenting a theory of universalism. He declared that he found in the Scriptures a plan of God broad enough to grant an opportunity of salvation to all the world which received a sentence of death through Adam, and a plan narrow enough to limit such a salvation to those who would believe on Jesus Christ, who paid the penalty. This involved a declaration of the message of salvation, not merely to all members of the race living, but to every member of it in the tomb. He showed that the gospel had not been preached in Noah’s time, or in that of Abraham, Isaac or Jacob, because in their day the satisfaction for sins had not been made through the blood of Jesus Christ, and no ransom having been offered, no announcement of it would be logical. On the contrary, Paul was stating the fact when he declared that salvation “began to be preached by the Lord,” and has only been proper of announcement since the death and resurrection of the life-giver. This great Redeemer is declared in the Scriptures to have the keys of death and of hell (hades, the condition of oblivion), and that in God’s due time he will open the great prison house of death, release the captives and give them the opportunities of life and blessing. According to the Scriptures, he will “say to the prisoners, Come forth, and to them that sit in the darkness, Show yourselves.”

TWO CLASSES OF MANKIND

In the Lord’s own words, “The hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have not done good unto the resurrection of judgment” (revised version).

The good were declared to be those of the church, who in the present time have heard the gospel message and, having brought themselves into harmony with it, have been given the opportunity of suffering with Christ, that they might reign with him in his Kingdom. They are declared in the Scriptures to be “the little flock, to whom it is the Father’s good pleasure to give the Kingdom.” This class is to “live and reign with Christ a thousand years.” All the rest of mankind is of the evil class in the sense that they have not believed on Christ, and are not therefore acceptable to God. They are to have a resurrection of raising up through the judgments of the thousand-year period during which Christ shall reign, if, upon having the gospel preached to them, they shall heed the message of salvation and conform themselves to the righteous rules of Christ's Kingdom. The speaker quoted the Lord's words, "The hour is coming when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." He quoted the apostle Paul's words, "God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, Jesus Christ the righteous."

JUDGMENT WILL BE JUST

He pointed out that if this judgment is to be of a righteous character, it must deal toward all mankind for whom Christ died with equal fairness, that all may benefit by the atonement which he made for all else the redemptive work was partially in vain.

The speaker compared his view with the Roman Catholic idea of purgatory, and while rejecting the claim that masses and penances would release souls from a spiritual condition of suffering, he pointed out that the trial time for the world during the next age would consist of disciplinings, training, punishments and instruction, in order to give all mankind a full, fair and impartial opportunity to attain life, salvation in full. He quoted the expressions of the prophet, "When the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." "He that knew the Master's will and did it not shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not the Master's will shall be beaten with few stripes."

The speaker pointed his hearers to the second coming of Christ as the time for the fulfillment of these gracious blessings for the world, the time when Satan's power should be taken away, and Christ, as the rightful king, should take his throne.

WHEN CHRIST RETURNS TO EARTH

Then the righteous should flourish, and there should be abundance of peace. Then the knowledge of the Lord should fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep; then none would need to say to his neighbor, know thou the Lord, for all should know him, from the least to the greatest. He described Christ and his church as the reigning powers of the time, and intimated that when then "the Sun of Righteousness should arise, with healing in its beams," there would be no further need for the Bible as an instructor, which the Scriptures themselves term "the lamp," which is to lighten the Christian's pathway while the nighttime of sin is in full force. To Christ's advent all must look who would wish to see the great and true social uplift, and at the culmination of which, at the close of the thousand years of trial and judgment, would witness the everlasting destruction in the second death of all those who failed to profit by the experience then given and to become amenable to the will of the Most High.

The subject for next Sunday will be "Election and Free Grace: How Harmonized." A song service at 2:30 o'clock precedes the regular service at 3 o'clock.

"ELECTION" and "FREE GRACE" CAN BE HARMONIZED.

1 Peter 1:1, 2

Allegheny Pa

The same attention and careful consideration manifested at the previous meetings held by the Watch Tower Bible and Tract society, in Allegheny Carnegie hall, was exhibited again yesterday, when C. T. Russell gave the third lecture upon his "Chart of the Ages." Whatever private opinions may be entertained by his auditors, they were free to acknowledge the lucidity and forcefulness of the speaker's utterances, and the apparently complete Scriptural backing presented in support of his somewhat extraordinary views.

At the close of yesterday's discourse it was announced that a second series of chart talks would be given by the same man upon other features of the "way of salvation made plain," beginning February 8 and continuing for three Sundays, at 3 p.m.

WHERE CHURCHES DIFFER

The subject yesterday afternoon was "Election and Free Grace Harmonized," and the text was "Elect, according to the foreknowledge of God, our Savior, through sanctification of the spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 1:1-2). The speaker called attention to the dissimilar views of the character of God's plan, as represented in the theological tenets held by the great bodies of Christian believers, on the point of the afternoon subject.

He intimated that the Christian world was about equally divided between election and free grace. Upon the one side, the Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Baptists clung with tenacity to the former, while on the other hand the various bodies of Methodism represented the latter view, all finding in the Scriptures much to support their claims and views of God's work, and yet at total variance each with the other side, as regards an opposite presentation.

HARMONY IN SCRIPTURES

He asserted that the Scriptures were thoroughly harmonizable, and that if his auditors would look with him into the subject, without prejudice in favor of former opinions and views, he would endeavor to draw the lines of harmony together.

Using his chart to illustrate the various points, the speaker referred to the manifestations of favor shown by the Creator to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and declared that these were exclusive recipients of God's grace during the term of their several lives, and that a similar exclusiveness of favor was exhibited to Jacob's 12 sons, after his death, and to their descendants, constituting the 12 tribes of Israel. Upon these God showered great blessings and apparently overlooked and ignored all the rest of mankind.

In dealing with Abraham there was no intimation that the blessing conferred upon him was intended for others contemporary with him, and even his relatives were omitted from God's expressions of special interest at the time.

WAS A FAVORED NATION

The same course of dealing was evidenced toward Isaac and Jacob, and of God's dealing with the Jews as a nation. The prophet Amos was referred to, who declared, speaking for Jehovah, and addressing the nation, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth."

Answering a hypothetical question, as to the reason for thus arbitrarily electing certain individuals and classes and ignoring others, the speaker called attention to the promise made originally to Abraham, when God showed his special interest in him, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." God was choosing the individuals whom he preferred to have associated with the work represented in the promise.

The Jewish nation lived in constant hope of the fulfillment of the promise in them as a nation, and at various times, as their kings attained power they looked for the carrying out of the promise, and the co-operation of the people of the nation in its fulfillment. That these were disappointed in their expectations did not signify any failure of the divine plan, for the Lord knew His work and had His purposes ordained from the beginning.

THE NATIONAL ERROR

The real fulfiller of the promise, Jesus Christ, was unrecognized by the majority of the Jewish nation because of his meekness, lowliness and the altogether unlooked-for character of his work. Because of the failure to recognize him, the majority of the nation were cast off from special favor; but nevertheless those individuals who had previously shown their faithfulness to the Lord were acknowledged as a part of that class who were specially dealt with as elect ones.

The speaker drew attention to the fact that none of those who were special recipients of God's favors previous to the first advent of Jesus Christ were elected to heaven. On the contrary, there were no promises of a heavenly blessing granted to any. The declaration made to Abraham was, "Look now, from the north to the south, the east to the west, all the land that thou seest to thee will I give it, and to thy seed after thee,” but comparing this with the declaration of the martyr Stephen, the speaker suggested that Abraham had not yet gotten that blessing, for Stephen declared, “Abraham received none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on.”

PARADISE FOR THE ELECT

The inference drawn was that the elected class of the past were to enjoy earthly blessings; they were to receive a paradisaic reward, a restoration to human perfection, and the blessings of the perfect man, so that eventually the prophet’s declaration might be fulfilled, “They shall sit, every man under his own vine and fig tree, with none to molest or make them afraid.”

But the speaker pointed out that prior to such work being accomplished a further elective work was to progress, a work begun when the Lord sent his disciples forth after his resurrection, declaring to them, “Go and make disciples of all nations,” and giving them a message of heavenly salvation to preach such a message as had not been previously declared, as expressed by the apostle Paul, “How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be preached by our Lord?”

The special feature of the heavenly blessing was referred to as being expressed by Peter in the words, “Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.”

These promises have been made to all in the world who “have ears to hear, and will hear.” Not all have such hearing ears, because the Lord declared, “No man cometh unto me except the Father which sent me draw him.” Those who do hear are declared by the Scriptures to be “a little flock, to whom it is the Father’s good pleasure to give the kingdom,” and this company, “the church, whose names are written in heaven,” are the elect of this Gospel age.

A nucleus for this class was found in the Jewish nation when Christ preached his kingdom message to them they were “Israelites indeed,” and the apostle John referring to them said, “He came unto his own, and his own received him not, but to as many as received him to them gave he power to become sons of God.”

It was but a remnant of the chosen people, because as a whole they failed to recognize Christ, and so God turned to the Gentiles to complete the class he wished to elect to become the “sons of God.”

GENTILES BECOME ELIGIBLE

James' words were referred to, "God did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name," and the words "take out" were shown to have the significance of selection or election. And this election was manifest not in the taking out of individuals arbitrarily, as Abraham and his descendants were elected, but by granting special favors of knowledge and light to certain parts of the world. The speaker contrasted the darkness of India and Africa with the great opportunities and advantages throughout Europe and America, and called attention to God's arbitrariness in sending his apostles to the latter countries rather than to the former. He claimed that India and China were greater centers of learning, and more advanced in the civilization of the days of Paul and Peter, than western countries, but to the latter God specially directed the gospel message, hindering the apostles when they " essayed to go into Asia," and revealing to Paul in a vision the will of God that he should go into Macedonia, and thus throughout Europe, with the favor of the message of special grace of the present time.

RESULTED IN CIVILIZATION

To the gospel of Christ, notwithstanding encrustations of error, with which it has frequently been surrounded, the speaker gave the credit for the marvelous increase in knowledge, and the various advantages of civilization. The people were not to be credited with being more worthy, noble or great, so that the truths of God's word should reach them first, but God's elective work has been in progress, and He has thus been manifesting His own direction of the matter as to which classes of people in the world shall receive the most favorable opportunities.

The speaker combated the theory that the world in general has had an opportunity to know God's will. The prophet's words were quoted, "Darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people." The prayer taught the disciples, "Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven," was shown to be still unfulfilled, for even in the most enlightened parts of the world, no one could say truthfully that righteousness prevails to such an extent that any comparison could be made between such a condition there and in heaven itself.

THEORY OF ELECTION

Taking up the query as to the subject of the election, the speaker compared the object of electing members of congress. Not all were elected presumably not one within hearing of his voice was a member of congress, but being thus non-elect did not prove an injury. Such an election to congress implies a work to be done by congress on behalf of the people; and so in God's election; a great promise had been made to Abraham that his seed should bless all the families of the earth; He purposed to elect that seed for the blessing of mankind in general. Although the seed was looked for in Isaac, and in Jacob, and in various sons of Israel, no fulfillment was manifest until Christ came. But when He came He brought no general blessing to mankind He died for all, according to the Scriptures, but the blessing is still delayed. And the speaker eloquently pointed out that the delay was in order that the church of Christ should constitute with Him the great seed of Abraham for the fulfillment of the promise.

THE CHURCH SELECTED

To substantiate this thought the Apostle Paul was quoted, from Galatians, 3:16, 29: "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but to one, And to thy seed, which is Christ... and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." The church, being elected during the gospel age, was then, according to this scripture, a part of the seed, and in order to perfect her and make her ready for the great honor of being associated with the blessing of the world it was necessary that she should be polished and fitted by various trying experiences and disciplines of the present time. To all who had the ears to hear, and who would obey when they had heard, and follow in the footsteps of Christ their Lord, a place was reserved in the body of Christ, the seed of Abraham, the church of God. The "ancient worthies," who shared in the favor of God prior to the coming of Christ, were not called to this high and heavenly calling, because there could be no such favor until after the head of the body had come, and so it was that no heavenly promises were given to Abraham and others up to the time of the first advent.

MILLENNIUM TO BEGIN

On the contrary, the speaker found scriptural statements to declare that they should be princes in the earth, and rule under the church, the heavenly kingdom. Psalm 45:16; Heb. 11:39, 40

When this elective work is completed, and the foreordained number found, which shall become the members of the seed-class for the world's blessing, then the election shall cease, and the work to be accomplished by such a class shall begin. This work was assigned to the future period called the millennial age, in which righteousness is to rule, and the principles of equity and justice to be established by the glorified Seed Christ, head and body. The purpose of the millennial age being to bless all the families of the earth, the great instigator of evil in the present time, Satan, is to be bound for the thousand years, that he may deceive the nations no more. Then will be fulfilled the Lord's utterance, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

Here was a contrast of the present age the Lord declared, "No man cometh unto me except the Father draw him," but in the Millennium the Son shall draw all mankind. This is not because the Father has no power to draw all men now, but because He wills not to do so, purposing rather to elect a limited number for the special work of drawing all later.

The speaker discussed a number of Biblical statements, used by those favoring the doctrine of free grace, and pointed out their thorough appropriateness during the future age of general blessing. In particular the 22d chapter of Revelation was referred to, and the statement, "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely." It was shown that this was a symbolical picture, representing the completion of the church, and glorification with her Lord, Jesus Christ, who thus shall accept the church as His bride.

WORD PICTURE EXPLAINED

The speaker insisted that there is no bride in existence as yet that the most the Scriptures admit of her now is that she is a "chaste virgin, espoused unto one husband, even Christ," and that the nuptial feast, proclaiming the complete union, will not take place until the church is resurrected in glory. Now, in the present time, instead of the river of water of life flowing freely, there is no general channel of truth open to mankind in general, "pure as crystal," from which all may drink. The waters of truth have been largely befouled, and Satan's evil influence has hindered the world from knowing of the source of supply. In the "little flock" who accept the Lord as their guide, the Scriptures declare that the truth is in them as wells of water, springing up into everlasting life. When these well-springs come together, as the one glorified church, and begin to let flow their united supply of truth, then the river shall have begun its course, for the refreshment and comfort of all.

THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

Again, according to the Scriptures, the individual members of the church of Christ are little candles, set to lighten in their own little sphere of influence; but when the kingdom shall have been established, and those who now are said to be candles have been changed, to be with their Lord, the figure also changes, and the Scriptures say, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Then it is that "the sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his beams." While the present time of evil, and general darkness and uncertainty regarding God's purposes, is likened to a night, that future time will be the full day, in which the sun shall shine gloriously, for all, and those who walk in the day shall not stumble or fall. Nevertheless, the speaker declared, as there are some today who having ears to hear the message of special grace now, and refuse to obey their call, also in that time of general blessing there will be some who will fail to appreciate the gracious purpose of God, and will be cut off from divine favor—" punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of His power." All, therefore, who have knowledge of God's way in the present time were urged to "make their calling and election sure," in accordance with the drawing of the Father's holy spirit.

WHAT IT IS TO BE BORN OF THE SPIRIT

John 3:6-8

Despite the inclement weather, those who have attended C. T. Russell's "chart-talks," at Allegheny Carnegie hall, for the last four weeks, were eager to be present yesterday, at the fifth lecture, upon the subject, "Born of the Spirit." Next Sunday's talk will conclude these special meetings, after which the congregation will return to its usual place of worship, at the Bible House chapel, on Arch street, near Ohio, where Mr. Russell preaches regularly. The subject for the closing meeting, Carnegie hall, next Sunday, will be: "The Great Consummation."

The text for yesterday's talk was found in John 3:6-8: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth. So is everyone that is born of the spirit."

In the Lord's conversation with Nicodemus, in which these words were uttered, the declaration is made that only those born of the spirit could enter the kingdom of God; hence the importance of knowledge on the subject, in order to make sure of attaining that position. Much confusion, the speaker intimated, was to be noted in the treatment of this subject. Many people do not know what the experience is, and many others apply the expression "born of the spirit" to something entirely different to that which the Scriptures suggest.

THE NATURAL AND SPIRIT BIRTHS

Since the Lord contrasts the natural birth with the spirit birth it is evident that there is some relationship and so the speaker found in the former a picture or pattern of the latter. As no child is ever born of the flesh without having first been begotten, so no person is ever born of the spirit without first a begetting. A begetting of the flesh results in a birth, and a begetting of the spirit results in a birth. The speaker drew attention to the Greek word usually rendered "born" in the New Testament, genao, and remarked that the same word is translated both "begotten" and "born," and the proper significance of a passage containing this word can only be determined by the context.

Where the context uses the word “into” the significance of genao is begotten; and where the word is “out of” the proper translation of genao is “born.” The latter form is used in the text quoted as the basis of the discourse. This is conformable to the natural law, where the father begets, but the mother brings to birth. So with the begetting of the spirit the individual must be begotten of the Father, God, else he will not in due time be born, or delivered. Many people misunderstanding this Scriptural manner of treating this subject speak of themselves as having been born of the spirit, when they do not realize what the expression means, and really intend to say that they have been begotten.

OUR CONDITION AT PRESENT

We are not, said the speaker, yet born of the spirit. We are only begotten when the Holy Spirit has commenced His work in us, as new creatures in Christ, and we shall be born again when the Holy Spirit shall have fully developed in us the conditions required by God, and we are given a place in the first resurrection.

There are three stages in the natural birth begetting, quickening, birth; and so there are three stages belonging to the spiritual birth. We are begotten of the spirit by receiving it from the Father into our hearts, and if we continue in harmony with Him, in due time we shall be quickened, and then if we continue faithful subsequently to that, in due time we shall be born in the resurrection. The begetting and quickening belong to the present life; and the birth appertains to the future the resurrection life. In harmony with this the Scriptural declaration is made, that Jesus Christ was “the first born from the dead.” Again, “He is the first-born among many brethren.” The brethren are the members of His body, the members of the church, and all of this class are to follow Jesus Christ in His experiences and to attain the same birth in their resurrection.

RESPONSIBILITY OF CHURCH MEMBERS

This throws a large responsibility on the members of the church of Christ if they have received the Holy Spirit, and are growing in the grace and knowledge of the Lord as a result, and thus become meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, then they shall be granted a part in the “first resurrection” (the resurrection in which Christ had a part), born from the dead.

The speaker insisted that the Scriptures do not use meaningless or vain terms, and that many who use Scriptural phrases without care give hazy impressions of the Lord’s word, and lose the benefit of the beautiful imagery of the Biblical presentations. There was a particular purpose in using the expressions concerning birth in connection with the Christian life, because God intended to make clear to his people in the present age that they were to attain ultimately to a new nature.

The world is not included in these expressions the church alone is begotten of the spirit, and is alone to receive the complete birth. For the world in general there have been promised conditions of restitution to the original human perfection lost through Adam, and to be given back to the obedient of mankind during the millennial age; but for the church, called, selected and made ready now, a peculiar people for God's name, a little flock to be heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, there is to be a new creation. The Lord said, "I have chosen you out of the world; ye are not of the world, even as I am not of the world," and the apostle declared, "Ye are God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works."

PARTICULAR WORK FOR GOD

God has begun this work in taking those who have an ear to hear His truth, and who are willing to obey Him in all things, and is preparing out of them a people for Himself to perform a particular work in His kingdom in the future. Since this chosen class is to be of a different nature from the remainder of the world, it must be born again it must go through the process of birth analogous to that of the natural birth. The original nature of every member of our race is the human we were all children of Adam, and all fell in him from the plane of perfection before God.

And out of this general mass God will take those who have a desire to know him and please him, and transform them from their present earthly human condition to a new condition what? Not angels, for there is no statement in the Scriptures anywhere that God purposes to raise anybody to an angelic condition, although the hymns which we used to sing expressed a thought like this, as "I want to be an angel, and with the angels stand, A crown upon my forehead, a harp within my hand." That would be a glorious condition, but it is not the one the Scriptures suggest for the church, the members of the body of Christ.

PROMISES OF THE LORD

Something higher than angels the stupendous honor of being partakers of the divine nature that to which the church is reserved, as declared by the apostle Peter, "There are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be made partakers of the divine nature." Since this is the Bible declaration we are not over-ambitious in following its leading and claiming its promises. It is not a question of what we would be satisfied with in God's purpose, for we would be satisfied with the humblest position in God's favor, but it is a matter of accepting the Lord at His word, and following His directions to have that word fulfilled in us.

This purpose of God to place the church, the joint heirs of Jesus Christ, in the divine condition, the highest nature it was possible to give them, was fixed before the plan ever began to be worked out. For the class which would attain such high honors the very narrow way discussed the previous Sunday has been mapped out, and only those who walk in it faithfully are to be made partakers of the ultimate blessing of a change into the glorious new condition. It is because of the narrowness of the way that few find it, and that of those having found it, they fail to walk in it. The scriptures declare that those who accept the conditions and enter the way are called to partake of "the fullness of Christ."

REWARD FOR FAITHFULNESS

The speaker considered the exaltation which had been given to the Redeemer upon His faithfulness to the Father's plan, as expressed by Paul. "Him hath God highly exalted, and given a name that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess, to the glory of God the Father"—" far above angels, principalities and powers, and every name that is named." If the church is to partake of Christ's fullness similar honor awaits them, as again expressed. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with My Father in His throne." And further, "We know that we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

3H90

This is to be the end, the completion, of the begetting of the spirit when the begetting work has fulfilled in the present time its work in developing the new creature, the birth in the resurrection shall bring to all the faithful called ones these glorious conditions which are promised in the word of God. Only those who have attained such a condition can possibly share in God's kingdom, joint heirs with Christ, because the apostle declares that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God."

THE NEW CREATION

Humanity cannot be the kingdom, since it has been reserved for the new creation, which shall make its calling and election sure through the begetting of the spirit and development through experience of the present time. So the apostle again declares that the church is called through patient perseverance to seek for glory, honor and immortality in other words, the divine nature, because immortality is the essential quality of the divine nature. According to the word, God alone has this quality—" who only hath immortality, dwelling in light which no man can approach unto." But He gave the same quality to His Son, upon His faithfulness, as He declares, "as the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself," and further, glorious privilege, the Son has power to "give it unto whomsoever He would."

In explaining how the individual is to reach the condition termed “begotten of the spirit,” the speaker illustrated upon the chart the fall of man from his original condition of perfection and righteousness to the plane of sin and death, and how, while in this latter condition, none is able to help himself or raise himself again to the original perfect condition. All are undone, and declared through the scriptures to be wholly unrighteous.

DONE BY GOD’S MERCY

God’s mercy, through the Redeemer, has devised that those who believe in Christ shall, by reason of their faith, be reckoned as restored to that original condition not actually, because the present is not the time of restitution but on account of faith reckonedly given the standing of perfect human beings, and able, because of being covered by the robe of Christ’s righteousness, to be called “holy” by God. In this condition the individual is in a fit state to offer himself a consecrated offering to the Lord and for His service. He could not do so before, because God could not accept an imperfect sacrifice upon His altar of service, and man was not fit to present himself as he was, but needed the reckoned perfection given him through faith in Christ, to make him eligible to present himself.

As a reckonedly perfect human being he is considered a “human son” of God, just as Adam, in his perfection, is said in the scripture to have been God’s son, and it is from this point that the receiving of the Holy Spirit by the individual offering himself to the Lord will begin the begetting work which is to ultimately transform such a person to that condition which will make him ready for the first resurrection and full “birth of the spirit.” The exhortation of the scriptures, “My son, give Me thine heart,” is to this class of justified reckonedly perfect human sons, upon whom God calls for a devotion of their affections, their interests, their all, to this service, as a reward for which the divine nature, and joint heirship with Christ, is promised to them.

SPEAKING OF THE WORLD

The world is not spoken of as sons of God, and the apostles never speak of them as brethren, but the apostle does address the justified with this term, when he exhorts them: “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, and your reasonable service.”

Again the apostle refers to these two steps to be taken in the Christian way, when he says, “Being therefore justified by faith we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.” This represents the first step, and the consequent harmony with God by reason of having believed on Jesus Christ and received forgiveness of sins through him. But the apostle proceeds, “and have access,” a going further on in the Lord’s favor, “into this grace wherein we stand,” the grace of the Holy Spirit, received by consecration to God's service, "and rejoice in hope of the glory of God."

No one can rejoice in the hope of the glorious condition of the kingdom of God unless he has taken both these steps and thus placed himself in the position where he may be fully born into the new creation, to which is reserved the special features of the glory of God. The apostle's declaration, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for those that love him," does not apply to those who merely do not hate him. To love God is to love him with all the heart, soul, mind and strength, and to act in daily life in accord with these sentiments, and only this class is promised the special favors of the church.

APPRECIATE THEIR PRIVILEGE

These alone appreciate the privilege of offering themselves to the Lord, and consider that the most they can do is an offering far too small and mean for his service, were it not that he had graciously arranged to make up, through Christ's righteousness, the imperfections and lack manifested in it.

The speaker referred to the experiences of the Lord Jesus, the head of the church, in this connection. His humility in becoming poor, for our sakes, was commented upon, and attention was drawn to the fact that the Redeemer actually took this position of poverty he did not assume a humble place not possessed in reality; he did not pretend to become poor, while really retaining all his rank and titles, as the grand spirit being which he was with the Father. Becoming poor, in the speaker's mind, signified entirely divesting himself of his former glory, and actually taking the position of a man.

This was pointed out as an absolute necessity in order to redeem the race. The Scriptures declared, "By a man came death; by a man came also the resurrection of the dead." As neither blood of bulls nor of goats could take away sin, so neither could the death of an angel accomplish deliverance. A man's life must pay the penalty against the race, that man might go free, and hence the Lord Jesus actually became a man—" He took upon him a bondsman's form, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death."

AN ACTUALLY PERFECT MAN

He was not a "mere man," certainly, because he possessed all the perfections of a human being uncontaminated with the race's sin and penalty of death, else he could not have been a proper substitute and sacrifice. He was actually perfect, and at the age of 30 years he had attained the full maturity of manhood under the law. When 30 years of age he promptly began to carry out the divine will regarding the sacrifice which should redeem the race from death.

This was in accord with the typical priesthood's requirements. No man could be a priest until 30, and so the Lord Jesus, when coming as the great antitypical priest, to offer the great sacrifice for sins, fulfilled the law to the letter by waiting until his maturity before offering himself. At once at the fruition of the time he presented himself to John in Jordan, to symbolize his consecration to God's will by baptism in the water, and John bore record that upon such presentation the Holy Spirit was represented as coming upon him, in the visible likeness of a dove.

This represented his begetting of the spirit begotten to a new nature. Jesus was a perfect man, having taken the human nature in order to die for the race, and now from the moment of his consecration, to do the Father's will, and accomplish the race's redemption, his mortal body and all his earthly powers were sacrificed to God, the new creature acting as the priest to offer up constantly the human offerings until it should be completed at Calvary.

THE FIRST-BORN FROM THE DEAD

For three and one-half years this sacrifice was being consumed, and when, following the crucifixion and the burial in the tomb for three days and nights, the resurrection took place, it was the new creature, perfect and glorious, which God's power brought forth—"the first-born from the dead."

Everyone who aims to attain a place in the kingdom with Jesus Christ must follow in the footsteps of Jesus as thus marked out. He must have the perfect human standing (reckonedly) as Jesus Christ had it actually when he offered himself at 30 years. He must offer himself to God, completely, as an underpriest of the Lord, the great high priest. The new nature, to which he is begotten, must see that the human nature is made a complete sacrifice, and that the experiences which will be met by the individual while he is dying as a human being, in the service of God, are to be constantly developing in him fruits of the Holy Spirit, by which he is begotten, until the work shall have been fully accomplished until the character-likeness conforms to that of Jesus Christ, the great pattern, and finally, when the covenant or consecration shall have been completed in death. The faithful overcomer is to look forward with joy to the glorious entrance into the kingdom, representing the birth of the spirit, when no imperfection shall surround him, and when he shall be able to fully appreciate the joys of the Lord to which he has been called to partake.

SIMILAR RESURRECTION

The resurrection must be the same as that experienced by the Lord, because the Scriptures say that the Redeemer is the “first-born among many brethren.” Again they declare “Blessed and holy are all they that have part in the first resurrection; upon such the second death shall have no power; and they shall live and reign with Christ a thousand years.” Christ is their head, and his honor is their honor, his glory their glory, in every particular.

The apostle declares, “I count all things but loss and dross, that I might win Christ... that I might know Him, and the power of His resurrection, being made conformable unto His death, if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead the special resurrection which is to come to that special class which consecrates unto death, in the footsteps of Christ their Redeemer.” Special reference was made to the apostle’s explanation of the relationship of the church to the resurrection of Christ, in Philippians 3 and 1 Corinthians 15. In conclusion, the speaker made brief reference to the make-up of the “nominal” church, as it has existed throughout the ages. It is composed of four classes:

FOUR CLASSES IN A CHURCH

First A class unjustified, which attaches itself to the church for reasons of pride or vain-glory, without having tasted of the Lord’s grace in any special degree hypocrites, whether consciously or otherwise, and referred to in the scriptures as “tares.”

Second The “household of faith,” the justified class, a large class, many of whom have become satisfied with their present condition, and have failed to make use of their justification for the real purpose for which it was intended viz., consecration.

Third and fourth The two classes which constitute the only ones ever recognized by the Lord as members of the church proper those only who have made a full consecration of themselves to God “even unto death.”

One of these classes is that which joyfully fulfills its covenant, seeks to make its calling and election sure, and depending upon the Lord’s grace, goes forward in offering its sacrifice, as filling up that which is behind the afflictions of Christ. These, the speaker said, are those “whose names are written in heaven,” whether written on denominational rolls or not, for he recognized no denominational lines in the true church of God, deeming that all people, everywhere, who had made an intelligent devotion of themselves to God were members of one true church, outside of which there could be no special blessing in connection with the favors of the gospel age.

ONE OTHER CLASS

The remaining class is the one referred to in Revelation 7 as having “come up out of great tribulation, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb.” These were represented to be those who having made their covenant had neglected it, allowed the spirit of worldly things to hinder them, and had permitted their white robes of reckoned righteousness, through faith in Christ, to become soiled and bedraggled by contact with the world.

3H92

These must experience severe tribulations to teach them needed lessons, and instead of reaching the high honor which is reserved for the willing sacrificers, are to be given a place “before the throne,” where they “serve God in his temple day and night forever.” The faithful ones, on the contrary, quick to note the manifestations of imperfection, apply for cleansing of their robes with alacrity at any time temporary weakness should overcome them, and thus remain constantly in full harmony with the Lord, and receive the reward of a place “in the throne,” as kings and priests unto God.

The speaker referred to the necessarily fragmentary way of treating the elaborate subject, and invited his hearers to make application for the free reading matter which was cheerfully supplied through the tract society arranging the meetings the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, Arch Street, Allegheny

FUTURE FAVORS TO ALL MANKIND

Isaiah 28:22

The final “chart-talk” of the series conducted by C. T. Russell in Allegheny Carnegie hall was given yesterday afternoon to a crowded house. Till long past the hour considered by ordinary church-goers as a respectable time to close, the speaker held his hearers by portraying “The Great Consummation—” in other words, the features of the plan of God in closing up the affairs of the “present dispensation,” and the ushering in of the “times of refreshing” constituting the future favors to mankind. The speaker evidently felt that he had an important message to deliver, and must make use of the opportunities which his closing special service would afford to press it home to his hearers.

The congregation returns to its regular meeting place next Sunday, where services will be held as usual, at 3 p. m. and 7:30. Pastor Russell will have charge at both services.

The text for yesterday's discourse was from Isaiah 28:22, "Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong, for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consummation, even determined upon the whole earth."

PROPHECY OF GREAT EVENTS

These words were suggested as a portion of the great prophecy concerning events which were due to take place in the end of the history of the dispensation of evil, which closes concurrently with the gospel age, during which God has been selecting the church of Christ. On his chart the speaker rehearsed the various periods into which human history has been divided, and dwelt specially upon the call of the church and the different classes which claim a membership in it whether entitled to recognition as such by God or not.

These classes constitute the "nominal church" first, those who are interested in the social attraction of association found among religious people, but who have no interest in the Lord from a personal standpoint of devotion to his service; secondly, a class justified by faith, and having a reckoned standing before God as at peace with him, through the sacrifice of Christ; and, third, the two classes who alone properly represent the real church those who have fully consecrated them selves to the Lord and his cause, one of which classes is seeking daily to fulfill the Lord's will, counting it all joy in tribulation, and rejoicing in the privileges of sacrificing with the Lord; and the other class, although still maintaining their willingness to serve the Lord, which has permitted the cares of this life to interfere with zeal and earnestness.

THOSE WHO WILL GET TO HEAVEN

Only the class of willing sacrificers will be eventually given the kingdom, and become joint-heirs with Christ, with a place in his throne, while the other class constituting the true church is to be given severe trials, and must pass through great tribulation, in order to bring the individuals of it to the proper condition of full submission, after which they are to be accorded the position of service in the kingdom before the throne, serving God in His temple forever the temple being the willing overcomers, as the Apostle Paul declared—" Know ye not that ye are the temple of the living God?"

This Jewish nucleus of the church was "out of every tribe of Israel," but God in filling up the remainder of the definite number required has gone among the Gentiles, "to take out of them a people for His name," "that the fullness of the Gentiles might come in," and in selecting these the thought was expressed that each Gentile is apportioned to some tribe in order to fulfill the arranged apportionment of 12,000 to each making in all a "little flock" of 144,000, to rule the world as the kings and priests of God in the Millennial age, for the blessing of mankind.

Continuing, the speaker pointed out that while the nominal church consisted of various classes it was not the ideal arrangement which God approved and purposed to continue. Only one true, faithful class really was entitled to God's special favor, and all the others are to be subjected to the trials of the time of consummation referred to in the text, the basis of the discourse. God never expressed an invitation to a class to attain merely to a position of justification by faith in the present age. Justification is a means to an end.

Since only those who are perfect in God's sight either on a reckoned basis or actually could make an acceptable offer of sacrifice to him, it was necessary to provide the way to justification, in order that the call to sacrifice might be carried out, by such reckonedly perfect ones, but those who fail to take such a step of consecration are declared in the scriptures to have "received the grace of God in vain," and are misusing their privileges. Similarly it was not a part of God's design that there should be such a class of unjustified ones as are evident in the church today they are hangers-on and are not beneficial to the interests of the true church, and the more relieved from their attachment the church is, the speaker declared it, spiritual conditions would be in proportion much more satisfactory.

But God has permitted these conditions to exist for a testing of His true people, and for fear lest in making a separation before the proper time injury would be done to His faithful ones.

SEPARATING WHEAT AND TARES

But God has not been separating these wheat and tare classes, but has been allowing both to "grow together until the harvest," when He would cause a separation and blessing to His own and casting off of those not truly His. To this harvest time the speaker especially referred, and called attention to the associated verses surrounding his basic text. As the plowman was there said to plow for a purpose, the sowing of seed, and the seeding, for the purpose of bringing forth fruitage later on, so God has been carrying on His work, expecting to reap a harvest of faithful sons, after His plowing and sowing had been completed.

The "harvest time," the speaker declared, had come. The time for the separation of nominal Christians from the true was at hand, because God's purpose has a time and a completion. In the Scriptures the mixed condition of the church was described as "Babylon," and at the time when the harvest is due the message of the Lord, through the Scriptures, is applicable to all his people, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

The word "Babylon" was shown to signify "confusion" the state in which the nominal church continues to be, because of its various classes of adherents a condition which the Lord has not interfered with until the time for making the separation shown in his parable of the tares, and this time was represented to be the present.

The speaker intimated that in the Scriptures there was sufficient evidence to show that, according to the chronology of the Bible and its prophecies concerning time, the Lord's purpose was about to be consummated the great separation is already taking place, and the plagues and punishments of the Lord are being prepared to be poured upon the illegitimate classes in the church. These time features were not considered, for lack of opportunity, but are given considerable space in the speaker's published writings.

With telling force the speaker arraigned "Babylon" in its present sinful condition, out of which the Lord's people are exhorted to come. He asserted that today the real plan of God is hidden, and the professed standards of various denominations in Christendom blaspheme God's character by their representations of his purposes for the race.

A noble man would not be thought guilty of such heinous cruelties as are ascribed in the creeds to their theological God, whose plan has been from before the foundation of the world to send to a condition of everlasting torture the billions of human beings who did not happen to be in the elect "little flock" which has been predetermined upon for salvation. Such a calumny upon the character of God, who in the Scriptures is declared to be full of mercy and long-suffering, wisdom and power to do good to all, in his own time and way!

WHAT HE CALLS BLASPHEMY

He demanded Scriptural authority for such blasphemous utterances concerning God's character, and declared that there was not one, from beginning to end of the Bible, a few "dark sayings" of the Master, and some symbols of the book of Revelation being interpreted in thorough harmony with the plain statements of other Scriptures.

The only text which the speaker ever heard offered as an excuse for the theories of the creeds was, "As the tree falleth, so shall it be." So far from this teaching eternal torture to all who have not heard of and believed upon the name of Jesus Christ their Savior, in the present time, it was shown to prove that as man, by reason of his condemnation unto death goes down into the tomb, he must there remain until the awakening which has been purposed for him in God's due time, according to the promises of His Word.

The fact that eternal torture is not generally held to in the present time (which the speaker was quite willing to admit) would not release the "Babylonians." Though the ministers should admit in private that they had discarded such a theory, and make excuses for its presence in the confessions of faith, so long as they held to such a creed by upholding their denominations they were responsible for every word the creeds presented, and every individual who, knowing God's true plan, still adhered to the section of Babylon in which he found himself, was characterized as dishonest with himself, with his associates and with God. There was no other course to pursue than to follow the divine command, "Come out of her, my people," in order to escape God's plagues.

SOME OF THE PARADOXES

The speaker dealt with the real attitude toward God's word, as contrasted with the creed expressions, on the part of the chief ones of the denominations of the day. While the Scriptures make most prominent the doctrine of the atonement, through the blood of Jesus Christ, as a ransom for the sin of mankind, in the great pulpits there is no disguising the general tendency to denial of the inspiration of the Scriptures and the ignoring of the redemption through Jesus Christ. Instead of accepting the Scriptural account of a fall from perfection, man is declared to be in process of evolution from a low condition to a very high one, and that if any fall took place at all, it was a "fall upward" if God would let man alone for a few more centuries he would attain all he wanted by his own efforts.

In presenting proof that he was fully cognizant of this unfaithful condition of the reputed leaders of the Lord's flock, the speaker mentioned having had some of the prominent ministers of Pittsburgh and Allegheny interviewed upon the subject of their belief in the ransom through Jesus Christ. One of them, in response to such a query, replied negatively, but hastily, retracted his statement, and remarked that "he was not prepared to state, positively, his view on the subject."

CRITICIZED A LOCAL PREACHER

The speaker forcefully criticized the attitude of such a gentleman, presuming to be a servant of the Lord, and uncertain as to his standing upon the most vital doctrine of the scriptures. He denounced as thoroughly unfaithful to the Lord such vacillating men. Another minister, in response to the same question, made no pretense of uncertainty, but laughed at a theory of Jesus Christ having "died to pay it all," and declared that that doctrine had quite "gone to the wall."

The completion of the judgment of Babylon is to mean the bringing in of a great "time of trouble, such as was not since there was a nation," during which the saints, the "little flock," are to be glorified in the kingdom; the "great company," which failed to live up to its consecration vows, will receive its trying experiences and be purified through the trouble, and then changed also to spirit conditions.

The remainder of the world, including the justified who failed to make any use of their reckoned standing as God's sons, according to his arrangement, are to be counted in with the world, to share their severe experiences in the same trouble, and to receive whatever benefit and blessing the Lord may have to give them, with the world in the future, after the trouble has ceased, by the establishment of the kingdom of Christ, the overthrow of all the institutions of the "present evil world," and the binding of Satan, the usurper of power now, and who has been the chief agent in blinding the people in general to God's good purposes.

Chief among the world's inhabitants in the new age, the millennium of favor to come to all mankind, will be a class called "the ancient worthies." These are they who during the ages preceding the gospel age recognized God and exercised faith in His promises, and sought to please Him in all their ways. They were such persons as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Daniel, Jeremiah, Isaiah, David, Samuel, etc. These were not called to the church's high calling, which only began to be promulgated by Christ, as the Apostle Paul declared, in Hebrews 11:3. Christ is the head, forerunner, leader of the church, and this being the case no one could have preceded Him in the race. But the faithfulness of the ancient worthies, manifested in extreme trial and difficulty, is not to go unrewarded, because the apostle, in referring to this class in Hebrews 11, declares that though they died "not having received the promise," they are to be blessed after the church's blessing. The promise made to this class was of earthly favors as, for instance, when Abraham was told, "All the land that thou seest, to thee will I give it," although during his lifetime he was not permitted to own so much as a foot of it. (Acts 7:5)

These earthly favors will be granted to the ancient worthies when the kingdom of God is established, and these faithful ones will constitute the beginning of the perfect humanity which is to fill the whole earth in due time; that is, that these faithful ones are to be brought from the tomb fully perfected as human beings, and to be used as God's human agents in bringing order out of chaos, and assisting in administering the laws of the kingdom of God on earth.

Reference was made to Psalm 14:16 in this connection: "Instead of thy fathers, they shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth."

The thought thus expressed of two phases of the kingdom of God, one of a spiritual kind, represented in the Christ, head and body, and the other the earthly, represented in those "worthies," was supported by the scriptural statement, "The law shall go forth from Mount Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.” This was explained as signifying that the spiritual phase of the kingdom (Zion) would promulgate all the laws for the direction of the affairs of mankind, and would hold supreme authority and rule, in connection with the bringing of the purposed favors to mankind; while the “worthies” would exercise representative authority, as the visible agents of the kingdom promulgating the laws from the earthly capital, Jerusalem.

SPECIAL FAVORS FOR JEWS

At this time the Jews are to be the recipients of special favor also. The speaker laid much stress upon the statements of Romans 11 as showing that while the Jews as a nation had been cast off from the divine favor, after their rejection of Christ, they were to be in that condition only for a definite time fixed in God’s purpose. They were cast off in order that the Gentiles might find a place in the elect church, but upon the “full number of the Gentiles coming in,” and the church being made complete, favor is to return to the Jews.

So he quoted: “Blindness in part is happened unto Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved” saved from its blinded condition and alienation from God, and placed in a position to attain eternal life under the conditions of the Millennial age.

The speaker dwelt upon the comprehensiveness of the promise that in addition to these classes who are to be blessed under the administration of the Christ, head and body, all mankind is to have a full and complete opportunity for salvation. He called attention to the explicit declaration of the Lord (John 5:28,29): “All that are in the grave shall hear His voice and come forth” and that contradicts the thought that going into the tomb ends any hope of the condemned world being recalled to be dealt with by the Lord in the future.

The text describes the classes who shall come forth—“they that have done good to a resurrection of life.” These the speaker declared were all those who had been pleasing to the Lord in the past. They would include the “ancient worthies,” who had faithfully fulfilled the Lord’s will; they would include the church itself, as the most highly honored recipients of life from God; and the “great company,” although it shall attain its blessings through severe experiences of chastisement. But the class here specified would not include the “tares” or the merely justified ones in the nominal church, because these had not pleased God they had not fulfilled His will in the present time.

REWARDS FOR THE DUTIFUL

Only those who had obeyed the Lord, in compliance with His instructions, when they came in contact with His favors, would be raised “to life” and this signified raised immediately to perfect life conditions, on whichever plane of being, divine, spiritual or human, God purposed to grant them this favor. All the remainder of mankind is included in the concluding expression of the text, “they have done evil.”

No matter how moral or upright a person might be naturally, he must acknowledge that he is not perfect; no one is perfect unless he has been approved of God, and no one in the present or past has been approved of God unless he has been justified freely from all things by faith, and has remained in harmony with God and been constantly seeking to do His will. All the world, therefore, except the comparatively small number represented in the exceptions named, are to share in the resurrection of the “evil” ones and this resurrection is described in the common version of our Bible as “of damnation.”

The speaker strongly condemned the translation, showing that in five other places in the same chapter the original Greek word is rendered “judgment,” and should be so rendered in this text. The word “resurrection” was explained to signify “raising up to life,” and the two words together would give the real scope of the work of the Millennial age the raising up of all the obedient of mankind to perfect life, by a process of judgments chastisements, disciplines, instructions and final decision, according to the character developed by all thus dealt with.

THE MILLENNIAL AGE

Acts, 3:19-23 was quoted as indicating that the whole period of the Millennial age was to be one of repair restoration, restitution, and that the second presence of Christ and His bride was a necessity, in order to accomplish the work fully. In this passage the Apostle Peter refers to a prophecy by Moses: “A prophet the Lord your God shall raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me.” This “prophet” the speaker stated was Christ, because Moses is represented in the Scriptures as a type of Christ.

The raising up of this prophet began with the glorification of Jesus Christ, but the work which the prophet was to do was not begun then, because Jesus was only the head of the prophet. The church, the body of Christ, must complete the raising up, and when it is glorified with the Lord the work of the prophet shall be begun. Moses’ statement proceeds: “Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever He shall say unto you, and the soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people.”

The instructions of the world are here comprehended, and the final decision, for everlasting life to the good and obedient, or everlasting death, to the evilly-disposed, at the end of the Millennial age, is the thought of the concluding clause of the statement. Then God will have wiped all tears from off all faces, and at that time it will be true, “No more crying, no more sighing, no more dying, for the former things have passed away, and behold, I have made all things new.”

THE DOCTRINE OF THE MILLENNIUM

Before the Bible House congregation, Pastor C. T. Russell delivered a discourse yesterday afternoon on “The Reasonableness of the Doctrine of the Millennium.” The text was taken from Matt. 6:9-10, “After this manner, therefore, pray ye, Our Father which art in heaven hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven.” Pastor Russell spoke as follows:

The latter part of the text is the particular topic for this afternoon: “Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.” We are met by those who oppose the doctrine of the coming kingdom with the objection that it would be an impossibility for our heavenly Father to accomplish the thing which has been declared, that the kingdom would never come, that the blessing of all the families of the earth would be an impossibility. We want, therefore, to discuss that feature of the subject first. We want to examine some of the objections that are stated. One of them, for instance, is in respect to the impossibility of the earth accommodating all the families of the earth if they were restored, and then the argument that it is impossible to have a “restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began,” as the Apostle Peter mentions. The words of the critic are these:

“This millennial doctrine encounters a very serious difficulty. If the world’s population had doubled each century for the past 60 which seems a very reasonable estimate the present population of the earth would be two and one-third quintillions of people. That would cover over the 50,000,000 square miles of land surface on this globe with people as thickly as they could stand, 4,000 feet deep. If each were 5 feet high, they would reach up into the sky nearly four miles. No doubt people enough have been born to make that number.”

The above remarks were addressed by the Rev. Dr. E. L. Eaton to the Methodist Episcopal ministers of Pittsburgh, at a meeting held April 27, 1903. The address was favorably received by the learned gentlemen present and thought so highly of that it was printed for circulation. Six months later, on October 29, 1903, the same Rev. Dr. E. L. Eaton, in debate with the present speaker, repeated so much of the above as applied to his method of calculation, but revised his figures as to the total of humanity for the past 6,000 years. As illustration the large concession we place his figures side by side:

First statement.	2,333,333,333,333,333,333
Second statement	98,098,300,000,000 Shrinkage in 6 months	2,333,234,235,033,333,333

A DEFENSE OF THE TRUTH

Let us hope that a man of so liberal a mind and so easy a pencil may yet get to see the question he is discussing in its true and reasonable light. Let us hope, also, that the intelligent, thoughtful, educated clergymen, who so innocently swallowed the first exaggeration will be as ready to receive the truth on the subject as they were to accept the error. It is not our thought to speak slightly of anyone's honest endeavor to ascertain truth, however egregiously he may err in his attempts; neither is it our wish to make personal criticisms; but extravagantly erroneous statements have been so freely made by men of large reputation and deficient comprehension, that it is necessary in defense of the truth and for the assistance of the unlearned and non-professional, that this matter be critically examined. Our statements, therefore, are not to be considered personal, but a general criticism of all the learned men who have talked so foolishly upon this subject. Dr. Eaton and his figures merely come in conveniently at the present time. Our criticisms apply equally to the thousands of other great heads which have similarly misapprehended the truth on this subject.

Before showing the reasonable figures for the total of humanity who have ever lived on this earth, let us give a simple illustration of the inaccuracy of Dr. Eaton's computations that will be proof positive of the grossness of his error, even in his revised figures, to everyone possessing a sufficiency of gray matter to be able to reason on any subject. Anyone can demonstrate this matter, for the doctor has told us his method of computation, namely the doubling of the population each century. Accordingly, the last century of the 60 would be the one-half of the entire sum. The demonstration follows:

According to Dr. Eaton's largest figures the total population of the world at the present time would be 1,166,666,666,666,666,666. According to his second statement, 49,049,150,000,000. According to the census taker the figures should be 1,600,000,000. We cannot suppose that Brother Eaton questions the accuracy of our last census returns, for he surely knows that at the present time the "50,000,000 square miles of land surface on this globe" are not covered "with people as thick as they could stand" 2,000 deep reaching up in the sky nearly two miles. Yet, above, he tells us that to him all this "seems a very reasonable estimate" and adds that he has "no doubt" on the subject. Evidently the brother's desire to make the doctrine of the millennium "look like 30 cents," as he expressed it—" to strike that doctrine a blow between the eyes from which it would never recover" blinded him to the antics of his pencil.

REJECTING THE CLEAR TESTIMONY

But, alas! Dr. Eaton and many of those who applauded his ludicrous statements, are as far from the truth in their general understanding of the divine plan as they are in error on this simple mundane proposition. The secret of this unwisdom lies in rejecting the clear testimony of the Bible opposing it claiming that the apostles and early church, in looking for the millennium, were misled by their ignorance now well known (?) by modern theologians of the higher criticism school. Well says an apostle that to these the teaching of the cross is foolishness they have no use for the doctrine of the ransom that we are bought back from destruction by the ransom price, even the precious blood of Christ. The words of the prophet, quoted by the apostle, are still applicable to such and still explain why it is that worldly wisdom is so liable to err, unguided by the letter and spirit of revelation. The quotation is, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" 1 Cor. 1:18-20.

We should reason of unknown things from the basis of that which is known. We know that the world's population today is approximately 1,600,000,000. We know that the present rate of increase is 8 per cent for the past 10 years: this would give an 80 per cent increase for a century. However, that the increase has not been so great in the past, we are certain. This is easily demonstrated, for if we should reckon backward at this ratio of increase we would get back to the first pair (Adam and Eve) in about 3,000 years, and we have scriptural grounds for believing that it is fully 6,000 years since the creation of our first parents.

We believe that every careful, thoughtful calculator, who with us will take Bible history and secular history, will come to close agreement with our conclusions on this subject. Our figures for the whole number of people who have ever been born on this earth are 28,441,126,838 to date including the present population. It is our conviction that these figures are probably double the actual number, but we desire to make them so generous that even opponents can find no fault with them. We arrive at these figures as follows:

HUMANITY LIVED LONGER THEN

During the first 1,656 years, down to the flood, the scriptures show us that humanity lived longer and reached development more slowly than now, many of the children not being born until the parents were more than 100 years old. Thus Seth, the son of Adam, was 105 years old when Enos, his son, was born; and Enos was 90 years old at the birth of his first son, Cainan; and Cainan was 70 years old when he begat Mahalaleel, the latter was 65 years when he begat Jared, who was 162 when he begat Enoch. The latter when 65 begat Methuselah, who when 187 begat Lamech the father of Noah.

We are inclined to believe that the whole population in that time may not have exceeded 100,000, but to be liberal we have placed it in the foregoing estimate at 1,000,000. After the flood humanity began again with 8 persons, and for a time evidently the increase in population was much more rapid than before the flood. In our liberal estimate we reckon the population to have doubled five times in each century for the first five centuries, which would bring us down to about the time of Abraham, and show a population in Abraham's day of over 58,000, although it is our opinion that these figures are double the actual facts. "Higher critics" are so in the habit of using wild unreason in respect to matters of ancient times that we make this concession. They will declare, for instance that Assyria was a great nation at this time, and that evidences have been unearthed mentioning the great King Chedorlaomer, whom they estimate as probably the ruler of millions taking no thought of the flood and the impossibility of having more than 50,000 in the world at that time.

The scripture narrative, however, will save the Lord's people from such error of judgment, for this great king, Chodorlaomer, is distinctly mentioned in Genesis 14, in connection with three associated kings who, joining their combined forces, attacked five other kings in the vale of Siddim. The great Chedorlaomer and his valiants conquered, and carried away the spoil including Lot, Abraham's nephew, and his goods. The narrative shows that these kings though great for their time, when there were few people in the world, had very small armies for they did not venture to attack (King) Abraham, who was "very rich" in flocks, herds, etc. On the contrary when (King) Abraham heard that his nephew Lot was taken prisoner he armed his 318 servants and pursued after the four great kings and their armies, smote them hip and thigh and brought back Lot and all his goods.

BIGGEST THING HIS NAME

To the Bible student, therefore, the biggest things about King Chedorlaomer was his name, and such will not be confused by the exaggerated estimates of the higher critics respecting the millions of those days; for their figures are just as reliable as Dr. Eaton's given above. Continuing our liberal allowance, we have estimated that during the next five centuries the world's population doubled three times each century. This would give us as the world's population at the time of the Exodus 14,241,744. Again we believe that our figures are at least double the actual facts.

We now reach the time of wars, and must reckon the increase of population more slowly than during the pastoral period. Proceeding, we group the next six centuries together and remember that the Israelites in Canaan were some 18 times in bondage to their enemies during this period, and that a census taken near the close of David's reign by Joab showed the number competent to serve in the army to be 570,000, hence the entire population of Palestine at that time cannot have been much of any above 2,000,000. The same warfaring spirit affected other nations and similarly hindered rapid propagation; hence our estimate is that the race doubled during those six centuries, which would show a population in Solomon's time of over 37,000,000 throughout the world. Again a very liberal estimate according to all reliable information at our command probably double the actual number.

We group the next 12 centuries together; concluding that the race doubled during those 12 centuries. To some this may appear too slow a ratio of increase, but we should consider the immense wars of that period, during which Assyria went down and Babylon rose and conquered the whole world, destroying many nations entirely; and that it subsequently fell before the Medes and Persians, who also shed blood in a wholesale manner, and who in turn fell before the Greeks; and that the latter, under Alexander the Great, conquered and dominated the world, but who in turn fell before the Romans; and that these at a cost of thousands upon thousands in the prime of life, did their share also in staying the rapid propagation of the race.

IN NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S TIME

These figures would give a world population of 82,000,000 in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, of 100,000,000 in the time of Christ, and of 113,000,000 at the time when the Roman empire was at its zenith its boundaries extending over Europe, Africa and a considerable portion of Asia. The historian estimates the population of the Roman world then at 50,000,000, and our estimate shows a surplus therefore of 63,000,000 for the known and unknown portions of the earth at that time. Again, evidently, a very liberal reckoning.

We estimate the next four centuries as increasing the population 25 per cent each century, for the decrease of war resulting from the firm establishment of the Roman power, must have had such an effect. This gives us at the time of Charlemagne at the opening of the eighth century a world population of over 227,000,000. Following came the centuries of the crusades, etc., in which millions of the youth of the world perished. Our reckoning is that the world's population doubled during the six centuries from the year 800 to 1399 A. D. This gives us for the population of the world for the year 1400 the sum of 455,733,808.

The next four centuries were more favorable to the multiplying of the race, great battles and desolating plagues being fewer. The religious reformation belongs to this period. We reckon the population to have doubled during these four centuries and this would give us the world population for the year 1700 of 911,467,606. These figures so far as we know, are very greatly in excess of any reliable statistic. We reckon the period from 1700 to 1800 A. D. at a 20 per cent rate of increase, giving the population in the year 1800 at 1,093,759,939. For the century just closed, from the year 1800 to 1900, 1,531,163,915. Although, as already stated, the ratio of increase in population for the 10 years of the last census was 8 per cent, representing an increase of 80 per cent for the century, it is manifest that the increase during the earlier portion of the century was at a much slower rate. Present conditions are increasingly favorable to the propagation of the race, as well as to its longevity; and it would not surprise us if the increase would show much greater in the near future.

THE WORLD'S POPULATION

The following table of estimates of the world's population made during the nineteenth century shows clearly that the estimates we have given are exceedingly liberal; besides in reckoning the total we have counted the entire century at the figures of its close:

Volney, in 1804, estimated the population of the world at 437,000,000; Pinkerton, 1805, estimated the population of the world at 700,000,000; Malte-Brun, 1810, estimated the population of the world at 640,000,000; Morse, 1812, estimated the population of the world at 766,000,000; Graberg v. Hemso, 1813, estimated the population of the world at 686,000,000; Balbi, 1816, estimated the population of the world at 704,000,000; Balbi, 1843, estimated the population of the world at 739,000,000.

We believe that the liberality of our figures will be conceded by all careful, thoughtful people, and in our opinion they are as a whole double the truth.

Our next step was to approximate the number that died each century. We have estimated that twice the number of the whole population at the end of the century died every century down to the time of Solomon; and that since then, to the present time, three times the number of the whole population at the close of each century have died each century. It is on the basis of this calculation that we have already stated the number 28,441,126,838. Be it remembered also that in this calculation we have nearly doubled the actual facts. Take for instance the last century, which began with 1,093,759,939 and closed with 1,531,163,915. In estimating this we did not multiply by three the supposed number living in the middle of the century 1850, but multiplied by 3 the total number living at the close of the century.

Now, with this large allowance and liberal estimates everywhere of probably double, what can we say respecting the ability of the earth to furnish these habitation and food? Remembering the Lord's promise that in that Millennial period "the earth shall yield her increase" and the desert and wilderness places of the earth "shall become as a garden of Eden," we may safely estimate upon all the land which we find according to recent estimates to be 57,000,000 square miles, or over 36,000,000,000 acres.

THE FAITH OF ABRAHAM

What would this mean as to space for each individual who has ever lived in the world according to this very large liberal estimate? It means that there would be 1,275 acres for each little village of 200 families (1,000 persons). Quite a sufficiency of room, all will agree, under the new conditions promised; but if more space be necessary let us have a little of the faith which Father Abraham exercised when he counted that God to keep his promise was able to raise Isaac from the dead. With this faith we will see readily that it will be quite within the divine power to raise vast continents from the depths of the oceans, or indeed, to give a literal as well as a symbolical fulfillment to the declaration, "There shall be no more sea."

Our conclusion then must be that those who hold to the teaching of the Lord and the faith of the apostles and primitive church respecting a coming kingdom and blessing have not been put to shame in any degree by the wisdom of this world. Now let us look on the other side of the question and see if it be not true respecting the worldly wise as was written nearly 3,000 years ago. "The wise are taken in their own craftiness." Those who stand loyally in support of the teachings of our Lord and His apostles in respect to the coming kingdom "under the whole heavens" have generally been content to be on the defensive. Those who trust fully in the promise of God to Abraham, "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed," have too long perhaps endured the sneers of the worldly wise and refrained from pricking their bubbles of self complacency, pride, sarcasm and folly set afloat by those who think themselves to be somebodies and discredit the inspired revelation and those who stick closely to the Book.

The time is come to forever silence these opposers of the divine word and we shall now proceed to do so. Again we must use Brother Eaton's words, but we again disclaim any personality, and recognize that he is merely one of a class, a large class, an influential class, a D. D. class, whose minds and expressions on the subject are the same as Brother Eaton's. We take his words rather than those of some one else, because they were uttered recently and in public contention with this very subject of the Millennium; and were heard by hundreds and read by thousands; we must have some positive statement to deal with, and his is the nearest and most suitable one; therefore, and not from any personal reasons, his words are criticized. Dr. Eaton's words in his argument against the reasonableness of expecting a millennium not only were as above quoted and criticized, but additionally he said that he did not expect the second coming of our Lord until the conversion of the world, and the end of this dispensation, which would not be for probably "50,000 years yet."

TREACHERY OF HIS PENCIL

Brother Eaton by this time has gotten used to the treachery of his pencil, and we trust will conclude finally that while it may be safe to use the pencil ad lib on the subject of astronomy, where a few hundred thousand solar systems will not be noticed by the credulous public, it is nevertheless a very uncertain pencil to use in respect to earthly things. Now let us weigh carefully this statement made not only by the Rev. E. L. Eaton, D. D., but by hundreds of other equally titled gentlemen whose position before God's people and before the world as teachers has been trusted too confidently by their flocks. We hope that on the subject under discussion and on all subjects they will revise their methods of "foolish talking," and remember that those who pose as ministers of the gospel of Christ should, according to the exhortation of the Apostle Paul, "Speak as the oracles of God" truthfully, accurately in a manner to be depended upon. Meantime we hope their followers will give them no more credit for accuracy in other features of their religious teaching than in the one under consideration.

Let us do a little figuring; let us do it in a manner that any school boy can follow. We want to inquire how many people will be living on the earth at the end of 50,000 years about the time Dr. Eaton estimates that Christ will come. We will take as the basis of our calculation the present population of the world as 1,600,000,000. We will take as the basis of our reckoning for increase the census returns for the last decade, namely, 80 per cent increase for the century. If the favorable conditions of the present continue no doubt the increase will be far in excess of 80 per cent, but let us confine ourselves to present conditions.

A little figuring shows us that at the end of the first of these 50,000 years the living population of the world would be over 580,000,000,000; and at the same ratio of increase the close of the second thousand years would find a living population on this earth of over 210,500,000,000,000; and by the close of the third of these 50,000 years the living population on earth would be over 76,328,500,000,000,000.

WHAT THE FIGURES MEAN

What do these figures mean? They mean that if God's word is not true, if the great change of dispensation which we preach is not soon inaugurated, the whole world of mankind will be in great distress, not only for food to eat but for standing room. We have only counted three of Dr. Eaton's 50,000 years! What would the figures be if we were to run them up further? Those who deny the teaching of a Millennium must of course ignore the promises which declare that "the wilderness will blossom as the rose and the solitary places be glad;" and consequently any reckoning of the earth's surface from their standpoint must exclude all the at present useless portions of the earth's surface. Approximately estimating the usable portion of the earth's surface at 25,000,000 square miles we find that this would give us 16,000,000,000 acres or 696,960,000,000,000 square feet.

Comparing these figures with the above reckoning as to population, we find that at the close of the first thousand years there would be more than 36 people for each acre of the habitable earth. At the close of the second thousand there would be barely standing room of less than 3 1/2 square feet for each person. At the close of the third thousand there would be 109 persons for each square foot of the habitable earth, or in other words they would be standing on each other's heads about 200 persons high; or, if we include the polar regions and waste portions of the earth, there would be about 100 persons high on each other's heads, or if we include the ocean surface as well as all the land surface, there would be 12 persons for each square foot. Allow 2 square feet for each individual and the population would need to stand in piles 24 deep closely packed together all over the surface of the land and sea in 3,000 years from today! What would the figures be at the end of 50,000 years if each of the succeeding 47,000 were estimated on the reasonable basis of the three already calculated.

MILLENNIUM INDISPENSABLE

Is it not time that those who do not believe in a coming Millennium should begin to pray that God would arrange for one? Is it not evident that if Christ's kingdom were delayed even 500 years the world would be in terrible straits? The population at the present rate of increase would then be over 30,000,000,000 with less than one habitable acre apiece; and only by very "intensive farming" could they subsist at all. Very evidently the facts as we look backward and forward, all indicate that we are just at the right time for the establishment of "the kingdom of God's dear Son."

The declaration of the Lord at the beginning was that the earth should be filled; and according to our computations we have now reached a place where a sufficient number of people have been born into the world to about reasonably and properly fill it, if they were recovered from the tomb. On the contrary, looking into the future, we see not only an impossibility of long continuance under the present conditions, but we see likewise that even three centuries more at the present rate of increase would add to the numbers of the dead 52,000,000,000 or nearly double the number of our above liberal estimate of all the past dead, making the total number 80,000,000,000. Three centuries are not far ahead either! The more we investigate this question upon a proper basis, the more strong our faith must become in the promises of the divine word respecting the “times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began,” and which are to commence with the second coming of our Lord. Acts 3:19-21. Another objection that is frequently urged as against the theory of the Millennium is that it would be inconsistent for our Lord to appear as a man in the flesh to establish an earthly court, and to have a throne somewhere at Jerusalem or elsewhere, and to have men pay their homage as they would to Kaiser William or the czar. We agree that that is unreasonable; we never took that position, and such statements, whether intentionally or unintentionally, are a misrepresentation of our position. It would be a gross injustice to attempt to show that we take any such view. We hold that the scriptures teach that the kingdom of God’s dear Son, as it will be established, will be a spiritual kingdom, and not a fleshly kingdom, for according to the Scriptures, “Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God,” and therefore we must all be changed if we would have part in the kingdom. We hold that this kingdom class is to be composed, first of our Lord Jesus, the “great King over all the earth in that day,” and secondly, the Church, his associated Bride, the Lamb’s wife, according to the picture or symbol, his brethren, according to another symbol.

ASSOCIATED IN THE KINGDOM

These are to be associated in the kingdom, and all of these will be changed, no longer to be of flesh and blood, no longer human, visible to men, but spirit beings, like unto the Father, like unto the angels, invisible. We hold also that the Scriptures teach that there will be an earthly visible representation of this kingdom that the ancient worthies, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets shall be the earthly representatives of this spiritual and invisible kingdom, and that while the real rulers of the world will be unseen to men, there will be seen visible agents among men, perfect as men, and therefore splendid representatives of the unseen kingdom beyond the sight of men.

We hold that the instruction of the world will be carried on through the supervision of the spiritual kingdom and through the agency of the earthly representatives as the Lord said respecting this earthly feature of the kingdom: “Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets in the kingdom” but He never said a word about their seeing Him, the King, nor seeing any of the apostles. They would see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, because Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will be among those who will be earthly representatives of the kingdom.

The Apostle Paul refers to the place which the ancient worthies will occupy in Hebrews 10:1-39-40-. In the preceding verses He has been recounting the faithfulness of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses and others, and now in summing up his argument, he says: “These all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises” they did not get the thing that was promised to them; the thing promised to them was an earthly thing, an earthly kingdom. They could not get their kingdom until first the church would get the spiritual kingdom, because the spiritual must precede the earthly. The apostle proceeds: “God having provided some better things for us” for the church of the Gospel age, a better thing than for Fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the holy prophets—” that they without us should not be made perfect.” They can never reach the perfection of blessing that God has provided for them until first the Christ, head and body Jesus the head, the saints the members of His body —shall have been glorified. Then the time shall come of which the Apostle James speaks in Acts 15:14-17, for the Lord shall return and build again the tabernacle of David that is fallen and rebuild the ruins thereof, etc.

KINGDOM OF THE JEWS

This is the kingdom coming back to the Jewish people, not as Jews, but because they were God’s people; not to every Jew, because as the apostle says: “He is not a Jew that is a Jew outwardly,” but to every one of them who are Jews indeed, having the faith of Abraham. And, by the way, we remark that when the kingdom is established there will be many others coming in who will belong to that class besides these ancient worthies, who will accept the Lord and seek to walk in His ways, and thus gradually the whole world may become children of Abraham, as it is written again: “I have made thee to be a father of many nations” not merely a father of the Jews. And so all the nations of the world shall ultimately be brought to a knowledge of the Lord, and whoever shall accept of the Lord’s favor and grace in Christ, and conform themselves to the clear laws of the kingdom then enforced, they will be counted as indeed the children of Abraham, whatever may be their earthly nationality. Thus he will become “the father of many nations.”

Another thought worthy of consideration is this: Does not the world recognize the need we have of a perfect government? Is not the cry of every political party, “We will give you a perfect government?” That has been the cry for centuries, each nation striving to have the mastery of the world, declaring that it, and it alone, is competent to bless the world. And now what do we see? We see that in the very best governments of the whole world there is necessarily an element of corruption unavoidable, let us say so that even where comparatively pure men are elected to office you do not know what influences may be brought to bear upon them to more or less cause them to deviate from the rule of rectitude and righteousness. As a matter of fact, if occasionally an upright man does get into office it is generally because he can be used as a puppet and representative of others who desire the power, and he is generally used as long as they can use him to advantage, and then usually dropped. But what can we see respecting the Millennial kingdom and how could we hope that if the Lord should then take His great power and exercise it in the world that the world would have better rulers or governors than at present? Ah, we answer, our God is making the very preparation that is necessary in this matter.

WHAT GOD REVEALS TO US

He reveals to us in His word that He is selecting a peculiar people, a little flock, and that they are all saints! Not all are saints who name the name of Christ by no means; but those who will be of the very elect, those who will make their calling and election sure, will all be “copies of God’s dear Son.” And if copies of God’s dear Son, what think you of the government that they would establish in the world? We answer, nay! Would it be a charitable, generous government, of love and righteousness? We answer, yes! The Lord and His character assure us that the government of which He would approve and which the saints, the members of his body, would approve and establish would be a pure government, a righteous government, built upon love, and not upon selfishness. We have every reason, therefore, to have absolute confidence in that government, as we could not have in any government established by the world, or in any government that we could ourselves establish while we still have the flesh and its human weaknesses and frailties to contend with.

And what about these ancient worthies, if they be given power will it not be possible that they will be the subjects of corruption and bribery? No, because they also will be a tested and proven class. Mark the apostle’s description, in Hebrews, 10:1, of how they were all found worthy. If they pleased God that is sufficient testimony, and the apostle declares: “They had this testimony, that they pleased God!” Then they will please you and me! If satisfactory to God they will be satisfactory to all in harmony with God and righteousness, and “the Lord knoweth them that are His.” If the Lord has made such an arrangement respecting the kingdom and has provided such under-rulers or earthly rulers, in the control of the world, under the spiritual kingdom, may we not have absolute confidence in the results, that all the families of the earth will be blessed under that glorious kingdom?

The question then may arise in the minds of some, Could we be sure that these ancient worthies might not be liable to change? We answer, No, because they have already passed their trial and have been accepted, and in their resurrection, according to the Scriptural use of the word, they will be raised perfect men absolutely perfect, as Adam was perfect, in the beginning, in the image of God, and therefore with all the qualifications of perfect men, and under the guidance and instruction of the glorified saints, and the greatest saint, our Lord Jesus, surely they will be quite sufficient for the task that is before them.

THE NEEDS OF THE WORLD

And what shall we say respecting the needs of the world? Does not the world need help along the line of good government and the bringing in of blessing of God to be generally distributed among all the people, and not merely among a class? It is not the real object of the Lord that the blessings that are now being so freely showered in this wonderful day of the world's understanding should be generally dispensed to every creature? Surely! We do not say that that is possible under present conditions; it could not be attained under present conditions.

We have no sympathy with anarchists or Socialists, in their endeavors, under conditions as they exist today, to introduce an order of things which would result in blessing to all mankind alike. We are not only assured by our reasoning faculties that man cannot do this now, but also by the Lord's word itself. When present conditions shall have brought the world to a great time of trouble, in which all present institutions shall fall because of their imperfection, then upon the ruins of those institutions the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom. It is the very matter pictured by Daniel in interpreting the prophecy of Nebuchadnezzar; after picturing the kingdoms of this world, Babylon, as the head of gold, Persia, as the breast and arms of silver, Grecia as the belly and thighs of brass, and Roma as the legs of iron, and present institutions as the feet of mixed iron and clay then he says: “I beheld until the stone was taken from the mountain without hands.” A stone! what was it? God's Kingdom, the church!

God is taking it out of the kingdoms of this world without hands—without the operation of human power. It is “not by might nor by power, but by spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.” Humanity indeed acts as an agency of God in proclaiming the truth, but it is the power of God that is unto salvation to every one that believeth. The stone is taken without hands, and in due time the smiting shall take place, and then all present institutions shall go down. This does not mean that it is for you or me or any of the Lord's people to have anything to do with bringing about the terrible trouble which is to wind up present conditions, but it does mean that we view the matter from the Lord's standpoint, as enlightened of Him, who knows what to look for, because the Lord hath spoken it, and what are to be the grand results.

A TERRIBLE CATACLYSM

And although the time of trouble will be serious, an awful affair, a terrible cataclysm which will involve every existing evil institution, including much that is miscalled good, God will use that trouble as His agency in bringing in the Kingdom which shall be for the blessing of all the families of the earth, the establishment of a righteous government, as promised, and for which we are taught to pray, as in the text before us, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven" not merely as it is done in Allegheny, nor as in some other city of good moral character; but as it is done in heaven, and up to the standard set by God.

We are not to suppose that the world is to be converted, and then the kingdom established, but the kingdom of God is to be exercised in the world while sin and sinners will be largely in the majority, and the kingdom is to be established so that it will put down all authority and every evil thing, as the apostle declares in First Corinthians 15,— "He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet." During Christ's kingdom all things will become subject to Him, all the wicked persons and evil influences, and He shall reign for the suppression of every evil. When the Lord is king over all the earth will it be as now? No! Those who look about today and think that Christ is reigning must have the opinion either that our Lord Jesus has very poor character or exercises very little power.

When they see all the sin, the iniquity, the crime, the evil tendencies that are permitted to go on today, if they have the thought that Christ is recognizing these evils either in the sense of approving them or else in the sense that He acknowledges His inability to suppress those things. But He does neither! On the contrary, the Lord's word assures us that he is allowing Satan to be the prince of this world in the present time, and that the time is coming when He shall take to Himself His great power and shall reign. Already the power and authority are His, but He has not yet taken it in the sense of exercising it. There is a time set apart of the Father when "He shall reign from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth;" when "the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth, as the waters cover the great deep," and when "none shall need say unto his neighbor, "Know thus the Lord, for all shall know Him, from the least unto the greatest of them."

MAKE GOD'S WORD VOID

We will allow others to make void the word of God, preaching salvation of the heathen without faith or without even knowledge of the only name given under heaven or among men. As for us, we have this one commission, and that is, to preach the word, to preach the kingdom, and to declare that this kingdom shall accomplish a great blessing to the world, and to declare that in this present time, while sin is still permitted, God is choosing out of the nations the little flock, to be joint heirs with His Son to sit with Him in the throne, to be associated with Him in all the work of blessing all the families of the earth according to the gracious promise given to Father Abraham. It is respecting that promise that the apostle says, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." That promise is not fulfilled. We are still heirs of it.

The world has never been blessed yet; but as soon as the seed class shall have been developed, as soon as the little flock shall be complete, as soon as the body of Christ shall be glorified with the Lord, then the kingdom will be come, and God's will shall be enforced, and all the ends of the earth shall turn unto the Lord, as it is written. Let us then proceed, just as the apostle did, to declare the kingdom, to preach Jesus as the Redeemer from the great penalty of death, to preach resurrection as the hope respecting the dead, and to preach the kingdom as the grand agency of God for blessing the world, and to preach a share in the kingdom as the grand message to all those who have an ear to hear and a heart to obey it.

And what is the effect of this upon us? The apostle tells us, and I trust it is your experience and mine, respecting this true message, the message about the second coming of the Lord, and the kingdom to be then established, and the work of that kingdom in the blessing of the world—" He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." So while we are praying, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." If we are praying in sincerity and truth, we will be striving to enter in, to have a share in the kingdom class, and correspondingly striving to be pure as He is pure.

SUPPLEMENT TO ZION'S WATCH TOWER AND HERALD OF CHRIST'S PRESENCE

To The Readers Of "The Herald Of The Morning"

Dear Friends:

My connection with the "Herald" having been terminated rather suddenly, and under circumstances which must seem rather remarkable and peculiar to you, I feel it to be a duty both to you and to myself to offer an explanation of the manner of withdrawal and my reasons for so doing. Quite a number who were personally acquainted with me thought there must be more of the story to tell, and I have received a number of letters asking an explanation. To these inquiries and to many unexpressed of similar character, let me offer the following statement:

I have been a Bible student since I first had my attention called to the second coming of our Lord, by Jonas Wendel, a Second Advent Preacher, about 1869, who was then preaching the burning of the world as being due in 1873. But though he first awakened my interest on the subject, I was not a convert, either to the time he suggested nor to the events he predicted. I, in company with others in Pittsburgh, organized and maintained a Bible class for the searching of the Scriptures, meeting every Sunday.

We reasoned that, if Christ's coming were to end probation, and bring irrevocable ruin upon ninety-nine in a hundred of mankind; then it could scarcely be considered desirable, neither could we pray with proper spirit, "Come, Lord Jesus, Come quickly!" We had rather request much as we should "love his appearing" that he remain away and our sufferings and trials continue so that "if by any means we might save some." Not only so, but great masses of scripture referring to the Millennial glory and teaching that "All nations which thou hast made shall come and worship before thee," &c., &c., would be left unfulfilled if at His coming there should be a wreck of matter and a crush of world.

We first saw Millennial glory then the glorious work which is offered us as His Bride; that we are by faith the "seed of Abraham;" and as such, heirs of the promises, &c., in whom "all the families of the earth shall be blest." (Gal. 3) This most certainly points to a probation in the future after He has come.

Thus, speedily, steadily and surely God led us to recognize the second coming of our Lord as being not the sunset of all hope to mankind, but the rising of the Sun of Righteousness with healing in his wings."

The Lord gave us many helps in the study of His word, among whom stood prominently, our dearly beloved and aged brother, George Storrs, who, both by word and pen, gave us much assistance; but we ever sought not to be followers of men, however good or wise, but "Followers of God, as dear children." Thus growing in grace and knowledge for seven years, the year 1876 found us.

Up to this time we persistently ignored times and looked with pity upon Mr. Thurman's and Mr. Wendel's ideas. (the latter was preaching the same time as Bro. Barbour; viz: The burning of the world in 1873.) We regarded those ideas as unworthy of consideration, for though we believed the event "nigh even at the doors," yet we recognized the fact that the church will be withdrawn translated before there would be any open manifestation to the world, or, in other words, the two stages of Christ's second advent, viz: coming for his saints, and coming with all his saints.

About this time I received a copy of the "Herald of the Morning," Bro. B. was its publisher; I read with interest how he and others had been looking for (to use his own expression) "a bonfire"; how scriptural arguments pointed to the autumn of 1874 as the time it was due; how that as the disappointment connected therewith began to abate, he and others had re-examined the scriptural proofs that appeared to teach that the end of the world was due at the time supposed; how clear and firm all those proofs still seemed; etc.; how that then, they began to examine what was due to take place at the end, and found that instead of a bonfire, scripture taught that "The harvest is the end of the world" (or age), and that though the age ended, the earth remained and a new age unfolded in which "All the families of the earth shall be blest."

When I read the account I was deeply interested, and as I read on I saw that, if the arguments were true they proved that we had entered and were then in the harvest or end; and if in the harvest, Jesus was due to be here present. This was all reasonable enough for it was much what we had been expecting, and it linked time to our expectation in a harmonious and beautiful manner. My thought now was: Are there sufficient proofs of our being in the time of harvest? If so, this brother and I were in perfect harmony. The paper came in the morning, and I had read it and written to brother B. before noon. I examined more of the time proofs, and though not yet settled with reference to them, made arrangements with brothers B. and Paton to come to Philadelphia, where I was engaged at the time (1876), and hold some meetings, giving evidences, etc., of time, to which I listened with interest, and of the truth of which I felt convinced.

Br. B. and I talked over various methods of promulgating these truths and finally decided to travel and preach them wherever men and women would hear, and to thus spend (D. V.) the remainder of the harvest, which we then supposed was three and a half years, and would close in 1878. While I was arranging my affairs, brother B. returned to Rochester to prepare for publication of the "Three Worlds." (We found during the Philadelphia meetings that such a book was necessary to furnish hearers with chapter and verse for what was claimed), and to close up the "Herald" as it could not be properly attended to while traveling, and the suggestion was made that if any new evidences of truths were developed, a paper could at any time be published and issued from any point. In the meantime, to do justice to subscribers and give them reading matter for the remainder of their year, brother B. had parts of the "Three Worlds" book, then on the press, arranged with a heading, "Herald of the Morning Quarterly," which were left with a sister in Rochester to be mailed as they became due.

We, Bros. Barbour, Paton and myself, traveled, lectured, etc., for some months, when it seemed advisable to us all that a paper should go continuously to those who were hearing, thus keeping alive and watering seed sown. This seemed good to us all, and while brother Paton and I continued lecturing, brother B. went to Rochester and fitted up our office, type, etc., for which I furnished the money. The old type, &c., had been sold before we started out, although I know nothing of how much was obtained for it, nor what was done with the money. The paper thus started was essentially another paper but took the same name because we could think of none better or more expressive. That it was a new paper, or had at least undergone a change of management, was witnessed monthly by the heading of its fourth page where it expressly states that it is "Published by C. T. Russell and N. H. Barbour." Since the paper's change of form, July 1878, this has been omitted. Possibly Bro. B. forgot it, or possibly he thought that the page being small this could be advantageously left out. What amount of money I invested in the paper I do not know. Of such things I never keep account. I remember sending Br. B. money several times; one of which was when we were leaving a camp meeting at Alton Bay, N. H.; I gave him $100 which he lost from his vest pocket as he afterwards wrote me, when, I presume I sent him another $100. I made neither mental nor written note of any money sent I simply sent whatever money was called for and seemed to me to be needed, aggregating altogether perhaps $300 or $400 dollars. The $660 referred to by Bro. B. in the May Herald I never gave to the Herald. The paper has never been self-supporting, and particularly not at first, when we sent many thousands of copies to persons who had been readers of the paper of old when it did not advocate the glorious "Restitution of all things," as it now does, as well as to those who sent their names as two months subscribers free. At its outstart considerable money was necessary; the receipts were slow and uncertain, so, to avoid the necessity of continually sending, or of the Herald's being in any way hindered from lack of money, I placed on deposit at Rochester the above sum which before, I had deposited in a Pittsburgh bank. I deposited the money in our joint names so that should occasion require, Bro. B. could draw and use it, but I repeat, I never gave that $660 to either Bro. B. or the Herald. It, as well as all I have, is the Lord's, and was intended to be used wherever and whenever it was needed, wither by the Herald, any of the preaching brethren, or by myself. The greater part of it has been used for all these. When I was traveling, it was equally convenient for me at Rochester or at Pittsburgh.

Besides these cash items, the "Herald" had a regular income from the sale of the "Three Worlds," a book familiar to most of you. We published 3500 of them prices twenty-five, fifty cents and one dollar, according to binding. These were all disposed of, some by each of us while traveling, the proceeds helping to defray traveling and other expenses, and a part were sold from the office orders being filled from all parts of the country. It would be moderate to estimate that about one-fourth of the edition was thus disposed of from the office to the direct benefit of the Herald, which at an average of thirty cents each, would be over $260, besides a smaller amount the proceeds from the sale of the hymn book, and more recently from the sale of the tract, "The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return," the latter probably not so inconsiderable as some ordered by the dozen for distribution.

The moneys so received were all clear gain to the "Herald," as the cost of publication was paid by myself; Bro. B. doing the composition of the "Three Worlds" and hymn books. Whatever I gave to or invested in the "Herald," was not to Bro. B. but to the Lord, and I much regret that circumstances seem to demand this recital, but we are commanded, "Let not your good be evil spoken of." Bro. Barbour has put into the Herald his time and ability, and has drawn out of it his living. It was his own fault if during the last two years he did more than his strength justified, or if he did not live comfortably. It was not from lack of money. I know he lives frugally, and so do all who realize that all things are God's and that they are simply His stewards. I am willing to admit that in investing his time and ability he put in that which was of greater value than the money I invested. Still, I think that our brother would claim that the time invested was not given to me, but to the Lord, and the pay he expects is not merely the living of the present time, but that his is "The promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

In consideration of the above, I confess I did not, and do not, feel that in supposing the Herald to be partly mine, I was "immodest."

But there are other points of our brother's reply to my proposition that seem to require re-stating to be fully understood. First, however, read below an exact copy of the letter which I wrote to Bro. B., and to which the article referred in the May "Herald" is the sole reply I have received.

Pittsburgh, Pa. May 3, 1879

Dear Brother N. H. Barbour:—Your postal card and letter came duly to hand, and I hope my delay in answering will not be attributed to lack of interest. The fact is that with moving of house and store, spring purchasing of goods (for which I went East), and the work which our Father seems to have put into my hands for the present, viz.: ministering to His children the bread of life each Sunday, as well as baptism and prayer meetings &c., &c., I have been kept so busy as to seldom get above six or six and a half hours sleep per night. With this explanation, let me reply to your letter.

First: It was not possible for me to attend the proposed meeting at R., and I presume, though invited warmly, you scarcely expected me, knowing my pressure of time, &c.

Second: I cannot understand how our bank account has so suddenly decreased. I expected that we still had $100 to $125 in bank. If I recollect aright the balance in bank when I was in R. was $163. Am I right? In your reply, please let me know how our account stands, viz: How much was to our credit in bank Jan. 1, '79, how much has been received in cash since, and how much in bank and on hand now, also, what largest items of expense have been, &c.

While I still feel that you are a brother in Christ, and still love you as such, while there are many pleasant memories of the past to refresh my heart, yet, my brother, there has arisen a difference of view between us as to the teaching of our Father's word (see note. 1), and while giving you credit for all sincerity and honesty in your views, which I claim for myself in the opposite view, yet I must be guided by my own understanding of our Father's word, and consequently think you to be in error. Now I do not think that every difference of opinion need necessarily break fellowship and communion, yet in this case the points of variance seem to me to be so fundamental and important that the full fellowship and sympathy such as should exist among publishers and editors of a paper or magazine, no longer obtains between you and me, and because this is the case, I feel that our relationship should cease.

I believe that we are both children of God, and anxious to know and teach the truth. Our Father's promise is that all truth seekers shall be guided into it; therefore permit me to express the hope that we shall yet see in harmony and understand in unison, the Word. May whichever of us has truth be strengthened and established in it, and the one in error be led to discern the error.

Now how shall we dissolve? Will Bro. Withington or some other brother buy out my interest for you, or take my place himself, or do you wish to resign your connection with the Herald. (See note 2.) In that case I shall continue it (D. V.) As you are the senior, I give you the opportunity to mention the terms of purchase or sale, I know not whether you feel disposed to purchase or not. In case you and friends wish to purchase, I expect to start another paper. I do not know that, as I feel at present, it would be an auxiliary, as I had at first intended, but neither should it be understood to be an opposition paper; it should be an independent one. I should be the more studious of this, because I should fear that if the friends the readers knew of our difference, &c., the truths which we both aim to honor and advance, might be reflected upon unfavorably in consequence. Please let me know your Answer--and proposition as soon as possible, within a week certainly.

Truly your brother in Christ, C. T. Russell.

EXPLANATORY.—Note 1. The doctrine of Substitution, or Atonement. Note 2. When I first mentioned another paper to brother B. January last, he suggested that I take editorial charge of the Herald, which I then declined; I did not know but that he might still be of the same mind.

The Answer--which I received through the May No. of the Herald is known to you all perhaps. In reply to it I wrote brother B. as follows:

101 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, May 22, 1879

Brother N. H. Barbour: I was much disappointed at your reply in last Herald (May No.) j to my letter of the 3d. inst. I did not expect that its proposition would be made public as intimated in the last clause and I certainly did not expect that it would be stated in so partial and one sided a manner. To my mind it was unjust. And now I leave the Herald with you. I withdraw entirely from it, taking nothing from you; or it, or anyone, save christian charity, which we owe one another. This is exactly the amount expected when I wrote to you the former letter. Please announce in next No. of the Herald the dissolution and withdraw my name. Yet still believe me, the Herald's friend, and yours.

Respectfully, CHARLES T. RUSSELL.

I have other reasons than those stated in my letter to Bro. B. which I might as well mention here, as "other management" has been suggested. One feature of the Herald's management which gave me much annoyance, and of which I wrote to Bro. several times, was the careless handling of names of subscribers, by which many were lost, and the failure to keep any proper account of when money was paid, or when a subscription expired. He simply marked P opposite the name, and when he thought from the color of the ink that the subscription was about expired, he stopped sending. Time after time I have been asked personally and by mail, "Why don't I get my paper?"

Another objection is that in some cases there has been too much management. Articles sent by Bro. P. and myself, were not to my mind respectfully treated. If I had a right to the paper, and I think I had, and I wished Bro. P. to have, while Bro. B. had an equal right to write an opposing article, he had no right to cut up and interpolate ours. Nor was an appended Answer--proper when the writer was an "Associate Editor" and had a right to present his views over his own name. Further, while writing against substitution, Bro. B. was seemingly anxious to publish letters from subscribers, which mentioned his view commendingly. Among others was one from Rev. W. V. Feltwell, of Philadelphia, a personal acquaintance of mine. In this extract Bro. F. is made to endorse the new views strongly.

I was much surprised, and seeing the brother in March, I inquired; why? He informed me that the article referred to had not stated him correctly that he had written to Bro. B. to have it corrected, and, said he, "Didn't you see the correction in the March Herald"? No, I answered. Then he got me his copy. There it was Bro. B. regrets at any error, &c., and a quotation from Bro. F's last letter: "I am now and always have been a believer in the vicarious atonement of Christ." This seemed all right and I know that it was possible for any one to make a mistake, when merely making an extract from another's letter, and I was rejoiced to think that the correction was so freely made.

But judge of my surprise and sorrow when upon attempting to show it to Bro. P. a few days after, I found that in my March No. a notice of Bro. Rice's paper "The Last Trump;" occupied its place How was it in yours? We could not understand it; it seemed like double dealing too much management for a Herald of the Millennial Morning. Alas!, I said to myself; is this the fruit of the new views of the atonement?

To Summarize: In money direct and through publications, I presume that I furnished the Herald with about, as nearly as I can approximate, six or seven hundred dollars, in addition to its type &c. Bro. B. put in all he had his time &c. He drew out what he has since lived on, and by this new arrangement has drawn the "Herald" as well.

In the light of the above it may not be amiss to offer a few criticisms of the May article. How does it appear now, about those thousands of gratuitous papers? Did Bro. B. do all the giving? [I take no credit to myself in the matter, I did what was my greatest pleasure.]

Then too from the account above given, which many of the brethren here can corroborate, does it indeed look as though "our dear young brother Russell came into these views, and a small interest in the paper so recently?" Is it true that "this young man came into the views advocated by the Herald, no longer ago than Nov. 1876?" Again, is it true the Bro. B. "advocated all the advanced truths and all the prophetic arguments?" And did the "young brother learn all these beautiful truths by hearing repeated courses of lectures by Bro. B.?" Let us see what are these beautiful advanced truths? Is it the time of Christ's coming? No, there is no beauty in time, it is only a thing of dread, unless the glorious object of His coming is recognized. Bro. B. can scarcely be considered the one, who brought this most glorious and most beautiful truth to our attention, for, while he believed a bonfire to be the end of the world, and that probation ended with it, Bros. Geo. Storrs, Henry Dunn and others were preaching and writing of "the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets: [Acts 3:21,] and that "In the ages to come, God would show the exceeding riches of his grace." (Eph. 2:7) Again, of what value would it be to know the time if we know nothing of the manner of Christ's coming? But while Bro. B. was looking for and preaching outward demonstrations, others saw and taught the two stages of the second advent, viz: Coming unobservedly for His bride and his appearing, when "we also shall appear with Him in glory." Lest some should suppose these statements unwarranted by facts, let me here give extracts from writings on the subject by Rev. Jos. Seiss. "The Last Times" a work published by him in 1856, says of:

"The Day of the Lord." [pp. 150-151]

"There shall be upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves thereof roaring," great popular and revolutionary disturbances; "men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." These words describe scenes of the judgement, which are to be witnessed before the visible manifestations of Christ, scenes which will glide in upon the world without the least suspicion on the part of men generally, that they are the beginning of the great judgement. Yes, "every eye shall see him" but not necessarily at the same time, and only when he shall come "with all his saints with him," and all his saints cannot be with him until after the pious dead are raised and the pious living be translated. The day of judgement shall come "as a thief in the night." He will be here, gathering and removing His elect before the world shall have become aware of it. Referring to

THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.(pp. 206-209)

"The Jews shall return to their ancient home. Jehovah Elohim shall come down again more glorious than when of old, he dwelt in cloud and flame in the Holy of Holies, even Jesus in His own glorified humanity and they shall say: "Lo, this is our God! we have waited for him and he will save us. We will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Jerusalem's light shall then have come, and the glory of the Lord have risen upon her and she shall arise and shine. But Jerusalem below, radiant in all its untold glory shall be but a type and earthly picture of the higher and sublime Jerusalem that is above.—[The Church] Concerning the OFFICE OF THE GLORIFIED CHURCH. (pp. 221)

"Much of the great plan of redemption yet remains unfulfilled and this Church of the first born is exalted to its high place, not only for its own glory and the Savior's praise, but as another great link in the chain of agencies, and administrations by which the entire world is to be restored to the high sphere for which it was destined. When this elect Church shall have been completed and its members come to be Priests and Kings with Christ in the glorious Messianic kingdom, the same general calling which they now fill will continue.

These sublime principdoms of the eternal empire are a part of God's great plan to let forth His love, wisdom and blessing upon earth's generations. Blessed shall it then be for the world, when once the saints shall be installed with their promised dominion and set with Christ upon His throne." And again, concerning

SPIRITUAL BODIES. (pp. 220)

"That the glorified saints will to some extent mingle with those who live in the body and at times unveil their radiance to them, I think there is reason to believe. If they are to govern, direct and minister to those in the flesh, it is natural to suppose they will also be visible at least occasionally.

Angels in the performance of similar offices have often been manifested to living men, and why should it not be so with Christ's servants in the wonderful administrations of his glorious kingdom? Glorified or spiritual bodies are perhaps in their nature insensible to our earthly senses. Christ after His resurrection, was not visible, except at certain times when he manifested himself. The angels are invisible and yet we have many instances in which they were revealed to the view of mortals.

And in that new world in which the glorified saints are to be enthroned and commissioned as the ministers of Christ to execute his orders and administer his government over the nations, we may reasonably expect that they will often appear and converse with those who live in the flesh, and that intercourse between them and those in the body, will be as real familiar and blessed as that which Adam enjoyed with heavenly beings in Paradise."

At the time the above was written Bro. Barbour was entirely uninterested in these matters, a gold miner in Australis, and even since his return to the United States, and his interest in the second coming of Christ, his preaching and teaching has, until quite recently, opposed rather than favored these doctrines.

From whence came all these beautiful and advanced truths to young Bro. Russell and others of the flock? Surely not from Bro. Barbour, nor, we may add, from any man. These precious truths are given freely to all in Christ by the Lord, the Holy Spirit being our teacher and the only one, for “The anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you, but as the same anointing teacheth you all things, and is truth.” (1 John 2:27) Truth and knowledge are the food upon which God’s children feed, and He himself has made perfect arrangements for their supply, as it is written, “Light is sown for the righteous.” (Psa. 97:11)

He supplies the light to the “Pathway of the just that shines more and more unto the perfect day,” and as the Master promised so we have had “The spirit of truth to guide us into all truth, and He has shown us things to come.” (John 16:13)

But while the spirit guides, human instrumentality is often employed by the spirit. Men are only the “earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us.” (2 Cor. 4:7) The vessel is nothing, the treasure has the value. All God’s children are to some extent vessels, some with greater capacity than others. O that we might all be very humble as treasure bearers.

*“Broken and emptied vessels,
For the Master’s use made meet
Rather be nothing, nothing -
To Him let their voices be raised,
He is the fountain of blessing,
He only is most to be praised.”*

Truth when due, is due to the household, and it is of little consequence either to the Spirit, who has it to communicate, or the Church for whom it is intended, whether it come by one vessel or another. If Luther had refused to carry the message given him for the Church, some one else would have carried it. And what he brought was not his, it was the Church’s, and each member of the Church was as much the owner as Luther.

The Lord’s way seems to be to give truth through various channels “—Here a little and there a little.” Possibly, the reason is, lest the vessel should “be puffed up above measure,” and that the Church should know that its Head is the “Fount of every blessing.”

But is there nothing which Bro. B. has brought us as the Spirit’s vessel? Oh yes, while he did not bring the glorious and beautiful advanced truths, nor yet the “prophetic arguments.” [The chronology, showing scripturally that the 6000 years from Adam ended in 1873, was I believe, first dug from the Bible, arranged and printed by Rev. Bowen of England, and is there known as “Bowen’s chronology.” Most of the Prophetic arguments which we now use, were used long ago by Second Adventists misapplied and their harmony not being seen, they were thrown aside.] Bro. B. was permitted to so arrange, (gradually) and harmonize these various Prophetic teachings of time, that now, they give those of us who see them, great joy. He has caused these Precious Gems (God given) to sparkle and shine because of their harmonious arrangement, and the light which he brought us (God given) on the time of the realization of “The exceeding great and precious promises of God.” For this harmony of time we thank God. For his labor in bringing it to us we sincerely and heartily thank Bro. Barbour, and pray that as a vessel the Lord may use him still further to the edification of the body of Christ.

This has been to me a painful recital, and it will be the same to every reader of the “Herald” who is truly interested in what has been taught through it for the last two years, but I believe it is absolutely demanded as an explanation of the article in the May “Herald.” I have finished. My wish is to dismiss the matter entirely from my attention, and I now expect never to refer to the subject again under any circumstance.

I have published this as a “Supplement.” because first I wanted it to go to none but “Herald” readers, and secondly, I would not want the pages of “Zion” s Watch Tower”sullied by a recital so derogatory in some respects to the character of a member of the body.

I have been extremely careful in preparing this article that no part of it should be over stated. First: Because I do not wish to misrepresent and Secondly: Because I have every reason to expect that some sort of an Answer--will be attempted, and desiring never again to mention the subject, I want to make such statements as cannot be contradicted.

Yours, &c., C. T. RUSSELL

THE NARROW WAY AND OTHER WAYS

The Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society began its second series of chart-talks at Allegheny Carnegie hall yesterday afternoon, with Pastor C. T. Russell again as the speaker. This series is to last for three weeks (Sunday afternoons), and is announced to deal with features of Scriptural truth which will prove interesting to all Bible students, the lower portions of the “chart of the ages,” which is kept in constant use, being given particular attention. The subject for next Sunday afternoon will be, “Born of the Spirit,” a rather mysterious title, which is likely to arouse much curiosity and induce a large attendance.

The subject yesterday afternoon was, “The Narrow Way and Other Ways.” The speaker’s texts were: “Enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.” (Matt. 7:13, 14) “An highway shall be there, and a way; it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those; the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it shall not be found there, but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.” (Isa. 35:8-10)

DIFFERENCE IN TWO WAYS

Attention was directed to the wide difference between the two ways expressed in these Scriptural statements one a narrow, difficult, stony way, with opposition at every step; the other a highway a traveled, well-kept roadway; distinguished from the former by the entire absence of evil influences to interfere with progress. In leading up to his explanation of the two diversely described ways the speaker noted the past findings regarding different epochs of man’s history, pointing especially to the three great periods called “worlds,” the first of which, extending from creation to the flood, the second, from the flood to the second advent, and the third into illimitable future.

In this second period all Scriptures were to be applied which speak of the domination of Satan, the “god of this world.” “the prince of this world, and the world itself as an ”evil world.” In bringing an end to this period, and ushering in the next period of time, the third world, the first work to be accomplished is to bind Satan, the instigator of evil, that he may deceive the nations no more for 1,000 years. During a portion of the period of time encompassed in the “second world,” the narrow way is said to be in existence a way so difficult of access that it is said “few there be that find it,” and this because in this period Satan is still unbound, and still fulfilling the apostle’s word. “The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not.”

GOD VERSUS SATAN

While Satan is exercising his power, and endeavoring to oppose the way of righteousness. God is calling out His elect class. His “little flock,” the church of Jesus Christ, which finds its experiences exceedingly trying and difficult because of the circumstances under which they are thus called. Many who would desire to live soberly, righteously, godly, are hindered from doing so because they note the opposition given to all of that class, and they therefore draw back from a full devotion of themselves to the Lord's service, doubtless wondering in their own hearts why God made the way so narrow and difficult, instead of plain and easy of following. Not merely these, but Christians in general, it was suggested, must have frequently queried the reasonableness of the narrowness of the way to life, so that in the present time it is true, "Whosoever will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution."

The explanation for this was declared to be that God desired a class of specially selected ones to be the church of Christ a class so thoroughly tried and tested that they would be worthy to be accounted "joint-heirs" with Him in His kingdom. Because Christ is to bear such a relationship to the faithful ones who walk in the narrow way, and is called in the Scriptures, "The head of the church, which is His body," there was no opportunity for walking in the narrow way previous to the beginning of the gospel age. Jesus is "the captain of our salvation," and if such, He is the chief One the One who first walked in the way. So He says, "He that would be my disciple, let him take up his cross and come after Me" not precede Him, as those would have done prior to the gospel age, had they been called to walk in this way. The thought is that none could be the Lord's disciples, in this special sense, and go before Him.

WHEN SUFFERING IS AT AN END

When the present world is at an end, when the gospel age shall have been completed, the church made up, and glorified, and Satan bound, there will be no longer necessity for any man to suffer persecution for Christ's sake no one to cause him to suffer. Since Christ is to be the king, and the government of that time will be righteousness, everything will be favorable to righteousness, and only those who would do evil shall receive punishment.

Then will be fulfilled the prophetic declaration regarding the highway a way of public travel, easy of access and far from difficult to walk upon. This is provided by the context of the verse referring to the matter: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall rejoice even with joy and singing;... they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God." This has not yet come to pass, for no matter how we may regard this as a symbolical picture we see no correspondency yet to the grand glorious blessings from the presence of God here depicted.

The world is to see the glory of God, in a way that it cannot see it now, on account of the blinding influences being exerted by Satan. Remarkably few of mankind are in such an attitude of mind and heart to appreciate the Lord's excellency and glory. "Strengthen ye the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees; say to them of a fearful heart, fear not... Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf be unstopped; then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing."

A POINT MADE CLEAR

This "then" makes the application of the passage clear when God has come with vengeance upon those who are in deliberate and willful opposition to Him, and with a recompense for those who are His people, seeking to walk in His footsteps at the end of the present evil world when the Lord shall come in all His glory, for the blessing not merely of the church, to be glorified with Him, but for all the families of the earth. It is "then" that those blinded with ignorance and superstition and various false representations of the divine character and plan shall have their eyes opened.

It is difficult today to get the eyes of the blinded ones opened, but "then" He who shall have come for the fulfillment of the promised blessings of the world, which He redeemed with His own blood, shall quickly enlighten those who are to be blessed. And so, the lameness that belongs to the fallen condition of humanity shall be healed such lameness as has hindered many from following in the footsteps of the Lord and "making straight paths for His feet."

The speaker claimed a fulfillment along physical lines of the whole statement, but pointed out that it must be applied to the mental and moral conditions, as well, to be fully carried out. "In the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert; the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water. And an highway shall be there."

DIFFICULTIES WILL BE OVER

There is no difficulty then, as in this age. The gospel age has to contend with all the difficulties and stones of stumbling and ravenous beasts, which may be found represented in the lion of intemperance, the beast of passion, pride, temper, hindering from walking in the narrow way, and which would devour the spiritual life of those who had not sufficient confidence in the Lord to seek His grace in walking in the narrow way. Some people who have said that this highway, wherein a wayfaring man, though a fool, should not err, is appropriate to the present age, have grievously misunderstood, or else many persons today are a great deal worse than fools.

For, according to the speaker, diverse creeds and theories of men are set up as the standards by which the Lord's word is to be understood, and each overthrowing the other in some form of view, it is evident that one or all must be wrong and, therefore, that the scriptures are out of the way entirely. They do err, and thus argue against the existence of a highway in the present time, in which they might walk with ease. When the highway is in existence the scripture will be fulfilled; “The whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord.” “None shall need say to his neighbor, Know thou the Lord? for all shall know Him, from the least unto the greatest.

WOULD BE A DENIAL OF SCRIPTURE

To say that these conditions exist today would be to deny the scriptures and the evidence of one’s own senses, which recognize that the very coming together of the Lord’s people in assembly is to build one another up in a knowledge of the Lord, because they do not know His way fully.

The speaker urged honesty in dealing with the Lord’s word along this line and a readiness to accept the scriptural presentations, no matter how they might overthrow preconceived opinions based upon imperfect instruction. Since the Lord had distinctly declared the proposed existence at different times of two different ways in which He should be served, it is for His people to accept His word with candor, and conform their views to the facts. Nor should one hastily conclude that the Lord was dealing partially with any class in making a difference in the terms upon which each should worship before Him. The Lord had a distinct purpose in His arrangement.

He wanted a “peculiar people,” tested by evil experiences, for a special work in His kingdom, and hence, instead of delaying the opening of any way until the second advent of the Lord, at the time when evil conditions would be removed, He began in advance, while evil still existed, to call the church to polish, fit and prepare each member of it for a place He would have for them by and by, as stones in the temple of the living God. This process is not necessary for the world, because in the case of the latter their preparation would be to fit them to occupy an earthly position of blessing, attained through experience, instructions and assistance, gained throughout the Millennial age, and the work of the elect class would be to give this teaching and instruction to mankind.

HUMAN CLASSES ON A CHART

The speaker drew attention to the lines upon his chart which illustrated the different positions occupied by the classes referred to in the texts. At the bottom was represented the plane of human degradation the condition in which all the world of mankind exists today as a result of sin. To this plane Adam fell, from a plane of human perfection, the next line above. As a perfect human being, perfectly able to keep the divine law, he transgressed God’s command, and fell from his high estate into degradation and sin death. This is the “broad road to destruction,” which the Lord spoke of in contrast to the narrow way.

It is not a broad road to eternal torment, because the scriptures do not say that that is the end of the wicked but rather that those willfully disobedient to God are to be “punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His power.” In this condition of death all mankind has been included ever since the fall of Adam. The only ones who have escaped from his plane, and been restored to the plane of perfection formerly occupied by Adam are those who have exercised faith in God. Abraham was of this class—“ He believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness.”

REPRESENTATION OF ABRAHAM

He is, therefore, represented as occupying the plane of human perfection but not in an actual sense yet, because the scriptures say this condition is now merely reckoned to those who have the faith, and Abraham is to receive his actually perfect human condition, as a result of his faith, when his blessing shall come with the remainder of the world in the future. All who accept Jesus Christ as their redeemer today have faith in Him and desire to escape from the plane of condemnation, are likewise accounted as possessing life in this reckoned way, and are, therefore, said to be upon the plane of justification human perfection; it is “counted” to us, as it was to Abraham by reason of faith.

The speaker impressed upon his hearers that this justification was not an entering upon the narrow way. It was merely the beginning of the steps which would lead to that way; it signifies a return to God’s favor, as Adam was in God’s favor before he sinned against His law. So the apostle says, “Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.” This is a precious step to take, and we could never get along without it, but it is only preliminary. It does indeed require some self-denial to believe and acknowledge Christ there is some incline and uphill work to it, but it is not the narrow way.

NECESSITY OF CONSECRATION

The next step must be taken before that can be entered upon, viz., consecration. After we have been justified by faith, and after God has accepted us, and we are considered God’s children in a general sense, members of the household of faith represented, in the Jewish type by the Levites, who served in the tabernacle the step of consecration brings us to the position of the priesthood the royal priesthood, which God is selecting in the present time. To all the Levite or justified class come the apostle’s words, “I beseech you, therefore, brethren (mark, he does not say sinners, for they could not obey this injunction at all), by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God, and your reasonable service.”

There is something, then, beyond being brethren, Levites; sacrificing does not belong to this class, but it belongs to the priest, as the apostle declared, no man could be an offerer without something to offer, and the offering we are to make is our justified selves in the Lord's service, as again we have the apostle's words," We thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead, and that we which live should live henceforth not unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us."

This signifies sanctification, holiness far more than that doctrine frequently means amongst so-called holy people, said the speaker, because they frequently think of holiness as simply abstaining from sin; but we are to not only abstain from sin and to seek to walk righteously before God, but we are to devote our lives to God's service completely, with all that we are and possess, seeking to use these things to His praise and to our own progress along the lines of His will, expressed in His word.

SACRIFICE BY THE LORD

This was what the Lord Jesus did He offered Himself as a living sacrifice, and for three and a half years carried out that covenant of consecration. So each individual who wishes to be of His church must follow in His steps, taking up his cross of self-denial, and sacrificing earthly interests for the Lord and the interests of the higher condition to which we are called.

The new condition to which we enter when we make such a consecration, according to the speaker, is called in the Scriptures "a new creature" new aspirations, desires and hopes, of a spiritual, heavenly kind, the feeding of which becomes a prominent part in the individual's life, and for the advantage of which the temporal sacrifices will continually minister. This new creature receives the trials and testings of the narrow way; it develops according to its faithfulness, and its aspirations and hopes are toward the great blessing of a place in the heavenly kingdom of the Lord a clothing with spiritual powers, and endowing with such abilities as will enable it to execute the great blessing work purposed to be poured upon the world, in its time of opportunity, when the highway of holiness shall have been opened up.

ALL ARE HEIRS OF GOD

To this the apostle referred when he said, "God's spirit witnesseth with our spirits that we are children of God; and if children then heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may also be glorified together." The suffering is linked with the special reward, because without walking in the narrow way of sacrifice the glory will never be attained. The kind of glory to which such a consecrated individual will ultimately attain was referred to in the words of Peter: “There are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we may be made partakers of the divine nature.”

The stupendous proposition, therefore, is that he who accepts the opportunity of walking in the narrow way, and is faithful to the end, shall ultimately be raised to a nature such as that possessed by God Himself, as further promised by the Lord Jesus in His message to the church, through John: “He that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with My Father in His throne.”

APPEAL TO THE AUDIENCE

The speaker closed with an earnest exhortation to those present to consider the wonderful privileges thus expressed in the Lord’s word, and to accept the terms as well as the blessings which such acceptance carried. He deprecated excitement and undue haste in making so portentous decisions, and the generally wild efforts exhibited at revival services, urging that the Lord Jesus took a different course, and so instructed His people, representing that the counting of the cost of such an undertaking required deep meditation and prayerful consideration.

But to all influenced by the right spirit, and having a desire of heart to do the Lord’s will, the conclusion could only be one a determination to show the Lord the full appreciation of heart experienced for all His mercies, and a consequent complete consecration of life to Him who had redeemed that life from death.

Although the way is declared to be narrow, the promises were represented as complete to sustain every individual who would completely surrender himself to the direction of his Redeemer, who had said, “My grace is sufficient for thee; My strength shall be made perfect in weakness.”

FRIENDLY HINTS ON BIBLE STUDY

Our Redeemer prayed for his disciples—"Sanctify them through thy truth;" and then added, "Thy Word is truth." (John 17:17.) He thus showed us a general principle, and one which experience demonstrates—that God's truth is his agency for developing his children. Not general truths, however good and beautiful, such as botany, astronomy, etc., but truths which God reveals in his Word, are those which tend to produce in us, if we heartily receive them, the graces of God's spirit—the spirit of the truth.

But the questions arise—"What is God's truth?" "What is God's Word?" For it will be remembered that at the time our Lord said, "Thy Word is truth," the New Testament had not been written. It does not follow, however, that our Lord meant that the Law and the Prophets (the Old Testament) alone were to be considered the Word of God adapted and intended to sanctify us; but, rather, that all that God had caused to be written by the prophets, together with all the explanations of those Old Testament writings which God would supply through Christ's teachings, and afterward through the writings of the apostles, were to be esteemed as God's Word—revelations of truth which would sanctify those who believe them and who act accordingly. This he clearly showed when he declared, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me;" "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life;" "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now; howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, and he will show you things to come." John 7:16; 6:63; 16:12,13.

It will be seen, therefore, at once, that the opinion of many, that the prophecies of the Old Testament are all fulfilled and not now worthy of reverent study, is a great mistake—a serious mistake, because it blinds many to the great and beautiful promises therein revealed which are still future and vitally associated with the true Christian faith and hope, and therefore essential to complete sanctification. Of these, first in prominence are the promises of Christ's Millennial Kingdom and of the great blessings which shall accrue to the world of mankind, and to the earth as man's future home, of pleasing prospect and bountifully teeming with luxuries and comforts for the willingly obedient. Second are the promises to Israel of a restoration to divine favor and to a share in the Millennial work of blessing (educating, ruling and lifting up) mankind—promises which state as well as imply that the old patriarches are to be restored to life as perfect men, to be examples of what perfect manhood is and of what all the fallen race may attain unto by obeying the Lord Jesus, then, with his Church, the Ruler of earth.—Acts 3:19-22; 7:37; 1 Cor. 6; 2.

Indeed, it is largely because of a failure to appreciate the Old Testament prophecies, that so many of God's children have gotten so sadly mixed on all the teachings of the New Testament—shown by the conflicting creeds of Christendom. The apostles were continually referring to the statements of the prophets and interpreting them, and reasoning from THAT BASIS. (See, for instances, Acts 2:24-32; 3:19-22; Rom. 11:2,8,9; Gal. 3)

From the prophecies they deduced and stated conclusions regarding the Lord's will in the present age and declared his future purposes. (See Rom. 11:25-32; Acts 15:14-16.) No wonder, then, that those who ignore the Old Testament should but dimly understand the arguments of the New Testament which are based upon those previous revelations.

YOU WILL REQUIRE ASSISTANCE

If you are intellectually bright, and have large perceptive and reflective powers and a good education, you can take the Bible and by years of patient, critical study, you may prove to your satisfaction its divine inspiration and greatness from its internal as well as its external evidence, and acquire much of its wisdom and truth. But have you all these advantages? And if so, have you at your command the years of time needful to their use? Most of the earnest truth-seekers have not; and even if they all had, would it not be an evident waste of time for each to study out this subject independently of each other one? We do not do so in other sciences, but make use of each other's assistance—not, however, without proving what we accept, with our best reasoning faculties. And so we should do in Bible Study. And evidently it is the Lord's will that we should do so, since through the Apostle Paul he shows the mutual dependence, one upon another, of the various members of the Church, though some may be specially useful to the body, as eye or as right hand members.—1 Cor. 12:14-21.

THE CREDIBILITY OF THE SCRIPTURES

Many able and valuable works upon this subject are obtainable through any bookseller, or in any public library; but the most of these are written in a style for the scholarly only, and, filling several volumes, require more time than many are able to give for such information; and hence few of the masses of the people know, as they ought, the firm foundation which God's Word really affords for their faith. As a result, many have but little faith in the Bible and are often ashamed of it.

But we wish to call your attention to a very brief and pointed treatise on this subject—one which you can digest in a few hours, and which will strengthen your faith in God's Word for the remainder of your life. It is contained in the first three chapters of a book entitled "The Plan of the Ages." Whatever else you may or may not have read, you should read the pointed arguments there presented. And as parents and as Christians you should assist the young and the many who are skeptically inclined in this day of doubts, and help them to get settled and grounded upon the Bible as God's Word. In the case of your own children this is specially a duty that you owe them. And in the case of others, remember that, in God's sight, we are each our brother's keeper.

ONLY THE MEEK WILL BE TAUGHT

When satisfied that the Bible is really God's Word and intended to be the guide of his children, a lamp to our feet, while we walk by faith and not by sight, until the Millennial Day dawns, you will want to study it. How shall you begin?

Begin as you would with any other study—systematically. The first requisite is a guileless heart—a simple heart—one not too wise to be instructed—a heart that realizes that the information it seeks can come from God alone, that human wisdom is insufficient—a heart that is ready "as a little child" to be taught of God. "The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way." (Psa. 25:9.) Because "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble.” (Jas. 4:6) Such, then, must all be who would be “taught of God.” Others, will fail to understand God’s Word; for he has arranged it so that others shall not understand it.—Dan. 12:10; Matt. 13:10,11.

Again, the Apostle says, “Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman who needeth not to be ashamed”—

RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH – 2 Tim. 2:15

To rightly divide the Word of truth, you should be shown how by some one who has learned how, otherwise you will find it a tedious and laborious task, costing precious years. And, alas! we regret to have it to say that few of God’s children have learned this secret of Bible study, and few, therefore, can aid you to any considerable degree. Instead of recognizing the various ages and dispensations—the Patriarchal age, the Jewish age, the Christian age and “the Ages to Come”—and seeing the work God is gradually perfecting through these ages, they think of God’s dealing as almost aimless and without order. Hence, instead of rightly dividing and applying the various statements of Scripture severally to the various ages and dispensations to which they properly belong, they mix them all together and have a disorderly and seemingly contradictory mass which they cannot understand and can scarcely realize to be a revelation at all.

But, on the contrary, when the various ages are clearly in mind, and when the plan of God with reference to them is once seen, the Bible becomes an open book before the humble student—a great treasure-house of truth and grace, every statement of which can be definitely located. And when rightly applied to its proper age—past, present or future, as the case may be—the whole record from Genesis to Revelation falls into harmony.

As a help in the direction of the right dividing of God’s Word, we commend the book whose first three chapters we have already referred to, whose name, “The Plan of the Ages,” indicates but slightly its value as an exponent of the way in which the Word of God should be rightly divided—dispensationally—in order to be “meat in due season” to the household of faith.

The foundation here laid, in an understanding of God’s dispensational dealings, will lead the mind of the earnest student into green pastures of spiritual refreshment and strength, and open the way to and into “the deep things of God,” both of knowledge and experience. Begin, then, with the study (not a reading merely) of “The Plan of the Ages,” and then go on unto perfection. The foundation properly laid in a heart-felt desire to know and obey God’s Word, and an outline of the ages in mind, your building up in the most holy faith, with truths which will satisfy you wholly, will be an easy task.

THE SWORD OF THE SPIRIT, WHICH IS THE WORD OF GOD, should be well sharpened. That is to say, you will want a Bible with marginal references. If you can afford it, you should get what is termed a “Teachers’ Bible,” which gives not only the text of the common version, and references, and marginal readings, but also an Index of Bible topics, a partial Concordance, a partial Dictionary of Bible names, places, etc., as well as maps and much other useful general information. Then you will want one or both of the—

TWO GREAT BIBLE CONCORDANCES

The best Concordance for finding the location of a passage of Scripture quickly is the old, reliable Cruden’s Concordance. Beware, however, of its theological definitions: they are very erroneous, unscriptural, and hence misleading if trusted.

But the most valuable in another way (though a passage cannot be found so quickly in it as in Cruden’s) is the justly celebrated work of recent years, known as Young’s Greek, Hebrew and English Analytical Concordance. The author, Professor Young, of Edinburgh, Scotland, a ripe scholar of now world-wide fame, has here given to God’s children (many of whom have little or no knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew languages in which the Bible was written), a quick and ready means of ascertaining what Greek or Hebrew word was used in any particular place, and the meaning of that word as defined by Prof. Young: and the meaning may be judged still more accurately by running the eye down the column and thus comparing the various uses of the same work in other passages. All should have one of these Concordances. All who can afford it should have both—Cruden’s for quick general use, and Young’s for critical examination of any word or passage; but the latter is preferable, if you get only the one. Then you will need, also,

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

This is another of God’s special blessings for our day; and with the foregoing described helps is worth more than a four years’ course in the Greek and Hebrew languages. First, it gives the Greek text for the Greek scholar. Second, it gives immediately under the Greek text a literal translation of it, word for word. Third, it gives in another column a smooth English translation suitable for common reading, showing also the emphasis of the Greek, usually lost to English readers. While we cannot say that this work is perfect, we can say that we know of no other translation of the New Testament so valuable to the critical student—and this includes all to whom we write.

The above, with the various volumes of the Millennial Dawn series, of which “The Plan of the Ages” is the first, really constitute an outfit of the needful helps. But if you have the means to spare, or if you can deny yourself in some other way, you will also find the following very useful:—

(1) Rotherham's Translation of the New Testament. This is in many respects an excellent translation, and, besides, has marks showing the emphasis of the Greek, not shown in the common English translations. It is valuable, as any translation is, for critical study of a text. A comparison of the different methods of expression gives the thought of the original more clearly to the studios.

(2) Leeser's Translation of the Old Testament. This, too, is valuable. It is a translation by an unconverted Hebrew, who certainly has no bias favorable toward Christianity. This is the recognized translation among the Hebrews.

(3) For general information upon religious subjects (not for doctrinal instruction, though it contains a brief history of all doctrines and religions), we commend to you a Bible Dictionary. Smith's Bible Dictionary is justly popular, and though we cannot endorse its theological definitions, the work is valuable and instructive aside from these.

NOW, ANOTHER WORD-STUDY PRAYERFULLY

Study of the Bible should never be attempted in any but a prayerful attitude of mind. It should be remembered that the nearer our hearts and lives come into sympathy and union with our God, the more receptive to truth we will be, and the more ready to understand it. Therefore while studying pray without ceasing; let your hearts continually thank the Lord for every item of truth you may see, no matter who or what has been his helping hand to lead you to it and make it plain; and ever be desirous of knowing all that God has to reveal. Be cautious, too, lest you should allow prejudice to keep you from simplicity of mind; and also lest Satan, through any man or woman or teaching, should beguile you into error after you have gotten free from prejudice and out into God's sunlight. Our constant prayer should be,—Be thou my teacher, Lord, and use thou whom or what thou wilt in giving me the lessons.

Make sure, however, if even an angel from heaven preach to you any other gospel than that founded upon Christ crucified, that you reject it as spurious. (Gal. 1:8.) All gospels which reject the blood (death) of Christ as the basis of reconciliation and blessing come not from God, whoever may present them, or in however pleasant words they may be put to you. They are from the great adversary and deceiver, the devil, whoever may be his willing or unwitting agents, or whatever his agencies.

But avoid the mistaken idea of some, that prayer takes the place of study. Prayer may and should co-operate with study in relation to God's Word, but it cannot take its place any more than in mathematics or astronomy. Hence, if you feel prompted by spiritual laziness or habit, or what not, to pray to God to give you a knowledge of his Word and plan without patient, earnest study and the use of the various helps which he has provided, reflect that you are not justified in asking God to give you in miraculous manner, of your own choosing, what he has already put within your reach in another manner, which is his choice. Reflect, too, that before asking God to do a miracle for your instruction, you should learn obedience; and that he has said to you and to us all, “Study” (2 Tim. 2:15), “Search the Scriptures.”—John 5:39.

HOW HELPS MAY BECOME HINDRANCES

Beware how you permit any man’s thinking to take the place of your own. God does indeed make use of one and another of his children in pointing out to others the meaning of his Word. But, while humbly and thankfully making use of any helper’s assistance and esteeming such very highly in the Lord for their work’s sake, we want to remember not to become worshipers of men (messengers—Col. 2:18), not to swallow any man’s teachings without critical examination in the light of our lamp—the Word of God. We may remember with profit that man is not our teacher, but God; and that any man used of him as an under-teacher will, to the extent that he is in God’s employ, teach, expound and harmonize his Word, and not merely theorize on isolated passages of Scripture aside from their context.

When any new thought is suggested as to the meaning of a certain passage, turn to the passage and examine it critically, using the various translations of it at your command to see whether it seems to sustain the theory suggested. Next, examine the preceding and succeeding verses to see if the idea suggested be in harmony with the entire argument of the inspired writer. If it is not in harmony reject it at once: do not trifle with evident misapplications. If, however, it seems to be in harmony with the immediate context, measure it with all other Bible statements bearing on or relating to the subject. Whatever you receive after thus testing and proving will stay with you. You will know what you believe and why you believe it.

PROVE ALL THINGS— HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD

If the student be a mechanic or a clerk or a house-keeper, with but limited time for study and using helps, he will soon come to the conclusion that the Apostle cannot have meant that each child of God should study up all the religious beliefs of the world, heathen and Christian; for life would be too short for a thorough study of each, if that were the only business. Nor can he have meant that we should study up all the creeds of “Christendom,” with all the books which their various theologians have written in defense or explanation of their theories. Life would also be too short for this.

There is a simple, quick way, however, by which those who have accepted Christ as their Redeemer and King can prove all doctrines to be either true or false as fast as they are presented to them. We will lay it before you. It may save you years of doubt and uncertainty, and will surely save you much time from confusing study of theories which are only misleading, and it will quickly place your feet upon the sure foundation, and give you time to study in the right direction.

If you have received Christ and learned of him at all, you will not need to look at any system or theory which does not recognize him. You have already proved all other ways of salvation false. Now about theories which do acknowledge Christ. Though they be legion they all may be divided into two classes—those which teach a progressive development, or the gradual evolution of the human family from a lower to a higher state, and those which, on the contrary, claim that God created man perfect, in his own likeness, and that he fell from his perfection, mentally, morally and physically, by disobedience.

The first of these acknowledges Christ as a teacher or guide only. Its advocates claim that he saves or develops men by his example, but that a sacrifice for our sins was unnecessary, except as the condescension to be an example cost him sacrifice.

The second of these views acknowledges Christ as Redeemer, as well as Teacher. It accepts the Bible statement relative to man's fall from divine favor—from perfection, from life, to disfavor and condemnation to death as a sinner. It acknowledges Christ's sacrifice finished at Calvary as the payment of man's penalty, the price of his redemption, the basis of all God's favor to sinners in the forgiveness of sins past and weaknesses present, and the hope of a future return in God's due time to a state of perfection and harmony with him.

The last named view is the Bible view, as you know; and it becomes an easy matter to judge, upon this line, any theory you may hear or read. Any theory which has no important place for the fall, and for the cross, its remedy, is not of God, for these are the fundamentals of God's revealed plan.—1 Cor. 15:3,4,20-22.

Whatever you come across that will stand this test is on the right foundation, and is worthy of further examination and criticism with the Bible as the only standard. But any system which does not stand this test should be rejected promptly and forever. The more you seek to examine that which you see to be on a false, unscriptural basis, the more you will entangle and confuse yourself in the snare of the great adversary who seeks to beguile the bride of Christ as he did the bride of Adam. (Col. 2:4, 18; 2 Cor. 11:3.) Beware, therefore, of every theory as soon as you prove it to be off the ransom foundation, as soon as you find it contradicting God's expressed penalty for sin, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die,” and affirming Satan’s lie, “Ye shall not surely die:” parley no longer with it. “Neither shall ye touch it,” which should have been Eve’s motto, should be yours, with reference to every doctrine proved false by the only standard—God’s Word—See Gen. 3:2-4.

A WORD IN CONCLUSION

It is needful not only that you have the helps, and use them, as above suggested, but it will be needful that you begin to let shine upon others whatever light may reach you—not in pride, as though it were a discovery that you had made, but in humility, anxious only to lead others to the light for their profit and to honor your Father in heaven. (Matt. 5:16.) The exercise of spreading the truth will react favorably upon your own soul, and you will be brought more and more into fellowship with all the truth-hungry children of God.

Then, you will want the semi-monthly visits of ZION’S WATCH TOWER, with the information and assistance it is continually giving to God’s saints. It is entirely unsectarian, thoroughly loyal to the Word of God, discards the wood, hay and stubble of human tradition, and builds with the precious promises of God upon the one sure foundation, Christ and his sacrifice for sin. The price is moderate—designed merely to meet the actual expenses of publication. To any interested but unable to pay $1.00 per year, the Tract Society which published this tract will send the paper free upon request. We also loan to the Lord’s poor, who will promise a careful reading and to return it, the book mentioned above as a special helping hand in Bible study—The Plan of the Ages.

So, then, none are so poor as to be unable to get some helps to Bible study.

Yours in the love and service of the Truth,

A CONSPIRACY EXPOSED AND HARVEST SIFTINGS

Little did the Editor think, when penning words of caution to watch and pray, printed in our issue of April 1, under the caption, “Let Ye Enter into Temptation,” that they were so soon to prove so necessary and timely as they have since proved.

The story we here relate is a sad one; but it seems our duty to tell it in detail, because those most concerned were introduced to our readers and frequently mentioned in these columns in warmest terms of brotherly regard. It is proper now, therefore, that you should know of their deflection. This painful story we have published separate from our regular issues, that if possible only the elder, and it is to be hoped steadfast, readers of the Watch Tower may know of it, lest others—"babes"—might be stumbled.

Those who have been readers of the Watch Tower for several years, well know that on the strength of the words of our Lord and the Prophets and Apostles (Dan. 12:10; Psa. 91:7; 1 Cor. 3:13; Matt. 13:41) we have been expecting "siftings" and "stumblings" and the "falling" of many in this "evil day." Such, therefore, like ourselves, will not be so greatly surprised at the facts, although like ourselves they may well be surprised, each time, to know who stumbles and over what. Unsuspicious hearts are always surprised; and the best and purest hearts are generally unsuspecting.

To prepare the reader for what follows, it is proper to state that the conspiracy of which it is our unpleasant task to tell you, and of which the Editor was made the subject, resembled more the betrayal of our dear Master (as some of the friends here remarked) than anything else to which we can compare it. We had no suspicion of it whatever, until five days before, and only since have learned that it had been gradually forming for the past two years; that it had been expected to "explode" the matter like "a bomb, and blow [dear?] Brother Russell and this work sky-high" at the Spring Meeting a year ago, and by thus breaking his influence to get free from what they call "bondage to Brother Russell," and force open to their own uses and abuses the columns of ZION'S Watch Tower, which they claim a right to command;—because it is Zion's Watch Tower, and they are members of Zion.

They were greatly disappointed, it appears, when that meeting was abandoned in favor of the Chicago Convention later, but declared that the "bomb" would "explode in less than eighteen months"—referring doubtless to the expected Memorial meeting this Spring. But Providence again foiled the scheme by leading us unwittingly to decide not to call such a meeting this year. We knew at the time that they were greatly disappointed, for they said so; but we had no idea that they had such murderous plans and hearts. We use the word "murderous" advisedly, because we esteem that to kill the character and influence of a man is a baser murder than to kill his body merely, and that the murder of the character of one the least of God's children is worse in the sight of God than the physical murder of a worldly man. (See Matt. 18:6; 1 John 3:15.) Perhaps few realize this matter so; but we submit that it is the correct view, as shown by the foregoing Scriptures. If all could get this true view of the matter, they would see the importance of the Apostle's words—Let all evil speaking, backbiting, slander, malice, envy, strife, be put away from you, as becometh saints.—Eph. 4:31; Col. 3:8-10.

About January '93, when they still expected the Spring Meeting to be held that year, they began preparing for it, by hints and suggestions, privately given, that there was something grievously wrong with Brother Russell's business character and methods. This was expected to undermine the confidence of the flock here and to prepare them to believe the "bomb," when exploded at the time of the Convention, when representatives of the truth from all over the country would be here. Of course this was done with many protestations of deep sorrow for "poor Brother Russell"—nothing being stated positively, but everything bad being hinted. My friends would have brought the matter to my attention at once, but of course were diffident about inquiring into my personal affairs and business,—especially as they knew nothing definitely to inquire about. At last, however, I got some idea that "some ugly rumors" were afloat, and at once called together about forty of the principle brethren and sisters of the congregation here, including those whose names seemed to be associated with the "ugly rumors,"—which were some of these who, we now find, were even then conspirators. We stated the case, and requested and urged that any and every thing known be told to us all, so that if any misunderstanding had occurred it could be set straight at once; for I assured them that there could be no real foundation to any rumors, my business career, like my religious course, being straightforward and based on principles of justice and truth. All denied any knowledge of anything derogatory to my character, and went away satisfied, except the conspirators, one of whom, (Mrs. Zech) I now learn, while speaking fairly to my face and seemingly joining with the others, remarked privately, afterward, "I could have turned the entire course of that meeting if I had chosen,"—referring evidently to the "bomb" which it had been decided should be kept,—to be exploded at the expected Memorial Convention of '94.

At the said meeting at my home, I gave a little resume of my business affairs, protesting, however, that I did so only for their and the truth's sake, and that my business affairs had as much right to privacy as those of any one else; and so I here protest again, but, later on, will go into details,—only for the sake of hindering God's "little ones" from being "stumbled" by the false statements which have already been circulated privately, by letter, and at the Chicago Convention last Summer, and now, within the past few days, in print (the oral "bomb" project having failed). The venomous circular recently issued by O. von Zech, E. Bryan, J. B. Adamson and S. D. Rogers is now to be the "bomb" designed to destroy confidence in Brother Russell (whom Providence has made to some extent an under-shepherd to the Lord's sheep), and thus to shatter the work—in order that the conspirators may gather some of the wreckage; for already they have a new paper under way.

So much for the conspiracy, of which we were in ignorance until a few days ago. Meanwhile, the conspirators were fair to my face and spoke endearing words, as will be shown later on in this case by some of their letters to myself and wife, written during the very time they were concocting their scheme and keeping their “bomb.” Meanwhile, we were their sincere friends, and all but one of them has shared the hospitality of our home within the last three months. Yes, at the very time that they were preparing the circular, designed to assassinate my character, one of them, in the presence of a dozen brethren, offered me his hand, as Judas kissed the Master. But by that time, although I knew much less than I now do of his perfidy, I knew him to be my slanderer and refused his hand, telling him that the right hand of fellowship meant something to me, and that I had no desire to give it to those who stealthily and murderously stabbed my character behind my back.

But now for the details of the matter:—

To give a connected view of the things which have transpired here lately, we must recall to the TOWER readers the facts stated in our issue of April 1, under the caption—“The Work in England.” (And we assure you that every word of it is strictly correct; and that the figures given, as showing the funds of the Tract Society supplied in books for Brother Rogers' expenses, are net after deducting all money received from him and all books transferred to other colporteurs in England and all books now stored there. These figures, however, include books supplied to Bro. Rogers in the U. S. before he started for England, from the proceeds of which his expenses there were to be paid. It should be noted, too, that we state in the TOWER the amount of money Bro. Rogers would have received for the books at “retail.” We thus particularize because he, in an ambiguous manner, denies the statement.)

We heard Bro. Rogers' proposed mendicant plan in the presence of our office assistants (who with ourselves constitute our household), until Bro. Rogers said that he had told us all about it and “could think of nothing more to explain.” As before stated, we assured him that we could not think of adopting his plan and discarding the successful one now in operation, but urged him to try it himself if he felt sure that it was the Lord's will concerning him. He replied that we were “rejecting the Lord's message,” etc. (We learn since that he no longer relies for leading upon the Word of the Lord and his providences in Answer—to prayer, but that, instead, he sits down and thinks by the hour—as he did during his stay at our home—and believes that the Lord thus reveals things to him. Alas! how many have been misled by this and similar misapprehensions, and to the neglect of the Word of God, which is “able to make wise unto salvation,” and through which the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work. (2 Tim. 3:15-17) Just what bad condition of heart lies at the bottom of such a course we may not be able to discern, but it seems generally to be spiritual vanity.) This was Monday evening; the next two days he visited considerably with Bro. Zech. We know not what passed between them except that by Wednesday night their causes were one; Bro. Zech evidently appreciating the idea of “taking the money from the fish’s mouth.” If Bro. Zech thus embraced Bro. Rogers cause it was but natural that Bro. Rogers should fall in with Bro. Zech’s “grievances,” and they strengthened each other’s hands and hearts in evil. We since learn that on the Saturday evening previous one of Bro. Zech’s family, Paul Koetitz visited Bro. Erlenmyer (whom he had previously tried to poison against me) and in great glee said, We have Bryan and Adamson and now here is Rogers all the way from England. It seems as if the Lord sent him at this time. That makes four, and there are a lot more. Just wait, something terrible is going to happen. And Bro. and Sister Zech and Paul Koetitz were at his house a week previous and stayed until midnight talking about Bro. Russell and a coming catastrophe. They gave Bro. Russell a black character, and Bro. Zech said he was going to tell all to the Congregation, soon. Bro. E. said, Why not talk the matter over with Bro. Russell? He replied, It is no use, he would explain everything away;—the congregation ought to know these rotten things. Bro. E. was much distressed and waited in fear for the “boiling pot” to “boil over.”

To start the matter, Bro. Rogers, Bro. and Sister Zech and Bro. Paul Koetitz attended one of the six Wednesday Evening Prayer and Testimony Meetings, held for nearly a year in this vicinity. There, in the absence of Bro. Russell, those meetings were denounced, and Bro. Russell, for his connection with their institution, was denounced as a “pope,” etc. The leader of the meeting in vain called for order and told them that the meeting was for the purpose of divine worship and praise, and for mutual assistance in spiritual development. Mrs. Russell was present and reproved both the interruption and the unkind spirit manifested. She pointed out that while the meetings were suggested and recommended by me, the matter was left to the congregation, nearly all of which had taken up with the suggestion and voted to have the meetings—not for doctrinal discussions, etc., but solely and only for worship and spiritual upbuilding.

She pointed out, also, that none were in any sense forced to attend; and that those who did not care for prayer and conference in harmony with the object of the meetings should stay away and give to the others who did so desire, proper liberty to worship God as they pleased. She pointed out, too, that there are many meetings at which doctrinal subjects, etc., are considered. She showed plainly that while Bro. Russell's course contained nothing like a popish disregard of the wishes of others, the course of Bro. Rogers, in coming from England to force his ideas upon Bro. Russell, and now the course of all these in interrupting the worship of others, was decidedly popish, if indeed it were not worse than popish. Finally the discontents withdrew; Bro. Rogers staying that night at Bro. Zech's.

But I was unsuspecting all the while and lost the morning of that very day from the Lord's work (DAWN, VOL. IV.) to collect money to make good my check of $700, given to Bro. Zech the afternoon before to keep his note from going to protest. The next day Bro. Rogers returned to our house for another conference (at which the entire family was present and which occupied the whole morning), and remained for dinner. After dinner he said he was going to Zech's but would be back for tea; but we told him that as he had been ten days at our home interrupting important work, and as Bro. Zech with whom he was more in harmony had made him welcome, we would not invite him to stop longer in our home. He then went to Bro. Zech's house, where, evidently, it was decided that now would be the most favorable time to explode the "bomb" that had been kept for some eighteen months. So Bro. Rogers was sent west, arranged with Bro. Bryan, who was to manipulate an assorted lot of grievances and damaging charges against Bro. Russell, and got Bro. Adamson into line;—who, it seems, had some previous knowledge of the conspiracy. Brother Adamson had a grievance relative to his tract, as will be explained further on; and being one of the older colporteurs, it was hoped that his name would add to the destructive force of the coming "explosion." They had seen Bro. Russell pass through trying experiences with "false brethren" before, for God and truth were on his side; but never before had they seen such a combination against him; and they encouraged themselves that now Bro. Russell would be humbled in the dust, and they would profit thereby.

THE CONSPIRACY CULMINATES

Accordingly, they—Rogers, Adamson and Bryan—gathered at Bro. Zech's home, and with him and his family, sent out, on Wednesday, April 4, special letters to the Church at Allegheny, inviting them to gather at Bro. Zech's house the next evening to hear matters of importance, etc.,—meaning the "bomb" and smaller fire works.

About forty or fifty of the congregation attended, all of whom except one, so far as we are aware, received special invitations to be present. As we were not present, we submit the report of Bro. E. C. Henninges, the Secretary of that meeting, well known to many of our readers. It is as follows:—

THE SECRETARY'S REPORT

“In response to invitations sent out, signed E. Bryan, S. D. Rogers, J. B. Adamson and O. von Zech, requesting attendance at Bro. Zech's house on April 5, at 7:30 P. M., to hear ‘things concerning our highest welfare,’ about forty of the Church at Allegheny attended. Finding on arrival that it was to be a congregational meeting at which some kind of charges were to be preferred against Bro. Russell, a Chairman and Secretary were called for by those in attendance, that whatever was done might be ‘done decently and in order;’ besides which, it seemed proper that if the Congregation were to ‘hear’ the complaints, it implied that they were to render their judgment or verdict, and all this required proper order and a congregational head or chairman to the meeting and an authorized record. And further, some present who had knowledge of Bro. Russell's past experiences with Bros. Zech, Bryan and Rogers, foresaw that it would be most unjust to have the self-constituted impeaching committee appoint one of their own number to manage the trial, as they insisted on doing, and at the same time call it a congregational meeting. After nearly an hour had been spent in trying to get the congregation to sit quietly and hear their best friend traduced, without any power to properly inquire into facts, etc., the four complainants were overruled by the congregation, and Bro. H. C. Wolf was chosen Chairman, and myself Secretary, of the meeting.

“Bro. Bryan was first introduced, but became, under some interruption, so excited, disorderly and rebellious that he grievously insulted the congregation by saying, ‘I refuse to recognize the authority of the Chair.’ It was promptly moved and seconded that we hear Bro. Bryan no further; but an amendment, giving him the alternative of apology or dismissal was carried. On his declaration that he had ‘no thought of apology,’ he was dropped, after having occupied the floor for about fifteen minutes.

“Bro. Rogers had the next opportunity, and spoke for nearly two hours. He gave a resume of his plan, which several of us had heard before at Bro. Russell's house, a report of which was given in ZION'S WATCH TOWER of April 1, '94, under the heading, ‘The Work in England.’ At Bro. Russell's he said he had not yet tried his new method. At Bro. Zech's he declared that he ‘had tried this method largely in London,’ and it was ‘very successful.’ He stated, as grievances, four ways in which he claimed Bro. Russell had injured him. (1) By pointing out that the printed page is the best way to preach the Gospel. (2) On account of this he got the feeling that he must sell so many books per day to pay expenses, and this kept him from trusting the Lord. These two things kept him in a great bondage which he had felt, but the cause of which he and only lately realized. (3) By telling him that he had `NO talent` for public speaking. (4) By advising him to change his London meeting to one in Bible-class style. This last he regards as an `assumption of control of my privileges.´

“Bro. Zech spoke at odd times against Bro. Russell in general terms, to the effect that Bro. Russell had too much authority and lack of love for the brethren; also `Bro. Russell does great sins; and, if you do not want to hear it, you are partaker of his sins.´ Twelve o’clock, midnight, came without Bro. Adamson having had his say except in the opening prayer, in which he thanked God for having the privilege of sharing in `this great reform movement´ for liberty and equality amongst the brethren.

“Upon motion, the meeting adjourned, while Bro. Bryan shouted that they would be heard from fully in a few days—that a hall would be rented where they [the four] could have matters all their own way, and that it would not be called as a congregational meeting and that ` this thing will not down; we will print it and publish it to all the world,´ etc.

“Respectfully submitted, E. C. Henniges.”

After the meeting had dismissed, a few were invited to stay longer, and did stay until four o’clock A. M. Then were detailed the other matters, and through some who were there we finally got to know about the “bombs,” etc. When asked if they had gone to Brother Russell and asked whether he could or would give them an explanation, they replied that some of the minor charges had been presented and that “he had explained them away; ” but they had never mentioned the two leading items (the “bombs” which they had been keeping for eighteen months). When asked why they had not presented those leading matters to Bro. Russell they replied,—We knew before-hand that Bro. Russell could Answer--them, and explain them all away. “And so” said the inquirer, “you thus confess that you did not want an explanation, but wanted to slander Bro. Russell.”

THE CONSPIRACY EXPOSED

The next Sunday afternoon, after the discourse, strangers were dismissed during the singing of a hymn and the regular congregation was requested to tarry. To those who remained we gave a full history of the matter, in substance as we now present it below:—

The conspiracy which reached a head on Thursday evening April 5, at the residence of Bro. and Sister Zech was a surprise to us all; and although we now find that it had been forming for nearly two years, yet, so far as we can learn, Bros. Adamson and

Rogers had nothing to do with it until the past few weeks, although the former had considerable information respecting it. But their readiness to become participants therein speaks for their hearts much of the same “gall of bitterness” which has for a longer period been the power of Satan working in the others;—for we cannot but believe that Satan has been the moving and inspiring conspirator—moving to envy, jealousy, etc., and now, finally, to an attempt to assassinate my character and thus to greatly injure the cause which, under God’s providence, I represent to a considerable degree.

When I shall now relate to you in detail the charges brought against me, you will indeed be surprised that “brethren” could be so confused by Satan as to become his tools and to attempt to make charges and “bombs” OUT OF NOTHING. I am not surprised at Satan; for I well know that he has long sought occasion against me, because of my activity against him and his works and in the service of the Lord. He has repeatedly set for me pitfalls and snares, but by the grace of God I escaped them. I am not surprised, therefore, that after besetting me for years and finding no real charges to bring against me, the great Accuser of the Brethren finally endeavors to misconstrue virtues and make them appear to be vices.

Born in this city of Allegheny, which, with the exception of about three years, has always been my home, I should be, and am, well known here. My religious views, of course, make me a mark, a target; and on this account if anything were known derogatory to my character, either in morals or in my business dealings, surely there are thousands of tongues in Pittsburg and Allegheny that would not hesitate to make abundant use of them to oppose my religious teachings. Can any one doubt that if such things could be produced, Satan would have found willing agents to publish them to the world long ago, to counteract the religious truths I publish, which they oppose, yet cannot gainsay nor contradict?

But what even the godless world would not do, because too honest, Satan now succeeds in getting some “brethren” to attempt. We do not claim that they realize what they are doing;—no, we trust that they do not fully realize the atrocity of their crime. For, if they have pursued their course for eighteen months with a full appreciation of its atrocity there would surely be little hope for them. We trust, therefore, that of them as of some of old it is true,—“they know not what they do,” the god of this world having so thoroughly blinded their moral sight.

Yet while hoping that sometime they may get free from their captor, Satan, we cannot think that they have gotten into their present dreadful condition inadvertently, or merely by error of judgment. If their hearts were right God would not have permitted their poor judgment to get them into their present plight. We fear, from the bad fruits which they are bearing, that ambition and envy have for some time been “roots of bitterness” which only recently blossomed, and are quickly yielding the fruitage denounced in God’s Word as works of the flesh and of the devil,—malice, hatred, contentions, envy, strife, back-bitings, slanders and every evil work.

Those whose hearts could treasure up supposed “bombs” for eighteen months to explode in the midst of the Church and ruin the character of a brother, who meantime did more than a brother’s part to them (as will be shown later), and who all this time called him “dear Brother Russell” and wrote him letters expressive of their love and esteem—these have a depth of wickedness and deceit which would shock a noble-minded worldly man not a professing Christian, and ignorant of the great light of present truth. Blasphemous unbeliever as he is, we believe that Mr. Robert Ingersoll would have no sympathy with such ungodly works of darkness;—he has enough of manhood to keep him out of such a snare of the devil.

BROTHER ROGER’S GRIEVANCES

We will examine these charges separately. We have already referred to Satan as the chief conspirator and it is not difficult to judge of his motives. We have also mentioned Bro. Roger’s grievances—that he was not allowed to overthrow the present Colporteur work and substitute his new preference.

We never forbade Bro. Rogers or others to preach Christ in any and every way they can. Quite to the contrary, as many can testify, we have always urged upon all the necessity for watching for the hearing ears, and that where such are found they do all they can to supplement the influence of the DAWNS. But we have advised, and do still advise, that it is useless to get into a wrangle and dispute and waste time at every house. Far better leave the majority of people to fight with DAWN and the BIBLE, than for the average colporteur, or indeed any one, to attempt it. Stir up the curiosity and interest of the purchaser, so that he will surely read, and then endeavor to water and to harrow before going to the next field of labor,—has been our advise to all colporteurs. And on their Report-blanks we have a space left, in which we request that they mention the number of persons with whom they have had special talks, and another blank in which we request them to state how many they have found who seem to be true wheat. Does this look as though we endeavored merely to see how many DAWNS could be sold, regardless of any work upon the heart?

Furthermore, several of the Brethren who seemed to have some ability for public speaking, have been supplied without charge with large charts similar to the one in DAWN, VOL. 1. (which cost us eight dollars each, in quantities), to enable them to preach when opportunity offers. Bro. Adamson, one of the conspirators, has such a chart. Indeed, about two months ago, we contracted with a painter in Pittsburg to prepare one hundred cloth charts, five feet long, on rollers, suitable for parlor-meetings. These will soon be ready and will be supplied to TOWER readers at about one-third what they would cost to get them up singly. Thus different little groups can edify and instruct each other, as well as their neighbors. Already there are two, and I am now making arrangements for two more, who seem "apt to teach," to go from place to place and hold meetings, public and private, chiefly the latter. Do these things look like objections on my part to oral teaching? Surely not; and Bro. Rogers knows that he misrepresents me, whatever may be his object in so doing.

We do learn, however, since the publication of the article,—"The work in England,"—that Bro. Rogers had a very poor plan for colporteuring. Brother Utley, to whom Bro. Rogers gave some lessons, writes that he could not conscientiously adopt the plan, which, while successful as to sales, really did not make any opening for the reception of the truth. He describes the method thus: Rogers rings bell—servants appears—Rogers says, Please tell the lady that a minister wishes to see her. Servant leaves him in the hallway and he pushes on into the parlor. The lady enters, somewhat indignant at the intrusion, but is awed by the words, "I am a minister of the gospel," and readily consents to her name being entered for the three books to help on some good work.

Sister Burroughs writes on the subject as follows:

"A sister here asked me if I did not think it would be well to let Bro. Russell know how much harm had been done here by Mr. Rogers in his very disagreeable manner of insulting those who refused to buy 'DAWN;' but I thought he was in England and beyond giving further offense here, so we would not trouble you, but took him to the Lord in prayer—that he might be humbled and given a better spirit."

We can assure Bro. Rogers and others that the trouble is not with the colporteur work, but with his methods of doing it. Others are still greatly blessed in it, and are a great blessing to the Lord's hungry sheep, preaching so much of the plan as the people have ears to hear and leaving the books to preach to them many things which they would not hear orally.

Another grievance was that when he came here from England I did not show him special attention more than to others, by inviting him onto the platform, and to speak to the congregation, and to lead a Wednesday meeting.

Such a complaint surprised me greatly, but gave evidence of a root of pride as well as of bitterness. I fear that I have already pushed him forward too much, and to his injury.

Recognizing all of the consecrated as Royal Priests, it has been my custom to ignore distinctions, and when another speaks I myself take a seat with the congregation. Our congregation almost every Sunday has from two to five ex-ministers of various denominations who at times have addressed the congregation,—in my absence.

BROTHER ADAMSON'S GRIEVANCES

Bro. Adamson's grievances may be summed up as follows: He has for some four years held some views upon some of the parables, which I consider incorrect and misleading expositions. These he brought forward at the Spring Convention of 1892, in connection with a little talk to the colporteurs after the close of the meeting proper. Seeing that those who heard him had not generally caught the drift of his thoughts, my remarks following his were few, because I had no desire to hold up his views to ridicule—for some of them were too childish to treat in any other manner. I merely remarked that Bro. A's views of these parables, they would notice, differed a little from my own view, which I stated in a few words. But, said I, since the Lord expounded only a few of his parables, and since we know that they do not mean what they say, but are figurative, it would not be in order for any one to be dogmatic in interpreting them: it is well also to remember that no doctrines should be built upon parables; at most they may be used to illustrate doctrines made plain by non-symbolic scriptures. Thus, kindly, did I push aside, rather than crush, what then seemed to me harmless, nonessential differences.

But, alas! how great a flame a little spark may kindle. Had I realized, then, how an insignificant difference may be used by the Adversary for evil, how gladly I would have spent several hours in pointing out what seemed to me to be Bro. A's errors of interpretation. But I was busy, and said to myself—"In nonessentials charity and liberty."

I now learn that Brother Adamson, like many others, has been under the influence of the Allegheny conspirators for more than a year. I noticed a change in his letters and manner, and in his zeal for the work, but could not account for it, until I learned of the "bombs" conspiracy, a few days ago.

About a month ago several brethren wrote to me saying that Bro. Adamson was preparing and intending to publish a tract, that he was writing to them for money to publish it, and that he had requested that the matter be kept secret from me, which request they felt it a duty to the Lord and his truth to disregard. In some of these letters Bro. A. explained that the coming tract would contain some of his views on some of the parables, and at least one or two parables as treated by Bro. Russell, and some other extracts from Bro. Russell's writings.

Bro. Weber received one of Bro. A's appeals for aid. He answered it kindly saying that he hoped to see him soon. Shortly after, he came from Maryland to Allegheny at Bro. Bryan's request to meet him on very important business, which business he found after his arrival was to sit in judgment upon and condemn Bro. Russell. After this interview, seeing the evil disposition manifested by Bro. Bryan, and his threatening attitude (which will be explained later), and knowing that in some way he was already influencing Bro. Adamson, and that he was about to visit Bro. A., Bro. Weber thought it would be well if he and I should visit Bro. Adamson at once, and if possible shield him from the subtle and evil influence of Bro. Bryan, who had stated his intention of leaving the city for Chicago the next day to see Bro. A. We therefore started that evening.

Our talk with Brother and Sister A. was a kindly one, in which I pointed out what I consider to be his errors of interpretation of some of the parables, particularly one of them (Matt. 5:25,26), which seemed to convey the idea that the world during the Millennial age would each man pay the penalty of his own sins to the "uttermost farthing"; and I showed that with such a view in mind some might draw the conclusion, even if not meant, that the death of Christ was not necessary as a ransom price for all. We then told him of the unhappy change that had come over Bro. Bryan and of his strange and unwarrantable attitude toward myself and the work in general, that he might know something of the spirit which was prompting a new trial of his faith.

But Bro. A's manner was not as formerly, and premonitions of his present condition of heart and mind were distinctly felt. I further stated that his proposition to place his tract in the hands of the Dawn Colporteurs for sale (of which he had not informed me, but which I learned through others) would be contrary to our arrangements with them—that those who handle DAWN should do so to the exclusion of everything else. This is a general rule among those who employ agents in any business, the object being to concentrate the entire effort on the one thing—"This one thing I do." and it is largely due to this regulation that the work has been so successful thus far. Therefore I had to assure Bro. A. that we could not institute any precedent in favor of his tract.

Bro. A. makes a great mistake in saying, "Bro. Russell's spokesman offered me twenty dollars not to print the tract." His reference evidently is to Bro. Weber, who was not my spokesman. Whatever Bro. W. said he said for himself entirely, and he says that what he did was to offer twenty dollars to cover certain expenses already incurred if Bro. A. desired to discontinue the preparation of the tract, and give his energies as formerly in the direction of his special talent—the Colporteur work.

Brother A's grievances are two: (1) We were informed about his tract before he got it out. (2) We found that he had on the face of his tract the words Old Theology Tracts and Tower Bible and Tract Society, Bible House, Allegheny, which deceptions we would not permit. After two notifications that we considered those references unjust and deceptive, and that he had no legal or moral right to so misuse our names to gain credence for his tract, he still persisted, and had many of them printed thus, Bro. Zech upholding him in it and doing the work. Finally, however, threatened Bro. Zech's partner (who although not interested in the truth, seemed to have better ideas of moral honesty) with damages if they let the tracts go out in that form, and they thus were forced to remove the deceptive title pages.

Seeing him thus out of all harmony with the Tract Society, and as he had gotten into debt to the Tower Publishing Co. (not to the Tract Society) $218.00, during the time he spent in preparing his tract, we offered to credit on his TOWER PUB. CO. account all that he ever donated to the Tract Fund—$139—if he so desired and would resign the Directorship in the Tract Society,—to which, being continually absent from the city, he could not and did not give the least attention. This he refused to do; and, from what he says, he intends to owe the Tower Pub. Co. its $218.00 balance as long as he lives.

He states that he spent hundreds of dollars and traveled about without salary, circulating pamphlets at Camp-meetings, etc. It is true that the Tract Fund paid him no stated salary, but the way in which he states the matter is calculated to give a false impression. The fact is, that money was furnished him for all his expenses; and so far as we have any knowledge, he used it for all his expenses. Of the $218 now owing to the TOWER PUB. CO. (not to the Tract Society) $35 was sent him in cash about one month ago to help him make a payment due on some real estate in Chicago, purchased last year.

Bro. Adamson tries his hand at evil surmisings and says, "I believe that much more than I owe was expended in attempting to thwart Bro. Rogers' work in England." I reply, Aside from my time and stationary, I spent only twenty cents for four stamps, and this was not charged to the Tract Fund. Two of these stamps carried to Bro. Rogers the kindly put suggestions that his talent lay not in the direction of public speaking, as mentioned in the article "The Work in England;"—the third stamp carried a reply to Mr. Elliot Stock, of London, who had complained that Bro. Rogers was collecting money under false representations, from people who supposed that they were donating funds to the British and Foreign Bible Society, but who were finding out, from the tracts left them, that they were mistaken. I replied, that surely some mistake had occurred, for I knew that Bro. Rogers would make no misrepresentations, and that none of our colporteurs were authorized to solicit money, directly or indirectly, and that I would request Bro. Rogers to call personally and explain. The fourth stamp was used to advise Bro. Rogers of this, and to caution him that he be very careful that the truth be not evil spoken of, and to ask him to see Mr. Stock and explain matters, as I felt sure he could do; for his letters stated that he represented himself as the agent of our Society.

This is a dispassionate statement of the injury Bro. A. has received at my hands. For all this he and the others reach the conclusion that Bro. Russell can only be completely overwhelmed by calling him,—“The Man of Sin.”

Now we come to the consideration of the grievances of the chief conspirators—Bro. and Sister Zech whom we shall treat as one, including their household, and Bro. Bryan.

BROTHER ZECH'S GRIEVANCES

Here, as it relates to this case, it is necessary to give a little resume of my business history from '81 onward. I was then engaged in mercantile business and had a large store on the principle street of Pittsburg, and three branch stores. These were chiefly controlled by clerks and merely had my supervision; the most of my time being occupied in the publishing of the WATCH TOWER, Food for Thinking Christians, etc., which was circulated in large quantities. As the literary work increased it became necessary to dispose of these stores; and as I found it much easier to spend money than to earn it, I concluded that the capital formerly invested in the stores should not all be lavishly spent even in the good work of circulating the tidings of great joy: that the Lord would be better served if it were invested so that my time could go to his service, than if all were spent at once in his service and I then were obliged to give my entire time to business; for my determination has always been that I would never beg, either for ourselves or for the Lord's cause; but that the same Lord who blessed Peter's fishing and Paul's tent-making (Matt. 17:27; Acts 18:3; 1 Thess. 2:9; 2 Thess. 3:8) could bless, according to his wisdom, my business talents.

My money-capital being limited, I saw that it would never do to invest the funds in mortgages or in a bank, because the interest on the sum would be inadequate to the demands of ourselves and the work. Under what seemed to be a providential leading, I decided to invest with others in some oil property—oil wells. I chose this business because it seemed to be profitable, and because it would require little or no time and personal attention; for others, interested in looking out for their own interests, necessarily looked out for mine also. And this judgment has, on the whole, proved correct—several coins have been taken from this fish’s mouth for our support and for the Lord’s cause.—Matt. 17:27.

When Bro. Zech received the truth and left the Lutheran church, he owned a good property which, aside from being a home free of rent, paid his taxes and left him a net income of about ten dollars per month. Full of zeal for the newly-found truth, he engaged with me to translate articles from the WATCH TOWER into German, which I published in great quantities. He also proposed to translate M. DAWN, VOL. I., and to do the type-setting on same if I would pay for the electro-plates, supply the paper, printing and binding, and that we be share-owners in the work when completed.

We agreed to this, and it was begun. But watching the results of the circulation of the German TOWERS, and seeing them to be very meager, I foresaw that the publication of the German translation of DAWN would be very unprofitable, and so pointed out to Bro. Zech, urging that his income and the needs of his family would not justify him in doing all that his zeal had prompted him to propose. At that time he had translated about two hundred and fifty pages and had set in type about one hundred pages, and my suggestion was: Now, Bro. Zech, suppose we reckon that the time already spent by you on this volume represents the translation of the whole of it and suppose that this be your donation to the German cause, and I will proceed with the publishing, paying all of the expenses—what I shall pay you for your time in translating the remainder of the volume being reckoned as pay for the type-setting already done by you. This was mutually agreed to.

Meanwhile, my early suggestion, that Bro. Zech get at some sort of “fishing” or “tent-making,” forced itself upon my attention. Various occupations were thought of, but none seemed so favorable to him as type-setting, and he requested that he be permitted to learn English type-setting and have the job of preparing the WATCH TOWER every month. I foresaw difficulties from his lack of a knowledge of the trade, as well as from his lack of knowledge of English, and urged that he choose something else. But, as nothing else so favorable offered, and, as he urged that he would see that his blunders should cost me nothing—that the work should cost me no more than I was then paying to a Pittsburg firm—I consented. Under these arrangements I paid him thirty-five dollars a month for a time; afterward when he became more expert, and when we began to set up M. DAWN, VOL. II., I increased the pay to forty dollars per month, and later, when he requested that he be paid by measure for the type-setting, and told me that he thought he could earn more money that way because he was getting more expert and would work longer hours, I consented; but instead of paying him the Union rates, I paid him more; namely forty cents per thousand ems, –because he was a Brother.

Later, when Bro. Zech had inherited something like fifteen to eighteen thousand dollars, from his father's estate in Germany, he thought that he would like to build somewhere near our home; and knowing that I owned some lots opposite it he inquired whether I would sell to him. I assured him that I would be pleased to have him for a neighbor, and gave him a price on eight small lots. I told him that I thought them worth four thousand dollars at the rate other lots in that neighborhood were selling—for him to inquire and thoroughly inform himself—but that as a brother in Christ I would give him a discount of $1000. So he bought the eight lots and paid me $3000. But he has since “whispered” that he was cheated.

Seeking an investment for some of his money, and knowing that I had some interests in the oil business, he asked my advice as to investing in that business. Judging that he would be one greatly affected by either a loss or a gain I advised him not to engage in the oil business.

My book-keeper and general business representative at that time, Bro. Geo. Rindfuss, was very intimate with Bro. Zech. Bro. Rindfuss it seems advised Bro. Zech differently, respecting the oil business, and Bro. Zech seemed to misunderstand me and to imagine that from jealousy I had advised him against his best interests, lest he should prosper greatly;—but nothing could have been farther from my thoughts.

About this time Bro. Rindfuss, as my business representative, called attention to the fact that I would soon need considerable money and suggested that he try and sell an eighth interest in some oil property for which not long before I had paid $3500. I consented. In a few days he reported that he could get $3300, and urged that I accept it as it was for a friend,—Brother Zech. I objected that Bro. Zech was unused to business, and if anything should go wrong he might reflect upon me for having helped him into it. The reply was that the property was as safe as could be found, and that Bro. Zech was not a child and knew what he was doing; and that besides Bro. Zech had been to see the property, while I had never seen it, having bought it on the explanation of Bro. Rindfuss and others, without taking time to visit it. So I consented, and as a favor to Bro. Zech sold him a one-eighth interest in the property for $200 less than it cost me and less than Bro. Rindfuss paid for a similar interest purchased from another party. I still, however, owned an eighth interest.

To the complete surprise of all concerned, the property suddenly declined in oil production, and hence also in value, until what I had paid $3500 for was not worth $700. As we had feared, Bro.

Zech's feelings suffered severely by the fall from great expectation to such realizations; and, although without cause, he proclaimed that I was responsible for his loss. I then felt that it would be to the brother's benefit spiritually and to the Lord's praise, and at the same time to the assistance of the German work, that I should help him out of his difficulty. Accordingly, I advised him to have nothing more to do with the oil business, and I managed to purchase back the said interest, worth at the time $700, and another small interest purchased of Bro. Rindfuss, and worth at the time $300, and so pay him for these their net cost (adding expenses and deducting oil received by him), which amounted to $3386. This sum by arrangement was paid him with my notes bearing six per cent interest and running for some time. They have since been paid in full with interest—$2386 and interest more than we knew the properties were worth,—and they never were worth more afterward.

Meantime Bro. Zech had urged that I go into the printing business with him, as a partner; but I refused, and advised him that it was a troublesome business. I never advised him to invest time or money in the business. On the contrary, I advised him against it. However, when he afterward found an partner and desired to do our work I promised him an preference over others, prices and work being equal; and this preference he has always had. Meantime, also, he had desired to have the full control of the German work and we sold him the plates, etc., of the German DAWN, VOL. I., at cost,—giving him privilege also to translate and publish the series, a condition being that he should supply the books at the same prices that we had been supplying them to the public and to colporteurs, and the promise made that if at any time Bro. Zech could not or would not supply the books at the same prices, the privilege of publishing them should revert to the TOWER PUB. CO. The restriction as to price was afterward modified as respects Vols. II and III., and they are now sold at a higher price, yet only about cost, because fewer are sold. And to meet Bro. Zech's views I agreed to pay him the full retail prices on all German Dawns I have occasion to purchase from him.

Judge of my surprise when, in January 1893, Bro. Zech told me and others that I had treated him shamefully, etc. I said to myself, If this be bad treatment, what would be considered good treatment? A number of the church friends of all concerned were called together to hear the matter and advise.

Brother and Sister Zech and family urged that I should pay more to Bro. Zech's firm for the printing and binding of the Dawms than responsible firms would charge for the same work. He complained, too, about being limited in the selling price of Dawm Vol. I; and declared that I had almost starved them at first on $35 and $40 per month, etc. I explained our dealings as above to the friends present and that we were paying our brother about twice as much as he could have gotten elsewhere—if he could have gotten any opportunity or pay when new at the business. I explained, as I do now, that it was no more my duty to pay a brother more than a worldly firm would charge, than it was his duty as a brother to do the work for less. Business should be done on the lines of justice: charity and love can find exercise in other ways—as, for instance, in our dealing with Bro. Z. in the oil transaction, in which we made him and the German work a clean present of $2386 with interest. Bro. Zech complained that we gave one lot of DAWNS to another firm to print and bind. I showed the friends that Bro. Zech's firm was continually complaining that they were losing money on the Dawn work, while others were bidding lower, and were anxious to get the work. Bro. Zech's firm being full of work we finally gave one lot to another firm at a saving of $130 on twenty thousand books. And then I gave about one hundred dollars of that saving to the German cause, by donating the cost of the electro-plates for the third volume of German DAWN.

It is almost needless to say that the friends after hearing us both fully—until daylight of Feb. 5, '93—assured Bro. Zech that Bro. Russell's course was not only just, but very generous and brotherly toward him. His judgment was so warped, however, that he could not see the matter at the time; but a day later he expressed himself differently by letter to us and to all. The following is a verbatim copy of his letter:

Allegheny, Pa., Feb. 6, '93

“Dear Brother Russell:—Thinking the matter over since our long conference with the different brethren and sisters in your house on February 4th, I find that I have erred in my judgment regarding the charges made against you, and I therefore express my regret for having done so and for the trouble and anxiety resulting from it. May the Lord grant us that no such misunderstanding will arise again to injure our mutual brotherly feeling and fellowship. And since so many of our friends have been witnesses, I would be very pleased to express the above sentiment in their hearing, or, if you deem it preferable, to have them read this letter. In sincere love and fellowship, Your brother in Christ, Otto Von Zech.

“P. S. So far as Sister Zech is concerned, I must state that she never agreed with me concerning the right I thought I had to claim, but took, so she says, the position she did from a sense of wifely duty. O. V. Z.”

This experience led to the preparation of the article entitled, The Relative Claims of Love and Justice, which, that it might not be construed as a blow at Bro. Zech, was held back and published in the Tower of June 1, '93.

Below is a copy of a letter presented to Sister Russell and myself about a month previous:

Christmas 1892.

“Dear Brother Russell:—I embrace the opportunity of this celebration of our Redeemer’s birth to tell you in writing what I could not so well express orally. I want to make you the best Christmas present I know of in telling you of our deep and ever increasing gratitude and love toward you and Sister Russell for your work’s sake, and for the kindness and love shown and daily bestowed upon us.

“In reading the other day what the Apostle says, that `we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord are (being) changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Lord’s spirit, ’ and finding that the Apostle spoke thus not of the future but of the present, I could not help thinking, Yes, that is so. If we look back these seven years since we came into this marvelous light by the grace of God, we have experienced an ever increasing and burning love toward those who had been God’s blessed agents to help us see the truth.

“And I concluded, dear Brother and Sister, to let you know this our sentiment as our best gift we possibly could give, and thus to thank you from our hearts for your labor of love which our Heavenly Father has so abundantly blessed also toward us, and at the same time for the firm stand you take and always took in the defense of the central truth in our Father’s plan—the ransom for or instead of us.

“May our Lord and Shepherd grant us to stand side by side in this battle till it is over. In Him we will remain, Your Brother and Sister Zech.” It seems strange indeed that people could write such letters and yet keep “bombs” ready and waiting for convenient “explosion.”

This comprises all of Bro. Zech’s grievances, except as relates to the Wednesday evening prayer and conference meetings, which we will now notice.

A little more than a year ago, studying the spiritual needs of the flock, and remembering that our central prayer meeting had been a failure, because the friends here are widely scattered, we conceived the plan of having meetings in various parts of these two cities, not for Bible study, but for prayer and testimony, for the cultivation of the fruits of the spirit and the binding together of the body of Christ in love and Christian fellowship. I suggested to the Church the advisability of such meetings, urging that while doctrines are necessary, the cultivation of the fruits of the spirit is the real object of all doctrine. I asked those who favored the plan to signify it by rising; and almost all arose, Bro. Zech and family being conspicuous as voting against the meetings,—which they had a full right to do. I was not surprised at the matter, however, as I knew that Sister Zech had frequently expressed herself as having no confidence in prayer.

Next we asked for houses to be volunteered in which the meetings could be held, and several promptly offered, the object of the meetings being clearly understood by all as not doctrinal, but social meetings.

I then appointed leaders of those meetings—asking Bro. Zech first, whether he would serve. He declined. Later he started a German meeting at his house for doctrinal disputations, which of course, was all right; for the appointment of the social meeting did not hinder any who pleased from holding or attending other meetings. But because I urged that these meetings, appointed for social worship, should be held strictly to their object, Bro. Zech and his wife complained that I was a pope, and privately, we now learn, endeavored to raise a spirit of opposition in others, but without success, as the congregation appreciates the meetings greatly. Bro. and Sister Zech, after trying for six months to discourage the meetings, began to attend them: and we were greatly encouraged for two months,—especially when at a general church meeting (Dec. '93) Sister Z. testified before all, of the benefit she had derived from those meetings. This sympathy and interest ceased, and they at once changed their plans, when it was known that there would be no general Convention here this Spring.

The charge of “bondage” and “under my thumb,” etc. which now they make public, I find has been a part of their “whisperings” for the past four years. They did what they could to prejudice the mind of the Tower office helpers: slanderous falsehoods, called “revelations” were made to them, to undermine their confidence and poison their minds against me; so that when the time for “exploding” the “bombs” should come, I should have no friends. Three years ago Sister Ball was invited over to their home to spend the evening and then advised, confidentially, that she was imposed upon by us, etc., etc., etc. Sister Russell and myself then visited them, showed the error of this course and they apologized. But within a year it now seems that they began again: Bro. Henninges was “talked to” about being in bondage to Brother Russell; and it was intimated that he was a fool for staying here. Bro. Campbell was made a “confidant” before he had been here a month, every endeavor being made to prejudice him against me. Bro. Abbott was similarly approached; and when questioned as to his salary, replied: “I am not sure that Bro. Russell would want his private affairs discussed, but I will tell you this much: he is paying me more than I asked for.” An attempt was even made to alienate my wife, and to make her my enemy; but praise God it did not succeed. I can now heartily thank the Lord that I have such faithful, proved ones so closely associated with me in the work. It is strange how blind I must have been, not to have noticed what others all around seem to have seen and heard. But I placed too high and estimate upon those who bear the, to me, sacred name of “brethren.”

Since Bro. Zech has alluded to the events of Christmas evening 1892, I must give the facts. Sister Russell and I invited Bro. and Sister Zech and a few other friends to a six o’clock Christmas dinner. After dinner, while in the parlor, Sister R. interrupted me in some trivial matter, and then catching herself asked me to proceed. I replied, “No; you tell it—you are the head of the house.” This I admit was sarcastic; and seeing that it hurt Sister Russell’s feelings and that she at once disclaimed any wrong intent, I excused it, and said that I did not mean it literally, that indeed Sister Russell is a very model wife, etc., and thus the matter ended.

But Bro. Bryan (who we will see presently is a most peculiar person, who fancies himself able, as he is ever willing, to give everybody instruction, and whose idiosyncrasies I had put up with for several years, as a member of our family and one of the office helpers), fancied that the above incident gave him a chance to meddle; and so the next morning at breakfast he took occasion to insult me. His remarks were ten times as strong as mine of the evening before, and wholly inexcusable. Sister Russell remonstrated, that his remarks were out of order, and I at once told him that I had borne his insolence and meddlesome busy-body disposition entirely too long; and now to go at once from the home whose head he had not respected and to whose every member he had made himself a disturber.

He went at once to Bro. Zech’s where he was made warmly welcome as a co-conspirator against Bro. Russell, but their cause would suffer if he left the Tower office before the “explosion;” so they got up a letter and with one argument or another got those who had been present on Christmas evening to sign it. That is the letter which Bro. Zech drags into his statements of his grievances. But their real object was to get me to take Bro. Bryan back into the TOWER office. Of the circumstances under which the signatures were obtained the signers themselves have something to say below. Those circumstances exonerate all of them except the conspirators, Bro. and Sister Zech and Bro. Bryan, whose malicious intent seems now very manifest; but of course I knew no difference among them at that time.

I very humbly consented that these friends should help me mind my business: and at the request of that letter invited them all to meet me at my house. When they arrived, by way of showing them that I considered this an interference in my affairs in a way that they would not like to have me interfere in theirs, I suggested that perhaps the meeting had best be turned into one for the investigation and criticism of the private affairs of all present. I suggested that I knew considerable of their private matters which it would be quite embarrassing to us all to have related, even to a small audience (referring specially to Bro. and Sister Zech and Bro. Bryan); but that if it was their duty to investigate my private affairs it must be equally my duty to investigate theirs.

The three in question got loud and angry and dared me to say what I could. But I assured them that I had no thought of telling anything—that I had no such misconception of duty, but merely wished to remind them of the propriety of not being busybodies in other men's matters. We then proceeded to the consideration of Bro. Bryan's offense, and the company united in telling him that his course was wrong, and advising him to confess it and apologize—which he did do that evening. (Judge then of the unfairness of Bro. Zech's statement on this subject.) This led to the discussion of the subject, Who is the head of the family? Sister Zech, who had gotten some extreme ideas on the subject, called up the question, and expressed the opinion that the Apostle Paul's expressions on the subject were incorrect. My views on the subject appeared in print later,—in the Tower of May 1, '93, in the article "The Twelve Apostles," etc., and in July '93—a double number—on "Man and Woman in God's Order."

The following kind letter has just been received, and we make room for it as it bears directly on this subject.

Alleheny, Pa., April 23, 1894.

"Dear Bro. Russell:—We, as your friends, whose names are appended to the portion of a letter published by Otto von Zech, feel a deep sense of regret, not only for your sake, but also for our own, at the light in which it makes us appear; for we have no sympathy whatever with the spirit and intent of his libelous circular.

"We desire, therefore, to acquaint you with the peculiar circumstances attending our signing it, which we have not previously explained, because of the completeness with which the entire matter was BURIED (so far as you were concerned) the same week it occurred. The circumstances are as follows:

"We with others of the Church of Christ here had prepared some New Year presents for you and Sister Russell, and Bro. Zech had been appointed to make the presentation speech and had proffered his home for the presentation, because so near to your own that the things we proposed to present could be readily transferred, after the surprise of New Years' night, 1893.

“When Bryan left your home and went to Zech’s they commended his conduct, claimed that a great wrong had been done him, and prepared the letter in question. The signatures were obtained in this way: Mr. Zech with the letter in hand called upon each one and in an excited manner represented that a great injustice had been done Bro. Bryan—that he had been rudely thrust out of his place in the TOWER office and Bro. Russell house, through the tyranny of Bro. Russell. He then added that Bro. Russell had too much power and ought to be taught a lesson; and that although the presents were at his house and the congregation were invited to assemble there, he could not make the presentation speech with good grace unless this matter of Bryan’s were settled and he returned to his former position. Now, said he, if you add your signatures to this letter, requesting a meeting of us all with Bro. Russell, we can have this matter settled and then we will carry out the previous arrangements.

“By such talk he obtained our signatures, but not for the object apparent in the letter, the language of the letter passing comparatively unnoticed, because our attention was specially drawn to Zech’s excited words with reference to Bro. Bryan. It would now appear that this was intentional on his part, and that he kept a copy of the letter for its recent malicious use; and on the evening appointed, although Bryan and Zechs continually persisted in dragging up the little matter about Sister Russell, both she and we protested that that was unnecessary and that that was entirely settled between you and her.

“Although feeling the matter was none of our business, we added our signatures because we were so anxious to have everything smooth and pleasant before the evening of the presentation, then so close at hand, and fearing that if we did not there would be some unpleasantness with Bro. Zech before the congregation which was to assemble for a purpose so different. The letter concluded as follows: ‘May our dear Lord guide and direct your judgment or ours, that it may all be to his glory. Yours in the Redeemer. (Signed.).’ The signatures were obtained only with this object in view, and on condition that the matter should never be mentioned outside of the number present that evening. This promise they have entirely failed to keep, and ever since have talked of it in private; and now, judge of our surprise and chagrin on finding a portion of that confidential letter in print and our names heralded as busy-bodies in the affairs of one whom we love and esteem as a tried and faithful servant of our dear Redeemer and Lord and in whose integrity as a Christian brother we have full confidence: and as having part in the present infamous conspiracy to overthrow him from the place which he holds, and that rightly, in the hearts of many of the Lord’s people. It is an unwarrantable misuse of our names, against which we (as the signers) most earnestly protest.

“At the meeting which resulted, all (including Zechs) admitted the justice of your course toward Bro. Bryan, whom we and they urged to apologize for his misjudgment (we did not at the time doubt his good intention); and he did so in our presence. Thus the matter ended, and a pleasant New Year’s evening followed.

“Otto von Zech’s conduct and libelous circular remind us of Korah, the ‘ringleader’ of the rebellion against Moses and Aaron (Num. 16 and 26:9-11), who, with Dathan, Abiram and On, was not content with his honorable post, but ‘sought’ the office of Moses. From the above reference we discern that Korah with the other three charged Moses (without cause) with the very sin which he and his associates themselves committed. We find the same ambition, jealousy and pride in the conduct of Ahithophel, who, being King David’s counsellor and friend, became, through this same leaven of sin, the most treacherous enemy of the servant of God; but David’s heart remained loyal, and his prayer to the Lord ‘turned’ Ahithophel’s bad-intended course into what his name signifies, foolishness; for, said David, ‘O Lord, I pray thee, turn the (treacherous) counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness.’ (2 Sam. 15:31.) A like conspiracy we find against the Apostle Paul, when they banded themselves together to ‘kill him.’ (Acts 23:12.) And a like conspiracy was kindled against our dear Redeemer by certain ones of his time; for they ‘consulted that they might take Jesus by subtlety, and kill him.’ (Matt. 26:4, 5) And again, it is written, ‘They hated him without a cause.’ (John 15:25) May the dear Lord strengthen your mind and heart, so that through you, dear Brother, the proclamation of the gospel cause may be fully established.

“Hoping that this explanation will fully clear us in your eyes from any connection with the libelous circular, and desiring that, if opportunity present itself, you will make this known to any who may have seen the present statement of the conspirators, We remain, yours in love and service of the truth, J. A. Weimar, Elizabeth K. Weimar, John Cromie, Laura J. Raynor, H. C. Wolf, Rose J. Ball.

“P. S.—Brothers Ohlsson and Winter are not now in the city, and hence their signatures have not been obtained; but besides them the only other signers, exclusive of ourselves, are the conspirators.”

Let me here remark, incidentally, that if there are any of God’s married children whose interests are more thoroughly one, and whose esteem for each other is greater than that which exists between Sister Russell and myself, we would be glad for them to have it so; but we have no present reason for so believing. Ours, we feel, is indeed a union in the Lord, which we believe that even death will not sever.

Is it any wonder that, when I came to know the depth of their perfidy, I refused to allow Bro. Zech to preach in the chapel—the use of which for years I have furnished free of charge to the German friends? Could I, in justice, do less than inform those German brethren and sisters (about twelve persons), that while they were as welcome as ever to use the chapel every Sunday morning, Bro. Zech had proved himself wholly unworthy of my confidence, and that I felt that it would be wrong to supply him the opportunity to attempt a further defamation of my character, by misrepresentations slobbered over with protestations of brotherly love? Indeed, I am of the opinion that not one man in a thousand, professor or non-professor, would have had so little shame as to have attempted further abuse of my generosity, after having publicly done all he knew how to defame me. He claims to have been “under bondage” to me. So I at once forced him to become a free-man by refusing him longer the privilege hitherto enjoyed of speaking to the German friends in the chapel. But even this enforcement of liberty is one of his charges against me.

BROTHER BRYAN'S GRIEVANCES

Bro. Bryan served the cause in the TOWER office for several years—well in many respects. But by heredity he has a very violent temper, a vindictive disposition and a penchant for minding others people's affairs. It is with deep regret that I thus write, and now only because it seems a necessary explanation of what follows. When I say he evidently inherited these ungainly traits I consider that I am making an apology for him. Time and again have I helped to settle differences between him and the other office helpers, in which he was uniformly to blame—generally trying to mind some one else's business; and time and again has he repented and lamented his course and promised to turn over a new leaf. But his difficulty seemed to grow upon him. He got worse and worse. He at least six times during the last three years of his stay urged that he should leave the office for the relief of others; and each time I persuaded him to try to do better: yet, when at last I concluded to let him go, he seemed determined to stay. I could not then judge why, but can now see that it was because he had become one of the conspirators and was waiting for the time to explode the bombs. It was after his conduct finally became unbearable, that I wrote him the following letters.

Allegheny, Pa., Mar. 2, '93.

“Dear Brother Bryan:—Your note, which I requested last evening, saying, if there are other matters `that you say would still be difficulties, even if you could determine not to meddle with and annoy Sister Ball, ’ is before me. In reply I must tell you that this note manifests still more of the same wrong spirit of which I complain on behalf of Sister Ball.

“It shows that you not only want to annoy and manage her and her work, but that you also want to do the same for me and my business, and that of the entire office and home. I have assured you repeatedly of my Christian love and my care for your every concern, and my desire that you enjoy every comfort and pleasure which our home and office afford, but you seem to think that every thing should be run according to your ideas, which is neither possible nor reasonable.

“For over two weeks (I might almost say three years) you have been worrying the office and home circles, and that without any justification. You should be conscientious enough to admit that you have no right, human or divine, to interfere with Sister Ball’s rights or business, nor with mine, nor with those of others. If, therefore, this matter can be fixed only by your leaving the TOWER office, do not persuade yourself to a false view, in supposing that you will be going forth for righteousness’ sake, or for conscience’ sake; for, on the contrary, it will be because you are a persistent busybody in other people’s affairs—and an intentional one, since instead of acknowledging the fault you attempt to excuse it, and even argue by the hour that you have a right to judge the conduct and even the consciences of others, and to give them tongue chastisements and other incivilities until they adopt your conscience as instead of their own and repent to you, etc. I should tell you also that Sister Ball is not the only one who has mentioned your interferences.

“A month or so ago Bro. Henniges said to me:—‘Bro. Russell, cannot I do some of the work of the composing room, or in some way shift so as not to be so much of an annoyance to Brother Bryan?’ I replied that I thought I had a plan for dividing the work which would harmonize the difficulties peacefully, and to wait and see.

“Within a week Bro. Page said, ‘Bro. Russell, I feel that I am the seat of Bro. Bryan’s trouble, and while I came here, as I believe, under the Lord’s leading, do not let me stand in the way of the smooth running of the Lord’s work. At the same time I scarcely think that you do your duty toward Bro. Bryan and the others, and the work, to permit him to interfere with and snap the head off everybody and everything. In a worldly office such conduct would not be endured five minutes.’

“I explained how I believed the trouble to be in part a heredity and that I was trying to have you take the right view of it, and that if you could see it fully and clearly I had confidence that you would do differently. But why you cannot or will not see so plain a matter I cannot understand.

“You know better than any one else, dear brother, how, with great patience, prompted by loving interest for you and for the work, I have tried to have you see the error of being a busybody—especially so when you knew that those you interfered with are fully as conscientious as yourself,—and full more so on the subject of respecting the rights and liberties of others.

“I have exhausted every proper means at my command to have you see right and DO RIGHT. But you all the more assume a self-righteous air and insist that you have a right to be the judge of the rights, liberties and consciences of others.

“This I can no longer permit. It becomes my duty, therefore, dear brother, to say, Stop this wrong-doing and uncharitable judging! and if you will not stop it you must cease to occupy the place you have occupied for so long in the office.

“Nevertheless, dear brother, it will be in sorrow and not in anger that we will part with you. You have many excellent traits to which I cheerfully bear witness, and I shall always feel a deep interest in your welfare, and should opportunity ever offer I will be glad to prove this in some more substantial way. But if disposed to see your error and to manifest a reform of your course, not only I, but all the ‘family’ I am sure will be glad, not only to have you stay with us in the work, but to assist you and bear with you. Please let me have your decision this evening, on the lines laid down in this letter.

“With deep brotherly love and unceasing interest in your present and future welfare, I remain your servant in the Lord, C. T. Russell.”

March 3, '93.

“Dear Brother Bryan:—My letter of yesterday was very plain. While assuring you of my love and interest, it stated the necessity and laid down the conditions upon which you should have acted pro or con at once. Matters have run along now for nearly two weeks in a very unsatisfactory manner and one very disadvantageous to the Lord’s work. Others are idle while you have and hold onto more than you can do.

“Forbearance longer would not be a virtue. Your letter or note in reply to mine of yesterday is not a reply—merely a delay. What can be your object? I must insist, dear brother, either that you fully consent to all the reasonable requirements of my letter of yesterday, and indicate this in no uncertain words, or else that you hand over your keys and place, that some one conscientious enough to recognize and respect the rights of others may, with those who love and make for peace and right, occupy in your stead.

“After reading this letter and communing with the Lord, remembering that my course is the one of duty and that I still abound with love for you, save me further annoyance by acting at once. You had best re-read my letter of yesterday. May the Lord guide you, has been my earnest prayer for several days, but a conclusion must be reached now.

“With continued brotherly love and interest, and the hope that you may gain the victory over self-will and other foes, and humble yourself to be and do what you see to be the right, I remain,

“Your loving servant in Christ, C. T. Russell.

“P. S.—If you decide to quit the work and need money let me know how much.”

Bro. Bryan finally concluded to go into the colporteur work, and we parted seemingly warm friends, as the following extracts from a letter received later shows; their “bomb” plot seemingly having been abandoned for a time.

Richmond, Va. March 15, '93.

“Dear Brother Russell:—I feel like giving you a little report of myself and my doings, in addition to what I wrote on recent postals.

“The whole situation here seems as favorable as any that could have been chosen. To be with your father’s family has been most helpful. Then I have made a little beginning in canvassing that is not discouraging, though not nearly so good as I wish it were. Then, through advice from you, three brethren visited us last Sunday. I was very favorably impressed by the appearance of —. If I am not mistaken, he is quite able to be a local teacher and leader. And he seems to have a beautiful spirit. Some brethren here had been meeting with a little group of Adventists; but quite lately the latter withdrew to another room. To our great pleasure, these brethren said they had already secured a room and arranged to have a regular Sunday meeting. They wished they had known earlier of the presence of your father’s family in Richmond. I anxiously await the meeting next Sunday and will tell you how things seem. If I had the address of all Tower readers, could call on them and judge whether to notify them of the meeting and invite them to it. I have reconnoitered a little, and find good, long streets of residences evidently of the class where I will get access to the husband or wife, and not to the servant alone. I am quite hopeful that my record will grow better, as I get into the adjoining territory named.

“I have been out four days—not putting in very full time some days. The ‘score’ is: 5, 6, 8, 9—orders taken.

“Asking to be remembered also to Sister Russell and all, Yours in the faith, Elmer Bryan.”

But a little Christmas token, sent him four months ago, seems to have been the innocent instrument by which Satan again got to work upon his naturally not too well balanced brain, reviving and exaggerating previous “evil surmisings” and enlarging his “root of bitterness.”

He then began to write frequently about some trifles connected with his office experience. I answered these kindly and fully, and explained to him that we understood the matter thoroughly and that they were all right. However, about six weeks ago he concluded to ask two of the brethren to come with him and hear his statement of my sins and to reprove me according to Matt. 18:15-17. Bros. H. Weber and M. M. Tuttle came with him to see me and to hear his charges. When these brethren heard the charges, they told Bro. Bryan that they were ridiculous; that so far from being to my discredit they were to my credit,—every one of them. Here they are:—

Charge 1.—Bro. Russell, having the renting of a house, once put my (Bryan’s) name on the “To let” notice, without my consent.

Answer.—Bro. Bryan was in the office constantly and could better than any one else Answer—the questions of applicants. I preferred not to have my own name on the notice (1) because my forenoons are usually spent at home, writing, and (2) because my name being necessarily prominent, I modestly preferred to avoid any unnecessary notoriety. Bro. Bryan’s name would be unknown.

Judgment of the Brethren—Perfectly proper and commendable.

Charge 2.—Once when I was intending to purchase some clothing Bro. Russell gave me a letter to one of the prominent Pittsburg clothing stores, assuring me that it would secure for me a ten per cent. reduction in the price. It made me feel bad to think that Bro. Russell would thus deceive and cheat them, and I could not use the order.

Answer.—The letter was entirely proper. I am personally acquainted with the proprietors who grant me a discount, and invited me to send over any of those connected with the office, and that they should have the same.

Judgment of the Brethren.—Proper and commendable. Bro. Russell was endeavoring to extend to you, at the expense of his own time in writing the note, a privilege which all the large stores are glad to give, to get trade. Nearly every one gets a ten per cent. discount upon some score: Prices are so arranged as to permit of these discounts to customers. You merely did not comprehend the matter and thought evil of what was really a kindness.

Charge 3.—Bro. Russell received for many of the Colporteurs clerical half-rate arrangements over one of the railroads, and I am sure that he got these by deception and fraud ; for I know that the R. R. people would not grant those rates if they understood that the colporteurs sell books.

Answer--by Bro. Weber.--A very unjust and uncharitable thought on your part, Bro. Bryan; and a very mistaken one. I, myself, arranged the matter you condemn; and I did it in a perfectly honorable manner. I am well acquainted with the gentleman in charge of that business, and explained that the colporteurs are preachers, ministers of the truth, who give their entire time to this work, but that they do it in a different manner from the clergy of the nominal church. I explained to him that they explained the Scriptures from house to house, and sold books which would continue and elaborate the preaching after they were gone.

Judgment of the Brethren.--Proper and highly commendable to all concerned except Bro. Bryan.

Charge 4.--Bro. Russell violated my idea of the law in the mailing of Millennial Dawn Vol. II.

Answer.--(I gave a detailed explanation of the matter, but it would be too tedious to relate here.)

Judgment of the Brethren.--Entirely proper so far as we can understand the matter. Anyway, we feel that the United States Government is abundantly able to look out for its own rights, and that it is very far from the spirit of Christ for you, Bro. Bryan, to be surmising evil against the very one through whose efforts God sent the truth to you. We could not think you more conscientious than Bro. Russell, and as for ability to interpret law, human or divine, we consider him entirely your superior.

Charge 5. I claim that Bro. Russell cheats the government by putting only half enough postage upon the Tower binders. He made us stamp them at "book rate," while I claim that they should be stamped at "merchandise rates." I wrote to the P. O. Department at Washington asking whether a Newspaper binder should be stamped as book-matter or as merchandise, and they replied--"as merchandise." Here is the letter signed by the third assistant P. M. General.

Answer.--The Tower binders were for some time mailed with double the proper postage. When I noticed it I had it changed to the proper rate. The binders are merely book-backs, and when filled with TOWERS constitute a bound volume. It requires no great mind to see that a part of a book cannot be rated at a higher charge than a whole book; and book-back or binder should therefore be mailed at book rates. However, lest some uninformed postmaster might not be able to reason properly upon the subject we always put one TOWER into each binder. Surely, it is then a book of 16 pages to any one capable of sound reasoning.

The Third Asst. P. M. General has been in office only one year, while I have had many year's experience in just such questions. It was this same gentleman who ruled out the Old Theology Tracts some months ago; but I appealed from his decision, and the legal department sustained my understanding of the law.

Bro. Bryan's decision would be binding on himself, but on no one else. The law leaves its interpretation to the common sense of the reader, except when called in question by the postmaster, and then an appeal may be taken if desired.

Judgment of the Brethren.—Without doubt a binder containing sixteen pages of reading matter is a book, and should be stamped at book rates. Bro. Russell should be allowed to mind his own business, and those who cannot help him should not hinder him. If Bro. Bryan thought differently he discharged his duty when he told Bro. Russell how he viewed the matter. The P. O. Department it seems was not asked about a Magazine-binder with one issue enclosed. That would have been a different question.

Charge 6. —On the missionary envelopes recently issued the last paragraph is marked, "S. I. Hickey in Christian Herald," but those printed some years ago read, "J. E. Jewett in Christian Herald." That was a fraud I believe. I have no doubt that was written in the WATCH TOWER office.

Answer.—This is a totally untrue: I first saw the "notice" in the columns of the Christian Herald. It appeared upon a page at that time controlled by Mr. Jewett, and since it had no name to it, I supposed it was Mr. Jewett's expression. Later, I learned that Bro. Hickey had written the commendation; and hence I changed the name on the next lot of envelopes printed.

Judgment of the Brethren.—Bro. Bryan, as only an impure fountain sends forth impure water, so only a wrong condition of heart could send forth such uncharitable thoughts, and these without any foundation except your "evil surmisings." Do not forget that evil surmisings, envy, strife, malice and hatred give evidence of a wrong spirit, little like the spirit which "thinketh no evil" and much akin to the spirit which "loveth and maketh a lie."

Charge 7.—Bro. Russell violated the U. S. postal laws by occasionally putting in amongst the Towers some Pittsburg papers for relatives in the South.

Answer.—Yes; it had been our custom for some time to send some of our exchanges and an occasional Pittsburg paper to friends; and these all being "second-class matter" were thrown in with the TOWERS when being sent to the post office. This continued until about six years ago. Somewhere about that time the rate of postage on second-class mail matter was reduced from two cents per pound to one cent per pound and postmasters were notified to be more than ever particular. Our Allegheny postmaster notified us that the German Tower could not henceforth be mixed with the English Tower, and that no other papers must be mixed in along. We called his attention to another part of the law in which it is specially stated that news agents may send out second-class matter at the same rates as the publishers, and showed that news agents do not keep different papers separate. The reply was that the post office department at Washington had made a ruling on that point, to the effect that publishers could send out other papers only when they sent them to all of their subscribers, and hence that publishers have less liberty than news agents. We accepted this ruling, and have never since, to my knowledge, mailed other than our own publications at “pound rates.”

Judgment of the brethren.—A most reasonable and consistent explanation of a trifle. It is not within the range of reason, Bro. Bryan, to suppose that one who is giving his time and energy to spread of the truth and the inculcation of righteousness, and spending thousands of dollars to that end, as you and we well know, would be dishonest for a few penny stamps. But it does look to us as though your object in even mentioning such a matter can be nothing less than a malicious spirit, a desire to injure Bro. Russell in our esteem; but we know him too well for that. His Answer—is more than a sufficient exoneration.

(We since learn that some (at least one) of the slanderous circulars sent out by the conspirators went unstamped. Do we evilly surmise that this was cheating the government? No, we thank God that neither our heads nor our hearts are so deranged as to get us into such nonsense.)

Charge 8.—Bro. Russell some six years ago loaned hundreds of DAWNS, under the name of Mrs. C. B. Lemuels, which I hold was wrong—a deception.

Answer.—No wrong was done to any one by the use of the name; but, on the contrary, much good was accomplished. Many readers will remember seeing Mrs. C. B. Lemuels' advertisements in different newspapers, all over the United States, offering to loan free of charge a book that would be very helpful to honest skeptics and infidels. Many of you first learned of the truth by this means. The book was The Plan of the Ages—DAWN, VOL. I, and the name Mrs. Lemuels represented Mrs. Russell. I esteemed that the matter would be better received from a lady than from a gentleman. I could have arranged for the use of Mrs. Russell's name, or the name of some other sister, but reflected that a confusion of letters might result and prove inconvenient. Besides, I bring my own name as little into prominence as possible. This will be noticed in connection with everything I have published—the O. T. Tracts, the DAWNS, etc.

The name Lemuel is from the Hebrew and signifies Son of God. The initial letter C. stands for Christ, and B. for before; hence the whole name signifies, a son of God, after Christ. I consider the using of the name for a good purpose entirely proper and not a deception, in the proper meaning of that term; for it could make no difference to the party blessed whether the instrument of his blessing had the name of Smith, Brown, Lemuels or Russell. Indeed, our Lord was known by a variety of names, other than the name of Jesus, given by the angel. He is called also Immanuel, the Son of Man, the Redeemer, the Good Shepherd, Lord of Glory, Prince of Peace, Prince of Life, the Word of God, the Lamb of God, the Just One, the King of Israel, Living Stone, the True Vine, Wonderful, Counselor, Savior, Mediator, the Amen, the Alpha and Omega, the Second Adam, the Messiah. Our Lord and the Apostles and the Prophets, did not think it a deception to apply these various names and titles, nor do I. Had I used the name for a wrong purpose, the entire transaction would have been sinful; but as it is conceded that it was used for a good purpose the entire transaction is faultless. Many eminent writers for the press cover their identity under a nom de plume, and justly without reproach.

Judgment of the Brethren.—Legitimate and praise worthy. We wish that more of God's children had the same singleness of purpose to do good to others and serve God and the truth to the disregard of their own name or fame. You, Bro. Bryan might far better be spending your time in holding up Bro. Russell's hands, than in seeing how you can annoy him with such quibbles and disturb the work he is doing.

Charge 9.—Bro. Russell once advised a man to send addressed tract wrappers to the Tower office enclosed in a newspaper; whereas they should be sent at letter rates of postage, "two cents for each ounce." He also published the wrong rate of postage in the TOWER for May 1, '93, page 130.

Answer.—My reason for advising thus was, that I did not want the brother to pay more postage than the law requires. (It certainly made not one cent difference to me.) I know that many understand as little about the law as does Bro. Bryan, and country postmasters generally ask, Does this contain writing? If the Answer--is, Yes, he charges letter rates, two cents for each ounce, which in the case of addressed wrappers is contrary to the law. The law specifically provides that written addresses may be enclosed in newspapers without adding to the rate of postage, provided no other writing accompanies. But to add one other word such as "Well" or "All are well," would make the postage rate the same as on a letter, two cents for one ounce. If one address can be so sent so can two or five or ten. Indeed, written wrappers sent alone, without a newspaper, are subject to no higher rate than printed circulars according to law,—one cent for two ounces—Bro. Bryan to the contrary notwithstanding.

Judgment of the Brethren.—Evidently a case of insufficiency of knowledge on your part, Bro. Bryan; and one easily rectified if you had been controlled by a proper Christian spirit.

Charge 10.—Bro. Russell, it seems to me, uses language in a “double dealing” manner. When I attempt to show something wrong in what he has said, he explains it all away and would convince any one it was all right.

Answer.—If I use ambiguous language it is wholly unknown to me; but since much of it is in print some one ought to be able to point it out, if this charge has any foundation.

Judgment of the Brethren.—This charge is in harmony with all the others, and shows that for nearly six years Bro. Bryan abused his position and the confidence reposed in him by Bro. Russell, that he was all the while hunting for a flaw in his words or character, and that he was disappointed when his evil surmisings of either were corrected. And, because Bro. Russell cleared the matter entirely, it is called “double dealing.” Shame! There are broad, medium and narrow minds and hearts. Bro. Russell’s is one of the broad and unsuspecting. His poorest judgment, it seems to us, was in not seeing long ago the difference between an office-helper and an office-hinderer. The Dawn and the Towers are witnesses to the fact that he uses language with a directness that is seldom equalled except in the Scriptures and in law books. The message from his lips, as well as from his pen, has “no uncertain sound” to those who really have “ears to hear.”

Charge 11.—I once found some four hundred and fifty dollars placed to my credit on the Tract Fund account. I remonstrated and it was taken off; but sums credited to other of the office helpers, not so conscientious, still stand. This shows that Bro. Russell’s ideas are peculiar and I should say dishonest.

Answer.—At the close of each year we generally find that we have expended more than the Tract Fund receipts from various sources, and we generally balance the account by donating whatever the receipts are behind, so as to let the fund begin the New Year without back debts. In the case mentioned I thought it would be well as an encouragement to the office helpers to share with them the credit for this sum and the voting shares which it represented. Accordingly the amount was divided with Mrs. Russell and the faithful office helpers. This was certainly not a crime; and indeed it is partly because of their consecration to the work that the expenses of the work are kept low. At all the events the office helpers are in and of our family, and I had pleasure in sharing the credit on the Tract Fund records, although none outside the office would have known these matters had it not been for Bro. Bryan’s peculiar view of them.

Judgment of the brethren.—Bro. Bryan, the more of such charges you bring the more you reflect to Bro. Russell's honor. Where was the wrong, the sin, in Bro. R's giving you and the others credit on the Tract Fund? Had he not a right to do what he pleased with his own? Suppose he had deposited that four hundred and fifty dollars to your credit in some bank,—would that have been sinful? If not, how could it be wrong to use it in the Lord's service and then give you the credit and the voting-shares? But you admit that he did not insist on your having the credit when you objected. Where, then, is the room for complaint? If your own judgment is confused, do at least try to let other people of sounder judgment mind their own business. Discourage in yourself the disposition to be a busybody.

Finally, we must say to you that this whole matter is simply ridiculous and gives evidence of a very unchristlike spirit. You called us to reprove Brother Russell after hearing your charges; but we find nothing to condemn and much to praise in all that you charge. Study and pray over the matter, and the Lord grant you needed help by his word and providence. Otherwise your present spirit is likely to lead you into "every evil work," and into outer darkness; for if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his.

But Bro. Bryan had not come to be convinced; but said, "I will press this to the utmost, so help me God!" He had merely taken this as a preliminary step to his "telling it to the Church," at which time he, with the other conspirators, had arranged to explode the "bombs" that "would knock this thing (Brother Russell and the work) sky high."

The Brethren expostulated and showed that the very object of calling in two brethren for witnesses was to make sure that which ever one was in error should have the error pointed out to him, and that it was the one who would not hear the other three that was to be reported to the Church; and that, accordingly, Bro. Russell might, if he chose, report him (Bryan) to the Church as a busy body, if he refused or neglected now to heed the counsel of Bro. Russell and themselves.

But the Arch-conspirator, Satan, had evidently determined that the present would be his most auspicious moment, and that he should probably never find any more substantial charges. So he brought Bro. Rogers here; and his arrival, and disaffection because his schemes were not praised, accepted as the Lord's message, and generally substituted for present methods, together with Bro. Adamson's disaffection on account of his tract, seemed to make the present a most favorable time for the firing of the "bombs" that he had been kept waiting for about two years.

However, as before stated, the meeting called by them by personal invitation, and composed of a large number of the best brethren, and sisters of the Church at Allegheny (and which Sister Russell and myself did not attend), was rendered disorderly by the frantic efforts of the conspirators make sure that Brother Russell should have no defenders. But it seems that the bombs and fireworks charges had been entrusted to Bro. Bryan, to be fired with tragic effect, and that they were smothered, when, because of his spiteful, angry and disorderly manner and refusal to recognize the chairman, it was decided by vote of the congregation not to hear him, but to proceed to hear the others.

Having since learned what the “bombs” are, we must now explode them, and show that they are as untruthful as were the other Zech and Bryan charges, and similarly “evil surmisings.” We find that while only some of these have been mentioned in the printed circular, others of them have been circulated privately by word of mouth and by letter; and hence we clean up all that we can learn anything about.

Bomb I.—Several years ago Brother Russell bought and sold some oil through a broker, a member of the Pittsburg Oil Exchange. This, we believe, is what people call “gambling,” and is therefore dishonest and wicked.

Answer.—As before stated, I was in the oil-producing business, and all the conspirators knew this. It is nothing to be ashamed of, and I never kept it a secret. This is a way in which I have done some “tent-making” and “fishing;” and the coin from this fish’s mouth supports me and mine, so that we are not chargeable to any, and so that we can help along the work. Some years ago my monthly share of the oil produced by well in which I owned interests was considerably more than it is at the present. The price of oil seemed likely to go lower, so I not only sold all the oil I had on hand, but through a broker I sold in advance oil that I knew I had in the ground, but which it would take time to have pumped out. In due time the oil was produced and the broker closed the contract, earning his commissions for his trouble and securing me a better price for the oil.

This is the legitimate use of the Oil Exchange. The misuse of it, called “gambling,” is where people have no oil and merely bet so much money that the price will go up or that it will go down. Only obtuse heads or evil-thinking hearts reach the conclusion that there is no honest use of the great commercial Exchanges of the world. There is genuine and a counterfeit in everything that is worth counterfeiting. The finding of a counterfeit proves the existence of a genuine, in business as well as in money. My transactions were on the genuine, legitimate basis, as any business-man of honor and judgment will declare.

Bomb II.—Some one told Brother Bryan that he thought that another person surmised that Bro. Russell had cheated a man in Pittsburg as follows: Brother Russell owned a quarter interest in a small business venture, another man named Dubbs owned a quarter, and a man named Boyd owned the remaining half; that Bro. Russell had transferred his interest to Bro. Sweet and got Bro. Sweet to buy Mr. Dubb's interest for "a mere song," and afterward Bro. Russell got back his own quarter, and evidently Mr. Dubbs had been cheated.

Answer.—This, another case of "evil surmising," can be easily explained and would have been explained to anyone. Evidently they all knew this and did not wish to have an explanation, preferring to believe it, so that they could conscientiously throw it as a "bomb" when they got ready.

The business in question is so small as not to be worthy of the name business. I did purchase a quarter interest in it of Mr. Dubbs, the inventor. Mr. Boyd managed the business and Mr. Dubb's nephew was the only workman. One day Bro. Sweet came into the TOWER office and told me that he was out of work and nearly out of money. He could make no success at colporteur and was no hand at writing wrappers in the office, so I thought of the fact that Mr. Dubbs was anxious to sell his interest in the little venture, and that if he sold there would be a place for Bro. Sweet instead of Mr. Dubb's nephew. I told Bro. Sweet of it, and advanced him the full value of Mr. Dubbs' interest so that he could buy it, if Mr. Dubbs still wished to sell. But I realized that Mr. Dubbs who had sold me my interest, and was the inventor of the commodity, might feel under obligation to me, not to sell—so long as I held an interest—and especially as he had charged me more for my interest than we afterward found it to be worth—therefore, to let Mr. Dubbs feel entirely free to act as he pleased, I transferred my interest to Bro. Sweet who then bought Mr. Dubbs' interest with money I had advanced and Bro. Sweet got the situation. But as the business was not a success he never paid me back the money advanced. I took back the entire interest and since paid out some money on the same as my share of the loss. And Bro. Sweet's wife being ill, he removed to their old home in Virginia.

Everything connected with this matter is straight-forward and honorable. Mr. Dubbs is still a Pittsburger and a warm business friend, who would take my word on a par with my bond. How is it that these evil surmisers are "brethren," who, while confessing that I never wronged them, but on the contrary, that they are all more or less my debtors, imagine that I have done wrong to some one else? Is it likely that the world, the devil and opposing nominal church people would pass by even slight transgressions of business etiquette or morals, if they could find them? On the contrary, my character, my word and my credit stand high amongst intelligent people whose only objection to me is, “his religious views”—which of course they generally misunderstand, because they have been misrepresented by both friends and foes.

The following letter explains itself.

Allegheny, Pa., April 25, 1894.

“Mr. C. T. Russell., My Dear Sir:—My attention has just been drawn to certain charges, made against you by a busybody named Bryan, in the matter of a little business between you and me relating to my boiler-compound discovery, and the transfer of interests in the same to yourself and Mr. Sweet. I have also been shown a proof of your reply to the charge; and I desire to say to you that your conduct in that whole matter was entirely honorable, and quite satisfactory to me. My only regrets in the matter are that it has been the innocent cause of your being subject to such a `charge.’

“By the way, I notice that you refer to the slanderer as `Brother Bryan.’ I advise that you have a little as possible to do with that sort of brothers. In business parlance we call such folks `skunks,’ and keep them at a distance.

“In conclusion let me say that your business associations with me have all been most honorable in every respect, and I know that your business integrity stands too high in Pittsburg to be injured by such senseless calumnies. Abroad, however, where you are unknown, your reply may be needed. Sincerely yours,
J. A. Dubbs.”

Since receiving this kind note from Mr. Dubbs, he tells me that Bro. Bryan called upon him some time before, and inquired whether he had been wronged in any manner in the matter of the sale of the said interest in the boiler-compound; and he was answered that everything was satisfactory to Mr. Dubbs. Yet, in the face of that, his conscience was so asleep or dead, and his malice so alive, that he still clung to his evil thought and used it as a dagger to strike down one of his best friends—who had always shielded his weaknesses, and spoke so well of him that his present course is a surprise to all except our immediate household.

On the Sunday on which I refuted these charges before the Church here, I was afterward informed that Mr. Geo. Rindfuss (who was present), who had been my book-keeper for several years, and who was quite familiar with the above transaction, was claimed by the conspirators as in some degree associated and in sympathy with them. I therefore sent Sister Ball to see him the next morning with very satisfactory results. The following is her written report of her interview with him.

The following are the sentiments of Mr. George Rindfuss, expressed to me in a special interview on the subject, at the office of Mr. John A. Snee, Ferguson Block, Pittsburg, Pa.—on Monday morning, April 9th, 1894, the day after Bro. C. T. Russell's public refutation, to the Church at Allegheny, of the charges privately and otherwise circulated by Otto von Zech, Paul Koetitz, Elmer Bryan, J. B. Adamson and S. D. Rogers.

"The relations existing between Bro. Russell and myself have been uniformly pleasant. A report is being circulated that I lost money through him; but it is untrue. I never lost any money through him; and to my knowledge he never lost any through me.

"I am Bro. Russell's friend, and I never wittingly said anything to damage his character or credit. Viewed from the standpoint of a business man of knowledge, experience and integrity, all his transactions and business dealings, so far as I am aware, are honest, fair and aboveboard—not shady, nor dishonorable, nor derogatory to his character—perfectly legitimate.

"I do not believe in gossip, and if I had not been drawn into this affair, not only this time but several times before, I would have said nothing. These people (Otto von Zech, et al) may as well jump into the sea as to endeavor to do Bro. Russell injury. They will suffer the most. The truth will prosper and the work go on as the Lord sees proper, and they cannot hinder it. I have no sympathy whatever with their position. The trouble with them is they imagine and misconstrue and brood over little things until their minds are confused and they do not know where they are.

"As I said on the evening of the meeting at Bro. Russell's house (about Feb. 15, 1893), these matters are no one's business, any more than my private business or any other man's. It is ridiculous to bring such charges. I never brought any because I have none to make. And I have testified to this in public. I love and respect Bro. Russell and shall do all I can to clear him of these misrepresentations."

These sentiments are all those of Mr. Geo. Rindfuss, and in the majority of sentences I have used his own words; and this I do solemnly, sincerely and truly affirm. Witness, James C. Ewing. [Rose J. Ball. State of Pennsylvania, ss. County of Allegheny] Personally came before me the deponent, Rose J. Ball, who being duly affirmed, testified to the truth of the foregoing statement. Witness my hand and seal at Allegheny, (seal) this 9th day of April, 1894. James C. Ewing, Notary Public.

"Evil be to him who evil thinks," is an old proverb and a true one. These conspirators have treasured up evil thoughts and suspicions until they have injured themselves thereby, and are fast bringing forth "every evil work," as might be expected.—Jas. 3:16.

ATTACK ON THE Z. W. T. TRACT SOCIETY

I have now concluded the matter, except one item. The conspirators seem full of Bro. Rogers' idea that the saints are the fish, and that as Peter was sent to catch the fish and take the money out of its mouth, so they must take what money they need from believing saints—not even thanking them for it, but regarding it as a matter of duty on their part. And as some of the saints are already doing what they can through the Tower Tract Fund, and now—hoping perhaps that some of the donations to it would then fall to them individually—it seems policy to attack it. This they have done, declaring that Zion's Watch Tower Tract Society is a myth: it is merely Bro. Russell. Bro. Adamson declares that although a director he has never attended a meeting and knows nothing about the Society. Altogether, they evilly surmise again that something is wrong, and that they will see whether they can have the charter of the Society annulled, etc.

What are the facts? It is necessary that they be clearly stated that not a doubt may find footing—that not a soul who has given a dollar to this fund may have any room to question the proper application of every penny of it. Even money stated by the donors to be for my personal use has all gone into the Tract Fund. The facts are as follows:

The Society was formed in 1881, at the time of the free distribution of 1,400,000 copies of the pamphlet, "Food for Thinking Christians"—now out of print. It consisted of five of the Lord's children, and its affairs were entirely in my charge. Later, in 1884, at the instance of friends of the cause, who advised that matters be put upon a legal footing so that the work might not be interrupted in case of my sudden death, the Society applied for a charter under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and received one dated December 13, 1884—a copy of which we present, —

CHARTER OF ZION'S WATCH TOWER TRACT SOCIETY

Be it known that the subscribers, having associated themselves together for the purpose of the dissemination of Bible Truths in various languages, and being desirous of becoming incorporated agreeably to the provisions of the Act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, entitled "An Act to provide for the Incorporation and Regulation of certain Corporations," approved the twenty-ninth day of April, Anno Domini, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, and its supplements, do hereby declare, set forth and certify that the following are the purposes, objects, articles and conditions of their association for and upon which they desire to be incorporated:

X. The said Corporation, by the name, style and title aforesaid, shall have the right, power and authority to take, receive and hold in fee simple, or any less estate, all such messsages, lots, lands, buildings, tenements, rents, annuities, franchises and hereditaments as may be necessary and proper for its purposes; and to sell, lease, mortgage or otherwise dispose of the same or any part thereof; and it shall have the same right, power and authority to take, receive and hold, and to sell, lease or dispose of any and all kinds of personal property and money. (Acknowledged and Recorded in due form of law.)

The object in taking out a charter is succinctly stated in the Watch Tower for January 1891, page 16, as follows:

“This is a business association merely. It was chartered as a corporation by the state of Pennsylvania, and authorized to hold or dispose of property in its own name as though it were an individual. It has no creed or confession. It is merely a business convenience in disseminating the truth. Any one subscribing to one copy or more of the Society’s quarterly, styled Old Theology Tracts (6 cents a year), is considered an active member of this Society—but not a voting member. Any one subscribing for $10 worth or more of the O. T. Tracts, or any one donating $10 or more to the funds of the Society for the spread of the Truth, is a voting member and is entitled to one vote for each $10 he or she may have donated. The affairs of the Society are so arranged that its entire control rests in the care of Brother and Sister Russell as long as they shall live. In fact, the only objects in having the corporation are:—

“First, To provide a channel or fund through which those who wish can employ their money talent, whether small or great, to better advantage for the spread of the Truth than if each interested one acted and published independently of the others. Secondly, The corporation was called for by reason of the uncertainty of the lives of those at present managing the fund. Some wrote that they were doing all that their present necessities permitted but at their death they desired to do more; and urged the necessity of a legal corporation, as Brother and Sister Russell also might die, and they wanted their donations to go to the spread of the Truth.

“The Society owns nothing, has nothing, pays no salaries, no rent or other expenses. Its policy is to use in the work every dollar received, to the best advantage, and as speedily as possible. Its success in publishing and circulating among the right kind of readers tons of Old Theology Tracts, is phenomenal alike to its friends and its enemies. The latter imagine there must be great wealth connected with the concern, whereas there is really very little. Few of the friends of this cause are able to do much financially; but what money there is, under economy and the divine blessing, is like the widow’s cruise of oil: it accomplishes about a hundred times as much as other Tract Societies, which spend most of their receipts upon salaries.”

It will be seen from this and other mentions of the subject in the Watch Tower that I have never intimated otherwise than that the management of the Tract Society would probably rest entirely in the hands of myself and Sister Russell as long as we live, as provided by the regulations of the charter,—that the majority of voting-sharers elect the executive officers. Our reasons for expecting to control the Society while we live, we did not state, because of modesty and a desire not to seem to boast of our good works. But now it is necessary to state matters plainly in order that our good deeds be not evil spoken of and misunderstood, and thus become a stumbling-block to others.—Rom. 14:16.

The fact is that, by the grace of God, Sister R. and myself have been enabled not only to give our own time without charge to the service of the truth, in writing and overseeing, but also to contribute more money to the Tract Society’s fund for the scattering of the good tidings, than all others combined. If I were selling my services for money, the Tract Fund receipts could not secure them, as my business ability would command a large remuneration.

God forbid that we should boast of this, or reckon ourselves on this account worthy of more honor than others of the Lord's servants who have been equally faithful in the use of the various opportunities or talents entrusted to them as stewards by the same Lord. The statement is forced from us.

We realize, too, that even should one give all his goods to feed the poor hungry sheep and have not love, it is nothing. We are glad to know that what we have done was not done for vain-glory, but has all been done in love, –love for the Lord, love for his sheep and love for his Truth. Indeed it would be our joy to have done many times as much as we have done; and we could and would have done more than we did during the past two years, had it not been that we seemed to see a necessity for “setting our house in order” financially, and because the “Good Hopes” plan, introduced two years ago, has brought assistance from others of the household who we know have also been blessed by that systematic plan of “laying aside on the first day of the week according as the Lord hath prospered”—as directed by the Apostle.

Having, up to Dec. 1, '93, thirty-seven hundred and five (3,705) voting shares, out of a total of sixty-three hundred and eighty-three (6,383) voting shares, Sister Russell and myself of course elect the officers, and thus control the Society; and this was fully understood by the directors from the first. Their usefulness, it was understood, would come to the front in the event of our death. But, be assured, we shall take pleasure in sharing the responsibilities of the place we occupy with any one whose interest in the mission of the Tract Society shall by his donations to its funds relegate our voting shares to the place of a minority. And such a one would, no doubt, be well qualified to direct in the expenditures, etc.

For this reason, also, formal elections were not held; because it would be a mere farce, a deception, to call together voting-shareholders from all over the world, at great expense, to find upon arrival that their coming was useless, Sister Russell and myself having more than a majority over all that could gather. However, no one was hindered from attending such elections; and all who desired to take part should have kept themselves informed as to their date,—the first Saturday in each year.

We have regularly printed certificates, which for a time we sent out to those who contributed ten dollars or multiples thereof. But they made trouble and extra letter writing, because many of the Lord's sheep have little knowledge of business. Some supposed that the certificates were appeals for money; others could not tell what to make of them, and wrote for full particulars as to how they should vote, etc. Others feared that the owning of the certificates brought them into liability for any debts which the Society might contract, etc. (We here remark that no liability is incurred by any share-holder.)

It required patience and took time from more important work to Answer--scores of such letters; and we concluded that we had made a mistake so far as the certificates were concerned. However, a faithful record is kept of all donations and of all voting-shares, and the books are open to the inspection of all who have ever given one penny to the fund.

Since the adoption of the "Good Hopes" method we credit the voting-shares at the close of each year, so that if a contributor gave a total of ten dollars during the year he would have a voting-share, even though no one of his donations amounted to ten dollars. Thus, if a friend sent in "Good Hopes" of seventy-five cents per week or nine dollars per quarter, he would have no voting-share if reckoned by the quarterly receipts, but if reckoned by the year his four remittances, $36, would represent three shares.

We have plenty of blank Certificates and an accurate record of every dollar you have sent in, as we will take pleasure in making our Certificates for all who, understanding the matter, would like to have them. If you have old certificates issued years ago and have contributed more money since, so as to have more shares now, please send back the old certificates so that the new one when issue will show your full credit up to the end of our fiscal year, December 1, last or, if preferred, up to date.

REPORTS OF THE TRACT SOCIETY

Reports of the receipts and expenditures of the Society since its charter, can be found in Zion's Watch Tower issues of the following dates: For 1885, in Tower, Jan. 1886. "1886 to 1891" Jan. 1892. "1892 Dec. 1" Dec. 15, 1892. "1893 Dec. 1" Dec. 15, 1893.

The donations for the six years 1886 to 1891, aside from my own, were very meager. So little interest being manifested I scarcely thought worth while to make a yearly report. Besides, during that time the inauguration of the colporteur work took considerable time and attention, which continues as the work enlarges. The increase of contributions since 1892, incident to the adoption of the plan called "Good Hopes," led to the return to yearly reports.

In the foregoing extract from our issue of January 1891 (and which appeared in eight issues of the Tower for 1891) we say, "The Society owns nothing, has nothing, pays no salaries, etc." Lest some should misunderstand this, we will explain. The Tower Pub. Co. (which in a financial way represents myself) owns the Bible House, buys the paper, pays for the printing, binding electro-plates, etc., and keeps a large stock of Dawns and Tracts on hand and fills the orders of the Tract Society at any time, and at much lower prices than any worldly firm would charge for much poorer service. To do this requires that thousands of dollars lie idle continually, in electroplates, books, colporteurs' dues, tracts, etc; and as a consequence the Tower Pub. Co., is now a borrower to the extent of over twenty thousand dollars (the interest on which is over $1200.00 yearly), all of which, however, is amply secured by other property which I own.

The Tract Society's funds are usually spent before received, as under the "Good Hopes" plan we know about what to expect. It runs a yearly account with the Tower Pub. Co., paying over moneys as received and balancing the account at the close of the year.

Is it asked why the Tract Society does not do its own publishing? We reply, because it has neither capital nor credit. No banks would want the Tract Society's note. There are two ways in which it could do its own publishing: (1) By doing no work for a while, it could save up the yearly donations until it had a capital with which to purchase or rent a building, buy type, make electrotypes, and pay in advance for paper, printing, binding, and have capital with which to give colporteurs some starting credit, etc.; but this surely would not be as advantageous a way as the present one. (2) I could make a donation to the Tract Society of a part or all of the Tower Pub. Co.'s outfit, and take that many more voting-shares. This I no doubt would have done had it not been for the greater caution of my esteemed help-mate, Sister Russell. Her advice was,—That would be no real benefit to the work, and you may be sure that if the Society really had any assets or property, some would soon begin to interfere with its management, or at least try to. So long as we live we had best keep matters as they are, and at our death put the Tract Society and the Lord's work in general on the best possible footing, and in the most consecrated hands we can find. I followed this advice rather reluctantly; but now, in the light of the slanders herein discussed, I see it to have been the very essence of wisdom.

WHAT COULD HAVE BEEN THEIR OBJECT

Such a conspiracy, so deeply laid and extending over eighteen months at least, must have had an object; and after-sight often makes known what foresight could not have even suspicioned. It is clear, now, that Bro. and Sister

3H136

Zech have long felt envious of Bro. and Sister Russell. We can see now the meaning of their desire to get full control of the German work, which we so readily surrendered, and their anxiety to get the German paper forced into the hands of all the Tower readers. They knew that a good many of them could read German, and they were anxious to exercise a rival influence over them. Had they been more moderate in their efforts I might have granted all they desired; but their repeated, extreme and unreasonable demands made me feel cautious, although I knew not of what. I felt that I must not trust them absolutely. But never for one moment did I suspicion that it was a disease of the heart, as now seems evident: I attributed it merely a differences of heads.

We repeat that the evidence is strong that what has just occurred was planned to occur one year ago; and to use the expression of one who knew of this feverish condition of things before we had the least intimation of it, “the pot was kept boiling, ready for the explosion.” And true enough the pot has been boiling, and many of the church here, especially of the new and weaker ones have been forced into it, while myself and Mrs. Russell were in blissful ignorance of it. Some stopped their ears and said, We will not hear this unrighteous gossip; others heard and disbelieved, and covered what they could not understand with the mantle of charity; while with a few others it has acted like venomous poison, prejudicing their minds so that they have no ear for the truth on the subject.

Yes, the explosion has at last come;—but it is the explosion of their malice, hatred, envy and evil surmises. No doubt it will do some damage; for the fallen human mind is much more attracted to evil things than to good things, and more readily surmises evil than good. Only the pure in heart and considerably developed in Christian character are ruled by the love that “thinketh (surmiseth) no evil.” (1 Cor. 13:5) No doubt the “explosion” will kill the interest of some of the new born lambs; and many will be wounded by it. But what cared the conspirators for such considerations, Brother Russell’s character must be killed somehow, or else the work so successfully managed by him as the Lord’s steward would not be wrecked. And only by wrecking the present work could they hope to gather some of its fragments into their “bag” (John 12:6), to start up a new work,—a new paper, a new tract fund, etc., etc.

Yes, that is manifestly the secret of it all: the conspirators managed ably; and Brother Adamson, with a large bundle of the assassinating circulars, went to work at once to take the money out of the mouths of the “fish” in Ohio and elsewhere—to start a new paper, in which, if they do as they desire me to do in the TOWER, all who will may publish truth and untruth ad libitum.

Here I dismiss this painful subject, which has weighed heavily upon our hearts for three weeks past. In various ways it has greatly interfered with the Lord’s work. And it has, no doubt, greatly disturbed the whole Church, and caused some at least—we know not yet how many—to turn aside from the way and work which God has seen fit to permit Satan to thus trouble and shake.

The two weeks intervening between the receiving of the libelous circular of our enemies and the preparation and sending out of this defense, has doubtless been a period of severe testing to many of you, especially those young in the truth; but all who have been slow to believe evil, and who have determined to wait patiently and prayerfully until the right and the truth should be vindicated, have doubtless been drawn closer to the Lord, and made to feel yet more their dependence upon him. I know that many have been praying for me the Lord's grace and strength; for many have so written, and I am sure that others did who did not write it. I rejoice to tell all such that I have been wonderfully blessed and kept in the peace of God which passeth all understanding. And as a consequence of recent experiences I am sure that I can appreciate and sympathize with the Master's experiences as never before. I have learned to appreciate true friends, and the spirit of Christ as never before. Of course the tendency of the fallen minds is to believe any evil report; and in the present case this tendency would be backed by the fact that the very brethren who bring these charges were lifted up to notice and commended to your confidence by myself. We cannot wonder, then, if a considerable number will have their minds defiled, and be themselves "sifted as wheat" (Luke 22:31), and if some be taken entirely out of sympathy with the truth and its service. All that we could do we have done for these: we have prayed for them that their faith fail not, and we have published for them this lengthy explanation of the false charges.

In writing this explanation, I have avoided making any countercharges or dragging in any of the personal affairs of the conspirators, except such fragments as touched upon their charges against me and were necessary to give you the true view of the matter. I thus avoid their affairs, not because I lack ability to surmise, suggest and hint evil of them, but because I hate such works of the flesh and the devil, and by the Lord's grace am seeking more and more the mind of the spirit—the mind of Christ, which "thinketh (surmiseth) no evil," but suffers long and is kind.

But, dear brethren and sisters, we must beware lest the sacred title of brother and sister be abused and all its meaning lost. There are limits on this subject fixed in God's Word, and it behooves us to notice them and to act accordingly.

First, any one who does not fully and heartily confess the Lord's death as his ransom-price, paid once for all eighteen centuries ago, should not be recognized as a brother or sister, however honorable his conduct, or respectable his manner and appearance.

Secondly, the brother or sister (believer in the ransom), who, by a disorderly walk and conversation, brings reproach upon the cause of Christ, is to be withdrawn from and to be treated "as a heathen man and a publican," that is, in all respects as though he were not a brother—as an erring brother disowned and disfellowshipped until such time as he shall fully and freely confess his fault and ask forgiveness.

The question therefore is, what should be our attitude toward these conspirators? Would the Lord have us continue to fellowship them and think and speak of them as “Brethren,” or not? They have not yet denied the ransom, although some views expressed by two of them, recently, look as though they were getting onto dangerous ground, in their endeavor to find something that they can present as strictly new and original. And to our knowledge they are soliciting financial aid from the “no-ransom” folks who “walk no more with us,” and are “enemies of the cross of Christ;” and it is but reasonable to suppose that they will seek to please those who will aid them, and that those who give aid will expect favor at their hands.

For my own part I have concluded that it is our duty to fellowship them as brethren no longer; and that each may be able to decide the question for himself, I will lay before you all the Scriptural reasons, as follows:

(1) Read what the Apostle Paul says the true Church should do respecting “unreasonable and wicked men.” (2 Thess. 3:1-6.) Question—Are these conspirators unreasonable and wicked? Each must judge for himself according to the evidence; and I have laid it before you very carefully. The evidence proves that they are, all of them, unreasonable; and the facts of this conspiracy of several years—this attempted assassination of the character of one who always did them good and never did one of them the least harm,—is as strong evidence of wickedness of heart as we need ever expect to find. “Disorderly” does not fit this case: it is a thousand times worse than the disorderly conduct mentioned by the Apostle as a ground for withdrawing of brotherly regard, etc. (Verses 8-15.) This case is more nearly described in 1 Tim. 6:4,5 and Rom. 16:17.

(2) In our Lord’s instructions, in Matt. 18:15-17, he gives us a rule for such cases. Has it been followed? Yes, we have here related how the conspirators themselves brought the brethren to hear and to join with them, and how their unjust thoughts and evil surmisings were rebuked by those whom they sought to poison and make my enemies. We have also related how some of the best representatives of thought in the congregation were twice called “to hear,” and judge as you now have fully heard. Yet notwithstanding all, they will hear nothing but the voice of Satan, urging them on to more envy, malice, hatred and strife, publicly and privately expressed. Henceforth, such men should be to all who love righteousness, and obey the Lord's command, "as heathen men and publicans" until such times as they shall fully and humbly repent and reform.

(3) The Apostle gives us a sure rule for judging who are and who are not "brethren." He says, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his"—no matter what he believes, and no matter what he may formerly have been or believed or done. The spirit manifested by these conspirators is far from the spirit of Christ—meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly kindness and love which surmises no evil. And those who are none of his should, surely, be none of ours. Every branch in the Vine that beareth not fruit (the fruit of the spirit), God, the great husbandman, will take away (cast off).—John 15; 2.

The violation and loss of the spirit of the truth generally comes first, but the loss of the letter of the truth, the true doctrine, is sure to follow, ere long. "If any man will do my Father's will he shall know of my doctrine," said the Master. And it is consistent to reason to the contrary, that those who have the doctrine, but fail to grow its proper fruits will lose the doctrine.

This sudden and venomous attack upon my reputation by those who professed, even to the very date of the outbreak, the warmest of friendship—this search for years for something that could be misconstrued and made unto slander,—this berating of the colporteurs as my slaves, by the very men who (more than myself) urged all who could do so to engage in this service, and who denominated it the highest and best service of the Truth,—this attempt to apply to me all the vile names they can think of, such as "pope," "Man of Sin," "Saul," "King of Babylon," etc., may deceive some, but not those who have the spirit of the truth and who as true sheep know the voice of the Shepherd. Such will recognize it as the voice of a stranger, and will flee from its influence.—John 10:5.

The Lord who saw fit to permit the great Enemy to bring this storm upon his disciples, purposed not only the shaking out of all not worthy of the truth, but also the greater strengthening of faith and closer binding together of all who are truly his. He is able to say now, as of yore (Matt. 8:26), Peace, be still; and to give us a great peace and renewed confidence in him and in each other in whom we see his spirit.

Just a word upon another matter. Slighting remarks have been made respecting the Dawns, and other of our publications, to the effect that these teachings are really old and merely restated therein. I reply: It is well known to all of our readers that we do not claim that our teachings are new; that, on the contrary, we specially designate them "the old theology;"—the teachings of Christ and the apostles and prophets.

If it be true, that the same truths are taught in books published by others, I would be glad to know it; but I regret that I have never seen them. These who profess to know of such publications have evidently gotten as little good from them as they got from mine,—none. For he who gets not the spirit of the truth gets no blessing from the letter of the truth.

That isolated parts or features of the truth are to be found in the various writings of the past three centuries is unquestionably true. Our Presbyterian friends have precious truth in the doctrine of election. Our Methodist friends have long held the blessed doctrine of free grace; our Universalist friends have long preached a false view of restitution; and almost all have held some truth with some error. The special blessing of the present harvest message is that it clarifies, harmonizes and systematizes all these fragments of truth, and brings order out of confusion,—rightly dividing the Word of Truth.

Respecting the steps of the divine leading in reaching the present development of the truth, I refer the reader to three articles which appeared in Zion's Watch Tower for May, 1890, entitled "Perils Amongst False Brethren," "Harvest Gatherings and Siftings" and "Sifting the Wheat." These were published with reference to a previous sifting; but as many of our readers are new since then, we think well to let these articles form a conclusion to this paper.

We know of no other publications than MILLENNIAL DAWN, etc., which teach an opportunity of restitution based upon a ransom-price given for all on Calvary; no others that distinguish between the human and the divine natures, showing the latter to be the heritage of the elect Church and the former the blessed hope set before the world; no others that teach distinctly the presence of our Lord, beginning in the Fall of 1874; no others that show the real cleansing of the Sanctuary; no others that harmonize all these doctrines (election, free grace, the "little flock," the "great company," the restitution class, etc., etc.) in the one grand, beautiful, divine, Plan of the Ages.

We could wish that there were many and abler pens than ours, to portray a message so worthy of the sublimest expression. But we rejoice, nevertheless, that we have a share in the work; and we remember always that not unto the human instruments, but to God, the divine author of the plan of the ages, belongs the honor. And we remember that in this, as in all things, God's Word is fulfilled which declares that "God hath chosen the weak things of the world and the things that are naught."

But whoever might have been the instrument in the Lord's hands, in bringing to light the harvest message, we well know from the assurances of God's word that he could only expect as his present reward, that which the Master also received, when after opening the eyes of one born blind, they said, "Give God the praise: we know that this man is a sinner.” John 9:16,24. Surely the disciple is not above his Master.

I take this occasion to thank those of charitable judgment who by letter and in person have expressed their confidence and sympathy in this trial, and who have steadily held us, and all the interests of this harvest work, before the throne of grace. Continue to do so, dear brethren and sisters: “Watch and pray!” Watch, that no criticizing, evil-surmising spirit may find a place among you; and if any such appear in your midst, promptly check the tendency by refusing to be a party to any secret, underhanded slander; bring all such and their charges to the light at once; and if they refuse to state publicly to the accused, what they would hint and insinuate privately, reckon that such persons have not the spirit of Christ, but the reverse, the disposition of Satan, the accuser of the brethren: for the poison of asps is under the lips of the evil-surmising, backbiting gossip. (Rom. 3:13-18.) But cultivate rather the fruits of the spirit of love and peace, and seek to adorn the profession of godliness with a consistent walk and conversation.

We quote below a few of the letters received.

Your brother in Christ,—abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, C. T. Russell.

To The Church of Christ, Greetings!

I take this opportunity to speak in defense of my husband against the bold attack of our enemies in maligning his character and misrepresenting our domestic relations. Our household is composed only of ourselves and our esteemed and beloved helpers in the WATCH TOWER Office, all of whom gladly bear witness to the tranquility and happiness of our home, save as intrusions of false brethren and busybodies occasionally disturb it.

Our home, so far from being a discordant one, is the very reverse,—most happy. I could, indeed, pray for no greater blessing upon all of the dear saints, than that their home-life might be as peaceful and happy as ours. The liberty wherewith Christ makes free is enjoyed by all who are of our household or in any way connected with the work;—not the liberty of anarchy, however, but of subjection to the spirit and Word of God.

To the above answers of my beloved husband to the charges of his slanderers I give my unqualified endorsement in every particular. Although such calumnies are severe, and doubly hard to bear when they come from those whom we had supposed to be friends, but who, we now find, have been plotting these wicked deeds for several years, I assure you all that God has sustained us and given us his peace through it all. At first it came with almost the force and suddenness of an avalanche, both upon us and upon the Allegheny Church; and although we feared for the stability of some, we felt sure that it was permitted of the Lord for the purpose of what he saw to be a necessary sifting. But, thank God, the Church here has weathered the storm well; and now letters from some of the stronger ones abroad, who have received the libelous circulars are coming in, expressing continued confidence, and showing that Satan's arts are recognized; and these are further encouraging our hearts and answering our prayers, though we are still solicitous for many who are yet young in the truth, and who may be unprepared to withstand such a shock; for we well know that the time intervening between receiving the slanderous report and this reply is one of suspense and severe trial to all.

We reflect, however, that "The Lord knoweth them that are his," and that he is able and willing to keep them from falling; and that, as with Gideon's band, some must needs be turned back. Who is on the Lord's side?—the truth's side? "Who shall be able to stand?"—"Who shall ascend into the hill (the Kingdom) of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place?" "He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn (a solemn covenant) deceitfully."

Having committed our way unto the Lord, we are not fretting ourselves because of the evil doers, whose time is short, but we are trusting in the Lord, whose promises will in due time be fulfilled—"He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday" (Psa. 37); and until such time we will try to be patient, and will count it all joy to be esteemed worthy to suffer reproaches and afflictions for the name and cause of our beloved Lord.

*Oh! what are all earth's gilded toys,
Compared with heaven's eternal joys,
Or even to the feast now spread
For pilgrims through the desert led?*

In Christian love and fellowship with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ and his truth in truth and sincerity, and who have no disposition to make merchandise of either the truth or the character of any of God's chosen instruments, I am Yours in the faith and hope of the Gospel, Mrs. C. T. Russell.

ALLEGHENY CHURCH RESOLUTIONS

At a meeting of the Church of Christ, of Allegheny, Pa., held in Bible House Chapel, following the preaching services, over one hundred being present, a Chairman and Secretary were elected, and a committee presented the following Resolutions, which were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, It has come to our knowledge that certain persons, viz., Elmer Bryan, Otto von Zech, S. D. Rogers and J. B. Adamson, have been for some time circulating verbal and printed reports concerning our pastor, Brother Charles T. Russell, which are derogatory to his character as a Christian gentleman, as a business man, and as our pastor; and

Whereas, We have heard the reports and Brother Russell's answers to the same; therefore be it

RESOLVED, That we, the congregation meeting at Bible House, Allegheny, Pa., place no confidence in the aforesaid reports which are being disseminated by the above-named persons, but consider them slanderous, and entirely unworthy of persons professing to be brethren in Christ; and be it further

Resolved, That we take this opportunity to express, to Brother Russell and to all whom it may concern, our great regard for him as a Christian gentleman, our unshaken confidence in his integrity as a business man, and our ever-increasing love and appreciation of him as our pastor (not our pope, as they falsely allege); and to acknowledge that, to him, under God, we owe a debt of gratitude for fifteen years' faithful services as our pastor, in ministering to us the Truth, which has made us free, and whereby we have been and are growing in knowledge, grace and steadfastness; and for encouraging us to the use of the talents of which we are severally the stewards; and for providing a commodious and centrally-located meeting-place for us; all of which he does voluntarily, and without a penny of remuneration; and be it further

Resolved, That we assure him of our sincere sympathy and earnest prayers on his behalf in this hour of trial, and that we commend him to the God of all comfort; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chairman and Secretary of this meeting be and they are hereby authorized and instructed to sign these resolutions on behalf of the congregation, and to convey the same to Brother Russell.

[Signed] The Congregation At Allegheny. [By] M. M. Tuttle, Chairman. April 22, 1894. Jennie Vero. Secretary.

Allegheny, Pa., April 7, 1894.

Dear Brother Russell:—Various reports having been circulated by persons, viz.: Elmer Bryan, S. D. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Otto von Zech, J. B. Adamson and Paul Koetitz, whose conduct shows them to be the enemies of the truth as well as of yourself, to the effect that those working in the office under your supervision are in bondage to you, “under his thumb,” “dare not to call their souls their own,” “slaves,” etc., etc., without liberty to think or act according to the dictates of their own consciences and judgments, we desire to express ourselves positively in the matter, in writing, so that these reports may be understood in their true light, not only by yourself, but by others who have heard these rumors, and by whomsoever else you may wish to acquaint with the contents of this letter.

We desire to state first, that we are not in bondage, nor oppressed, nor caused to say or do anything in any matter which is contrary to our wills. We are in the office from choice, as the part of the Lord's work in which, in our opinion, we can serve most fully and most to the Lord's praise. We are at liberty to exercise all our functions as members of the body of Christ, and we do so, not only with your consent, but with your approval and encouragement. In fact, far from exhibiting a desire to suppress any of us, we have found you always desirous of enlarging our field of usefulness as much as possible; and we would say further that you have our esteem and love as a servant of the Lord, and as one in whom his likeness is largely developed.

But in several other respects we are in bondage. We were first the servants of Sin, "sold under Sin," receiving the daily wages—pain, sorrow, discontent, disease—of that inexorable master; and we found ourselves "under his thumb," fearing the death which we realized would finally be inflicted upon us.

But, thanks be to God, we escaped before he had fully wrought out his evil purposes. We learned that we had been "bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ;" and with you we fled to this new Master, to yield our members servants of righteousness, as we had formerly yielded them to the service of our old master, Sin. And did we count ourselves free? out of bondage? Free from Sin, yes; but not absolutely free. We had merely transferred our allegiance. We had now become the bond-servants or slaves of Christ, of righteousness, of truth. We were bound by our covenant of consciences; by the dictates of our consciences; by our judgments; by God's command, through the Apostle, that all we do, to the smallest item, should be to the glory of God (1 Cor. 10:31); and consequently we were obliged to bear the fruit of the spirit; for we recognized as binding upon us our Master's words: "In this is my Father glorified—that ye bear much fruit."

We found that our new Master was not selfish in demanding this; for the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, forbearance, kindness, goodness, fidelity, meekness, self-control, all of which redound to our own benefit; and we realized that He could not be selfish in demanding this exhibition of un selfishness from us, especially as this is his own disposition.—Phil. 2:5.

We were also bound in other ways, and more and more so as we studied the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and saw how one after another of the desires and liberties of the flesh must be restrained, bound, in order that we might the more closely walk up to the requirements of that law. We found limitations, prohibitions, counsels, warnings, applicable to every walk in life; and we found some of them very crucial tests, dividing even “between the soul (the human instincts) and the spirit (the intents of the new mind).” “Let every man please (not himself, but) his neighbor unto edification; for even Christ pleased not himself.” “Judge not, that ye be not judged;” but “judge this, rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother’s way.” “Lie not against the truth.” “Lie not one to another.” “Put off the former conversation, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind.” “Let not the sun go down upon your wrath.” “Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth.” “Grieve not the holy spirit.” “Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and evil-speaking be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you.” “Let no man deceive you with vain words.” “Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.” “Walk circumspectly.” “Redeem the time.” “Submit yourselves one to another.” “Put on the whole armor of God.” “Beware of dogs and evil workers.” “Continue in prayer, and watch with thanksgiving.” “Walk in wisdom toward them that are without.” “See that none render evil for evil.” “Avenge not yourselves.” “Abstain from all appearance of evil.” “Be not weary in well doing.” “The love of money is the root of all evil.” “Preach the word, be instant in season and out of season.” “Avoid foolish questions.” “Speak evil of no man.” “In honor prefer one another.”

Yes, the more we study the law of the spirit of life, the more we find that it means death to self; so that we would “endure grief, suffering wrongfully,” humiliation, pain, death itself, rather than displease our present Master, or allow the old autocrat, Sin, to gain the least ascendancy over us. Yea, we count all things as loss and dross, if we may but remain in Christ.

In yet another way are we in bondage. We found that our new Master did not consult us as to what position in his household we would like to occupy: he arbitrarily appointed us our places, and we were thankful, oh, so thankful, to be used at all, that we were not very particular. We were glad to be used in any capacity. We found that “God hath set the members in the body as it hath pleased him.” Realizing this, we are content. He knows best how to use us; he has used us in the past and we trust him to use us more effectively in the future.

But we are bound—bound to the body; and, being bound, we are endeavoring to supply that strength and stability, that grace, which will tend to the increase of the spirit of love, and to the effectual service of the entire body.—Eph. 4:15, 16.

We are bound in still another way: “We can do nothing against the truth.” The unenlightened world, the entire nominal church, some who once loved us, principalities and powers, seen and unseen, Satan with all his hosts, are arrayed against the truth, to destroy it if possible, to drag in the dust its most earnest advocates; but we, we can do nothing against the truth. The very thought is pain. Rather let all the anathemas pronounced by Papacy against heretics be upon us. We can do nothing, we will do nothing against the truth. "Let God be true, though it prove every man a liar."

Glorious bondage! Glorious liberty from Sin, from death, from self. Glorious liberty in Christ! Glorious bondage to Christ!

*"Not my own!" Oh, "not my own!"
Jesus, I belong to thee!
All I have and all I hope for,
Thine for all eternity.*

These, dear Bro. Russell, are the sentiments of our hearts toward the Lord and his work, and we believe them to be also the sentiments of your own heart. We want to assure you of our oneness of purpose with you in the forwarding of the work, over which we believe the Lord has made you overseer, and in which, by his grace, we are glad to be accounted "helps." (Can it be that the Apostle referred to us when he used that peculiar term?) This is a trying hour to you; and perhaps you feel a little as the Lord did, when some walked no more with him—"And will ye, too, go away?" So we want to sustain you by our love and sympathy and co-operation, as well as by our prayers, and to give you every reason to believe that we are your friends, as well as friends of the truth.

We know not what to say concerning those who malign your character; but we fear for them the retribution of those who spoke evil of another to whom the Lord had given a special charge.—Num. 16:1-35.

With this assurance of our sentiment, we are, Your servants in Christ, Edward F. Abbott, Wm. L. Campbell, Rose J. Ball, E. C. Hennings, James A. Weimar.

New York, April 16, 1894.

My Dear Brother And Sister Russell:—It is now near midnight, but I cannot retire without first trying to express (for words fail me to express fully) our deep love and sympathy to you both.

This A. M. we received a "circular letter," which I take the liberty to enclose to you, believing you ought (if you do not) to know its contents. Truly it has been a sad day to us, more like a house of mourning. Mrs. G. is almost prostrated over it, but thank the good Lord, we have not read the Tower for over twelve years in vain. By God's grace, we can see the sophistry and detect the wolf beneath the covering of wool. Mr. Rogers is greatly mistaken in supposing that none who read the Dawn without the preached word can come into the Truth; for, thank the dear Lord, sister G. and myself were led into the light by it. Sisters Erlenmeyer and Clark were the first we met and talked with, and that is less than three years ago; and they will doubtless testify to our having considerable light. I have humbly done what I could to circulate Dawns and Tracts.

But, dear brother and sister, I will not weary you; only be assured that you are always remembered in our prayers; and may the dear Lord be ever present with you in this your especial time of need. We shall ever trust in Christ, our ransom price, and strive to be led by the "spirit of truth."

Pray for us, and do not fear. We are striving to be ever on the alert for Satan, come in what form he may, but we trust solely in Jesus; for if he be for us, who can be against us?

God bless and keep you both is our constant prayer.

Yours in the Truth, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Ganoung.

Ohio, April 15, 1894.

Dear Sister Russell:—In writing you a few days ago I expressed great surprise at the course Bro. Rogers had taken. Judge my further surprise when yesterday I received a circular containing the letters of four brethren. Of course you know to what I refer. What can this mean?

It takes no keen discernment to discover that they were not written in the spirit of meekness and love, the Christ spirit. The venom with which they seem to be permeated must certainly neutralize their effect. One of the writers in his anxiety to make out a case, by making public that which he had better wrapped in a mantle of charity and consigned to forgetfulness, has, in my estimation, violated his Christian honor. I honestly believe that I express the sentiment of the whole true church when I say that we still esteem our Brother Russell very highly in love for his work's sake, and sincerely believe that he will be able to clear himself of each and every charge, and come forth from this fiery trial unscathed as he has done from former ones. He never to my knowledge claimed infallibility or wished to assume either office or title of "pope." Nor can I see how any member of the church possessed of intelligence and sanctified common sense can accuse him of this.

I have written, dear sister, to express to you my continued love and confidence, also my sympathy in this trial. 'Tis doubtless a well-laid scheme of the adversary to shake your faith. Recall your own words in your last letter to me: "We are in the shaking time when all that can be shaken will be, and only that which cannot be shaken will remain," and, holding fast your confidence, go on, looking unto Jesus. Please express my Christian love and sympathy to Bro. Russell, and tell him to fear none of these things which he shall suffer.

I commend you both to the "Father of mercies and the God of all comfort." In Christian loyalty and love. Sincerely yours, M. J. Tucker.

Bro. W. E. Page, for some time a member of an office force and of our family, writes a few kind word and encloses a copy of a letter sent to Bro. Gilruth, as follows:—

Des Moines, April 18, '94.

Dear Brother Gilruth:—Yours of 6th inst. came duly. I am grieved that the Rogers, Zech, Bryan, Adamson manifesto must now arise to stumble some, though, since the Lord permits it, I am not dazed by it; nor do I let it worry me..... At the meeting that continued until 4 o'clock, A. M., to which Zech refers, I presided as chairman. When first going into the work Zech had no money, but later was left some by German relatives. He was anxious to invest it and finally conceived the idea of establishing a printing plant and doing Bro. Russell's work. Bro. Russell discouraged the idea, though, through regard for Zech and to aid him, he finally consented to give him the work, advising against the scheme; and Zech knows this, though stating to the contrary. Zech insisted on Bro. Russell treating him in all things on the principle of "love," as he put it, i. e., that he do everything he could for him and pay the highest price for all work done, while he, Zech, act wholly on the principle of avarice—get all you can—with Bro. Russell.

I do not think that Zech saw the point on this plainly, his financial interests and lack of business ability keeping the fear that he might lose money constantly in the foreground. His money has proven a snare to him. I have been all over this ground with both parties, and am sure Brother Russell has done Zech no injury.

Bryan is a very peculiar man, and always has been—by heredity, I judge, assisted by training. He must needs have the care of every conscience subject to his observation, demanding that all conform to his views of right and wrong. To an insane degree he constantly exhibited the determination during the last of his connection with the office, to make Bro. Russell acknowledge to him that he was a wrong-doer, and especially in doing contrary to Bryan's judgment. His insinuations and intimations regarding the boiler cleaning compound are, I am sure, more the result of prejudice than fact; though this particular thing was not canvassed when I was in Allegheny. Similar and even worse charges were, and found groundless.

My knowledge of the weaknesses, prejudice, poor judgment, lack of discernment, etc., of Zech and Bryan, with the information I have proving the most of these charges groundless, leads me to give but little if any weight to their criticism.

Rogers has stumbled over having a special mission to convert everybody to his methods. No one can or will object to his living according to it; and he might be blessed in some ways by so doing. Surely you and I prefer to earn our own bread, that we may be chargeable to none, and have to give to him who is in necessity;—not who supinely puts himself in a dependent condition.

I have had a long correspondence with Adamson regarding his tract, and refused to contribute toward the expense of printing, not knowing what it would teach. He abused me roundly for this and severely criticized my free-will offering to the Tract Fund, indicating a perverse spirit. However, we can and I do leave the quartet in God's hands. He knows their weaknesses and how much perverseness is mixed up in their courses.

We know that God's plan will be fully accomplished in due time and that any and all who resist the truth, even as Jannes and Jambres did Moses, will gain a full recompense of reward (2 Tim. 3:8,9) and in no way prevent the full setting up of the Kingdom. Then, too, we know that wicked servants are sent into outer darkness by the Master, and he is managing the harvest work. We can abide in him, and have our weakness turned into strength. Yours in service, W. E. Page.

W. Virginia, April 17, 1894.

Dear Brother Russell:—"Be not weary nor faint in mind." May you be delivered out of every trouble. "Think it not strange."
Yours in the Lord, H. L. Gillis.

Illinois, April 24, 1894.

Dear Brother Russell:—I want you to understand how we regard the trouble. Your friends will court an investigation. Better wait until A., B., R. and Z. have something more definite than their very gauzy manifesto to offer. Do not, please do not, make the same mistake of haste and anger which characterizes their villainous letter. Sorry you did not mention the Adamson matter when you were here with us, on your return from your visit to him, as only a few days after I sent a small subscription for his tracts.

Careful study of the manifesto shows that it covers considerable time, during which the four signers were in intimate communication with you. Suddenly they change, and with haste and irritation describe troubles already examined and decided against them; and they wantonly villify one whom within the present month they loudly proclaimed as their trusted leader and friend.

Our only information is gleaned from the bare, cold, unsympathetic black and white of the printed page,—evidently hastily written, under the stress of strong excitement, couched in language vague and ambiguous, hinting at things to us unknown but presumably dreadful, and all better calculated to whet the appetite of a scandal-monger than to enlighten the saint.

Referring to the circular alphabetically, we note that it extends from A to Z—Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the beginning to the end: and, indeed to cover the entire ground. If the desire to bring Bro. Russell to the varying standards of excellence in the minds of the four writers has been unwarranted by the facts, none should more regret it than themselves. Such however being the case, we appear to have four popes instead of only one.

Bro. Adamson's tract begins—"Introductory. This outline of God's plan in the ages is designed to be an introduction to the volumes of the Millennial Dawn." He says, "Concerning parables heard, while the author of Dawn is not responsible here, we believe it is in harmony with Millennial Dawn teaching." From this the reader might fairly infer at least that the "author of DAWN" does not disagree. While the truth is the very reverse, this tract is now being shamelessly foisted upon the public. More than this, Brother Adamson endeavors to throw the responsibility on the author of Dawn by failing to note any other possible author, and by announcing himself under the title of "Distributor."

MILLENNIAL DAWN, when read in the order in which it is written, the order intended by its author, is as plain as the alphabet, and no more needs an introduction, or explanation than do our A. B. C's. To write an alleged introduction, supposedly on behalf, but without the request, of the author of the book, is to insinuate obscurity and incapacity in the author, and is to him a gratuitous insult. To insist on publishing such an introduction regardless of the author's repeated protests, would even in civil courts, subject such publisher to heavy penalties. How much more, then, should such conduct be reprobated by those who will judge, not only the world, but angels.

Without at present charging error, it is only just to say that in many instances Bro. Adamson's writings are hopelessly ambiguous, and therefore dangerous.

Several of Bro. Bryan's charges have already to my knowledge been tried impartially in a manner and by a tribunal of his own Scriptural choosing; but he forgets that their findings in each instance supported you, Brother Russell, and were unfavorable to himself. That he should now drag forth these once disposed of matters, without honestly advising his readers of the fact, seems to argue a decidedly drowsy condition of his once so vigilant conscience.

Brother Rogers is plainly guilty of a shameful waste of printers' ink, blank paper, and his readers' time, in requiring two full pages closely packed, on which to confess that while a duly accredited agent, under the instructions and at the expense of the Tower Tract Society, he disobeyed orders, violated his agreement, and returned to England expecting to persuade you that he knew more about your purpose and plans than you did yourself.

Bro. Zech in his attempt to describe a family difficulty, said to have occurred as long ago as Christmas, '92 has failed; hence we have only his word that there was an "insult." If there really were one, it has doubtless long since been forgiven. The demand for a public apology was not called for according to its own showing; and in publishing the names of its signers he has probably no more consulted their wishes than those of the other parties concerned.

Our confidence in you remains unshaken, and our sympathy is most hearty and sincere. Your brother in Christ, WM. M. Wright.

Ohio, April 24, 1894.

Dear Brother Russell:—My heart has been exceeding sad for the last two weeks. Because I would not condemn you unheard, I have been abused and likened to an idol worshiper, been told to repent and be converted and it has even been hinted to me that I am not consecrated. This dreadful thing (the defamatory circular) came on us in Columbus like a flash of lightening from a clear sky. Bro. Adamson never hinted to me that there was the least inharmony between yourself and him when he asked me to subscribe for his tracts.

I wrote Bro. A. as follows:

"I cannot judge Bro. Russell from the standpoint of your four witnesses. He has three witnesses in his favor now,—Food For Thinking Christians, Millennial Dawn and Zion's Watch Tower, besides brethren yet to hear from. If Bro. Russell has erred, the Lord will judge him for it. I cannot condemn him unheard."

I hope dear brother, that you may be able to refute the slander of your enemies. I cannot believe that the Father would reveal his plans and truths to one so wicked as your enemies would make you out to be. I feel that the Lord will be with you. "For God is not unrighteous to forget your labor of love, which ye have showed toward His name, in that ye have ministered to the saints and do minister."

This morning I got from Bro. A. the enclosed unkind letter, accusing me of something that I have not done, as follows;

“Bro. Zech wrote me that Bro. Russell had tasked me with changing an order from Sister McOmer from 100 Ingersoll tracts to ‘my’ tracts; accusing me of scratching out the ‘Ingersoll’ and putting ‘my’ above it. I suppose you sent the letter to Bro. Russell as an evidence of my rascality.”

It is very evident that Bro. Adamson is jealous of the amounts, small as they are, that I send to the Tract Fund, which has become so hateful to him that he will even accuse me falsely.

Hoping that all things may abound to the glory of God, I remain your sister in Christ our Redeemer, Belle F. Miller.

[Reply: The only letter of the kind referred to by Bro. A., that I know of, was one sent to him by Bro. Sherman. In it Bro. S. enclosed $5.00 for one hundred Ingersoll tracts. Bro. A. crossed off the words “Ingersoll tracts” and wrote above “your new tract.” Bro. A. sent that altered letter to a friend, from whom he desired a like amount, and in due time it came to me. I do not believe, however, that it was done fraudulently; nor that it was a misapplication of funds. I merely say that he should first have assured himself, beyond all question, as to Bro. Sherman’s real intention: knowing that so intelligent a penman is not likely to misstate himself; especially, too, as Bro. A. was a Director in the Tract Society.]

New Albany, April 19, ‘94.

Dear Brother Russell:—It is with heaviness of heart that we write you these few lines. Without taking sides on the merits of the case as the trouble now stands, and as viewed from the circular letter of Bros. Zech, Rogers, Bryan and Adamson, we must protest against their course of procedure against you as unworthy of brethren. We extend to you and Sister Russell our sympathy. Your labor in the cause of present truth deserves better treatment than these men would mete out to you.

3H141

If you have done wrong, may the dear Lord help you to see your error; and I believe in such event you would cheerfully acknowledge it. Your brother and sister in Christ, F. J. & Alice E. Bourquin.

The following is a copy of a letter sent by same mail to Brother von Zech. Dear Brother:—It is in great sorrow and heaviness of heart that I acknowledge receipt of your circular letter.

Myself and wife have made it a subject of prayer, as we did when we first read DAWN, and we feel that we cannot wait one mail longer without writing and apprising you of our disapproval of your course, which we believe is very unscriptural and involving terrible consequences to yourselves, the body of Christ at large, many private individuals, and many who may now be just receiving the lights. It seems to us that Satan could not, with all his cunning, conceded ingenuity and ability, have concocted a scheme by which he could have injured more the cause of present truth than thus to deceive you and inspire you to do this thing as you have.

Should all you claim be true, which I do not admit to believe, then you still have not done as the Lord has instructed his followers to do. We have not conferred with flesh and blood—we passed that point long ago; but we have conferred with our Heavenly Father, and we take our stand on what we believe to be the right and truth and do not desire to injure the least one of those who believe in Christ. Others may do as they see right in the matter, but for our part we need not wait to see what step others may take or what they may say: we are willing to assume the responsibility thrust upon us by your very unwise, unkind and wicked letter. The course you have taken is certainly not the result of any inspiration received in communion with the Father in your private closet: no, dear erring brother, it must come from another source. The course pursued would kill the brother if guilty of all you claim, instead of reclaiming him.

For our part, we do not own one “pope;” if we did, we think we would prefer Bro. Russell to either of the four writing the circular letters; neither do we want two, three or four popes, and we confess that the said letters do smack of popery. You ask too much entirely, after failing to do as our Lord directed (Matt. 18:15-17.) You with three others set yourselves up as judges, witnesses and jury, and I might also add, without drawing too much on the imagination, as executioners. Now I wish to say to you that I know enough of the law of the world to know that this is very unlawful. No accused is to be adjudged guilty on ex parte testimony; even an accused criminal is to be presumed innocent until proven guilty by witnesses put under the testing fire of cross examination, all in the presence of the “accused,” a phrase you use repeatedly.

Bro. Zech, this letter is unworthy of you; and if my finances were as at one time, I would hasten to you, and talk to you face to face, for I would ten thousand times rather say this to you than to write it. I do not wish to evade responsibility when the cause of truth and the Master is at stake and in peril by false brethren, deceived and ignorant, as I believe, but false nevertheless, through the wiles of Satan.

Before I was a Christian I would never have betrayed such a secret, obtained as guest in a family, under any circumstances; if not from pure motives, I would have feared to be despised and distrusted by those to whom I should have revealed my perfidy and infidelity.

Why did you not wait until after to-day (the Anniversary of Christ’s death) before sending out your miserable stuff? This seems to be the time, though, for Satan to manifest himself, and it does look to me that this time he has taken four men who might have made good “shoemakers” and made Judges and lawyers of them, and they have “butchered” the job for everybody. I cannot express my indignation in words, at such audacity and assumption of power. After carefully rereading the letter I am convinced the writers are incompetent to try such a case, even if asked to do so by the congregation. The personal grievances are too prominent. Having confidence that our Lord is able to overrule the machination of the powers of darkness and make the wrath and wickedness of men to praise him and serve His good purpose, I am striving to be a faithful servant of the Lord. F. J. Bourquin.

Dear Brother and Sister Russell:—This last month has been, in my experience, a very sad one. The printed circular, coming from parties from whom we expected better things, has troubled me and made me very sad.

But after some mature reflection, and when I discovered from whom it emanated, I was not so surprised; for I have long ago seen that there was a Korah in the camp, who was soon joined by Dathan and Abiram. As they were the ringleaders in the rebellion against Moses and Aaron, so likewise those you have made confidants and entrusted with your private affairs,—who have sat at your table, as one of your family and been made partakers together of spiritual as well as natural things, little thinking you were nourishing a viper of the most poisonous nature, as it were in your bosom.

The three Spring Meetings previous to the Chicago Convention, notwithstanding the great good I received while there, were somewhat marred with what I saw and heard by three of the same parties now prominent in this disruption; and I was many times tempted to give you a hint on the subject, but I quieted my conscience by attributing it to their weakness. These are the three stones that in my dream I saw hurled at you while you were ministering to us the Word of Life, that caused blood to flow from your temples. Do you remember my mentioning it to you about three years ago? Oh! it makes me sad indeed. Anything from the outside world I can endure—as David expresses it “Had it been an avowed enemy, I could have borne it.”

Oh, may this dark hour of trial draw us closer, and closer, under the sheltering arms of our Heavenly Father! May God bless you with the riches of his grace, and the fulness of His spirit, is the earnest prayer of your brother in Christ, John W. Mason.

*“A little while, our fightings shall be over;
A little while, our tears be wiped away;
A little while, the power of Jehovah Shall turn our darkness into gladsome day.”*

HARVEST SIFTINGS

PERILS AMONG FALSE BRETHREN

2 Cor. 11:26

Our Christian experiences differ; no two exactly the same, because our temperaments and talents differ as well as our surroundings. But we may rely upon it that no real son of God is exempted from the needed trials of patience, faith and love. No matter how strong the character, or how seemingly impregnable to the ordinary besetments, we may rely upon it that such have as great trials and crosses as others—perhaps greater; perhaps such as would prostrate weaker ones, whom the Lord will therefore in love and mercy not suffer to be tempted above that they are able to bear.—1 Cor. 10:13.

Even our blessed Lord Jesus, though perfect, had to pass through an experience to test and prove his complete submission to the Father's will. Looking at our Lord's testing, we cannot doubt that his strong character was measurably unmoved by the sarcastic, bitter words and threats of the Scribes and Pharisees, and that likewise he speedily and firmly settled Satan's temptations negatively. None of these things, which would have been the greatest temptations to others, seemed to move or even to greatly annoy him. He answered coolly and often ironically the attacks of open enemies, and was comparatively unmoved by them; but it was when those who dipped in the dish with him lifted up the heel against him (Psa. 41:9; Matt. 26:23) and left him, that his heart was troubled;—wounded by professed friends. The only discouraged expression recorded, relative to his work, was toward the close of his ministry when the test became more and more severe, and "many went back and walked no more in his company," saying of his doctrines, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" His unreproachful but sorrowful words, then expressed to the twelve specially staunch disciples, were full of pathos and disappointed grief: "Will ye also go away?" The prompt response of Peter—"Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of lasting life"—must certainly have come as a comforting balm to that noble, loving heart, whose only impulse was to do good and to bless others.

And yet as he approached the close of his ministry, the time came that he must still further suffer wounds from those he most loved. No wonder that, catching a clear view of how his sacrifice was to be completed, how all his bosom disciples would forsake and disown him, and how one of them would betray him with a kiss, he was sorrowful, troubled in spirit, and testified, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." And though Peter courageously said, "Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee"—and so said they all—Jesus saw that all would be scattered, forsaking him in his most trying hour, and that courageous Peter would be so terribly sifted of Satan and prove so weak that he would even swear that he had never known him. Truly these trials from “brethren,” some of whom were only weak, and one false at heart, must have been among the sorest of our Lord’s experiences, during his period of trial. Yet none of these things moved him or for a moment influenced him to choose another course. He cheerfully followed the narrow path and left it for God, in his own time, to bring forth his righteousness as the light of noonday. (Psa. 37:6). He was obedient to God, and faithful to the truth, and it was thus that he suffered, not only at the hands of evil men, but also from the misunderstandings of his closest friends, who did not clearly grasp the situation, nor see how needful it was that he should first be Redeemer before he could become Restorer and King.

The same lesson of perils among false brethren, and among brethren who had not so fully as himself grasped the Truth, was also the Apostle Paul’s experience.

We never hear from him a complaint about the way the world rejected his message, spoke evil of him and maltreated him as the leading exponent of the unpopular doctrine of the cross of Christ, which was opposed both by the stumbling blinded Jews and by the worldly-wise believers in the philosophies of the Gentiles. Indeed, instead of being downcast or discouraged at his past experiences, or in the prospect of bonds and imprisonments awaiting him in the future, he boldly and cheerfully declared, “But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself.”—Acts 20:19-24

But, like the Lord Jesus, Paul had his severest trials from “false brethren”; who, instead of being faithful yoke-fellows and co-workers, as good soldiers of the cross, became puffed up, heady, and anxious to be leaders. These, being unwilling or unable to see the truth as fully and clearly as did Paul, because of their wrong condition of heart, and being envious of his success and the results of his zeal and labor, followed after him in the various cities where he had labored, and by misrepresentation of his character as well as of his teachings, sought to lower him in the esteem of the household of faith, and thus to open the way for various sophisticated theories which would reflect honor upon them as teachers of what they claimed were advanced truths, though actually subverting the real truth in the minds of many.

The only annoyance ever manifested by the Apostle Paul, in any of his letters, was upon this subject of his misrepresentation by false brethren. Referring to these false apostles by name, that they might be known and recognized as such (See 1 Tim. 1:19,20; 2 Tim. 4:10, 14-17; 2 Cor. 11:2-23), he clearly exposed their unholy motives of pride, ambition and envy, which scrupled not to make havoc of the Church and of the truth.

Especially did he point out that, in their attempt to be leaders, they had manufactured a different gospel, built upon a different foundation than the only true foundation—the death of Christ as man’s ransom-price.

Paul was zealous for the truth’s sake, lest these false apostles should use smooth words and misrepresentations of his character and of the truth as a lever to turn men aside from the true gospel.

He warns them against those teachers, not to keep himself uppermost in their hearts, but to put them on their guard, lest receiving the new teachers, they should be injured by the false teachings they presented, and lest in rejecting him and losing confidence in him as an honest and true man and teacher they should discard his teachings, which were the truth. Hence his reference to himself was not in self-defence and self-laudation, but in defence of the truth and an endeavor to have them see that his character and career as a true teacher comported well with the true message he bore to them.

And he fearlessly pointed out that men might claim to present the same Jesus, the same spirit and the same gospel, and yet be false teachers and deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ. And, he says, marvel not at such a thing as that men should be great workers in the name of Christ from ambitious motives: “No marvel, for Satan himself fashioneth himself into an angel of light. It is no great thing, therefore, if his ministers also transform themselves as ministers of righteousness.”

Paul’s letter to the Galatians was written evidently to counteract the misrepresentations of false brethren. (Gal. 1:6; 3:1.) To re-establish confidence in the gospel message he had delivered, it was needful that he should rehearse to them something of his history. In doing so it was necessary to refer again to the false brethren (Gal. 2:4), who claimed to be of the same body and who yet, in opposition to the truth, brought again upon God’s children the bondage of errors already escaped from.

HARVEST GATHERING AND SIFTINGS

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF PRESENT TRUTH

Many are the inquiries relative to the truths presented in Millennial Dawn and Zion’s Watch Tower, as to whence they came and how they developed to their present symmetrical and beautiful proportions—Were they the results of visions? Did God in any supernatural way grant the solution of these hitherto mysteries of his plan? Are the writers more than ordinary beings? Do they claim any supernatural wisdom or power? or how comes this revelation of God's truth?

No, dear friends, we claim nothing of superiority, nor supernatural power, dignity or authority; nor do we aspire to exalt ourselves in the estimation of our brethren of the household of faith, except in the sense that the Master urged it, saying, "Let him who would be great among you be your servant." (Matt. 20:27.) And our position among men of the world and of the nominal church is certainly far from exalted, being everywhere spoken against. We are fully contented, however, to wait for exaltation until the Lord's due time. (1 Pet. 5:6.) In the apostle's words we therefore answer, "Why look ye upon us, as though by our own power we had done these things? We also are men of like passions with yourselves—of like infirmities and frailties, earnestly striving, by overcoming many besetments, discouragements, etc., to press along the line toward the mark of the prize of our high calling, and claiming only, as faithful students of the Word of God, to be index fingers, as we have previously expressed it, to help you to trace for yourselves, on the sacred page, the wonderful plan of God—no less wonderful to us, we assure you, than to you, dearly beloved sharers of our faith and joy.

No, the truths we present, as God's mouthpieces, were not revealed in visions or dreams, nor by God's audible voice, nor all at once, but gradually, especially since 1870, and particularly since 1880, a period of above twenty years. And this present clear unfolding of truth is not due to any human ingenuity or acuteness of perception, but to the simple fact that God's due time has come; and if we did not speak, and no other agent could be found, the very stones would cry out.

We give the following history, not only because we have been urged to give a review of God's leadings in the path of light, but specially because we believe it to be needful that the truth be modestly told, that misapprehensions and prejudicial mis-statements may be disarmed, and that our readers may see how hitherto the Lord hath helped and guided us. In so far as the names and views of others, who have parted company with us, may be associated with this history, we shall endeavor to bring forward only such points as are necessary to an understanding of our position and of the Lord's leadings. Nor can we name all the little points of divine favor in which faith was tested, prayers were answered, etc., remembering that our Master and the early church left no such example of boasting faith, but rather admonished otherwise, saying, "Hast thou faith, have it to thyself." Some of the most precious experiences of faith and prayer are those which are too sacred for public display.

We will not go back to tell how the light began to break through the clouds of prejudice and superstition which enveloped the world under Papacy's rule in the dark ages. The reformation movement, or rather movements, from then until now, have each done their share in bringing light out of darkness. But we will here confine ourselves to the consideration of the harvest truths set forth in Millennial Dawn and Zion's Watch Tower.

We begin the narrative at the year 1868, when the editor, having been a consecrated child of God for some years, and a member of the Congregational Church and of the Y. M. C. A., began to be shaken in faith regarding many long accepted doctrines. Brought up a Presbyterian, and indoctrinated from the Catechism, and being naturally of an inquiring mind, I fell a ready prey to the logic of infidelity as soon as I began to think for myself. But that which at first threatened to be the utter shipwreck of faith in God and the Bible, was, under God's providence, overruled for good, and merely wrecked my confidence in human creeds and systems of misinterpretation of the Bible.

Gradually I was led to see that though each of the creeds contained some elements of truth, they were on the whole, misleading and contradictory of God's Word. Among other theories, I stumbled upon Adventism. Seemingly by accident, one evening I dropped into a dusty, dingy hall, where I had heard religious services were held, to see if the handful who met there had anything more sensible to offer than the creeds of the great churches. There, for the first time, I heard something of the views of Second Adventists, the preacher being Mr. Jonas Wendell, long since deceased. Thus, I confess indebtedness to Adventists as well as to other denominations.

Though his Scripture-exposition was not entirely clear, and though it was very far from what we now rejoice in, it was sufficient, under God, to re-establish my wavering faith in the divine inspiration of the Bible, and to show that the records of the apostles and prophets are indissolubly linked. What I heard sent me to my Bible to study with more zeal and care than ever before, and I shall ever thank the Lord for that leading; for though Adventism helped me to no single truth, it did help me greatly in the unlearning of errors, and thus prepared me for the truth.

I soon began to see that we were living somewhere near the close of the Gospel Age, and near the time when the Lord had declared that the wise, watching ones of his children should come to a clear knowledge of his plan. At this time, myself and a few other truth-seekers in Pittsburgh and Allegheny formed a class for Bible study, and from 1870 to 1875 was a time of constant growth in grace and knowledge and love of God and his Word. We came to see something of the love of God, how it had made provision for all mankind, how all must be awakened from the tomb in order that God's loving plan might be testified to them, and how all who exercise faith in Christ's redemptive work and render obedience in harmony with the knowledge of God's will they will then receive, might then (through Christ's merit) be brought back into full harmony with God, and be granted everlasting life. This we saw to be the Restitution work foretold in Acts 3:21. But though seeing that the Church was called to joint-heirship with the Lord in the Millennial Kingdom, up to that time we had failed to see clearly the great distinction between the reward of the Church now on trial and the reward of the faithful of the world after its trial, at the close of the Millennial age—that the reward of the former is to be the glory of the spiritual, divine nature, while that of the latter is to be the glory of restitution—restoration to the perfection of human nature once enjoyed in Eden by their progenitor and head, Adam.

However, we were then merely getting the general outlines of God's plan, and unlearning many long-cherished errors, the time for a clear discernment of the minutiae having not yet fully come. And here I should and do gratefully mention assistance rendered by Brothers Geo. Stetson and Geo. Storrs, the latter the editor of The Bible Examiner, both now deceased. The study of the Word of God with these dear brethren led, step by step, into greener pastures and brighter hopes for the world, though it was not until 1872, when I gained a clear view of our Lord's work as our ransom price, that I found the strength and foundation of all hope of restitution to lie in that doctrine. Up to that time, when I read the testimony that all in their graves shall come forth, etc., I yet doubted the full provision—whether it should be understood to include idiots or infants who had died without reaching any degree of understanding, beings to whom the present life and its experiences would seem to be of little or no advantage. But when, in 1872, I came to examine the subject of restitution from the standpoint of the ransom price given by our Lord Jesus for Adam, and consequently for all lost in Adam, it settled the matter of restitution completely, and gave me the fullest assurance that ALL must come forth from their graves and be brought to a clear knowledge of the truth and to a full opportunity to gain everlasting life in Christ.

Thus passed the years 1869-1872. The years following, to 1876, were years of continued growth in grace and knowledge on the part of the handful of Bible students with whom I met in Allegheny. We progressed from our first crude and indefinite ideas of restitution to clearer understanding of the details; but God's due time for the clear light had not yet come.

During this time, too, we came to recognize the difference between our Lord as "the man who gave himself," and as the Lord who would come again, a spirit being. We saw that spirit-beings can be present, and yet invisible to men, just as we still hold and have set forth in Millennial Dawn Vol. II., Chap. V.

And we felt greatly grieved at the error of Second Adventists who were expecting Christ in the flesh, and teaching that the world and all in it except Second Adventists would be burned up in 1873 or 1874, whose time-settings and disappointments and crude ideas generally of the object and manner of his coming brought more or less reproach upon us and upon all who longed for and proclaimed his coming Kingdom.

These wrong views so generally held of both the object and manner of the Lord's return led me to write a pamphlet—"The Object and Manner of The Lord's Return," of which some 50,000 copies were published.

It was about January 1876, that my attention was specially drawn to the subject of prophetic time, as it relates to these doctrines and hopes. It came about in this way; I received a paper called The Herald of the Morning, sent by its editor, Mr. N. H. Barbour. When I opened it I at once identified it with Adventism from the picture on its Cover, and examined it with some curiosity to see what time they would next set for the burning of the world. But judge of my surprise and gratification, when I learned from its contents that the editor was beginning to get his eyes open on the subjects that for some years had so greatly rejoiced our hearts here in Allegheny—that the object of our Lord's return is not to destroy, but to bless all the families of the earth, and that his coming would be thief-like, and not in flesh, but as a spirit-being, invisible to men; and that the gathering of his Church and the separation of the "wheat" from the "tares" would progress in the end of this age without the world's being aware of it.

I rejoiced to find others coming to the same advanced position, but was astonished to find the statement very cautiously set forth, that the editor believed the prophecies to indicate that the Lord was already present in the world (unseen and invisible), and that the harvest work of gathering the wheat was already due,—and that this view was warranted by the time-prophecies which but a few months before he supposed had failed.

Here was a new thought: Could it be that the time prophecies which I had so long despised, because of their misuse by Adventists, were really meant to indicate when the Lord would be invisibly present to set up his Kingdom—a thing which I clearly saw could be known in no other way? It seemed, to say the least, a reasonable, a very reasonable thing, to expect that the Lord would inform his people on the subject—especially as he had promised that the faithful should not be left in darkness with the world, and that though the day of the Lord would come upon all others as a thief in the night (stealthily, unawares), it should not be so to the watching, earnest saints.—1 Thess. 5:4.

I recalled certain arguments used by my friend Jonas Wendell and other Adventists to prove that 1873 would witness the burning of the world, etc.—the chronology of the world showing that the six thousand years from Adam ended with the beginning of 1873—and other arguments drawn from the Scriptures and supposed to coincide. Could it be that these time arguments, which I had passed by as unworthy of attention, really contained an important truth which they had misapplied?

Anxious to learn, from any quarter, whatever God had to teach, I at once wrote to Mr. Barbour, informing him of my harmony on other points and desiring to know particularly why, and upon what Scriptural evidences, he held that Christ's presence and the harvesting of the Gospel age dated from the Autumn of 1874. The Answer—showed that my surmise had been correct, viz: that the time arguments, chronology, etc., were the same as used by Second Adventists in 1873, and explained how Mr. Barbour and Mr. J. H. Paton, of Michigan, a co-worker with him, had been regular Second Adventists up to that time; and that when the date 1874 had passed without the world being burned, and without their seeing Christ in the flesh, they were for a time dumb-founded. They had examined the time-prophecies that had seemingly passed unfulfilled, and had been unable to find any flaw, and had begun to wonder whether the time was right and their expectations wrong,—whether the views of restitution and blessing to the world, which others were teaching, might not be the things to look for. It seems that not long after their 1874 disappointment, a reader of the Herald of the Morning, who had a copy of the Diaglott, noticed something in it which he thought peculiar,—that in Matt. 24:27, 37, 39, the word which in our common version is rendered coming is translated presence. This was the clue; and, following it, they had been led through prophetic time toward proper views regarding the object and manner of the Lord's return. I, on the contrary, was led first to proper views of the object and manner of our Lord's return and then to the examination of the time for these things, indicated in God's Word. Thus God leads his children often from different starting points of truth; but where the heart is earnest and trustful, the result must be to draw all such together.

But there were no books or other publications setting forth the time-prophecies as then understood, so I paid Mr. Barbour's expenses to come to see me at Philadelphia (where I had business engagements during the summer of 1876), to show me fully and Scripturally, if he could, that the prophecies indicated 1874 as the date at which the Lord's presence and "the harvest" began. He came, and the evidences satisfied me. Being a person of positive convictions and fully consecrated to the Lord, I at once saw that the special times in which we live have an important bearing upon our duty and work as Christ's disciples; that, being in the time of harvest, the harvest-work should be done; and that present truth was the sickle by which the Lord would have us do a gathering and reaping work everywhere among his children.

I inquired of Mr. Barbour as to what was being done by him and by the Herald. He replied that nothing was being done; that the readers of the Herald, being disappointed Adventists, had nearly all lost interest and stopped their subscriptions; and that thus, with money exhausted, the Herald might be said to be practically suspended. I told him that instead of feeling discouraged and giving up the work since his newly found light on restitution (for when we first met, he had much to learn from me on the fullness of restitution based upon the sufficiency of the ransom given for all, as I had much to learn from him concerning time), he should rather feel that now he had some good tidings to preach, such as he never had before, and that his zeal should be correspondingly increased. At the same time, the knowledge of the fact that we were already in the harvest period gave to me an impetus to spread the truth such as I never had before. I therefore at once resolved upon a vigorous campaign for the truth.

I determined to curtail my business cares and give my time as well as means to the great harvest work. Accordingly, I sent Mr. Barbour back to his home, with money and instructions to prepare in concise book-form the good tidings so far as then understood, including the time features, while I closed out my Philadelphia business preparatory to engaging in the work, as I afterward did, traveling and preaching.

The little book of 196 pages thus prepared was entitled The Three Worlds; and while it was not the first book to teach a measure of restitution, nor the first to treat upon time-prophecy, it was, we believe, the first to combine the idea of restitution with time-prophecy. From the sale of this book and from my purse, our traveling expenses, etc., were met. After a time I conceived the idea of adding another harvest laborer and sent for Mr. Paton, who promptly responded and whose traveling expenses were met in the same manner.

But noticing how quickly people seemed to forget what they had heard, it soon became evident that while the meetings were useful in awakening interest, a monthly journal was needed to hold that interest and develop it. It therefore seemed to be the Lord's will that one of our number should settle somewhere and begin again the regular issuing of the Herald of the Morning. I suggested that Mr. Barbour do this, as he had experience as a type-setter and could therefore do it most economically, while Mr. Paton and I would continue to travel and contribute to its columns as we should find opportunity. To the objection that the type was now sold, and that the few subscriptions which would come in would not, for a long time, make the journal self-sustaining, I replied that I would supply the money for purchasing type, etc., and leave a few hundred dollars in bank subject to Mr. Barbour's check, and that he should manage it as economically as possible, while Mr. Paton and I continued to travel. This, which seemed to be the Lord's will in the matter, was done.

It was after this, while on a tour of the New England states, that I met Mr. A. P. Adams, then a young Methodist minister, who became deeply interested and accepted the message heartily during the week that I preached to his congregation. Subsequently, I introduced him to little gatherings of interested ones in neighboring towns, and assisted otherwise, as I could, rejoicing in another one who, with study, would soon be a co-laborer in the harvest field. About this time, too, I was much encouraged by the accession of Mr. A. D. Jones, then a clerk in my employ in Pittsburgh—a young man of activity and promise, who soon developed into an active and appreciated co-laborer in the harvest work, and is remembered by some of our readers. Mr. Jones ran well for a time, but ambition or something eventually worked utter shipwreck of his faith, and left us a painful illustration of the wisdom of the Apostle's words: "My brethren, be not many of you teachers, knowing that we shall have the severer judgment"—Jas. 3:1.—Diaglott.

SIFTING THE WHEAT

"Satan hath desired to have you, that he might sift you as wheat."—Luke 22:31.

Thus far all had run smoothly and onward: we had been greatly blessed with truth, but not specially tested in our love and fidelity to it. But with the Summer of 1878, the parallel in time to the Lord's crucifixion and his utterance of the above quoted words, the sifting began, which has continued ever since, and which must, sooner or later, test every one who receives the light of present truth. "Marvel not, therefore, concerning the fiery trial which shall try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you;" for this "fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is"—whether he has built his faith flimsily of wood, hay and stubble, instead of with the valuable stones of God's revealed truth, or whether he has built it upon the shifting sands of human theory—evolution, etc.—or upon the solid rock, the ransom, the only sure foundation, which God has provided. They who build upon the rock shall be safe personally, even though they may have built up an illogical faith which the "fire" and shaking of this day of trial shall overthrow and utterly consume; but they who build upon any other foundation, whether they use good or bad materials, are sure of complete wreck.—Luke 6:47-49; 1 Cor. 3:11-15.

The object of this trial and sifting evidently is to select all whose heart-desires are unselfish, who are fully and unreservedly consecrated to the Lord, who are so anxious to have the Lord's will done, and whose confidence in his wisdom, his way and his Word is so great, that they refuse to be led away from the Lord's Word, either by the sophistries of others, or by plans and ideas of their own. These, in the sifting time, will be strengthened and shall increase their joy in the Lord and their knowledge of his plans, even while their faith is being tested by the falling into error of thousands on every hand.—Psa. 91:7.

The sifting began thus: Regarding Paul's statement (1 Cor. 15:51, 52), "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed—in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," etc., we still held the idea which Adventists, and indeed all Christians hold, that at some time the living saints would be suddenly and miraculously caught away bodily, thenceforth to be forever with the Lord. And, now, our acquaintance with time-prophecy led us to expect this translation of the saints at the point of time in this age parallel to the Lord's resurrection; for many of the parallelisms between the Jewish and Christian dispensations were already seen by us, and formed one of the features of the little book above referred to—The Three Worlds.

We did not then see, as we now do, *that that date (1878) marked the time for the beginning of the establishment of the Kingdom of God, by the glorification of all who already slept in Christ, and that the "change" which Paul mentions (1 Cor. 15:51) is to occur in the moment of dying, to all the class described, from that date onward through the harvest period, until all the living members ("the feet") of the body of Christ shall have been changed to glorious spirit beings. But when at that date nothing occurred which we could see, a reexamination of the matter showed me that our mistake lay in expecting to see all the living saints changed at once, and without dying—an erroneous view shared in by the whole nominal church, and one which we had not yet observed or discarded. Our present clear view as the result of the examination thus started. I soon saw that in the Apostle's words, "We shall not all sleep," the word sleep was not synonymous with die, though generally so understood; that, on the contrary, the expression sleep, here used, represents unconsciousness; and that the Apostle wished us to understand that from a certain time in the Lord's presence, his saints, though they would all die like other men (Psa. 82:6, 7), would not remain for any time unconscious, but in the moment of dying would be changed and would receive the spirit body promised. Throughout this Gospel age, dying has been followed by unconsciousness, "sleep." This continued true of all saints who "fell asleep in Jesus" up to the time when he took the office of King (Rev. 11:17), which we have shown* was in 1878.

*See Millennial Dawn, Vol. III, chapter 7. *Millennial Dawn, Vol. II, pages 218, 219.

Not only did the King at that date “awaken in his likeness” all the members of his body, the Church, who slept, but for the same reason (the time for establishing his Kingdom having come) it is no longer necessary that the “feet” or last remaining members should go into “sleep” or unconsciousness. On the contrary, each now, as he finishes his course, faithful unto death, will at once receive the crown of life, and, being changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, cannot be said to sleep, or to be unconscious at all. Here—1878—Rev. 14:13, is applicable, “Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth.”

So this re-examination showed further light upon the pathway and became a good cause for encouragement, as evidencing the Lord’s continued leading.

But while I was thus helped to clearer views and brighter hopes, and while I diligently endeavored to help others, the Spring of 1878 proved far from a blessing to Mr. Barbour and to many under his influence. Rejecting the plain, simple solution presented above, Mr. B. seemed to feel that he must of necessity get up something new to divert attention from the failure of the living saints to be caught away.

But, alas! how dangerous it is for any man to feel too much responsibility and to attempt to force new light. To our painful surprise, Mr. Barbour soon after wrote an article for the Herald denying the doctrine of the atonement—denying that the death of Christ was the ransom-price of Adam and his race, saying that Christ’s death was no more a settlement of the penalty of man’s sins than would the sticking of a pin through the body of a fly and causing it suffering and death be considered by an earthly parent as a just settlement for misdemeanor in his child. I was astonished, supposing that Mr. B. had a clearer understanding of the work of Christ as our sin-offering, our willing Redeemer who gladly, co-operating in the divine plan, gave himself as the ransom or corresponding price to meet the penalty upon Adam, that Adam and all his posterity might in due time go free from sin and death. A totally different thing indeed was the willing, intelligent, loving offering of our Redeemer, according to the plan devised and revealed by infinite wisdom, from the miserable caricature of it offered in the above illustration. I had either given Mr. B. credit for clearer views than he ever had, or else he was deliberately taking off and casting away the wedding garment of Christ’s righteousness. The latter was the only conclusion left; for he afterward stated that he had previously recognized Christ’s death as man’s ransom-price.

Immediately I wrote an article for the Herald in contradiction of the error, showing the necessity “that one die for all”—“the just for the unjust;” that Christ fulfilled all this as it had been written; and that consequently God could be just and forgive and release the sinner from the very penalty he had justly imposed. (Rom. 3:26) I also wrote to Mr. Paton, calling his attention to the fundamental character of the doctrine assailed, and pointing out how the time and circumstances all corresponded with the parable of the one who took off the wedding garment when just about to partake of the wedding feast. (Matt. 22:11-14.) He replied that he had not seen it in so strong a light before, that Mr. Barbour had a strong, dogmatic way of putting things which had for the time overbalanced him. I urged that, seeing now the importance of the doctrine, he also write an article for the Herald, which, in no uncertain tone, would give his witness also for the precious blood of Christ. This he did. These articles appeared in the issues of the Herald from July to December, 1878.

It now became clear to me that the Lord would no longer have me assist financially, or to be in any way identified with, anything which cast any influence in opposition to the fundamental principle of our holy Christian religion; and I therefore, after a most careful though unavailing effort to reclaim the erring, withdrew entirely from the Herald of the Morning and from further fellowship with Mr. B. But a mere withdrawal I felt was not sufficient to show my continued loyalty to our Lord and Redeemer, whose cause had thus been violently assailed by one in position to lead the sheep astray—and in that position, too, very largely by my individual assistance and encouragement when I believed him to be, in all sincerity, true to the Lord. I therefore understood it to be the Lord’s will that I should start another journal in which the standard of the cross should be lifted high, the doctrine of the ransom defended, and the good tidings of great joy proclaimed as extensively as possible.

Acting upon the leading of the Lord, I gave up traveling, and in July, 1879, the first number of Zion’s Watch Tower and Herald of Christ’s Presence made its appearance. From the first, it has been a special advocate of the ransom, and by the grace of God we hope it will ever be.

For a time we had a most painful experience: the readers of the TOWER and of the Herald were the same; and from the time the former started and the supply of funds from this quarter for the Herald ceased, Mr. B. not only drew from the bank the money deposited by me and treated all he had in his possession as his own, but poured upon the Editor of the Tower the vilest of personal abuse in order to prevent the Tower and the doctrine of the ransom from having due influence upon the readers. This of course caused a division, as such thing always do. The personal abuse, being regarded by some as true, had its intended effect of biasing the judgments of many on the subject of the ransom; and many turned from us.

But the Lord continued his favor, which I esteem of more value than the favor of the whole world. It was at this time that Mr. Adams espoused the views of Mr. Barbour and likewise forsook the doctrine of the ransom. And, true to our interpretation of the parable of the wedding garment as given at the time, Mr. Barbour and Mr. Adams having cast off the wedding garment of Christ's righteousness, went out of the light into the outer darkness of the world on the subjects once so clearly seen—namely, the time and manner of the Lord's presence; and since then, for twelve years, they have been expecting Christ, Spring or Fall, down to the Spring of 1892, which was their latest disappointment, so far as we have heard.

During the ordeal, or we might truly call it battle, for the cross of Christ, we had the earnest co-operation of Mr. Paton, who, up to the summer of 1881, was an appreciated co-laborer and defender of the doctrine of coming blessings through Christ, based upon the ransom for all given at Calvary. The book, The Three Worlds, having been for some time out of print, it seemed as if either another edition of that, or else a new book covering the same features, should be gotten out. Mr. Paton agreed to get it ready for the press, and Mr. Jones offered to pay all the expenses incident to its printing and binding and to give Mr. Paton as many copies of the book as he could sell, as remuneration for his time spent in preparing the matter, *provided I would agree to advertise it liberally and gratuitously in the TOWER—well knowing that there would be a demand for it if I should recommend it, and that his outlay would be sure to return with profit. (For those books did not sell at such low prices as we charge for MILLENNIAL DAWN.) I not only agreed to this, but contributed to Mr. Paton's personal expenses in connection with the publishing, as well as paid part of the printer's bill at his solicitation.

In the end, I alone was at any financial loss in connection with that book, called Day Dawn, the writer and publisher both being gainers financially, while I did all the introducing by repeated advertisements. We need to give these particulars, because of certain one-sided and only partial statements of facts and misrepresentations, which have recently been published and circulated in tract form by Mr. Paton, who is also now an advocate of that "other gospel" of which the cross of Christ is not the center, and which denies that he "bought us with his own precious blood." Mr. P. has since published another book, which, though called by the same name as the one we introduced, being on another and a false foundation, I cannot and do not recommend, but which I esteem misleading sophistry, tending to undermine the whole structure of the Christian system, yet retaining a sufficiency of the truths which we once held in common to make it palatable and dangerous to all not rooted and grounded upon the ransom rock.

The false foundation which it presents is the old heathen doctrine of evolution revamped, which not only denies the fall of man, but as a consequence, all necessity for a redeemer. It claims, on the contrary that not by redemption and restitution to a lost estate, but by progressive evolution or development, man has risen and is still to rise from the lower condition in which he was created until, by his own good works, he ultimately reaches the divine nature. It claims that our blessed Lord was himself a degraded and imperfect man, whose work on earth was to crucify a carnal nature, which, it claims, he possessed, and to thus show all men how to crucify their carnal or sinful propensities.

*For this reason Mr. Jones' address, was, properly, the only one mentioned in our advertisement of it.

*Millennial Dawn, Vol. 1, page 162.

And here we remark that the darkness and degradation which came upon the whole world in its fallen, cast-off condition, and which was only intensified by Papacy's priestcraft during the dark ages, when contrasted with the light of intelligence, which God is now letting in upon the world, have gradually led men to esteem present intelligence as merely a part of a process of evolution. This view, as we have shown, *though quite incorrect, is nevertheless the occasion of the predicted great falling away from the faith of the Bible during the harvest period. (Psa. 91:7.) And a few Christian people seem to be well enough grounded in the truth to be able to withstand this trial of the evil day, in which many will fall while only the few will stand. For this cause we use great plainness of speech.

The little history of the way in which Mr. Paton came to turn from us and from the ransom, to oppose that which he once clearly saw and advocated, is important, as it became the occasion of another sifting or testing of the Watch Tower readers, by that time a much larger number (because Mr. Paton had been a respected brother and co-workers with us, and because as a traveling representative of the TOWER and its doctrines, his expenses being met in part by TOWER subscriptions and renewals, as well as by money from me, he was personally known to a larger number of the readers than was the editor of the Tower). It came about thus:—

In the year 1881, Mr. Barbour, still publishing the Herald, and still endeavoring to overthrow the doctrine of the ransom, finding that on a preaching tour I had used a diagram of the Tabernacle to illustrate how Christ's sacrifice was typified in the sacrifices of typical Israel, wrote an article on the Atonement, in which he undertook to show that the sacrifices of the Day of Atonement typified almost anything else than what they do typify. I could readily see through the fallacy of his presentation, which made of the bullock a type of one thing in one verse and another thing in each other verse in which it was mentioned, and so too with the goat. But I well knew that people in general are not close reasoners, and that, with the cares of life upon them, they are too apt to accept a seeming interpretation, without a critical examination of the words of Scripture and their context.

I thought the matter all over. I examined the chapter (Lev. 16), but while seeing the inconsistency and error of Mr. Barbour's interpretation, I could only confess that I did not understand it and could not give a connected interpretation which would fit all the details so plainly stated, and all of which must have a particular meaning. What could I do? Those reading the Herald as well as the TOWER would probably be misled if not helped out of the difficulty; and to merely say that the Herald's interpretation was inconsistent with itself, and therefore a misinterpretation, would be misunderstood. Many would surely think that I opposed that view from a spirit of rivalry; for there are always people with whom everything resolves itself into personality, rivalry and party spirit, and such cannot understand others who take a higher and nobler view and who think always and only of the truth, regardless of persons.

I went to the Lord with this as with every trial, told him just how it seemed to me, how anxious I felt for the dear sheep, who, having their appetites sharpened by some truth, were by their very hunger exposed to Satan's deceptions. I told him that I realized that he was the Shepherd, and not I, but that I knew also that he would be pleased at my interest in the sheep and my desire to be his mouthpiece to declare the truth, the way and the life to them; that I felt deeply impressed that if the time had come for the permission of a false view to deceive the unworthy, it must also be his due time to have the truth on the same subject made clear, that the worthy ones might be enabled to stand, and not fall from the truth. Believing that the due time had come for the correct understanding of the meaning of the Jewish sacrifices, which all Christians see were typical of "better sacrifices," and that the Lord would grant the insight as soon as I got into the attitude of heart best fitted to receive the light, I prayed with confidence that if the Lord's due time had come, and if he were willing to use me as his instrument to declare the message to his dear family, that I might be enabled to rid my heart and mind of any prejudice that might stand in the way and be led of his spirit into the proper understanding.

Believing that the prayer would be answered affirmatively, I went into my study next morning prepared to study and write. The forenoon I spent in scrutinizing the text and every other Scripture, likely to shed light upon it, especially the epistle to the Hebrews, and in looking to the Lord for wisdom and guidance; but no solution of the difficult passage came. The afternoon and evening were similarly spent, and all of the next day. Everything else was neglected, and I wondered why the Lord kept me so long; but on the third day near noon the whole matter came to me as clear as the noon-day sun—so clear and convincing and so harmonious with the whole tenor of Scripture, that I could not question its correctness; and no one has ever yet been able to find a flaw in it. (This has been published in several editions in pamphlet form under the title, “The Tabernacle Shadows Of The Better Sacrifices,” and can still be had by addressing the Watch Tower office.)

Then I knew why the Lord had led me to it so slowly and cautiously. I needed a special preparation of heart for the full appreciation of all it contained, and I was all the more assured that it was not of my own wisdom; for if of my own why would it not have come at once? I found that the understanding of that subject was bound to have a wide influence upon all our hopes and views of all truths—not in that it overturned old truths or contradicted them, but, on the contrary, in that it set them all in order and harmony and straightened out little knots and twists. For instance, the doctrine of justification by Faith had always been more or less confused in my mind, as it is in every mind, with the doctrine of sanctification which calls for self-sacrifice and works. This was all made clear and plain at once; for the types showed that we all, as sinners, needed first of all Christ’s ransom sacrifice, that we appropriate its merits (justification—forgiveness) to ourselves by faith, and that thus we are justified (reckoned free from sin) when we by faith accept of Christ’s sacrifice on our behalf. The type showed, too, that it is only after being thus cleansed in God’s sight (by our acceptance of Christ’s finished work as our ransom-sacrifice) that God is willing to accept us as joint sacrifices with Christ, and that if faithful to the end, following in his footsteps, we should be granted the favor of joint-heirship with him.

Here I first saw that the great privilege of becoming joint-heirs with Christ and partakers with him of the divine nature was confined exclusively to those who would share with him in self-sacrifice in the service of the truth. And here, too, I saw for the first time that the Lord was the first of these sacrifices, the Sin-Offering; consequently, that none of God’s servants, the prophets, who lived and died before Christ, were priests after his order, nor sharers in sacrifice with him, even though some of them were stoned, others sawn asunder and others slain with the sword, for the cause of God; that though they would get a good and great reward, they would belong to a separate class and order from those called to sacrifice and joint-heirship with Christ on and since Pentecost. Here, too, I first saw that the acceptable day of the Lord signifies this Gospel Age—the time during which he will accept the sacrifice of any who come unto God through Christ, the great Sin-Offering; that when this acceptable day ends, the reward of joint-heirship and change to the divine nature ends; and that when this great day of sacrifice, the Gospel age (the real day of Atonement), has closed, when all the members of the body of Christ have participated with him in the sacrifice of their rights as justified men, and been glorified, then the blessing will begin to come to the world—the Millennial blessings purchased for men by their Redeemer, according to the grace of God.

This first brought us to a clear recognition of the distinction of natures—of what constitutes human nature, what constitutes angelic nature and what constitutes divine nature, as shown in Millennial Dawn, Vol. I, Chapter X. And whereas we formerly used the word Restitution in a general way to mean some sort of blessed change, now, under a clearer light, we began to see that the great work of restitution could only mean what the word implies—a restoration of that which was lost (Matt. 18:11)—a restoration to the original condition from which man once fell. Then I saw that God’s plan, when carried out, would not bring all his creatures to the one level of the divine nature, but that he purposed to have an order of creatures called Angels, who, though perfect, would always be of a different order, or nature, from the divine nature, and he likewise purposed to have a race of beings of the human nature, of whom Adam was a sample or pattern and whose future earthly home, Paradise, Eden was a sample or pattern. I also saw that God purposed that Christ and his joint-sacrificers and joint-heirs are to be God’s instruments for blessing the fallen race and restoring them to the condition of perfection enjoyed by Adam in Eden—a condition which God said was “very good,” and an image of himself. And these joint-heirs with Christ, I saw, were to be highly exalted to a nature higher than restored and perfect manhood, higher, too, than the angelic nature—even to be partakers of the divine nature. When all these things so unexpectedly shone out so brightly and clearly, I did not wonder that the Lord gave me several days of waiting and preparation for the blessing, and to him I rendered praise and thanks. All my faintness of heart and fear of the bad effect of the wrong view fled before this evidence of the Lord’s leading in the pathway that “shines more and more unto the perfect day.” I saw at once that these new developments would probably prove a stumbling block to some, as well as a great blessing to others who were ready for it. Instead, therefore, of publishing it in the next TOWER, I determined to first present the matter privately to the more prominent brethren;—remembering Paul’s course in a similar matter—Gal. 2:2.

Accordingly I sent invitations and the money necessary for traveling expenses to four of the more prominent brethren, requesting a conference. Mr. Paton from Michigan was one of the four, and the only one who rejected the fresh rays of light. Nor could he find any fault with the exegesis, though urged, as all were to state anything which might seem inconsistent, or to quote any passages of Scripture thought to be in conflict. But there were none; and every question only demonstrated more fully the strength of the position. I therefore urged that what was beyond the criticism of those most familiar with the plan of God must be the truth, and ought to be confessed and taught at any cost, and especially when it arranged and ordered all the other features of truth so beautifully. I pointed out, too, how necessary it was to a logical holding of the ransom, to see just what this showed; viz.: the distinctions of nature—that our Lord left a higher nature, and took a lower nature, when he was made flesh, and that the object in that change of nature was, that he might, as a man, a perfect man, give himself a ransom for the first perfect man, Adam, and thus redeem Adam, and all lost in him. I also showed how, as a reward for this great work, he was given the divine nature in his resurrection—a nature still higher than the glorious one he had left, when he became a man. But either Mr. Paton’s mental vision or heart was weak; for he never took the step; and before long he, too, forsook the doctrine of the ransom. Yet he still used the word “ransom,” while denying the idea conveyed by the word; nor can he give the word any other definition, or otherwise dispute the correctness of the meaning which we attach to it—which may be found in any English dictionary and is true to the significance of the Greek word which it translates.

Notwithstanding our best endeavors to save him he drifted farther and farther away, until I was obliged to refuse his articles for the Tower for the same reason that obliged me to refuse to longer spend the Lord’s money entrusted to me to assist Mr. Barbour to spread the same pernicious theory.

It was about this time that Mr. Jones informed me that the copies of the book Day Dawn which I had purchased last were all that were left; and, announcing it so that no more orders for it might come to the TOWER office, I took occasion to promise MILLENNIAL DAWN, which should present the Plan of the Ages in the clearer more orderly manner made possible by the new light shed upon every feature of it by the lessons from the Tabernacle. About this time Mr. Paton concluded that he would publish another book under the name Day Dawn, revised to harmonize with his changed views, which ignored the ransom, ignored justification and the need of either, and taught all men will be everlastingly saved—not in any sense as the result of any sacrifice for their sin by Christ, but as the result of each one’s crucifying sin in himself—the law under which the poor Jew tried to commend themselves to God, but which justified none. Many and severe were the calumnies heaped upon me, because I exposed this change, told that the original was out of print and that the new book was on a different foundation from the one I commended.

During this time I was busied by an immense work known to many of you—the issue and circulation of over 1,400,000 copies of two pamphlets, entitled FOOD FOR THINKING CHRISTIANS and TABERNACLE TEACHINGS, whose united matter was about the same as that of Dawn, Vol. 1; and besides this I was flooded with thousands of joyous and joy-giving letters, from those who had received and were reading the pamphlets thus distributed, and asking questions and more reading matter. To add to our throng, financial complications came; and thus for four years I was hindered from fulfilling my promise of Millennial Dawn. Nor will our promise of the complete set be fulfilled for some time yet; for though three volumes are now out and a fourth on the way, I purpose several more, as the Lord shall give grace and strength, in connection with the other features of his work entrusted to my care. But during those four years we were struggling through an immense amount of labor and many draw-backs (all cheerfully undergone for the sake of the Lord and his saints), and each year we hoped afresh to be able to gather the hours necessary to complete the first volume of MILLENNIAL DAWN. And the same great Adversary of the truth still hinders each volume—the fourth volume being now retarded by these latest agencies of Satan—the conspirators.

Some who have The Three Worlds or the old edition of Day Dawn would perhaps like to know my present opinion of them—whether I still think them profitable books to loan to truth-seekers. To this I reply, Certainly not; because the very immature views of God's truth therein presented fall far short of what we now see to be God's wonderful plan. Things which are now clear as noonday were then cloudy and mixed. The distinctions between the perfect human nature to which the obedient of the world will be restored during the Millennium, and the divine nature to which the little flock, the sacrificing elect of the Gospel age, are soon to be exalted, were then unnoticed. All now so clear was then blurred, mixed and indistinct. Neither had we then seen the steps or planes, shown upon the Chart of the Ages, Millennial Dawn, Vol. I, which have assisted so many to distinguish between justification and sanctification, and to determine their present standing and relationship to God.

And the time reckonings which those books present, lacking point and leaving the reader in doubt as to what the author is attempting to prove by them, tend only to confuse the mind and to give the impression that time prophecies are merely clues and serve no definite purpose or object. Hence, I Answer--most decidedly, I would not recommend nor use either of those books to-day. Once I was much less careful about what I circulated or commended, but I am learning every day to be more careful as to what sort of food I put before any of the Lord's hungry sheep. The Lord has taught me that it is a responsible matter to be a teacher, even to the extent of circulating a book or a paper. Even Food for Thinking Christians (now also out of print), I no longer commend because it is less systematic and therefore less clear than later publications.

Another chapter in our experience needs to be told, as it marks another shaking and sifting. Mr. A. D. Jones proposed to start a paper on the same line as the WATCH TOWER, to republish some of the simpler features of God's plan and to be a sort of missionary and primary teacher. Knowing him to be clear on the subject of the ransom, I bade him God speed and introduced a sample copy of his paper, Zion's Day Star (now for some years discontinued), to our nearly ten thousand readers—only, as it soon proved, to stumble some of them into rank infidelity and others into the rejection of the ransom; for though the Day Star for a few months steered a straight course and maintained the same position as the Tower with reference to the ransom, and for the same reason refused the no-ransom articles sent for its columns by Mr. Paton, yet within one year it had repudiated Christ's atoning sacrifice, and within another year it had gone boldly into infidelity and totally repudiated all the rest of the Bible as well as those portions which teach the fall in Adam and the ransom therefrom in Christ.

All this meant another strain, another sifting, another cutting loose of friends, who erroneously supposed that our criticisms of the false doctrines were prompted by a spirit of rivalry, and who did not so soon see whither his teachings were drifting, nor how great the importance of holding fast the first principles of the doctrines of Christ—how Christ died for our sins and rose again for our justification.

This brings the history down close enough perhaps to the present time; but we want to put you all on notice that the shaking and sifting process, so far from being over and past, is bound to progress more and more until all have been tried and tested thoroughly. It is not a question of who may fall, but of "Who shall be able to stand?" as the apostle puts it. And we have need again to remember the admonition, "Let him who thinketh he standeth (who feels very confident, as did Peter when he said 'Lord, though all deny thee, yet will not I') take heed lest he fall."

This doctrine of another way of salvation (and salvation for all, too) than by the cross of Christ, is not only the error which is, and has been since 1874, sifting all who come into the light of present truth, but it is the trial that is to come upon the whole of so-called Christendom to try them. (Rev. 3:10.) It is already spreading among all classes of Christian people, especially among ministers of all denominations. The number who believe that Christ's death paid our sin-penalty is daily getting smaller, and before very long there will be a regular stampede from the doctrine of man's fall in Adam and his ransom from that fall by "the man Christ Jesus." (1 Tim. 2:5,6.) As the Psalmist prophetically pictured it, a thousand will fall to one who will stand.—Psa. 91:7.

The time has come for each one to declare himself boldly. He who is not for the cross and the ransom there effected is against it! He that gathereth not scattereth abroad! He who is silent on this subject, when it is being assailed by foes on every hand, whether it be the silence of fear, or of shame, or of indifference, is not worthy of the truth, and will surely be one to stumble quickly. He who from any cause sits idly by, while the banner of the cross is assailed, is not a soldier of the cross worthy of the name, and will not be reckoned among the over-comers who shall inherit all things. And God is permitting these very siftings, in order to sift out all who are not "over-comers," and to test and manifest the little flock, who, like Gideon's final army, will, though few, share the victory and honors of their Captain in glory.

Are you prepared for the issue, dear brethren and sisters? The armor of truth has been given you for some time past; have you put it on? have you made it your shield and buckler? your defense against all the wily arts of the evil one?

Do not be deceived by the agents he often makes use of. In this he will be as cunning as in his presentation of the deceptive misrepresentations of truth, making unwitting use of many a weaker brother, and to some extent of every stumbling and deceived one, to spread farther the infection of false doctrine. And while every child of God should take earnest heed, that he prove not an occasion of stumbling to any, we cannot doubt that every one, through some instrumentality, will be assailed.

Aptly indeed did the Prophet liken it to a pestilence. (Psa. 91:6.) A pestilence spreads because people are in a physical condition which renders them susceptible to disease. Physicians say that those whose systems are in good, healthy order are in little danger of any disease. So it is with a spiritual pestilence: it will flourish not only because all will be exposed to it who have not a clear intellectual appreciation of the doctrines of Christ, but from another cause also. Out of the heart are the issues of life, and most needful of all to be in right condition is the heart. How is your heart? is it proud, boastful, independent, self-conscious and self-willed? If so, take care; you will be very liable to this epidemic, no matter how far from it you may seem to be. Pray for

*“A heart resigned, submissive, meek,
The dear Redeemer’s throne,
Where only Christ is heard to speak,
Where Jesus reigns alone.”*

With such a heart you are safe. In meekness and lowliness, you will never think of redeeming yourself from the condemnation that you inherited through Adam, by sacrificing present sinful desires, but you will flee to the cross, where God himself opened the fountain for sin and uncleanness, present as well as past.

DOTH THIS OFFEND YOU

We presume that it will offend some, though it is not designed to offend any. It is written for the defense of the meek against the sophistries of error. “Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord (into the Kingdom offered)? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart (who is diligently fashioning his life after the principles of holiness); who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity (who cultivates no earthly ambitions or pride, but patiently waits for the glory to follow the course of present self-sacrifice), nor sworn deceitfully (ignoring or despising his covenant with God): He shall receive the blessing of the Lord (the Kingdom glory and joint-heirship with Christ), and righteousness (perfection—full deliverance from present infirmities, etc.) from the God of his salvation.” (Psa. 24:3-5.) “Seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord’s anger (in this `evil day’—this day of snares and pitfalls and flying arrows and destructive pestilences).” “Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation”—that “your minds be not corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.” Let all the meek fully awake to the trial of the hour; and while many are putting stumbling blocks in the way of the “feet” of the body of Christ, let each soldier of the cross be vigilant, not only to stand, but to assist others—bearing up the “feet.” —Psa. 91:11,12

A CONCLUDING WORD

It is proper here to state that in the article foregoing, A Conspiracy Exposed, we used the term “brother” with reference to the conspirators in deference to our readers. We have not recognized these men as “brethren” since we discovered their deeply laid and murderous plan for the assassination of my character. But we could not expect our readers to cut them off from fellowship until they too had seen the evidence of their terrible fall.

While ready and anxious to forgive and, so far as possible, forget their great sin if repented of, I have little hope that any of them will repent. If it were a blunder of the head, we might have hope; but it seems like a disease of the heart, which has been developing for years.

Their reaping will correspond to their sowing. The fruitage of their malice, envy and misrepresentation will surely be a whirlwind of evil, which will damage others as well as themselves.

What can be expected from such men, actuated by such a spirit? Grapes cannot be gathered from thorn-bushes. The Voice of the Reaper may indeed “gather out of his Kingdom the things which offend and them that do iniquity;” but the Voice of the Good Shepherd will lead the true sheep,—a stranger they will not follow. “The Lord knoweth them that are his,” and no man can pluck them out of his hand;—they “shall never fall.”—John 10:28; 2 Tim. 2:17-21; 2 Pet. 1:5-11.

THREE DISCOURSES EXPLANATORY OF THE CHART OF THE AGES

Dear Friends, we are met together as a company of the Lord's people—all interested, we trust, in God's great Plan of Salvation—THE PLAN OF THE AGES. From the fact of our presence here we assume that all accept the Bible as God's Word. We will consider now such portions of the Word as outline the DIVINE PLAN OF THE AGES. Our talk on the Plan of God will be illustrated by this Chart. The Chart is designed as an aid to the mind through the eye in grasping the subjects to be presented.

We believe in the old theology of the Lord and the Apostles and Prophets. We have no new thing to present to you—no plan or theory of our own; and we do not wish you to receive anything that the speaker says simply because he has said it, but because he has shown it to you in the Word of the Lord. Much that we have to say we trust you will recognize as old and familiar truths, while some things will be recognized as truths forgotten or overlooked or never noticed heretofore; but we believe that all will be ready to accept without equivocation whatever shall be shown from the Scriptures to be the Word of the Lord—whatever has been “written for our learning,” as the Apostle suggests.—Rom. 15:4

It is in order that we may be “thoroughly furnished” that we are told to “search the Scriptures” (John 5:39); and if we wish to be wise toward God, we must come as learners and receive the instruction which God gives us in His Word, which is “able to make us wise unto salvation,” with the “Wisdom that cometh down from Above.” (2 Tim. 3:15; James 3:17,18.) We want to put on the “whole Armor of God.”—Eph. 6:11

(Point to Chart.) We will now consider some of the features of God's Plan as illustrated by this Chart. Let us dismiss from our minds for the present this lower part of the Chart—all below this upper horizontal line. (Point.) That part of it will be considered at future meetings. Now we wish to give our attention to these upper arches and these smaller ones within them.

We do not approach the subject of the Divine Plan from a scientific standpoint. The boasted philosophies of this world are often “falsely so-called,” and tend more to confuse the mind than to help it. The Plan of God is not abstruse, but plain and simple; and yet it is really a Science; it is knowledge from the Highest Source. The word “Science” means simply Truth. And therefore when our Lord said, “Thy Word is Truth,” it was equivalent to saying, “Thy Word is the Science.” He also prayed, “Sanctify them through Thy Truth”—through this Science. We therefore direct careful attention to the study of this, the true Science—the Plan of the Ages, revealed in the Scriptures.

But some people object, saying that they see nothing scientific in the Bible. It is a common saying that “the Bible is an old fiddle upon which any tune can be played”—a Methodist tune, a Baptist tune, a Presbyterian tune, or any tune the player may desire. We are sorry to have to say it, dear friends, but it is nevertheless a fact, that the Bible, the greatest of all sciences, the testimony of the greatest of all Scientists, has suffered more at the hands of its friends than at the hands of any other class of people. They forgot to “search the Scriptures” and to “rightly divide the Word of truth,” and went to creed-making, each according to his own liking. From the standpoint of infidelity, it is true that the Bible appears contradictory; but it appears so only because of the varied human misrepresentations, and not because it is so in fact. By observing order (Heaven's first Law) the whole Word now opens up to God's people who are hungering and thirsting for it; because God's time for unsealing it has come. In “the time of the End, the wise shall understand”—the wise in Christ Jesus. Having been thus blessed of God through observing His order in the study of His Word, we come together at this time. We are told to prove all things by God's Word, and to hold fast that which is good—that which we find in accord with the Bible, and that only.

We call attention first to these three large upper arches (pointing to the Chart). These arches represent Dispensations.

By dispensation is meant the order or general character of a certain period of time—God's course in reference to mankind during a certain time. The manner of His dealing in each of these dispensations is attested by the facts of history. The First Dispensation (point) extends from the creation of Adam to the Flood; the Second Dispensation (point) from the Flood to the Second Coming of Christ; and the Third Dispensation from the Second Coming of Christ onward.

But we fancy some one saying, “I thought there was some Second Adventism in this”; and therefore we will stop right here to disabuse the mind of any of you of that thought. I am not an Adventist—neither a “Second Adventist,” nor a “Seventh Day Adventist.” I know there is prejudice on this point. Let me say, however, that I do believe in the Second Coming of Christ. All Christians do! I know that the Roman Catholics believe in it, and the Methodists, and the Presbyterians, and many others. We may not believe in it exactly as they do, or as the Adventists do. Some are Pre-Millennialists, and others Post-Millennialists, the former believing that the Lord will come before the Millennium, and the latter that He will come after the Millennium. In our presentation of the Scriptures you will see that we take a Pre-Millennial view, and as we proceed we will give you our reasons therefor. But do not class us as Adventists with all the peculiarities of Adventism. You will have an opportunity to hear and can then decide for yourselves as to whether or not we present the Truth on the subject.

(Returning to the Chart.) This First Dispensation is called in the Scriptures “the world that was”; the Second Dispensation is called “the world that now is,” or the “present evil world”; and the Third Dispensation is called “the world to come.” All these “worlds” have reference to the particular order of things that existed within the period designated; i. e., each dispensation, or order of things is called a “world.” Such use of the word “world” is not common at the present time; but what we wish is the thought of the original Scriptures, whatever the word. Order, or dispensation, is the thought; “world” is the name used by King James translators.

That First World, the Apostle Peter says, “being overflowed with water, perished.” What world? That order of things, or “world,” which existed from creation to the Flood, and which was terminated by the Great Deluge, which destroyed not only the whole social order of that time, but also the whole world of mankind, excepting Noah and his family. What was the then existing order of things? From the Scriptures we find that previous to the Flood God permitted the angels to have general supervision of mankind—permitted them, we say. Doubtless the angels, when they saw the condition of sin into which man had fallen, desired to reform him, to help him out of sin, but the results were the reverse of good; for we read that immediately preceding the Flood the thoughts of men were evil, and “only evil continually”; and God took them away as He saw good.

We must not, however, suppose that God’s Plan was a failure during the First Dispensation. God was not trying an experiment. It was an experiment for the angels, and one by which they also were to be tried as to their loyalty and faithfulness to God; but God knew all the time that it would be a failure so far as accomplishing the reformation of man was concerned. God's Plan was formed "before the foundation of the world"; and so we read that in His Plan Christ was the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8); and in the course of these talks it will be our purpose to show how the Plan of Redemption has been in process of accomplishment through the slain Lamb of God. The experiment of the angels was a lesson to them, as well as to mankind, who have observed the results of their efforts and who have accordingly been caused to look more carefully for the Remedy for sin which God has provided.

That dispensation having come to an end in the destruction of that "world" (or order of things), God carried over in the Ark Noah and his family, who had not become corrupt as had the rest of the world; and with them He began the Second Dispensation, or "world that now is." (Point.)

This second Dispensation is not under the control of angels; for it is written that Satan is the "Prince of this world." This Second Dispensation, or "world," has been left to man. God is not dealing directly with man, nor interfering directly with his affairs. When we say that it has been left to man to govern himself, we should add that man, by reason of the fall having become very weak, has become peculiarly susceptible to the influence and deceptions of Satan. The Lord said that Satan was a liar from the beginning (John 8:44); and, being the arch-deceiver, he has deceived all men, who, believing themselves free, have really been his slaves—the only exceptions being those who have been influenced by the Gospel and who have thus come to recognize Satan's power, and to put themselves into the hands of God. Yet even in this, our own favored land, he is "going about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour"; and in Asia and Africa and other uncivilized lands we see him ruling with a high hand, the people being so blinded by superstition that fetish worship and sorcery and other devilments are openly practised; to such an extent is this true, that Satan is properly styled, as the Scriptures name him, "the god of this world"—not the god of that "world" (point to the first "world"), nor of that "world" (point to the third world), but of THIS "world" (point to second "world").

This is what is meant by "rightly dividing the Word of Truth," as advised by St. Paul. It would not do to apply to "this world" (point to second "world") the Scriptures which belong to that "world" (point to first "world"), nor to that "world" (point to third "world"), Scriptures which belong to this "world" (point to second "world") or to the first "world" (point); for instance it would not be proper to say that Satan is the god or prince of the third “world.” (Point.) Christ will be “King over all the earth in THAT Day,” though He is not King over all the earth in this “world.” (Point.)

What? Is not Christ the King of this world, the Ruler of this world? How is Satan the god of this world? We reply: The word “god” means “mighty one.” Who is the mighty one of this world? Surely not Christ. We venture to say that if Christ were the God, or Prince, of this world, it would be a far better world than it is, and that there would be no world-war among the kingdoms of earth. He Himself said, “My Kingdom is NOT OF THIS world”—this world (point); and on another occasion He said, “The Prince of THIS world (Satan) cometh, and hath nothing in Me.”—John 18:36; 14:30

But some might suppose that Satan is “the Prince of this world” by Divine right—that God has given him the power which he possesses; but not so. While God has allowed man to take his own course, and has permitted Satan to become his deceiver—as it is written, “The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not” (2 Cor. 4:4)—it has only been by reason of the depraved condition of men, and their willingness to be deceived, that Satan has succeeded in overpowering them. Satan is a Usurper. By reason of man’s submission to him he rules as a tyrant; but not by God’s authority. When Christ’s time comes to reign, He will not have to buy out Satan’s kingdom. Satan never had a right to rule. Why God permitted Satan to exercise such great power over men is a very interesting question, and one which the Scriptures Answer—very satisfactorily, but we will not go into it at present. We are not now studying the WHY, but the FACT. But when we do come to the study of that question, we will find that although Satan’s dominion has been permitted, all the while God’s own Plan, purposed from the beginning, has been accomplishing that for which it was sent.—Isa. 55:11

This Second Dispensation, or “world that now is” (point), is also called by the Apostle Paul, “this present evil world,” manifestly evil for the reason stated—the character of the “world” being determined by the character of the ruler; and Satan being “the Prince of this world,” and working continually in the hearts of “the children of disobedience” (Eph. 2:2), the logical result is an evil “world”—an evil order of things. The New Dispensation, however (the “world to come”), will not be under the “Prince of this world” (point), nor under the angels (point to the first “world”), but under Christ. Christ is not now “the governor among the nations,” as He will be then. (Psa. 22:28) In

THAT day (point to third world), the Prophet Daniel says, “the God of Heaven shall set up a Kingdom.” (Dan. 2:44) It is for this Kingdom that we have long prayed, saying, “Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in Heaven.”

Notice, further, that while that Dispensation (point) ended with a Flood, this Dispensation (point) will end with a “fire.” Such is the Apostle Peter’s statement—“The heavens and earth which are now (point), by the same Word are kept in store, reserved unto FIRE against the Day of Judgment and perdition of ungodly men,” in which “the ELEMENTS shall melt with fervent heat,... wherein the heavens being on FIRE shall be dissolved, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.” Our Adventist friends say that this is a literal fire; but there is nothing in the Apostle Peter’s statement to show whether this fire is a literal or symbolic. In order to learn what the Scriptures say on the subject we must “compare Scripture with Scripture”: and by so doing we shall see that it is NOT a literal fire, but a symbolic “fire.” The President of the United States, when referring to the angry exhibition of passion by the nations at war and to the unrest of labor in general, employed this apt Scripture phrase, “The World’s on Fire.”

To illustrate: You have perhaps heard some one say, “It is getting hotter and hotter between Capital and Labor!” Yes, the friction is increasing, and soon it will burst into flame. So we should understand the Apostle Peter’s statement, “The ELEMENTS shall melt with fervent heat”—the elements comprising this present “world” or order of things, the present arrangement of society. What are the “elements” that compose society? The rich element and the poor element, the Capital and Labor elements, political, financial and religious elements. All these shall disintegrate, MELT, in this “day of the Lord,” as it is elsewhere called.

But some say that such things have always been; that there have always been financial, religious and social troubles, and that those coming will be no different from those that are past. The Prophet Daniel, however, did not so express it. He said that the Time of Trouble which is coming in our day will be such as “never was since there was a nation, even to that same time”; and our Lord adds, “No, nor ever shall be.” (Dan. 12:1; Matt. 24:21) The trouble that is coming, and to some extent is already here, will not be an ordinary trouble. When the Word of the Lord says that it will be a trouble such as never was BEFORE, and never will be afterward, we may know that it WILL be so. Is there not all about us every indication that this trouble is beginning now, in which the elements of society shall melt with fervent heat? We have reached new and peculiar conditions. These peculiar conditions are not found merely in one nation, nor in a small corner of a nation. They are world-wide, and are becoming more and more frequent in their recurrence.

The present terrible war was long ago foretold in Scripture (Jer. 25:15-38; Joel 3:9-13) and will be followed by revolution, then by anarchy. The Word of the Lord assures us that before the end all the kingdoms of the world shall be thrown down (Hag. 2:22; Dan. 2:44); for the Lord “will judge among the nations.” (Psa. 110:6.) This is the Day of the Lord’s reckoning. It is the Day in which it will be said of some, “Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.” (James 5:3) From the expression one would think that this was written by one living in the present time, and familiar with the trend of events as we see them. But who wrote it? St. James, eighteen hundred years ago. And he goes on to say, “Behold the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped have entered into the ears of the Lord of Hosts,” and the Prophet says, “They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed. Their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the Day of the wrath of the Lord.” (Ezek. 7:19) This (point to the “harvest,” or end of “this world”) is the Day of the Lord’s anger, the “Day of Vengeance,” the Day in which He will make manifest His principles of righteousness—in which He will lay judgment “to the line and righteousness to the plummet.” (Isa. 28:17) This is the Day for which those who have suffered for righteousness’ sake have been told to wait.

In the same connection in which this trouble is referred to, it is written, “Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord” (James 5:7); because that is the Day in which the Lord will fulfil His promise to His people, saying, “Vengeance is Mine; I will REPAY, saith the Lord.” (Rom. 12:19) So also says the Prophet Zeph. (3:8, 9) “Wait ye upon Me, saith the Lord [“be patient therefore, brethren”], until THE DAY that I rise up to the prey; for My determination is to gather the nations [it is to be a national matter—a world-wide trouble], that I may assemble the kingdoms [to assemble the kingdoms is to bring them nearer together; this is being accomplished in our day by telegraphs, telephones, railroads and steamships; the nations of the world are already assembled; it is easier to communicate with the cities abroad than some time ago it would have been to communicate with a city ten miles away], to pour upon them My indignation, even all My fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the FIRE of My JEALOUSY.”

Ah! this is a peculiar kind of “fire” which is to devour the earth, and which will melt the “elements” with fervent heat—the fire of God’s jealousy, the fire of God’s anger, the fire of His justice. “And THEN,” the Prophet continues (and this gives us assurance that the fire is not literal, but figurative)–”THEN will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve Him with one consent.” THEN will be ushered in the “new heavens and earth” which St. Peter said would follow the dissolving of the present order of things–”the present evil world;” and then will have peculiar significance the expression of the Revelator, “and there was no more sea”; for the present heaven and earth will have passed away.–Rev. 21:1

What does the Apostle John mean when he says, “There shall be no more SEA”? Does he refer to the literal sea? No! We must remember that the entire book of Revelation is a book of symbols, and that many of the Prophecies and Psalms employ the same symbolic language. In this figurative language, “heavens” represents the ecclesiastical powers, or ruling religious systems. The angels constituted the heavens, or spiritual ruling power, of the First Dispensation (point) ; Satan, and the systems controlled by Satan, which rule the present evil world, are the present heavens; and Christ and His Bride, the true Church, will constitute the heavens of the future. Concerning this we will have more to say later.

“Earth” signifies organized society; “mountains” signify the governments, which are the backbones of society–its exalted representatives; the “sea” represents the restless elements of society, which beat up against it and against the governments, or “mountains,” and which will finally envelop them in anarchy. (Psa. 46:2) Hence we may understand the Apostle John to mean that when the new heavens and earth are established there will be no more anarchy; or, as the Apostle Peter says, it will be a heavens and earth (or order of things) “wherein dwelleth righteousness.” “The Lord will be King over all the earth in that Day.”–Zech. 14:9

Thus, while it is shown that the symbolic heavens and earth of this present time shall pass away with a great noise–confusion and trouble–it is also indicated that the literal earth and its literal atmospheric heavens will continue to abide; for, “Thus saith the LORD that created the heavens, God Himself that formed the earth and made it; He hath established it, He created it not in vain, He formed it to be inhabited; I am the Lord, and there is none else.”–Isa. 45:18

Our next discourse will bring out some interesting details respecting the “ages” which have made up this “present evil world,” represented by these under arches. (Point.)

We trust that already some are helped for all their lives in the matter of “rightly dividing the Word of Truth” as it relates to the larger dispensations or “worlds”; and in our next discourse we will apply the same Scriptural rule to the ages, with even grandeur results. All are cordially invited to be present at the appointed hour.

*“Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.”*

DISCOURSE II

(Introduce by brief recapitulation of Discourse 1, for new hearers, as well as for the refreshment of those who heard it.)

Now notice these semi-circles. (Point to them.) They represent ages. In what we have been saying with reference to the Dispensations we have not considered what God is doing, but merely what He has permitted Satan and the angels and mankind in general to do of their own pleasure. But now we will talk of what God has been doing, during the same periods, though the world knew it not and does not yet know His purpose. During all this time God has not recognized the world of mankind, nor dealt with them, but merely with a little handful of His own people. God lets the world and the Devil alone, unless they attempt to thwart or cross His purposes. Then He says, “Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further.” (Job 38:11) But while the world and the Devil have been busy, WHAT has God been doing? Has He been like a man of whom our Lord spoke, who began to build a house, but had failed to count the cost, and whose neighbors consequently derided him, saying, “This man began to build, and was not able to finish”? (Luke 14:30) It would be very peculiar indeed if the Lord did not follow out the wisdom which He suggests to men. We find, however, that God did pursue the course of wisdom, and that not only will He be able to finish His work as He purposed it, but known unto the Lord are all His works from the beginning of the world. And He declares, “My Word shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it.”—Isaiah 55:11 Now let us inquire, What was God’s purpose? Has He been trying to convert the world? If so, He has not succeeded. The First Dispensation was evil and only evil continually. The Second Dispensation surely has not witnessed the conversion of the world, and by inspiration it is called “the present evil world.” Shall we say then, that God has been trying to convert the world and has not succeeded? No, for had He made the effort, had that been His Plan, He would have succeeded. “The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand.”...“I am God, and there is none else: I am God, and there is none like Me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all My pleasure. Yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it.”—Isa. 14:24; 46:9-11

We conclude, therefore, that God has not been trying to convert the world! This assertion may be new to some, but we must admit that if God has been trying He has failed; whereas He says, “All My purposes shall be accomplished.” This proves that God has not been attempting to convert the world; but, on the contrary, that if He has been accomplishing what He purposed, He must have purposed something else.

This first Age (point) is called the “Patriarchal Age,” because in it God dealt with certain individuals or patriarches, ignoring entirely the rest of the world. First He dealt with Abraham. “Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy father’s house, unto a land that I will show thee; and I will make of thee a great nation; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed.” (Gen. 12:1-3; 22:18) He did not select Abraham’s father or his uncles or his cousins or his aunts, but Abraham; and although Lot, his nephew, went along, he had no share in the Covenant. Abraham waited until his father was dead (for that was the arrangement) before he moved into the Land of Promise. “Well,” some may say, “that is election.” Well, if it is, we cannot help it. That is what the Bible says, and we want to believe it just as the Bible says it.

Then God called Isaac—not his brothers. “In Isaac shall thy seed be called.” (Gen. 21:12) Then Isaac had two sons, Jacob and Esau, and God selected Jacob. “Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I loved less.” (Rom. 9:13) We will not here go into the reason for God’s preference for Jacob. That may come in further along.

With the death of Jacob that Age came to an end, and single individuals no longer were chosen. How do we know? The facts show it; for at the death of Jacob his twelve sons and all their children were chosen as those to whom the Lord’s favor would be shown. His sons were prophetically blessed by him; and, being recognized as a NATION elected of God, were called “the TWELVE TRIBES OF ISRAEL.” While Jacob lived God dealt only with him, and did not recognize his children and their families as a nation; but upon Jacob’s decease God’s favor passed to the Twelve Tribes of Israel as a nation, and a new Age began. You will remember that Jacob’s name was changed to Israel, the meaning of the word being “a prince with God.” And thus began what on this Chart we call the “Jewish Age.” (Point.) It might have been called the Israelitish Age, but there was a reason for not giving it that title, since the Gospel Church are “Israelites indeed”; and to have called this the Israelitish Age (point to Jewish Age) would have led to some confusion.

That during this Age (point to Jewish Age) God dealt only with the Jews is clearly taught in the Scriptures; for He said to them on one occasion, “You ONLY have I known (recognized or owned) of all the families of the earth.” (Amos 3:2) The Apostle tells us that all others outside of Israel were “aliens and strangers, having no hope and without God in the world.” (Eph. 2:12) “What advantage, then, hath the Jew?” the Apostle Paul inquired; and then he answered his own question—“Much every way: CHIEFLY because to them were committed the oracles of God.” (Rom. 3:2) God had a reason for confining His favor to Israel for that long period of over 1800 years; and at a subsequent meeting we may inquire into these reasons and see how God’s purposes were being accomplished. Now we merely note the facts.

In the end of the Jewish Age, Christ “came unto His own, and His own received Him not.” (John 1:11) You see, therefore, that He called the Jews “His own.” Their rejection of the Lord Jesus was, however, no surprise to God. He foretold it by the Prophets. “He (Jesus) was despised and rejected of men.” “They hid as it were their faces from Him”; and He “had no beauty that they should desire Him.” (Isa. 53:3, 2) Only a “remnant” received Him, as the Apostle states in the eleventh chapter of Romans; and it was to this “remnant” that He gave “liberty” to become “sons of God.” SONS of God? Were not those of previous times “sons”? No, only “friends” and “servants.” “Moses verily was faithful as a SERVANT in all his House (a House, or nation, of servants), but Christ as a Son over His own House, whose House are we (the Gospel Church), if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.”

We remember that Moses was the head, or ruler, of the House of Servants, the Law at Mt. Sinai being given at his hands to the people. He was the mediator of the Law Covenant made with that people; while Christ is to be the Mediator of the New and better Covenant; and the benefits of that mediation will, in due time, when the Church shall be glorified, be opened to the world. It was after the time of the crucifixion (point) that God’s favor began to extend beyond Israel to all men.

Did God change His Plan? Had he become tired of dealing with the Jews only, and, on finding that they rejected Christ, conclude to experiment with the remainder of mankind? No; as we said before, God knew beforehand what the outcome of the Jewish Age would be, and He at this time merely turned over a new leaf, or took up another feature of His Plan. To illustrate this, we may suppose that we are looking through a book containing the architect’s drawings for a fine building. On one page we see the plans for the basement, on the next the plans for the first floor, on the next for the second floor, etc. It would be very foolish for us to say on looking through the book, “Oh, the architect has changed his plans! Here he has concluded to build a basement; and then he changed his mind and concluded to build a house; and then he was not satisfied with this plan and drew another one here on the next page.” In the same way we may say that God had His plans drawn before any part of His work was begun, though men, not appreciating what they have seen in the Plan-Book, the Bible, have been in ignorance of the progress of His work, and even of the fact that He has been working at all.

At the First Coming of Christ, therefore, we may say that a new leaf was turned in the Plan of God, a new order of dealing was begun. For awhile Christ confined His ministry to the Jewish people, and for a particular purpose, which we shall see later on. And here again came in the special favor to Israel which had been manifested throughout the Jewish Age. Not only did the Lord confine His ministry to them, saying, “I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel” (Matt. 15:24), but He would not permit His disciples to go outside of that nation. He said, “Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not.” (Matt. 10:5.) This special favor continued to Israel until a few days before the Lord’s crucifixion, when He wept over their city, saying, “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the Prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Behold! your House is left unto you desolate.”—Matt. 23:37, 38; Luke 19:41; 13:34, 35

Surely the House of Israel was left desolate, in harmony with the Master’s words! While the gathering out of the spirit-begotten Israelites progressed, trouble came gradually upon the remainder, until, as fire, it consumed them nationally, in A. D. 70. Ever since the poor Jews have been in great trouble. Now, as the time for their complete restoration draws nigh, we find favor to the Gentiles waning. Many of the Jews are prospering. Some are hearkening to the message of the Prophets and looking interestedly toward the realization of their Zionist hopes. Persecutions in Russia and elsewhere in recent years have caused them to look toward Zion, and many Jews, having faith in God’s promises respecting them, have gone to the Holy Land to remain.

Following our Lord’s death and resurrection a NEW WORK began. When He died, He did not die for Israel only, but, thank God, also for the whole world. Jesus Christ was manifested “that He, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man.” (Heb. 2:9) And from Pentecost the special work of the Gospel Age dates; for the Lord’s last words to His disciples were, “Go ye, therefore and teach ALL nations.” (Matt. 28:19) The Gospel to be taught was indeed “good tidings of great joy to all people”—Jew and Gentile, bond and free, rich and poor, male and female—all people.

But how many have received the Gospel Message? has God been attempting to convert the world in this Age? If not, what work has He been doing? The Apostle Peter tells us that “God did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name.” (Acts 15:14) He did not take all of them, but has been taking out or selecting from among them (selection again, you see) a people to bear His NAME.

(Illustration of a gentleman selecting a wife to bear his name—not any woman, nor every woman, but his choice. Make comparison of the Bride of Christ, said by the Apostle to be “espoused as a chaste virgin.”)

Another figure used by the Apostles to signify the intimate relationship existing between Christ and those whom He selects to bear His name is that of the “head” and the “body.” Christ is “the HEAD over all things to the Church, which is His Body.” (Eph. 1:22, 23) But not all who name the name of Christ will bear His name and share His glory as “heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ.” Only the faithful overcomers will be so favored, “To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne.”—Rom. 8:17; Rev. 3:21

(Refer to the type of Isaac and Rebecca, the latter as the bride becoming the joint-heir with Isaac of all his father’s riches. So the Church is to be Joint-heir with Christ.)

This (Christ, and His Bride, bearing His name) is the “Seed of Abraham” to whom pertains the Promise made away back here (point) to Abraham—“In blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply THY SEED as the stars of the heaven and as the sand upon the seashore; and in thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.” Gen. 22:17, 18

The Apostle tells us, in referring to the type of Isaac and Rebecca, that those things were an “allegory”—not that such persons as Isaac and Rebecca did not exist, but that, while those events really transpired, they were typical, or representative, of the union between Christ and the Church; and that as Isaac was the “seed of promise” through whom a blessing would come, and through whose natural seed part of the Promise will be fulfilled, so Christ, as the real Seed of Abraham and Heir of the Promise, becomes the Agent through whom all the families of the earth will be blessed. This the Apostle shows in the third chapter of Galatians, verse 16—“and to thy Seed, which is Christ ;” and if we read down to the 29th verse we shall see that all who are Christ’s (all who are of the people taken out for His name) become joint-heirs with him in the Abrahamic Promise. It reads, “If ye be Christ’s, then are YE ABRAHAM’S SEED, AND HEIRS according to the Promise.”

The object of the selection of this Seed is the blessing of all the families of the earth; and this will be the work of the incoming Millennial Age. (Point.) We have had enough of the Devil’s kingdom; enough of the Devil's work; enough of evil, and we are glad that the time will soon be here when Christ's Kingdom will be fully set up and established in the earth—when He will take unto Himself His great power and reign.

Another figure, used by the Apostle Peter in referring to the Church selected in this Age and her close relationship to Christ, is that of “living stones” in God's Temple, Christ being the Chief Corner-Stone. The various members of the Church are now being tried and purified, chiseled and polished, for their places in that glorious Temple. (Compare with Solomon's temple, the preparation of the material beforehand, and its putting together noiselessly, without the sound of a hammer, ax or any tool of iron. 1 Pet. 2:4-8; 1 Kings 6:7)

The members of the Church, the “living stones” in the Temple, are not joined to Christ one by one throughout the Age, but each is prepared and awaits the final putting together, when all the stones are ready, and when Christ receives them to Himself. So the Apostle Paul looked forward to the future for his reward, saying, “Henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of Righteousness, which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, will give me AT THAT DAY” (point to Millennial Age)—the FIRST Age of the New Dispensation, at the beginning of which Christ commences His Millennial Reign. We believe that this Reign is just at hand.

Then will come the blessing upon all the families of the earth. “He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet.” (1 Cor. 15:25) Hence His Coming MUST BE PRE-Millennial. Were He to wait until all things were put under His feet, and come at the close of the Millennium, this statement would not be true; for there would be nothing left for Him to subdue. One of the first acts of His reign will be to bind Satan—which is plainly stated in the 20th chapter of Revelation—“I saw an angel come down from heaven, having a great chain in his hand; and he laid hold on the dragon, that old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, that he should deceive the nation no more.” Then Christ's Reign begins; and all who gained the victory over the Beast and his image (apostate religious systems) and received not his mark—all the overcomers—will “live and reign with Christ a thousand years.”—Rev. 20:4.

(Here call attention again to the necessity of “rightly dividing the Word of Truth,” to the meaning of the word Millennium, and to the impropriety of applying passages relating to the Millennial Age or to the Jewish Age to the Gospel Age, or vice versa.)

The “god,” or “prince,” of this world having been bound, Christ will turn unto the people the “pure Language” (Message) mentioned by the Prophet. Satan will no more be able to blind their eyes, but, on the contrary, “the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped”; and “the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea”; and it will no longer be necessary for any man to say to his neighbor, “Know the Lord; for they all shall know Me, from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord.”—Isa. 35:5; 11:9; Jer. 31:34

The Prophet Isaiah overflows with enthusiasm when speaking of that glorious time (point to Millennial Age), when “the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad, and the desert shall blossom as the rose,” etc.—Isa. 35

Beyond the Millennium we know not whether there are several other Ages or only one Age, without end. The Word of God reveals nothing beyond the Millennium, which is one of the “ages to come,” of which the Apostle Paul spoke. Nor will we inquire concerning that time, because, “Secret things belong to God; but things which are revealed belong to us and to our children.”—Deut. 29:29

And now, dear friends, having looked into a part of the Plan of God, we would say that doubtless these things will not be appreciated by every one. We cannot expect the worldly-minded to understand or appreciate them, since they are not in the condition of heart which the Lord approves and to which He would reveal Himself. He Himself declares through the Apostle that not many great, not many wise, not many rich, after the course of this world, hath He chosen; but the poor, rich in faith, hath He chosen to be heirs of the Kingdom. And our Lord thanked the Father because He has “hid these things from the (worldly) wise and prudent, and has revealed them unto babes”—the meek, the humble, those willing to be taught of God through His Word.—1 Cor. 1:26-29; Matt. 11:25

In our next discourse we hope to look further into the things which the Lord is revealing to those of His people who have hearing ears and receptive hearts, and which were written by holy men of old, as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, expressly for our learning.

The text of our next discourse will be a passage from which I suppose few if any of you have ever heard a discourse; viz., Acts 3:19-21; and it also will be illustrated by this Chart of the Ages.

*“His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower.”*

DISCOURSE III

Before entering upon the subject of our discourse for this evening, we will briefly recapitulate what we found in the two preceding discourses. We have been looking at the teachings of God's Word, endeavoring to dismiss from our minds all preconceived opinions and prejudices, natural or acquired. We have been endeavoring to find what the Word of God teaches, because we know that God is true and His Word interprets itself.

We found that the world's history is divided into three epochs, or dispensations. (Point.) The First Dispensation is entirely in the past. It reached from the creation to the flood, and is called by St. Peter "the world that was." The next, the Second Dispensation, we found to be mainly in the past, and now nearing its close, and called "the world that now is." We called attention to the significance of the word "world," its common use causing considerable confusion of thought, so that when we speak of the end of the world, the ordinary thought is that the earth upon which we are living will be destroyed. But we found that one world had passed away, and we are on the same earth.

We will not go into details on this subject; we merely touch upon it here to refresh your minds. This Dispensation, in the close, or Harvest, of which we are now living, is called "the present evil world"—not because it is entirely evil, not because it has no good in it, but because evil has predominated. We know there have been many good people, though they were few in comparison with the multitudes of evilly-disposed persons.

We also found that the Scriptures tell us (point) that there is to be a "world to come," or "world without end."

We found that the first world (point) ended with a flood, that this second world (point) is to end with fire, a Time of Trouble into which we have already entered, and which is to be "a Time of Trouble such as never was since there was a nation." This Time of Trouble is to have a purging, a purifying effect, consuming the dross—fire fitly representing destruction. Hear the Apostle Peter—"The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up... Nevertheless we look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Pet. 3:10-13

We saw that the First Dispensation was left in the hands of angels, and that their administration proved a failure. We saw that during the Second Dispensation God has permitted the world to take its own course, to do the best it could for itself, to see how good would be the governments it could devise, what arrangements it could make for its comfort, etc., knowing in His own mind that their experiments would all end in calamity.

We saw that the effect of light and liberty is good if the heart is right. The difficulty is that the hearts of people are not right. The only class of people that can safely be allowed to do as they please are those who are in full accord with God and His principles of love, truth and righteousness. Men are not in this attitude toward God, however. Men are selfish. The “prince of this world” is in command, and therefore all the blessings of light and liberty will work out the wreck of present institutions. Thus man will learn the futility of his efforts, just as angels learned the futility of theirs; and then comes God’s remedy, “the world to come.” The Prince of that world (point), we found, will not be Satan, but Christ. Christ will be “King over all the earth in that Day” (point)—not this Day, though He has the power. Evil prevails now, because God permits it, until it shall accomplish its lessons, and then He will usher in “that Day” (point), with its Reign of Righteousness, the Kingdom. For that Kingdom He has taught us to pray, “Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in Heaven.” God’s people have been waiting and praying for His Kingdom for over eighteen hundred years.

We also considered some things with reference to God’s dealings during this Second Dispensation. We inquired, “Has God been doing anything?” and we found the answer: Yes. During the Patriarchal Age God selected and dealt with Abraham, and made a Covenant with him, that in his Seed all the families of the earth should be blessed. Then he called Isaac; and at Isaac’s death the Covenant was confirmed to Jacob. Then when Jacob died a new Age was opened, called the Jewish Age, because all the children of Jacob were called to be heirs of the Promise made to Abraham and confirmed to Isaac and to Jacob. God called them His “peculiar people;” and said, “You only have I known of all the families of the earth;” while others were “without God and having no hope.”

At the conclusion of His dealing with the people of Israel, another Age began. Christ came to His own people (the Jews), and they received Him not. That (point) was the Servant Age; but this (point) is the Age of Sons. “Moses verily was faithful over all his House [a House of Servants], but Christ as a Son over His own House, whose House are we

[the Church].” Moses was the head over that House. Christ is the Head over all things to the Church which is His Body. That House had typical sacrifices, this House has the real sacrifices. That House of Servants had the sacrifices which could never take away sin; this new House of Sons has “the better sacrifices.”

Christ came to Fleshly Israel, and only a remnant received Him; but “as many as received Him, to them gave He liberty to become the Sons of God.” Christ first offered this privilege of sonship to the Jews, but because of unbelief only a remnant of Israel was gathered into the Gospel House of Sons, and the remainder of the House of Sons is being made up of selections from among all nations—gathered out from all peoples.

We called attention to the fact that the election of the Jews was not an election to go to Heaven, but to be God's holy nation, His "peculiar people," under the special conditions of the Law Covenant. That was the election of a typical nation, while the election of this Age is an individual election, which collectively is the antitypical Holy nation and peculiar people.

The Gospel has been preached among all nations in order to select from them "a people for His name"—altogether only "a little flock." Evidently the Lord has not chosen all who name the name of Christ; for that would mean at least a hundred millions. This "little flock" is not named "Roman Catholic" or "Greek Catholic" or "Episcopalian" or "Methodist" or "Methodist-Protestant" or "United Presbyterian" or "Baptist" or "Adventist"—none of these names was adopted by the Lord. They are all names given by men; none of them is recognized by the Word of God. The members of the "little flock" recognized by God are all true followers of Christ—Christians. "The Lord knoweth them that are His"—those who in truth and sincerity belong to Christ. They are the "Church of the First-born," whose names are "written in Heaven." That is the important place to have them written—"in Heaven." Only the truly consecrated are written there, and the names of those who continue faithful will never be blotted out of the Book of Life.—Rev. 3:5

Then we considered God's object in making this selection. We saw that He had not changed His Plan. It had not been a failure with the Patriarchs, so that He needed to make another plan for the Jews, and again another experiment with the Gospel Church. God is not thus subject to the frailties of men or the machinations of the Devil. "Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world." "All His purposes shall be accomplished." He has had the same Purpose all through the ages, and that Purpose will be completed in the Millennial Age.

But what was that Purpose? We found that God had made a Promise to Abraham, saying, "In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Abraham supposed that this Seed was Isaac; but no; it was not Isaac. Then Isaac supposed that it was Jacob; but it was not Jacob. And then when Jacob had twelve sons, no doubt he began to think that it was through his sons that the blessing would come. There were one hundred and twenty-eight in all of his descendants still living at the time of his death, and out of this number he supposed that God would take the promised Seed. Jacob prophesied concerning the characteristics of each of the twelve families, or tribes; but after seventeen hundred years of experience, they did not bless the world, and they were not even ready to be blessed themselves; for though Christ came to them to bless them, "His own received Him not."

But God had all this in mind at the beginning. The Apostle says that these things were an allegory. Sarah was representative of the Covenant made with Abraham; and when Isaac was promised, God was speaking of a greater Seed than Isaac—“which Seed is Christ.” God meant Christ all the time. Isaac was a type of Christ.

But did God mean that when Christ should come ALL the families of the earth should be blessed? We look about us and ask, Have ALL nations been blessed? And we are obliged to answer, No. It is eighteen hundred years since Christ came, and yet millions have not even heard of Him. Look over into Africa. Have they been blessed? Look over into China. Many of the Chinese in the interior of the country are in perfect ignorance of what is taking place elsewhere in the world. Have they ever heard of Christ? Have they ever been blessed? No! Where, then, is the mistake? What did the Promise mean? When God said “Christ,” He meant not only the Lord Jesus, but The Christ complete—the Lord Jesus as Head and the Church as His Body. So the Apostle says, “He is the Head over all things to the Church, which is His Body.” He says, “which Seed is Christ”; and after reading down a little further, to verse 29 of the same chapter (Gal. 3), we find it plainly stated, “If ye be Christ’s, then are YE Abraham’s Seed, and heirs according to the promise.” So then we see that “Christ” means the entire Church, the Lord Jesus as the Head and the true Church as His Body. This is the reason the blessing has not yet reached the world. Until the selection and perfecting of THE CHRIST is accomplished, the blessing cannot come. All the “overcomers” will constitute the true Israel of God, The Christ, the Seed of Abraham, the “little flock,” to whom it is said, “Fear not, little flock, it is your Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom”—the Kingdom for which we have been praying, “the Kingdom of God’s dear Son.” The opportunity to bless all the families of the earth will be given these in the New Dispensation.

Let us endeavor, dear Christian friends, so to run the race set before us as to make our calling and election sure. “If we suffer [with Him], we shall also reign with Him. If we be dead with Him, we shall also live with Him.” (2 Tim. 2:11, 12) “He that hath an ear [for spiritual things], let him hear.”—Rev. 3:22

Concerning the work of the Gospel Age, the manner in which the election has been made, we may have more to say later. We will show wherein the doctrines of Election and Free Grace can be fully harmonized. The first one elected was the Lord; secondly came the Apostles; now (point to the end of the Gospel Age) the work of election has progressed down to the very “feet” of Christ—the last members of His Body. Moses said, “A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever He shall say unto you; and it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that Prophet shall be destroyed from among the people.” (Deut. 18:15-19; Acts 3:22, 23) During the Gospel Age God has been raising up this great Prophet and Lawgiver like unto Moses; the work of selecting the members of His Body is nearly accomplished; and the last members are making ready to take their places with those previously selected and approved.

The selection of the Church has not been conducted in an arbitrary way, but each member has been chastened, disciplined and tested in faith and character, in order to prepare him for the great work of the future as a member of the Royal Priesthood. Christ is the High Priest, just as Aaron was the head or high priest of the typical priesthood. While on earth, after His anointing at His baptism in Jordan, Jesus was the Antitype of Aaron; He was also the Head of the new order—“the order of Melchisedec,” who was both a priest and a King. In the Millennial Age Jesus will be not only Priest, but King; and the Church will be not only priest but kings: “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the First Resurrection.... They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years.” “Thou hast made us Kings and priests unto God.”—Rev. 20:6; 5:10

Has this promise ever been fulfilled? Have the saints ever reigned as kings and priests on the earth? No! The only class of people ever making such a claim was the Papacy, that great counterfeit system which points to its Millennium of a thousand years, during the Dark Ages, and which has more or less deceived the whole world.

Now we come down to the Millennial Age. (Point.) We have seen that the world has not been blessed in the past. What blessing will come to the world during the Millennial Age—after the promised Seed has been completed? ALL THE BLESSINGS THAT WERE PROMISED TO ABRAHAM ARE SUMMED UP THUS, “IN THY SEED SHALL ALL THE FAMILIES OF THE EARTH BE BLESSED.”

What do the people need in order to be blessed? They need education, they need enlightenment, they need good government, they need peace, they need uplifting, they need many things that they are seeking now, but are unable to obtain, because of the present unfavorable conditions. Now “the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, waiting for the manifestation of the Sons of God”—for the glad Millennial Reign, when they shall all be blessed. What a glorious Promise! What a blessing it will be to all the human race! That will be the “Golden Age,” of which the poets have sung, the “good time coming,” that Socialists and others have been longing for and talking about. That will be the time which the Woman’s

Christian temperance Union has been trying to bring about by its efforts to destroy the liquor traffic, and which the female suffragists and reformers of various kinds hope to bring about in their way. But though all these human efforts may accomplish something, yet on the whole all these plans will fail, and for a time anarchy will prevail. And what then?

*“God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.”*

God knew the end from the beginning, and all along He has been working out His original Purpose, meantime permitting various human panaceas to be tried, to let man see that his own efforts to bring about righteousness cannot succeed. Ah! human foresight cannot discern what will be the next step. But God knows the future of His Plan as well as the past, and in His Word He offers wisdom from above to all His humble followers. And when men have seen all their plans and experiments end in failure, then they will be willing to look to God, and they will say, “Come, let us go up to the Mountain [Kingdom] of the Lord; He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths.” And so it is written: “The desire of all nations shall come.”

But the desire of all nations is not yet: first must come the failure of their own panaceas. THEN they will be ready to accept the cure which the Lord has provided.

“Ah!” some one may say, “that will be a blessed time for the fortunate ones who are living then, but what about the unfortunate ones who have died?” There are fifteen hundred millions of people living today, the majority of whom never heard the name of Jesus; the great mass of the dead never heard of Jesus; they have been dying in ignorance and fear, without God and without hope. A rough estimate is that not less than twenty billions of people have lived on the earth, and every one knows that among them have been very few saints. During the First Dispensation how many righteous people were there? At the time of the Flood there were only eight, Noah and his family. Of the rest it is said, “God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.” During the Patriarchal Age there were only a few righteous persons, only a few with whom God held communion; such as Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. During the Jewish Age there were not many; for while God called the entire Jewish nation, there were only a few of them, the Prophets and a few others, such as are mentioned in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, who were approved of God; and notwithstanding all the instructions of their Law and the special messages of the Prophets and the severe discipline through which they as a nation were caused to pass in punishment for their idolatry and other sins, when Christ came only a “remnant” received Him. All the rest were still a “stiff-necked and perverse” generation. And how has it been during the Gospel

Age? (Point.) There have not been many saints—only a “little flock.” The vast majority have not known God nor desired to know Him.

The question then is, What is to become of the others? What is to become of all who have not been the “friends” or “servants” or “sons” of God by faith in His promises and obedience to Him? What Plan has God for the blessing of the others?—for we must remember that the Promise was not that a few should be blessed, but that “all the families of the earth shall be blessed.” But how? How can the blessing be accomplished ?

This brings us to our text: [Read impressively.] “Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the lord; and he shall send jesus christ, which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must retain until the times of restitution of all things which god hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.”

“He shall send Jesus Christ.” The Apostle Peter was not here speaking about the First Coming of Christ. He spoke these words on the day of Pentecost, after the Holy Spirit had been poured out upon the waiting disciples, and ten days after he with others had seen Christ ascend to Heaven. He was speaking of Jesus’ Second Coming. “God will send Jesus Christ.”

Our Lord Himself had promised that He would come a second time, saying, “If I go away, I will come again.”

We will not take the time to prove that the Lord is coming a second time. We take it for granted that all here present believe that He will come again. Perhaps only one other doctrine, the doctrine of the Ransom, is made as prominent in the Scriptures as this doctrine of the Lord’s return. It is also made very prominent in all the creeds of the various denominations. Even Catholics believe in the Second Coming of Christ. They do not, indeed, confess that He is coming to bless the world, but rather that He is coming to damn the world. The wonder is that, with such a conception of things, any are willing to pray, “EVEN SO COME, LORD JESUS!” The beloved disciple who uttered these words as they are recorded in the Scriptures had no such anticipation. He knew of the time of blessing, and it was for this that he longed, and he knew that it could not come until Christ should come.

The Coming of Christ has been the hope of the world (though unknown to themselves). It has been the end of the prayers of all the saints. Until the King should be present, the Kingdom could not come. We have been “looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ” (Titus 2:13), “whom the Heavens must retain until the Times of Restitution.”

But what does that mean—"the Times of Restitution of all things?" What does the word "restitution" mean? It means restoring, restoration. What is it that needs restoration? "Adventists" think it means the hills, rocks, trees, etc. But that is not what it means! it is true they bring forward some Scriptures to support their belief. You will remember that there is one (Isa. 40:4) which says, "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low." But this is not to be understood literally. These mountains and valleys and hills are symbolic. In symbolic language, "mountains" represent kingdoms; "valleys" mean the lowly or depressed or oppressed classes and conditions of society. Every kingdom and every exalted thing is to be brought low, and every lowly thing is to be exalted. This means the leveling of the social earth; and this leveling is already in progress.

The saints have nothing to do with that work. God Himself is so overruling the affairs of men as to bring it about. The present is the lapping time of the two Ages (point), when certain influences of this character are already being felt. The Lord is the Supervisor of the Time of Trouble; but His consecrated people are not to use "carnal weapons" nor to engage in worldly strife; they are to be separate from the world and its spirit, and to do only the work which God has given them to do, and which we will consider further along in this course. They are to utilize all their talents in preaching the Kingdom.

But, looking all about us, we see that it is not the literal earth so much that needs restoring. The mountains and hills and valleys are very beautiful, and for those who desire a low country there is plenty of room in the valleys and vast prairies. It is mankind that needs restoring—although there is a certain work of transition now going on in the earth. But if we could only make mankind right, we would have a very desirable world. If men's hearts were right, and we had perfect men and perfect women, "Times of Restitution" would not be needed.

But we have not. "By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world, and death by sin." What mankind need is to be restored to Edenic perfection; and this, it is promised, will be done. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy Mountain," saith the Lord, when He is "Governor among the nations." Christ's ruling among the nations will mean not only the subduing of mankind, but the conquering of Satan and the controlling of all the elements of nature. "In that Day" there will be no storms or violent climatic changes. The climate is not at present all that perfect beings might wish; but the One who stilled the storm of Galilee still has power over the elements, and all must be brought into subjection before it can be true that nothing shall hurt in all God's holy Kingdom.

As we said before, the thing most needed is the promised "Times of Restitution;" but do not understand us to say that Restitution is the hope of the Church. It is not the hope of the Church. The Church has special promises. She has no portion with the world. If we walk in the footsteps of Jesus, faithfully to the end of our course, we shall become “partakers of the Divine nature.” Not only is our Lord Jesus to bless the world, but the world is to be blessed by the Church, who will reign with Him as His Joint-heir. The Lord said, “In My Father’s House are many mansions; I go to prepare a place for you.” The Church is to have the new place prepared by her Lord—to inhabit that mansion. The world, under other conditions, is to inhabit another of these mansions—the earth. Millions and billions are to have the blessings of Restitution—to that which was lost, to that which Adam originally possessed; but we (the Church) “shall be like Him (Christ)” if we make our “calling and election sure.” We shall have spirit nature, like our Lord and Head. So please keep the Church and the world distinct and separate—the blessing of Restitution for the world—perfect human beings in a perfect earth—but for the Church the likeness and nature of Christ, who is now the express image of the Father’s person.

When the Church is once completed, there will never be another member added. Now is the last and only chance to become a member of the “Body of Christ.” This thought, of a definite number in the Body of Christ, was illustrated in the person of the Jewish high priest. No one could serve in that capacity who was deformed, who had any deficiency or superfluity of members—for instance, he who was lacking a finger, or who had a finger too many. (Lev. 21:18) So when The Christ, the greater High Priest, is complete, there will not be one member lacking nor one superfluous member—only the Elect number; for “known unto the Lord are all His works from the beginning of the world.”

But, says one, I don’t see that Restitution would be such a great blessing. But perhaps you have not thought what a perfect man would be like. What is a perfect man? There has never been a perfect man except our Lord when He was a man, and Adam before the fall. We are all so imperfect that we cannot even understand all the perfection which was in Adam. It is true that Adam did not understand all about electric cars, the telephone and telegraph and other wonderful inventions of which we have knowledge today; but that was not because he did not have the capacity to understand them. Adam’s perfect mental, moral and physical powers were never exercised to the extent of the combined effort of all his multitudinous posterity during six thousand years of effort as seen in the present time. But his individual capacity was greater than that of any of his posterity, who from the effects of the fall have degenerated in other respects as well as in longevity. When Adam comes back to life it will not take him long to understand all about the machinery of our day, and we doubt not that in a short time he could make improvements upon much of it. And the same might be said of every other element of learning and skill.

All of us have heard of “lightning calculators,” who can add up long columns of figures without effort, or solve in a moment difficult problems which would take ordinary mathematicians an hour. Some of these prodigies are mere children; and none of them can tell how they do it. Yet all these powers must belong to the perfect man.

In music it is the same. Music is a natural gift. Take “Blind Tom,” for instance; on every other subject he was an idiot, but he had a keen appreciation of music and was able to repeat any composition which he heard once, even repeating the mistakes of the performer, if any were made. How he did it we cannot tell. No one knows. He was not, however, in the true sense of the word a musician. The great composers and performers of the past three hundred years are illustrious examples of what is possible in musical genius. The perfect man will be no less a musician than were these imperfect men; he will be superior in every way.

Then there have been men noted for oratory, others for mathematics, others for their gift of poesy. Whatever we find in any branch of human intelligence or learning we may be sure is only a suggestion of what the powers of a perfect man would be, with all those qualities and gifts perfected and combined.

As an orator we might refer to the late Henry Ward Beecher. Not only was he a wonderful speaker, but he had a magnetic power, by which he carried his audience with him, often even against their will. It is related that just prior to the war, when secession sentiment was high, he visited Richmond against the wishes of his friends, who feared that if he attempted to speak against slavery he would be mobbed. When he began, his voice could hardly be heard above the tumult; but as he proceeded the audience grew quiet, until finally it broke into applause. Such was his power, and yet his ability in this direction was almost nothing compared to what the ability of a perfect man would be.

Another power of the human mind which you and I do not possess, in fact, which is very rare, is the control of the lower animals. A gentleman passed through the principal cities of our land some years ago possessed of wonderful powers in this direction. All the vicious horses of the vicinity were brought to him, and they quailed before him. It was simply a power of mind; and yet we may suppose that Adam was still more gifted, when all the animals passed quietly before him in Eden’s beautiful Garden and received their names.—Gen. 2:19

Some people are gifted with remarkable memory. If they read an article, prose or poem once, they can repeat it word for word. We know of a gentleman who can repeat any text of the Bible that you call for; or, if you repeat the text, he can tell you the chapter and verse. And yet this is not a miraculous gift; it is simply a human power. And so through all the powers of the human mind. They are now only a suggestion as to what they will be when brought to perfection in Restitution Times.

The Apostle Peter further answers our query as to what is to be restored. He says it is to be a restoration “of all things SPOKEN by the mouth of all the holy Prophets since the world began.” Restitution must be quite an important subject if it was foretold by all the holy Prophets. Let us see how some of them spoke of it.

Moses was a Prophet; did he speak of it? Yes! He not only foretold that Israel would fail to keep their Covenant and would be scattered among the nations of the earth and be severely punished for their sins, but he also prophesied that God would gather them again out of all nations and restore them to their own land; that they would again be accepted as God’s people; and that they, with all the other families of the earth, would be blessed during Christ’s reign. (Point.) Moses also spoke of restitution and of Restitution Times, in the institution of the “Jubilee” system. In the year of Jubilee all the debts of the people were forgiven. If a man had lost his property and was compelled by reason of additional debts to become the servant of another, his term of service could not extend beyond the year of Jubilee; and if a man sold a house it could not be for a longer period than until the next Jubilee year. Every fiftieth year was a Jubilee or “restitution” year. Thus the Lord symbolized His purpose that all the earth shall return to its former estate, lost in Eden and redeemed on Calvary.

Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel also spoke of the return of Israel, that they would never more be “plucked up” or “thrown down.” David and Isaiah speak of the “wilderness that shall blossom as a rose,” of the blind eyes that shall be opened (not merely physical but mental blind eyes), and how all the “solitary places” shall be “glad” because of the Lord’s blessing upon the earth, instead of the curse. Then the lame man shall leap as a hart—all the lame, not only the physically lame, but those with any kind of a weakness, physical, mental or moral. It is in the latter sense that the Apostle uses the word “lame” when he says, “Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way.” So all the weaknesses that are the result of inheritance will be healed in that Day for all who will submit themselves obediently to the Great Physician.

All the holy Prophets spoke of these “Times of Restitution,” though we have quoted only a few. The Apostle’s intimation is that if any spoke not of these Times, he was not a Prophet—not a holy Prophet.

During the past ages, Patriarchal and Jewish, and during this Gospel Age, everything has been getting ready; and in the next

Age (point) the “Seed of Abraham” will bless all the families of the earth with an opportunity for Restitution to all that was lost in Adam.

3H163

This Restitution will not come to mankind UNCONDITIONALLY! There are conditions –the conditions of the New Covenant. “He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God shall not see life.” We will not now consider these conditions. They may prove interesting at a future time.

The principal thing lost in Adam was life. As a consequence of sin came death. If there were no death, there would be no pain, no sickness, no dying. Every ache and pain which we experience is so much of death working in us—“Dying, thou shalt die”; “and so death passed upon all men.” Billions of people have lived a few years; and these few, as Job says, were “full of trouble.” Man that is born of a woman is of few days and “full of trouble.” And then they die. Nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand is not too great an estimate of the number who never even heard of Christ. And now the question is, How is the blessing to come to them? It is to come by the resurrection. When Paul spoke to the Athenians about resurrection, many of them mocked and said, “We will hear you again on this matter.”

The idea of a resurrection seems absurd to many; and it is absurd, positively ridiculous, as viewed by some. But nevertheless there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. “The hour is coming when all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth.” An illustration of this fact was given in the case of Lazarus, excepting that because the due time had not yet come he could not be raised up fully, to perfection. We will not now take time to go into the subject, but will merely say that when rightly understood, as the Scriptures present it, the doctrine of resurrection is reasonable and worthy of all acceptance. But some may doubtingly say, It cannot be that God has such a good Plan as that! It has seemed as though we, His children, were putting forth more effort than He on behalf of the world; and now you tell us that He has all the while been working out such a glorious Plan, and on behalf of the dead as well as the living! If this be true, we can see why God has been permitting things to run on with such apparent indifference. You say that all the dead are to come forth; is there any Scripture which so declares?

Yes, there are Scriptures on the subject. Our Lord said—“All that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth;” and on one occasion, when He went into the synagogue, and a copy of the book of Isaiah was handed to Him upon which to comment, He turned to chapter 61 and read, “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent Me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.” (Luke 4:18; Isa. 61:1) You will notice that He does not say that He is going to bind up all hearts, but only the “broken” hearts. There is no balm except for the hearts that are “broken.”

And what is meant by the “prison doors”? Did He mean the doors of the jails of Palestine? Did He mean that He would come and set all the convicts free? He certainly could not have meant that. He could not have referred to anything else than the great prison house of death, and the “prisoners of hope” which the great enemy Satan has bound therein. They are “prisoners of hope ” because Christ has died for them. Under Satan the world has been going down into death; but Christ was manifested in order that He might destroy death and “him that hath the power of death, that is, the Devil.” These prisoners in the tomb, prisoners of hope, will all come forth to the privileges and opportunities of the Millennial Age—of coming to perfection and securing eternal life afforded under the Millennial Reign of Christ. (Point.)

In another discourse we may explain Satan’s connection with sin and death. But now we merely draw upon the fact that when the Lord says to Satan’s captives, “Show yourselves,” they will come forth; and they will come forth in order that they may be blessed by Jesus during His thousand-year Reign, during their Judgment Day. (Point to Millennial Age.) That Judgment Day will not be a twenty-four hour day, but a thousand years (2 Pet. 3:7, 8), and during it “all the families of the earth shall be blessed” with full knowledge, and judged according to the use they will make of it.

But now we seem to hear some one say, Isn’t that too good to believe? No, it is not; but people have so long been mistaught that to preach the Love and Justice and Wisdom and Power of God is almost to preach an unknown God. The “god of this world” has blinded all. Even Christians have had a vail upon their hearts, lo, these many years—the burden of feeling their God unjust; because they could not understand His Plan. Many have been driven into infidelity by false teachings, and the spiritual life of many others has been blighted. But now God is lifting the curtain and letting in the light. Now is the time of which it is written, “The wise shall understand”; “The meek will He teach His way”; “It is high time to awake out of sleep”; “Joy cometh in the Morning [the resurrection Morning; the Millennial Morning];” “The Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His beams”—healing implies restoration.

One point more: We wonder if we can find an illustration in the Scriptures proving that people who lived back here, and back here (point to beginning of Jewish and of Gospel Ages), or rather that lived further back, (point to beginning of Patriarchal Age), are to be restored. We wonder if we can find something about “r eally wicked people,” as some would say. Right here, lest we should be misunderstood, we will explain that we are not preaching a SECOND CHANCE, but we wish to find a class of people that have not had an opportunity, that have been in ignorance, without God; a class that have never known God, and hence could not reject Him; for we believe that those who have really known God and then disobeyed willfully will be punished with everlasting destruction without additional opportunity.

Let us look back until we find a record of a particularly wicked nation—a nation that was all wicked, and that is now entirely extinct. We will select the Sodomites. They lived at about the time Abraham was called. When Lot, Abraham’s nephew, found that his herdsmen could not agree with Abraham’s, he moved among the people of the plain, who were called “Sodomites.” These people were so wicked that it is said that Lot’s righteous soul was vexed from day to day with their unlawful deeds and filthy conversation

(2 Pet. 2:6-8), until finally God delivered Lot and entirely destroyed the city. What evidence have we that they were all destroyed? May not one or two have escaped and become the founders of a new city and people by that name? We have the Lord’s own statement on this point. He says (Luke 17:29), “The same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them ALL.” There was not one Sodomite left. And yet these Sodomites, wicked as they were, were not as wicked as some who have lived since, and who have sinned against more light ; for our Lord, when pronouncing “woe” unto Capernaum and Chorazin and Bethsaida, said, “It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the Day of Judgment than for thee.” Why? The Lord continues, “For if the mighty works which have been done in you had been done in Sodom, it would have remained.”—Matt. 11:23,24.

The Lord says it will be more tolerable for Sodom in the Day of Judgment (the Millennium) than for Israel! That means that it will be tolerable for Israel in the Day of Judgment, but still more tolerable for Sodom. If Sodom would have repented under the light which Israel had, there is no doubt that many of its people will repent under the light of the Judgment Day. Remember that the Judgment Day is the Millennial Age, during which (we have seen) Christ will reign, and “all the families of the earth shall be blessed”—not only Israel and Sodom, but all the other nations.

Do the Scriptures say anything more with reference to the future of Sodom? Yes, the Lord says very positively that Sodom is to be restored. We will read the statement of the Prophet, so there will be no mistake. In the 16th chapter of Ezekiel, the Lord prophesied His blessing upon Israel, and says that Israel was really worse than the surrounding idolatrous nations.

[Read verses 48, 49, 50, in recital of the sins of Sodom, and comment.]

[Read verses 53, 54, and comment—the Lord says the Jews will be confounded when they see Sodom and Samaria in the Day of Judgment. Point to Millennial Age on Chart.]

[Read verses 55, 56, and comment—the pride of Israel in saying, “We have Abraham to our father,” and in considering the surrounding nations beneath their notice; the return of all “to their former estate”; etc.]

[Read verses 60-63, and comment—the special Covenant with Israel made in the days of their youth, their breaking of it, and the blessing which is to come to them under the “Everlasting Covenant” which He will establish with them in the future; they with all the other nations will be blessed under the “New Covenant”; then all will be ashamed and confounded, when all Sodom with its captives, and all Israel with its captives, have been brought forth from the prisonhouse of death and God is “pacified toward them” for all that they have done.]

Truly our God is a great God, and His Plan is a great Plan! We do not need to feel afraid that God’s Plan is not good. It is good and just and wise, and He is able to finish it well. We rejoice that God is a just God, and that in His wisdom and love He has arranged that the millions who have died are not to be everlastingly tormented in flames, as so many suppose. Few appreciate that God’s mercy endureth forever, and that He is “mighty to save” all who come unto Him in His appointed way—through Christ, who declared “I am the way.”

Thousands have been driven to insanity by thinking of eternal torment, not only for the heathen, but for their unconverted friends; and yet there is not a word in the Scriptures to that effect. The Word of God, when it is properly understood, is all that is lovely, beautiful, grand and harmonious, and it speaks in no uncertain tones, as we have seen tonight, concerning “the Restitution of all things.” We have God’s own Word for it; and hence IT MUST BE TRUE.

In our next discourse we will consider how the curse of God upon all can justly give place to a blessing upon all—by what arrangement it is that God can be “just and [yet be] the Justifier of him that believeth in Jesus.” We will see how Love and Justice harmonize in the Divine dealings with mankind.

Of never-failing skill,
He treasures up His bright designs,
And works His sovereign will.”*

CHRISTMAS SERMON

“Wherefore he saith, when he ascended on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men;”–Eph. 4:8

The Apostle is quoting from prophecy. This passage is a very dark and obscure one to the vast majority of people, to the vast majority of CHRISTIAN people, I am sorry to say. If we would ask them in what sense Christ led captivity captive, they would be greatly perplexed to give any reasonable answer. They know of no captive, and therefore they know of no way in which He could lead captivity captive.

But from the standpoint of the Lord’s word, as we have studied it from time to time, this passage is very full of meaning to us. We see at a glance that it refers to our dear Redeemer, who, having finished the work that the Father gave him to do, ascended up on high. We see that He led captivity captive and we see from the various parts of the Word of God as we study it, that the whole race of mankind is in captivity to death. We see that by one man’s disobedience sin entered the world six thousand years ago and death by sin, and so all being sinners, death has taken captive our entire race. We are not only captives when we go into the tomb, but we are captives from the time we are born. We are captives, bound hand and foot by weaknesses of our own nature, which every human being has found in himself—and where did it come from? Only the Scriptures give the answer, and they give it most explicitly—“By one man’s disobedience sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men.” And why the mental, moral and physical imperfection, and why the dying process, ending at the tomb? The Scriptures declare that “By one man’s disobedience, sin and death entered into the world,” we became their captives; this resulted in every member of the race sharing in it, because we were all the children of Adam and because he became subject to these conditions, therefore all are subject to them.

And this captivity had already lasted over four thousand years when Jesus came, the sent of God. “Ah,” says one, “too late, four thousand years had rolled by and thousands of millions already gone into the great prison house.” No, not too late according to our Father’s Word. Our Heavenly Father tells us that he knew the end from the beginning, and that it was in DUE time he sent his Son, not after the time, in order that he might redeem, purchase, reclaim, get back again that which was lost, that which had gone into the great prison house of death, that which had been sold under sin, that which had been led into the captivity of death,—all this he came to redeem and he did redeem.

We have seen that he could not have been the Redeemer of our race if he had been a member of the race in the full sense of the word, because then his life as well as ours would have been forfeited. But we have seen, according to the Scriptures, that God SENT his Son and that the life Jesus had was not life which came down through the four thousand years of our forefathers; that while he was born of a woman, he was not born of a man, but of the power of the Holy Spirit, that he might be “holy, harmless and undefiled, separate from sinners,” not a member of our race at all in that particular, having a life that was without spot or blemish. We have seen that he came thus in order that he might be our Redeemer. It was not possible for an angel to be our Redeemer, and therefore the death of an angel could not pay the penalty. It was a man who sinned, and under the Divine law it must be a man who would die. Therefore God sent his Son, that as the man Christ Jesus he might give himself “a ransom for all.”

And now the Apostle is talking to us in our text about what He did in this great transaction. What did it accomplish, what did it mean? The Apostle says:—“When he ascended on high, he led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men.” What does he mean? He is drawing a picture before our minds that was common in olden times as it is not common to-day. It was common in olden times for a great conqueror, as for instance Titus when he returned to the city of Rome, was granted what was called a triumph. He rode at the head, or somewhere near the head, of a great procession and honor was done him. Sometimes the prisoners of war were chained to the chariots and in the case of Titus, they carried the golden candle-sticks and the table which held the shew bread—all these were parts of his triumph. And so now here the thought respecting our Lord Jesus is that when he ascended up on high, captivity was chained to his chariot so to speak. It was under his control, he had gained the victory. And how glad we are that our Lord Jesus did gain the victory, and how much it means. “Well,” says one, “I do not see that it means so much.” You say that sin and death came as a result of Adam’s transgression? Yes, And now you say that Christ gained the victory? Yes. Well, where’s the change? Are not sin and death in the world still? Yes. Well, where’s the victory? Oh, we answer, the victory is not fully in sight yet, the time is not fully come yet. You can only see it now with the eye of faith, you can only see the head of the procession; the end of the procession will show how this great victory has been accomplished. What will it mean? It will mean that He has the power over death. You remember that is the very message he sent to us through the Apostle John, saying:—“I am he that was dead and am alive again forevermore; and I have the keys of hell (the grave) and of death.” That is a different picture. The key represents the power, authority, and the victory represents power and authority, but in two different ways. In the second picture he says:–”I have the keys of death and of the grave.” What does that mean? I have the power to open the grave. “But,” says one, “did he not always have that power; did he not have power to heal the sick and to say to some who lay on the bier, `Arise, come forth? ’” We answer, that by virtue of the work he was about to accomplish by laying down his life, he had certain powers in advance; but it was not until he had risen from the dead that he said to his disciples:–”All power is GIVEN unto me.” He never said that before. He said–”Is GIVEN unto me,” He did not say, “I always had it.” It was given as the great prize to our Lord Jesus for this victory he accomplished in his self-sacrifice. And so we see the matter thus begun.

He has paid the penalty, buying the world with his own precious blood, and when He ascended up on high, at his ascension the Apostle said:–there to appear in the presence of God for us, there to lay before the Father the evidence that He had paid the penalty for us. What was the penalty that He paid? Some tell us, getting their thought from the dark ages, that the penalty He paid was eternal torment, that this was the penalty against us, but we find it not so written in the Lord’s Word. We find that the penalty against us was a death penalty; he died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and rose again on our behalf, and when he appeared in the presence of God in our behalf, it was to give evidence to the Father–”I have finished the work thou gavest me to do.” I gave my life for the whole race, according to your good pleasure.

Dear brothers and sisters, we see from other parts of the Divine Word that the Divine plan is that in due time our Lord Jesus, who has purchased the whole world, will have the right to release them from the great prison house of death, the right to say to all the prisoners of death–”Show thyself, come forth.” He has bought them. He has the key, the authority, the power is in his hands, the whole matter is resting there, for the Heavenly Father said so. What a great cause for rejoicing we have as we look to so great a Savior, not only the One who redeemed us with his blood, but One whom the Father has highly exalted and given a name which is above every name.

But we say, dear friends, that the majority of this work belongs to the future, the Millennial age. We have not gotten into that time yet. When the Millennial age shall have been ushered in, then He shall take his great power and reign. He has the power now, but the time for reigning has not yet come. Before he begins his reign, he takes out the Bride to be his wife. There is a grand thought for us.

This great triumph that is to be displayed during the Millennial age you and I are invited and given the privilege to participate in; we are, so to speak, to sit with him in his chariot, when the great triumphant spectacle shall be manifested to the world; but they shall see that he is not leading the good and true into captivity, as is the case with Satan, but that he is leading captivity captive, and Satan himself shall be bound for a thousand years in order that he may deceive no more. But this work of leading captivity captive has already begun. I said a moment ago that it was by the eye of faith we saw this, and you and I, as those who already been set free, know something about how to hail our great Deliverer. "If the Son shall make you free, you shall be free indeed." He has said to us:—"Thy sins be forgiven thee." He has said to us: "Ye are my disciples, ye shall have eternal life." Who has the power to say this? He who has led captivity captive. And so he has offered to us as his people, that, as we accept of him, we may have this freedom from sin and from the penalty of sin—death, and that we may have eternal life through him. It is accepted by faith, not in reality, for we have not the reality yet. "Oh well," some may say, "it is merely imagination." Oh no, it is not imagination, for God has said how sin came into the world, and how he arranged for our justification, as the Apostle shows. That is not mere imagination, that is going away beyond that; then some one will say, well then we are only partially justified. No, for the Apostle says He has justified us "freely," that is "fully" from all things, from which the law could not justify us. Those who cannot receive it by faith cannot receive it now. It is only given now to those who can exercise faith. "According to your faith be it unto you."

But bye and bye the Lord is not going to leave the matter only to those who can exercise faith. It is a glorious thing to be able to exercise faith, and how much we have been blest by it. But God is not going to leave the world and say that only those who can exercise the faith shall be blest. No, he is going to have a blessing for the doubting Thomas class and for those who cannot exercise faith. What, will God make the thing so plain? Yes, he declares that all the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears unstopped. And will that be sufficient to make it plain to everybody? Yes, for it says:—"In that day," not in THIS day, but "in THAT day, a highway of holiness shall be set up and a wayfaring man, though a FOOL need not err therein," the way will be so plain. Now the whole subject is so covered, beclouded with mysticism and superstition, therefore it is difficult for us to get that confidence in the Lord that the eyes of our understanding can pierce these dark clouds and see life from the standpoint of the Lord.

Well if, as you say, the time shall come when "The knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep,” if the knowledge shall come to all, why now exercise faith? I answer, dear friends, that the Lord has now put a special blessing upon those who exercise faith. It is also the time for giving a proportionately larger blessing to those who exercise faith in this present life. Do they not have a hundred fold more in this present time? They surely do. Those who exercise faith are finding the pleasure and great joy which others do not know or appreciate. So they are getting blessings in advance. And besides these blessings that we get now while on the pilgrim way, what else? God has a blessing in store for the whole race. Yes, we answer, great blessings they shall have. Well, how could we have any greater than they? Oh we have, as the Apostle declares, “Exceeding great and precious promises given to us.” They will have great blessings, great cause for thankfulness, great occasion to praise God throughout all eternity for his blessings and favors and mercy; but we who at the present time are able to grasp his promises, who firmly grasp and faithfully follow him, attaining unto the things unto which he has called us, unto us are to come exceeding great and precious things, even the Divine nature. It is beyond the power of our mind to grasp it. Faith can grasp it, but faith finds itself merely feeling a great immensity that it cannot encompass. And yet this is just what the Lord wishes us to understand and so he tells us:—“Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, NEITHER HATH IT ENTERED INTO THE HEART OF MAN the things that God hath in reservation for those who love Him.” And he tells us also through the Apostle that we know not (yet) what we shall be, but we shall know by and by; that “now we see as through a glass, darkly, but then, face to face,” clearly. “It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him for we shall see him as he is.” God does not make it plain to us how great a blessing he has prepared for us, but He tells us that we shall be like His Son, and in this we have the very greatest assurance that is possible to come before our minds; because he has been pleased to exalt him far above every other name that is named; and if we are to be like him, what must it be? And so this is the thought in the latter part of our text:—“Wherefore he saith, when He ascended on high, he led captivity captive and GAVE GIFTS TO MEN.” What gifts? He has only begun giving the gifts.

During this Gospel age, he gives us all the blessed favors and promises of his word. They become gifts unto us. Do you not have an appreciation of some of the gifts of God’s word if they have become to you “the meat in due season” to your heart? They have become gifts. Could you have them without his giving them to you? Nay verily, and so all the gifts we have, our hopes for glory, honor and immortality, these are all parts of the gifts in order that we may attain to the great things he has in reservation for us. And he has given us also another thing, as the Apostle proceeds to say:—“And He gave some to be Apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.” He has given us all these assistances by the way. For instance, what an assistance by the way it is to have the writings of the Apostle Paul. So that is one of the gifts. Yes, incidentally, the Apostles were parts of the gifts. All the assistances in the Church, the Apostles, teachers, etc. are all gifts, and we are to understand that “every good and perfect gift cometh down from our Father,” and no gift cometh down from the Father except through the Son. So then it is that “He that hath the Son hath life.” He who is vitally connected with the Son is vitally connected with the Father and has all these gifts of God to help and assist him forward to that which is beyond. Why, we are ready to say—what a great giver God is. And it seems to me it is a good thought to have at this season of the year, when parents, children and friends, one to the other, are thinking how they shall make gifts the one to the other; not perhaps anything of value, but as it shall indicate the value of love and the feeling which exists; and then to think of our Heavenly Father who has made gifts and provisions for all his creatures.

Some of us, yes all of us, would think that an earthly parent would be very cruel who, when a child hung up his stocking, would fill it with cinders. Well then, what would you think of a Heavenly Father who would fill His children’s stockings up with cinders and worse—fire, for that is the thought that a great majority of his children have of him. They think that he has prepared a great gift of fire for most all his creatures and that there they must spend eternity. How unjust, especially in view of the fact that “every GOOD and PERFECT GIFT cometh down from our Heavenly Father” and that no bad gifts come from him. How glad we are that the eyes of our understanding have been opened that we may get a true glimpse of him.

These gifts which our Heavenly Father is giving he has really only started to give. He started with the Head of the Church. First, he proved him; then when he proved faithful, he highly exalted him and has given him a name that is above every name. What a great gift! Then we read:—“all power is given unto him both in heaven and in earth.” “As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given the Son to have life in himself,” that the Son might give it unto the Bride, unto those whom he is now calling to be joint-heirs in the kingdom. Gifts? I should think so, dear brothers and sisters.

I do not think we could get this thought of gifts too large before our minds when we are thinking of the Heavenly Father. Just see if you can count up some of the gifts he has given unto you, first—the gift of his Son; secondly, the forgiveness of sin through him; thirdly, He lifted you out of the miry clay and set your feet upon the Rock and he put a new song into your mouth, even the loving kindness of our God. What a great gift that was! You will never get done thanking him for that. And then, not content with that, He proposed more, gave more. He gave us an invitation to be joint-heirs with his Son; he called us and told us that if we would make our calling and election sure (it must be by faithfulness, by showing our appreciation of what he had done, by striving to come up to a certain reasonable service) that if we do this, he would make us joint-heirs with Christ as a blesser of all the families of the earth. What a giver our Heavenly Father is! And so I delight, as I think of this season of the year, of not only saints, but sinners, trying to make others happy and in so doing, become imitators of God—for what else is it? God is always giving. He sometimes gives to his enemies, and as we read, “He sends the rain down upon the just and the unjust.” Some of his gifts are only given to those who love him. The gift of eternal life is one of these. I am glad for that. I am glad there will be no eternal life for the murderer and the liar and the thief. (Those who are such at the end of the Millennial age.) It will be good for all that they shall be cut off. I am glad that “He that hath the Son hath life.” And yet the very reverse idea is held by the great majority of Christian people for they think that God has forced eternal life upon all whether they would or not, and that if they do not spend their days here doing good, they will have to spend eternity in eternal torment; but I am glad that is not the Father’s purpose. I am glad he has chosen to do good unto all men who will come under his law. And it is our business in the present time to “do good unto all men (first) SPECIALLY the household of faith.” The general business is that we do good unto all men. That means that we would not do harm unto anybody; but the SPECIAL business is to do good to the household of faith.

As I think of the exceeding great and precious promises our Heavenly Father has already given us, and the promises for the future, one of the things standing out is the privilege of being a channel for dispensing gifts to men. Now think of it. We see so many evidences of debauchery and dissipation and destitution right here in Allegheny, and when we see a poor creature with these marks written in his face we say:—Oh how much he needs restitution: then he will be given an opportunity to regain the image of God which father Adam had. How greatly he will be uplifted. And when we see the evidences of sin and degradation which we have here in Allegheny, they are not to be compared with what we find in the heathen lands. This land, the favored of God in every respect, is not to be compared with the dark places which are the habitation of cruelty and the grinding poverty upon nearly all faces. How much all of these need the touch of the Lord’s hand. How they need him to say:—”Thy sins be forgiven thee.” How they need to have it said:—”Go, wash in the pool of Siloam.” How they need to have it said:—”Go and sin no more lest a worse thing come upon thee;” and then to think that God has provided that very thing for the whole world of mankind, not only for those now living, but for all that are in their graves. And how much they all will need the help of the Royal Priesthood; and then, dear brothers and sisters, as the Father has provided that Jesus should be the great Physician for the whole world, he has invited you and me to be under physicians in dispensing these gifts of health and life and release from sin and death; invited us to share with the great minister, our Lord, the Bridegroom. What a privilege! I think one of the greatest attractions that the glorious promises of God holds for me in that direction, is the privilege of being associated with Him in blessing all this great mass of mankind who are “waiting for the manifestation of the Sons of God.”

And then to think it is still possible for you and me to make our calling and election sure in that great company, and to think that after the Lord has called us and accepted us through Jesus, the whole matter then depends upon us, because the Apostle says:—”Faithful is He who has called us, who will also do it.” He never called us without the intention of giving us every assistance by the way, and therefore it is with you and me to make our calling and election sure, by holding firmly to the hand of the Lord and thus:

*Holding fast thy hand and so
Through the world unspotted go.*

There is just one other thought in connection with this matter of giving gifts. If you and I have received some of the Lord’s gifts, we have received something of the spirit of giving. We are speaking now of the spirit of the Lord. In proportion as we become partakers of His spirit, we will delight in doing good to all as we have opportunity. We will delight in doing good to all men. And in proportion as we appreciate His gifts and know that we are privileged to hand out the truth to others, in that proportion we will delight in giving out the good tidings to others. How could we keep it back? We have found that we could not keep it back.

Perhaps we have talked more than we should have sometimes and we would say:—”I must use wisdom in talking of the truth, but I would like to give out all I possibly can, but I must only give what they are able to bear.” If you would say, as perhaps some of you have sometimes said:—”Oh, if I were a millionaire, how I would delight in giving to the poor and helping the needy:” but there is another treasure which He has given you. He has told you how you may go in his name and give the robe of righteousness to whosoever will accept of it, and he has told you how you can take the bread of eternal life to as many as are willing to receive it, and that you may scatter in every direction the rich promises of God.

Now then, He wants to see how much we have of his spirit. Let us, dear brothers and sisters, at this closing season of the year, seek to cultivate more of this spirit, and for the year that is to come, the Lord helping us. Amen.

BORN OF THE SPIRIT

“That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.” John 3:6-8.

Our Lord presents this matter to us, dear friends, and we have the assurance that it is Scriptural, correct. It is proper for us to see to being born of the Spirit. In this connection, He has already said to Nicodemus that only those who are born of the Spirit can enter into the kingdom of God. It becomes, therefore a very important question to you and to me and to all who are seeking to be the Lord’s people to know just what the Lord meant by this expression: “Ye must be born again.”

Our view of the subject is not exactly the same as that held by some other Christian people. In fact I think you will agree with me that if we were to sift all the various opinions respecting these words “born again,” we will find that Christian people, not only in our day but in centuries past, have been more or less confused, and they did not know whether or not they had been born of the Spirit and what experiences to look for. It is very proper, therefore, for us to look for the meaning of our Lord’s words.

We remark first of all that our Lord Jesus contrasts the birth of the flesh with the birth of the Spirit, thus intimating that the natural birth is a picture or copy of the spiritual birth; and there is a correspondence. Let me call your attention first of all to the fact that no child was ever born of the flesh unless it had first been begotten; and so with those born of the Spirit. Begetting of the flesh—birth of the flesh; begetting of the Spirit—birth of the Spirit. Now it so happens that the Greek word that is rendered “begotten” is the same Greek word rendered “born.” It is properly used either way. When we speak of a begetting in the English language, we know exactly what is meant, but in the Greek this is not so and you must be guided by the context to know which is meant. If the context signifies “into,” then it means begetting; if it means “out of,” then it means born. Begotten into, born out of; and thus you see the law of nature is followed out. Just so with respect to the begetting of the Spirit. We must be begotten of the Spirit, else we can never be born at all.

As a result of the fact that a majority of Christian people have not noticed this difference, we find a number saying they are “born again” when they should say “begotten.” We are not yet born. We are only begotten when we receive the Holy Spirit. We shall have been born when we have shared in the first resurrection.

There are three stages in the natural birth, and so these three stages belong also to the spiritual birth. In the natural—first the begetting, then the quickening, then the birth; in the spiritual we are first begotten, and if we continue on in the way, we will be quickened, and then if we continue on, in due time we will be born in the first resurrection. Only the begetting and the quickening belong to this present life. The birth belongs to the resurrection. Note the Scriptures on the subject: Our Lord Jesus was the first-BORN from the dead; and we also hope to be born from the dead and to share in His resurrection. And we read again: “He is the first born among many brethren.” We hope to be among the brethren, the body of Christ, which is the Church. And if we are now among those who have been begotten of the Spirit, we have had something to do with it. If the Holy Spirit continues to abide with us and we grow in grace and in knowledge, we become “meet for the inheritance of the saints in light:” and then we shall have part in the first resurrection.

Now these expressions “begetting” and “birth” are not meaningless expressions. So many are inclined to get a hazy idea of the Scriptures as though they had no particular meaning. Why do the Scriptures speak of being begotten again and being born again? We answer—the Scriptures do not speak of being begotten and being born again as things that are to come to the world in general. It is the Church and the brethren who are begotten. The world is to have restitution.

You will remember in examining the Chart of the Ages on this subject that we found that the whole world fell in the person of father Adam, fell from the plane of perfection to the plane of sin and death. You will remember also that we found that in due time “Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man,” and that the result of His sacrifice is to be restitution to as many as will receive his favors. When the due time shall have come in the Millennial Age, in Christ’s kingdom, the world of mankind shall receive great blessings from the Lord. They shall have the knowledge and opportunity brought to them, so that so many of them as will may return unto Him, may be restored to all that was lost in Adam. Our Lord Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost; that is the ultimate end of his great work.

But during this age, in which God’s election is taking place, choosing out of the nations a “little flock” to be joint-heirs with Jesus Christ their Lord—during this age, there is no restitution work going on. Why not? Because God’s time has not come for that work. First the elect must be gathered together, then the restitution work will begin. But now the point we want you specially to notice is—that this elect Church is to be a NEW CREATION, of a new nature, different from the world. “Ye are not of the world for I have chosen you OUT of the world.” Mark, not “I have chosen the world and am trying to bring them.” The work of this gospel age is separate and distinct from the work of all the other ages, and just as soon as we realize that this gospel age is the time in which our Heavenly Father is doing a certain particular work, just that soon we begin to understand what our Heavenly Father is doing.

The Church that is being gathered out during this Gospel age then is to be a new creation, of a different nature from the remainder of the world. They are to be changed in nature; they must be “born again” or else they cannot have this new nature. Now what is your nature, according to the flesh? The Apostle answers: “We were all children of wrath, even as others.” But as members of the human race how were we? We were all sinners. “By one man’s disobedience the many were made sinners, even so by the obedience of One, the many shall be made righteous.”

But now God has called us out of the world that we should be a kind of first-fruits of His creatures—a new creation. What nature does He propose to give to His Church? Does He propose to make us angels? I remember very well that I used to sing, and I suppose some of you have sung it too, “I want to be an angel.” The angelic nature is higher than the human, that is true; and if God had called us to that, it would be a glorious calling and I would rejoice in it. But when we go to His book, we don’t find that He has called us to be angels, but we do find that He has called us to be something higher than the angels. “Ah well,” says one, “you are too ambitious.” No. I am not ambitious, but I desire to attain that to which we are called, and the Word of God teaches us that God is choosing the Church from amongst the world now and that he is going to give this Church the DIVINE nature. Why Brother Russell you don’t mean that. Yes I do. We must either take God’s Word as it is, or let it alone. If we are going to take our own judgment, let us throw the Bible away. But when we come to be taught of God (and that is the proper teacher for those who would enter the school of Christ) let us take His Word; and the Word of God on this subject is that He has given unto us “exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might become partakers of the DIVINE nature;” and I believe it. It is not a question of whether you and I would be satisfied with something less. It is God who is making this call and He puts the terms and conditions upon it and He fixes the reward and no man has anything to do with it. It was all fixed of God long before you and I were born. God, as we saw last Lord’s day, has made a very narrow way and it is only when we come to see that He is choosing out of the world a Royal Priesthood to become kings and priests unto God, to rule on the earth and to be ministers of God to bless all the families of the earth—only then do we begin to see why God made the way so narrow that few would find it, and after finding it, would care to walk in it.

Take another thought in this connection, dear friends. We are called to be members of the body of Christ, called to be joint-heirs with Him, partakers with Him of all His fullness; so the question is, what is His fullness, what is His standing? Is He a little lower than the angels? We find that He humbled himself and became a man in order that He, by the grace of God, might taste death for every man; and having accomplished that work, we find that God hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name that is above every name, far above angels and principalities and every name that is named “and He is now seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high,” at God’s right hand, a position no angel occupies. Having this idea in mind, we see that the Church, which is being called out during this age, is called to be “members of His body.” Another figure used is that we are called to be “the Bride, the Lamb’s wife,” partner in all His glory and honor. And all these promises belong to us if we have been begotten of the Spirit and shall be born of the Spirit. Now then, dear friends, you see that it is not remarkable that the Lord should insist that we should be “born again” and that only those who are “born again” should have part or lot in the kingdom. Why so? The Apostle Paul tells us that “flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.” Humanity cannot inherit the kingdom of God. The kingdom class—of which Christ Jesus our Lord is the Head, the King—has the promise that they shall be JOINT HEIRS WITH HIM to sit in His throne to bless and rule the world. He is not flesh and blood nor flesh and bone, but is highly exalted above every name that is named. He did not lose anything by the great humbling which He endured on our behalf, for while the Father permitted Him to become flesh and blood in order to die for our race, yet now He is highly exalted, even to the DIVINE NATURE. Mark the words of the Apostle: “As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given the Son to have life in Himself,” inherent life, immortality, the Divine nature; and that is what no angel has. All the Angels of God, no matter how high their rank or station, they are all supplied by God with life; but, “As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given the Son to have life in Himself” and that He should give it unto whomsoever He would. Dear brothers and sisters, you and I have been called to receive this same grace, life inherent: and so the Apostle declares, “We seek for glory, honor and immortality”—the Divine nature.

Another point right here, dear friends: If we are begotten of the Spirit, when did it take place? Let us see on the chart. On last Lord's day we looked at the lowest plane, the plane of sin and death, and we found that the whole world of mankind fell in the person of father Adam to this plane. He was created perfect (a) which represents the plane of perfection; but he fell and all his race have been born sinners. And we saw also that it is not possible now for anyone to step back again to the plane of perfection; it is impossible for any to be actually right before God; and so the Apostle declares: "There is none righteous, no, not one." But we saw also that we can reach the plane of perfection in a reckoned way; that is to say, God counts some of us as getting from the plane of sin and death to the plane of perfection. It is not so actually: we are counted so. And so the Apostle says we are justified, made right. Adam was perfect, Abraham was justified by his faith, and you and I have been justified by faith in God, so that He no longer looks upon us as "aliens, strangers, foreigners," but He reckons us, when we believe in Christ Jesus for the forgiveness of our sins, as having stepped from the plane of sin and death to the plane of perfection. Now I hope that all in this room have taken that step. That is the first step and you can't take any other step unless you first take that step, being justified freely by His grace through our Lord Jesus Christ. This, then, brings us to the plane of reckoned righteousness. Justified actually? No. How? By faith lifted up, by faith counted right. And what after we are justified, dear friends? Is that all? No, that is just the beginning. We are just ready then to be called. Why, says one, I thought I was called when I was justified. No, dear brothers and sisters, the Lord calls all men to repentance and He does more—He COMMANDS sinners to repent. But that is not our high calling. It is one thing to tell a man he ought not to continue in sin and that he ought to accept Christ for the forgiveness of his sins, but it is quite another thing to call him to joint-heirship with Christ. No sinner is called to this. It is only the justified who are thus called. By the time we have passed from the plane of sin and death to the plane of perfection (reckonedly), it may be said then that we are sons of God. Adam, for instance, is spoken of in the Scriptures as being the son of God. He was a son according to the flesh as long as he was in harmony with God; and now, if you please, any man who accepts Christ for the forgiveness of his sins and sets his face toward righteousness might be called a human son of God, because reckonedly he has come back into harmony with Him. And it is to this class, if we may so speak of them as sons, that He says, "My son, give me thine heart." What does He mean? He means, "give me thine affections, everything, consecrate yourself fully to the Lord," just as the Apostle, addressing this class and calling them "brethren" says: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice.” He calls them “brethren” because they are not of the world. The Lord never called the world “brethren.” But having come to a state of justification, then the Apostle says: “I beseech you therefore, brethren,” etc. Now you see, dear friends, there is something to be done, dear friends, after we reach the point of justification; in other words, justification is the first step necessary to be taken, but the important step is after that. Let me quote you the Apostle: “Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.” Is that all? No, “... by whom also (by Jesus Christ) we have access into this grace wherein we stand (going further, you see) and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.” What, the glory of God? Yes, all who have entered into this condition of consecration, all who have become members of the body of Christ have a hope “of the glory of God.” What glory? Why, “the glory, honor and immortality” which the Apostle speaks of. Only those who are born in the first resurrection will get this “glory, honor and immortality.” God has good things in store for the world; but He has invited us, first of all to accept the forgiveness of sins. And I know some dear Christian people who thought so well of their justified condition that they stood there for years and years, not knowing anything about any further step which the Apostle says is their “reasonable service.”

But the Apostle says: “Don’t you see, brethren, a further step?” Go on. You must get beyond this step of justification and enter into this further grace wherein it is our privilege to stand, to be seated with Christ in “heavenly places.” Well, now, where does the begetting of the Holy Spirit come in? I answer—it comes in just at this point. Are there any conditions? Yes, the conditions are, a full consecration of the life to God. All who accept the Apostle’s proposition and who do present their bodies a living sacrifice, they are due to get the Holy Spirit immediately when the consecration is made. And He tells us that now is the acceptable time for this step. Why, says one, don’t you claim that the Millennial Age is the acceptable time? Yes, I claim it is the acceptable time for some things, according to God’s Word; but now is the acceptable time to become a member of this particular body—the body of Christ, and to have the privilege of offering our poor bodies to God and have Him count it as worth something and then to permit us to sacrifice it and to accept the sacrifice. And He gives us the promise that we shall be partakers of the Divine nature, begetting us to a new nature that eventually we might be born of the Spirit, “be like Him.” No wonder then that you and I highly appreciate the privilege of living in this Gospel Age. We should esteem it a privilege to lay down our lives on God’s altar. Suppose we did not know what He is going to give to those who love Him. Mark you, the Apostle does not say that these promises are for those who “don’t hate God,” but for those who LOVE Him with ALL THEIR HEART and soul and being; and He is testing them. For instance: when you and I gave ourselves to the Lord and He accepted us, what did that mean? It meant that our sacrifice was acceptable. How gracious on His part to count it worth accepting and to say that He had accepted us into His family, to be counted as Sons of God. And, "If children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord, IF SO BE THAT WE SUFFER WITH HIM." Mark this, dear friends—not merely if we will make a consecration; but after we make this consecration and start in the narrow way, He is seeing to what extent we really mean it. So now we have the matter before us and you and I are still in a place where the Lord may find out how sincere we were in our consecration we made, how earnest we were when we gave all to Him and said we would accept what He had to offer. I say that if we did not know what God was going to give us, we could still be sure that He would give us "exceeding, abundantly better things than we could think or ask." But when He has told us that we shall be made partakers of the Divine nature, then we can say with the Apostle: "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus" who is the author of our faith.

You and I could not hope to be counted worthy of a share in the glorious things the Father has held out for us by anything that we could do. It is He who assures us that He is with us and will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able. It is not His intention that the gold shall be destroyed, but only that the dross shall be consumed. It is not His intention to crush the stones, but that He shall shape and fit and polish us, making us "meet for the inheritance of the saints in light." Col. 1:12 And so our confidence is in Him, and if we commit all to Him, He will bring us off conquerors and more than conquerors.

Now let us notice, if you please, how the Church is to walk in the footsteps of Jesus. I think that it will do us good. This figure (g) represents our Lord Jesus at thirty years of age. He came into the world, leaving the glory which He had with the Father before the world was. He became poor, not He pretended to become poor, but "he who WAS rich became poor." He laid aside His glory; He was made flesh, not that he got into flesh and pretended to be flesh while he was in reality something else; but He who was rich became poor, leaving the glory which he had with the Father; and when he was born, He was a perfect man, not a mere man but a perfect man. And there was necessity for this, for He could not have redeemed the world unless He had been a perfect man. You remember the Apostle's declaration that the "blood of bulls and goats could never take away sin." Why? Because it wasn't bulls and goats that had sinned. And an angel could not redeem the world for it wasn't an angel that had sinned. Man had sinned and so a man was necessary to redeem the world. Hence the Scriptural declaration that our Lord Jesus became the man Christ Jesus that—"As by a man came death, by a man also came the resurrection from the dead." Thus it was that our Lord Jesus left the glory and honor of a Spirit being far above angels, and humbling Himself, was made flesh—a perfect man. And so our Lord was on the same plane that Adam was. He had come into the world to redeem Adam's race. (Rom. 5:12.) It was the death of the MAN Christ Jesus that paid the penalty. It was because he became a man that he could pay the penalty.

Now you know that under the law, thirty years of age was manhood's estate. So not until thirty years of age could He undertake the work that he had come to do, although as a boy He had an interest in that work, for you remember on one occasion He said to His parents: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

And at thirty years of age, what did he do? We Answer—in the language of the Scriptures: "Now when Jesus began to be about thirty years of age, He cometh to John at Jordan to be baptized." You see he was watching for the time. He could not do it sooner, but just as soon as the time was up, He wanted to make His consecration, to start the work that was before Him. He began to get ready before thirty years of age; and when He was thirty, He gave Himself. Do you mean to say, Brother Russell, that he was in opposition to the Father before that? By no means. You were not in opposition to the Father when you were justified. And the Apostle does not mean those who are in opposition to the Father when he says: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice." It was necessary that Jesus should come and make a formal presentation of Himself. Hear the language of the prophet: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God. In the volume of the book it is written of me." And you remember that it was just at this time that the Holy Spirit came upon Him, even as John bore record. "John did bare record that Jesus therefore was the sent of God." When did the Holy Spirit come upon Him? At the time of His consecration. What did that imply? The begetting to a new nature. Having humbled Himself, He became a man; and now He had consecrated His body and all His powers to God, to be sacrificed, to take the place of the typical sacrifice. As the Apostle says; "He taketh away the first (the type) that He may establish the second." It was there that our Lord Jesus made His sacrifice—at thirty years of age. Where did yours begin, my brother? If you are a priest, it must be that at a certain time your sacrifice began. Could we offer ourselves, says one "without spot or blemish?" Would God accept anything that was spotted or blemished? I answer, dear friends, that this is the wonderful feature of it, for God counts those who are justified as being without spot or blemish. Justified means cleared; "justified freely from all things." Is not that a wonderful thing? COUNTED as though we were perfect men and women. No one but God could make such a wonderful plan. But He has arranged it and you and I follow in the footsteps of Jesus because we were redeemed by His blood, and being justified freely, we can present ourselves. Mark how the Apostle puts it: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, ACCEPTABLE UNTO GOD, your reasonable service." You holy, you acceptable unto God, and God has said that nothing can come upon His altar that is impure, blemished? Yes, that is exactly the teaching of the Word. Coming into harmony with God through faith in Christ, we may present ourselves, holy, acceptable, our reasonable service. Now then it is true that during this age we are asked to present our bodies a living sacrifice. No one in any previous age was asked. Why not? Because they were not justified. Why? Because the apostle explains that "the blood of bulls and goats could never take away sin." But when the real atonement was made, then it was possible to have the real justification.

When our Lord consecrated Himself, what happened? The Father accepted Him. And how did He indicate it? By giving the Holy Spirit. And what was this? It was the begetting of our Lord Jesus to the new nature. And during the three and one-half years of our Lord's ministry, this new nature was performing sacrifice. Day by day He was laying down His life, until at the end of three and one-half years, as He hung upon the cross He exclaimed: "It is finished." What was finished? The work that the Father had given Him to do. What work? The work of redemption. The man Christ Jesus died. What about the new nature? I answer—it began at thirty years of age and by the time He died, the new creature was three and one-half years old. After three and one-half years and he had finished the sacrifice—then what? Why, He arose from the dead three days after His crucifixion. And what then? He was born of the Spirit, "The first-born among many brethren," and you and I hope to have part in the same resurrection. What, you don't mean the same resurrection? Yes, for He is the head over the Church which is His body, and just as you would not call it two births for a child if the head were born first and the body afterwards, just so with the first resurrection. And the apostle says in his letter to the Philippians: "That I might know Him and the power of His resurrection." His resurrection is not only the first in the sense of going before all others, but it is the first also and specially in the sense of being chief. As we read: "Blessed and holy are all they that have part in the first resurrection. On them the second death hath no power, but they shall be kings and priests unto God and shall reign on earth a thousand years." Our Lord Jesus was the first to have part in the first or chief resurrection, and if we are faithful, we will also share with Him in His resurrection: as the Apostle says: "That we might know Him and the power of His resurrection.” Read in the 3rd of Philippians how the Apostle points out that all things else in this world are as loss and dross as compared with the privilege of having fellowship with Him and a share in His glory.

And now as the Lord passed through these experiences, you and I must also pass through them. As we saw before, you and I don't get on to the plane of perfection actually. We are only reckoned perfect and there comes a time when we are privileged to consecrate ourselves; and the Lord does not lay down any particular day, as in the type when thirty years are the proper time; but if you have the ear to hear and the heart to understand, you may present your sacrifice during this acceptable time, during which God will accept our sacrifice; and after that—what? Begotten to the new nature. And then—what? Walk in the spirit and “Let THIS mind dwell in you richly,” let it abound more and more. We are to have this new mind growing in us, just as a child when it is begotten grows and grows and grows until it shall come to the place where it is matured enough to be born. And so you and I are to grow in all the fruits of the Spirit. At first it may be that none will take any knowledge of us that anything has taken place. The way in which they observed the change in our Lord Jesus was that He now had a mission to perform. And so at the beginning of our consecration, it may take us a little while to get our bearings and to find out where we are; but just as soon as we find ourselves, we see that the Father's business is the most important business of this life and we begin to arrange other matters so that the Father's business may have the supreme effort of our lives.

And when we are thus begotten of the Spirit, then we come to the quickening stage. It is quite a while with some before they are given any indication of being alive, quickened. “But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your MORTAL BODIES by His Spirit that dwelleth in you.” He is not speaking here of the resurrection and the quickening of the immortal bodies; it is our MORTAL bodies. I trust that many of you have made this full consecration. I trust that you have had the first experience of endeavoring to become dead to sin; and I trust you have gone further and that you have had the Spirit quickening you, energizing you, and that as you go forth each day to your duties you say to yourself: “How can I spend this day so that it will be to the praise of Him who hath called me out of darkness into His marvelous light?”

In proportion as we get the truth, we are getting that which puts strength and energy and vim into us and makes us active in the Lord's service. I trust that every one who has made the consecration is having this quickening experience, so that we may not be overcome by the cares of this life and thus come forth “still born.”

The Apostle also uses other figures in speaking of us as sons of God. These sons of God are now in an embryo condition so to speak. We have this treasure in an earthen vessel. We are waiting to be clothed upon with our house from heaven, which we are to get in the resurrection when we shall be “like Him.” We want not only to be begotten to this spiritual nature, but we want to be born also.

The figure (k) on the chart represents our Lord Jesus, this being the plane of glory. Figure (n, m, p, q,) represents the nominal church as a whole as we see it—made up of all classes. First of all are the unjustified, those who are not even trusting in the Lord for their justification, even though they have attached themselves to the church. These are tares, pure and simple. We are not wishing to say anything disrespectful of them but are merely wishing to show that they have not come on to the plane where the Lord recognizes them. And then we have a larger class, (p) those who are on the plane of justification; and they are what the Scriptures call “the household of faith.” They have taken the first step of justification and are on the plane where they receive God’s recognition. Many of them are satisfied to stay there, though very wrongly, for He merely justified us and gave us the privilege to consecrate in order that we might go further—to the next plane above; and you will observe that there are two classes (m, n) here also. You have known them and I know them. It is like the cream and milk, if you please. The first class are those who never made any claim of having presented their bodies a living sacrifice. The Church proper, however, is only those who have been begotten of the Spirit, whoever they may be. We don’t recognize any sectarian lines or creeds, because we don’t find that to be the Scriptural teaching. But we recognize all who have their names written in heaven, and that is where you and I want to have ours written.

Well now, says one, I thought there was only the one class in the real church. No, there are two classes in the real church, amongst those who have been begotten of the Spirit. The one class are those who have not only made the consecration, but they are joyfully going on, counting it all joy to be counted worthy to suffer with Jesus. They are the ones who are “filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ:” and counting it all joy, KNOWING that these things are necessary for their development. They are the kind, who, as “stones,” rejoice not at the blows, but rejoice that the Master’s hand directs the blows and that thus they are made “meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.” “Rejoice in tribulation,” says the Apostle, knowing that your labors are not in vain in the Lord. I need not tell you that this class is only a “little flock;” you know that. Not many are found after this fashion; but some, thank God.

And now this other class—what do they represent? I answer—they are that class mentioned in the seventh chapter of Revelation, the foolish virgins, if you please. John the Revelator is here telling what he saw; and he says there was a great company which no man could number. That is not a good translation. The thought is—it is not a fixed number in contradistinction to the “little flock” which is a definite, fixed number; a great company whose number no man knows, is the thought. The very elect are a limited number and when the number have been found, the election ceases, not another one will be admitted. As in the type, the High Priest, for instance, must be one who had no superfluous fingers or toes or joints, nor must he be lacking in any of these. Why? Because He was a picture of the Christ. There is not to be one more nor one less, and when the number is completed, the election is finished and there will be no more an acceptable time for sacrificing, for it will be at an end.

This great company which John saw he says are those which “came up out of great tribulation, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb.” They are before the throne and serve God day and night in his temple continually. Well, says one, that’s good. It is good; it is grand. I am glad for them; aren’t you? But mark you, dear friends, that is not the best place to be. We are glad for them that God will not let them go, but that He will bring them through great tribulation so that they may wash their robes. It is better though that we keep our garments unspotted than that we should have to wash them. But says one, do you mean to say that it is possible for one to pass through this life unspotted by the world? No, that is not the thought. The thought is that this class, the “little flock,” is so careful about their robe that if they get a spot on it, they go straight to Jesus Christ, whose blood cleanses them from all sin. But there are others who become overcharged with the cares of this life and they say—Oh well, I don’t think so much about that as I used to; and so they become careless and get their robe spotted; but they still have the robe, for they never deny His name and never would, for they love the Lord. But they are not careful, and because they become careless in this respect, they shall have to pass through great tribulation. We believe that the majority of this class are living to day.

But now for you and me—what is our position? I trust that we have left the world behind and that, by the grace of God, having been justified freely from all things, we have gone on still further and have made a full consecration and that you have been begotten of the Spirit and that you have the new mind, so that now you love the good things, the right things, things that are pleasing to our Lord, and that you are seeking to bring forth in the daily life, not thorns and briars, but figs and grapes. You cannot gather the fruits of the Spirit from those who have not the new mind. The fruit unto righteousness that the Lord is looking for in you and me consists not only in bringing others to a knowledge of the Lord (that is very good, but that is not the only fruit) but the particular fruits that He wishes to find in you and in me are “the fruits of the Spirit, meekness, gentleness, forbearance, long suffering, brotherly kindness, love.” These things are to be looked for in our hearts and lives. Not as coming in suddenly and overwhelming us in a moment, but it must first have a start. The Lord tells us that He will take away every branch that beareth no fruit. If He does not see some evidence that we are growing in the right way, He will cut us off. And if He finds that we have the appearance of fruit-bearing, then He will take off only that which would go to wood; and that may mean something of trial.

Let us then, dear brothers and sisters, if we have made our consecration to the Lord and have been begotten of the Spirit and realize that we are new creatures in Christ Jesus, let us lay aside every weight and let us not merely walk, but let us RUN the race that is set before us. And we have the Lord’s promises that “He that is for us is greater than all that can be against us.” How gracious and grand are His promises.

February 22, 1903

THE GREAT CONSUMMATION

“Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong, for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consummation, even determined upon the whole earth.”—Isa. 28:22.

The prophet has been speaking, we believe, respecting our day. He has been discussing in highly symbolical language conditions which we believe prevail at this present time. In the preceding verses, speaking of the present time and of the nominal Christian world, speaking also of the great trial and tests that are coming and which we believe have already commenced upon the nominal system called Christendom, the Lord through the prophet says: “From the time that it goeth forth (that is, from the time that this trouble, this snare of the Harvest age which the prophet has been speaking about in the previous verses) it shall take you; for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night, and it shall be a vexation only to understand the report.”

Perhaps I should preface my remarks with a brief explanation of the Chart so far as we have examined it. We have seen that there are three great dispensations, or worlds; the first dispensation lasted from creation to the flood; the second dispensation (or the present evil world) will last from the flood until the end of this world and the beginning of the world to come—the new dispensation, the reign of righteousness. We have also seen that in this “present evil world” there are three ages, viz: the Patriarchal age, in which God’s favor extended only to the fathers of Israel—Abraham first, then Isaac, then Jacob. And at Jacob’s death, we find that His favors were with the children of Jacob, called the children of Israel, and that for 1845 years God dealt only with this nation, as it is written by the prophet Amos—

”You only have I known of all the families of the earth.” And so it was at the close of their age that the Lord Jesus came to His own. And when He preached, He preached to His own and none other; and when He sent forth His disciples, He instructed them not to go to any others, saying: “Go not unto the Gentiles and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not, for I am not sent Save to the Lost Sheep of the House of Israel.” God’s dealings were confined exclusively to that peculiar people up to that time.

And we saw also that God’s favors toward Israel ceased at a certain particular time, at a certain particular day, mentioned not only by the prophet but by our Lord Jesus. You will remember that five days before His crucifixion, He rode into Jerusalem upon the ass, and weeping over the city He exclaimed: “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that stonest the prophets and killest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her chickens, and ye would not. And now I say unto you—Your house is left unto you desolate.” There was no more favor to Israel from that day to this; but the Lord intimates a little further hope for them when He says: “Ye shall see me no more until that day,” (pointing down to the Millennial day) that great day in which Israel is to be restored and the favor of God is to return to them again as delineated in the 11th of Romans, from the 25th to the 32nd verses. Blindness in part happened to natural Israel until “the fullness of the Gentiles be come in” and then all Israel shall be saved—saved from their blindness. As concerning the great promises made to the Church, they shall have passed by, they are gone, they can never return again (that is, when Israel’s blindness shall have been taken away;) but eventually they shall be brought back and “shall obtain mercy through your (the Gospel Church’s) mercy.”

We have seen then, dear friends, that this age measures the period of time in which God is “gathering out of the Gentiles a people for His name.” He took as many of the Jews as were ready and they became the nucleus for His Church; and during this Gospel age, God has been taking out of the Gentiles enough to make up the number which He predetermined would constitute the Bride, the Lamb's wife, the body of Christ which is the Church. When this body is completed, there will not be another member admitted; and the body will be completed with the close of this Gospel age.

The Jewish age was 1845 years long from the death of Jacob to the death of Christ, and the Gospel age is exactly the same length of time from the death of Christ until the harvest. On last Lord's day, we found that those who constitute the Church have passed through two stages: first, one of faith, belief in the Lord Jesus Christ. And that faith in the Scriptures is said to be a justifying faith, and so we find those who thus believe in the Lord Jesus are reckoned as having reached the plane of justification or righteousness. Adam was born there, Abraham was reckoned there because of his faith, and so it is with us. We are counted as being there. We found also that this plane of righteousness or justification was the first step toward "bringing sons to glory." What glory? Why, the "glory, honor and immortality" that the Scriptures everywhere speak of, joint-heirship with God's dear Son in the kingdom of God, as the Apostle says. Now God is bringing these sons to glory, and the first step is from sin and condemnation to justification; and that step is taken without works. The only way to take that step is to renounce sin and to trust for the forgiveness of sin to Him who died on our behalf—thus we are justified by faith in His blood. This is the first step. The second step is the begetting to the new nature, "becoming members of the new creation," as the Apostle explains it. We have seen that this step is taken by a full consecration of ourselves to the Lord, as the Apostle says to the justified ones: "I beseech you therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice." And as they present themselves, that is their part in the matter. And the Lord accepts them and they are counted as being begotten to the spiritual nature.

Those who have come to have faith in the blood of Christ are justified; and we are sorry to say that many of God's people stay right there. But that was not God's object in giving us the justification. It was given us in order that we might go on; otherwise He might just as well have blest us with the world in the next age. But He has given us knowledge in advance of the world; and when I say "us" dear friend, I mean all who are the Lord's people. We don't make any lines or fences, but recognize all who are the Lord's people in every place. Being justified by faith, they should not be content to remain there but should go on; and if they have this disposition, they will be asking our Heavenly Father: "Father, what wouldst thou have me to do?" And they would hear him saying, "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, that ultimately you shall be sharers in His glory and in the great work He has to do in the Millennial age."

We saw further, as we examined the subject, that only a few are on this plane of spirit begetting. A great many more are on the plane of justification and there they stay, instead of going on to the higher plane. And then of those who have been begotten to the new nature, we found there are two classes. There is a "little flock" of those who are faithful and a "great company" of those who are not properly faithful in fulfilling their covenant, not thoroughly consecrated to the Lord, not living up to their consecration. We pointed out that only those who are taking joyfully the experiences of life and who are rendering their lives willingly in obedience to the Lord with hearty, good will, these only are walking in the footsteps of the Master; and there are a great many who do not draw back and would not under any consideration, nevertheless they are not living up to the standard which the Lord has marked out for them, they are walking partly with the world and partly with the Lord. They have become "overcharged with the cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches," and they are therefore losing the greatest blessing of the Lord in this life, and they have more trouble than those who live up faithfully to their covenant, because the Lord gives this class so many great favors, and the riches of His promises are so good to them that they "rejoice in tribulation," as the Lord and the Apostle over and over again say: "Rejoice in tribulation and in trial and in whatever may come upon you, since you realize that all these things are working out for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." But those who don't thus thoroughly fulfill their consecration but who hold back to some extent, they lose that peace of God in their hearts, failing to have it to the same extent as do the "little flock," and while perhaps this great company pass through no severer trials or difficulties than the "little flock," yet they feel them more because they do not have the peace and satisfaction in the same measure.

This great company, you will remember, we found mentioned in the 7th chapter of Rev.; and he speaks here also of the "little flock" as consisting of 12,000 out of each of the twelve tribes. God began with typical Israel, dividing them into twelve tribes, and the promises were made to those who were the natural seed of Abraham. But when it came to the harvest time and the Lord's tests came upon them, only a comparatively small number were found fit for the kingdom. The great mass were blinded and turned aside, and those who were found worthy were only a little "tribe." And the Lord keeps up the suggestion of the twelve tribes, and those whom He is taking out during this Gospel age He speaks of as being counted into one of these tribes, and of course it makes no difference which tribe you are in. During this Gospel age, God is filling up these twelve tribes of Israelites because there were not enough of the natural Israelites to complete the predetermined number, and thus we become the seed of Abraham, though by nature we are not children of Abraham. The Apostle, in the 3d of Galatians, point out this matter very clearly, saying that Jesus is the seed of Abraham in the large sense and “if ye be Christ’s, then are ye Abraham’s seed and heirs, according to the promise.”

From God’s standpoint, the only Church is the “little flock,” (and they are His–His jewels, His special care) and the Great Company, those who “wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb”–these two classes compose the Church. Now this Great Company will not be counted worthy to be of the body of Christ because they have not a sufficiency of His spirit. They must come up through great tribulation and make their robes white. They will get palms of victory, but the others will get crowns of glory, honor and immortality. There is a great difference, and since God has invited us to it, we want to come into harmony with Him and to have what He wishes to give us; and having started in this way, having made a consecration of ourselves, having been accepted of Him and having been begotten of the Spirit, we wish to say, we do say: “Let us lay aside every weight and run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, that we may be counted worthy to be members of His body.”

And then the other bodies (shown on the chart) the justified ones and those who have attached themselves to the nominal systems without even having been justified, these two bodies are not strictly the Church. They have never made a consecration to the Lord. Some of them have come to a justified condition however. And what are they? At the present time they constitute what the Scriptures call “the household of faith,” very nice people, a great many of them, but not of the Church, for the Lord has said: “If any man would be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me.” And He explained to them also, you will remember, that they should sit down and count the cost, not to be in haste and do something that they don’t know anything about. Think about the matter, study it out, do what you do intelligently, do it unto God; and then having made the consecration, live it, no matter what may come, understanding from the very beginning that those who will walk with Jesus will not be a great number, but a comparatively small number, only a “little flock.”

And we see that the last class, those who have attached themselves to the nominal churches, never having believed in Christ unto justification, but simply because they want to be in good society attaching themselves to the nominal church, these are not even of the “household of faith” and they have no part or lot in the matter whatever.

And our text for today shows how the whole matter is to end; and when we say “end,” we are not speaking of the end of the world, nor about the destruction of the world. Nothing of the kind; but with the ending of this present evil dispensation, a new dispensation begins—"the dispensation of the fullness of times," or "the world to come," as Peter calls it. We are not looking for the destruction of the earth, but we believe the Scriptures when they say "the earth abideth forever." We will show you presently when we come to it what we understand by the "fire" that is to consume the earth. It is not a literal fire nor the physical earth, but a symbolic fire which is to destroy the present order of things; and upon the ashes of the present order of things, God will raise up a new dispensation.

But now as to the other side of the question. Some people will say: "Why, things have been going on as they are now ever since my father's time, and his father's day and his grandfather's day. Why won't it continue thus always?" Well, the prophet anticipated that somebody would be making just such a remark and so he says: "Doth the plowman plow all day to sow; doth he open and break the clods of his ground? When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches and scatter the cummin and cast in the principal wheat," etc. Does the plowman simply keep going up and down the field, over and over again? No, he sows some seed after he plows. And does he keep sowing seed forever? No, he waits for the harvest. And so this calls to mind our Lord's parable in the 13th of Matthew. It was the end of the Jewish age, the harvest time; and as there was a lapping of the ages (the Jewish age ending and the Gospel age beginning) so it is now also. We are in the harvest of the Gospel age and in the beginning of the Millennial age. And in the end of the Jewish age the Lord did a special work among the Jews. He had accepted them and had given them the law, and then for 1845 years He sent the prophets, one after another into the vineyard to look for the fruits, until in the end of the age the Husbandman said: "I will send my Son." That was in the end of that age; and the harvest was gathered and that age was brought to an end.

In this parable the Lord, speaking of the Gospel age and the work to be accomplished, said that the Son of Man was present in the world and sowed good seed (His teachings) and His Apostles sowed the good seed; and while they slept, the enemy came and sowed tares. After the disciples fell asleep, the adversary got a good chance and he took advantage of it, for we know that it was just about this time that what is known as the "dark ages" came in and the teachings of the whole Christian church were more or less corrupted. And then after a while came a brighter time, the reformation movement; and we praise God for the better and still brighter things that are coming to us now. But going back to the parable, we find that the wheat and tares grew together; and we

Now we believe, dear friends, that we are in the harvest of this age, and we believe also that as the Jews passed through a great time of trial and testing, so in this Gospel age we are now in a time of trial and a great sifting is going on amongst those who profess to be the Lord’s people. And ultimately only the wheat will stand and all the others will go down. The Lord spoke of the trials which would come in our day, you will remember, saying that they would “deceive if it were possible the very elect.” In the case of the “very elect,” God will provide them with grace and knowledge so that “the adversary toucheth them not” and he will not be able to overthrow them. As for all the others, we expect that they are all going to fall. What do you mean by “fall?” Well, in the end of this age, the whole Church will have been completed and received of the Lord; first, the apostles and all the faithful of the past who have gone down into death, they shall come forth together with all the faithful of our day; and this, the Apostle says, will be the first resurrection.

And when all these faithful ones have been received into the body, and the whole body shall have been glorified together with the Head, then we read that “He (the Christ) must reign until He shall have put all enemies under His feet.” And the result of this reign will be to bring in a knowledge of the Lord which shall be world-wide and to give every man an opportunity to accept the blessings and favors of God which will then be extended. “Ah well,” says one, “how do you know they will be any more ready to receive it then than they are now?” Well, I think they will be, because God promises that the Adversary, the one who has been opposing the truth and blinding the minds the world in this present time, “he shall be bound for a thousand years, that he may deceive the nations no more.” And in this present time, those who will walk in the way of the Master find it to be a “narrow way” because of persecutions and trials and difficulties and God permits it to be a “narrow way” for the very reason that He may find the “little flock,” and that by walking in this way they may be tested and polished and fitted and prepared for joint-heirship with their Lord in the kingdom.

During the Millennial day, when Christ is King over all the earth, righteousness will be the end of the law, and those who obey the law, instead of being persecuted, will be blest. “Why yes,” says one, “I have often wondered why those who walk faithfully now are not protected from trials and difficulties.” How was it with our Master? Did they not persecute Him and hate Him, even to the taking of His life; but as the Apostle says: “I wot that in ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.” And we believe that the Jews did crucify Christ in ignorance, for Peter says that if they had known Him to be the Lord of glory, they would not have taken His life. And so with all the members of the body of Christ—the same adverse influences press upon them, the persecutions (which are the work of the adversary) and trials and difficulties which are permitted to come upon us; and in the proportion that we seek to press along in the “narrow way,” in that same proportion do we find that we have to fight a good fight.

And so you say that in the Millennial age there will be no narrow way? No, because there will be no adversary there to hedge up the way and make it narrow. And in that age, Israel as a nation will be lifted up and restored to God’s favor. Well, says one, that seems as though God was partial to the Jews. God has made certain promises to some of the fathers of Israel and His favor to them will come about in a natural way—in this way, for instance: the Israelites have been looking for an earthly kingdom for lo, these many centuries. They have not been expecting to get to heaven. That they were expecting an earthly kingdom is shown by the words of the Apostles when they asked the Master if it was His intention to restore the kingdom at His first advent. And He replied that it was not for them to know (at that time) “the times and the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power;” but He did not say that the kingdom would never come or that they would never know anything of “the times and the seasons” but “It is not for you to know now” is the thought. When Israel finds the kingdom of God established, they will be in the proper condition of heart to receive that kingdom. Chief among them, and the first to receive God’s blessings, will be the class spoken of in the 11th chapter of Hebrews, the Ancient Worthies, among whom are Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Jeremiah and Isaiah. They cannot be of the Gospel church. Why not? Because they were not called to be of that church, just as He has not called millions of others. Does the Apostle not say that “all these died in faith?” Yes, but he says also that they died without receiving the things that were promised to them. And why did they not receive them? Because they couldn’t receive them until first the Church was completed and glorified, as the Apostle says. Please notice also in this connection that not a heavenly promise was made until after Christ came. Abraham received an earthly promise—“All the land thou seest, to thee will I give it;” and all the promises made to the Jews were of an earthly kind. Note our Lord’s words respecting John the Baptist, which prove conclusively that none of the Ancient Worthies shall have a share in the heavenly kingdom. “Verily I say unto you, there has not arisen a greater prophet than John the Baptist (quite a high testimony, wasn’t it?) and yet I say unto you that the least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.” What does that mean? It means that John did not get into the kingdom. It means the kingdom belongs to the class which God has been selecting during this Gospel age, and it shows the consistency of God’s arrangement, that Christ should be the forerunner, the captain and the leader of His people; and thus Abraham could not be in this heavenly kingdom because he was dead long before our Lord came. Nevertheless these Ancient Worthies, John the Baptist, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Jeremiah and Isaiah all had a promise and the Lord mentions it, saying: "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom." Will they see the Lord and the glorified church? No. Why not? Because "No man hath seen God at any time." Why not? Because God is a spirit being, "dwelling in light which no man can approach unto." If any man would see God, it would be to his injury. And our Lord Jesus is now the "express image of the Father's person, highly exalted, even to the Divine nature." And if this be true, dear friends, the world can no more see our Lord Jesus in His glorified condition than they could see the Father in His glory. And what about the church? "We shall be like Him." No man can see the church either. We don't know what we shall be, as the Scriptures declare: "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." But we don't know what a spirit being is for we have never seen one. The thing which gives us the best idea of what a spirit being is like is the Apostle Paul's expression of what he saw when he was smitten down on his way to Damascus. He says it was "above the brightness of the sun at noon-day." And what did he see? I answer—he merely caught the faintest glimpse of the Lord, for He says so. And you remember that John the Revelator in giving an account of the Lord Jesus in glory says: "and I fell at his feet as a dead man."

While the world will not see Christ in His glory, they will not need to see Him any more than we now need to see the Father. We know the Father's power and His love and character and that is knowing Him in the best way we could know Him. Whoever sees a perfect man sees the best illustration of the Almighty God that it is possible for a man to see. Why? Because man, that is, a perfect man, was made in the likeness of God. The world in the next age will not see Christ any more than they see Satan now. He has been working during all this age nevertheless. And when Christ, as a spirit being, shall sit upon His throne in the next age, how grand will it be, What blessings will the world have? Let the Scriptures answer: "Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children." Who were counted the fathers? Answer—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Instead of looking back to speak of them as the fathers, they shall be the children and He will be the life-giver. "He shall be called the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace." Abraham will receive life from Christ, the great Life-Giver. And so with all "the fathers" of Israel; and as perfect men, they shall be the very best representatives of Christ and the church that the natural man could possibly see, because every perfect man, being in the image of God, will be a representative of God's character; and thus they will see what God is and know Him. Just as our Lord said at the first advent: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father;" not that the Father was in Him, but that the Father's character was perfectly represented in the Son and whosoever saw Him would have the best idea of the Father.

And who will be the instructors for the world? The "princes" will be there to instruct and to help them. Will they have full authority? No, the church will have supreme authority and they shall make the laws, operating through these Ancient Worthies as the human representatives. The Church is to be the heavenly Jerusalem and the others will be the earthly Jerusalem. From the spiritual capital will go the law and the general instructions; and the earthly capital will send forth the instructions received from the spiritual capital and fountain-head. And the result will be that all mankind will know Him. The Lord indicates that what He proposes to do is to give every member of the race a full opportunity for life. Is that too much? May they not have an opportunity to come to a knowledge of God? Yes, you say, but it must be in this present time. But do the Scriptures say so? The only Scripture that seems to come near it and the only one ever used to prove this theory is "As the tree falleth, so shall it be." but God's proposition is that they all went into death and there they are, neither getting any better nor any worse; and in due time, God shall call them forth, it will be with them just as it was with Lazarus. God did not say to him: "Lazarus, you were in heaven for a while, weren't you?" Or, "Lazarus, you were in purgatory or in hell with devils." Not a word of that kind. Well perhaps Lazarus was in heaven or in hell and God didn't know it. Do you think that was the case? Let us see what the Word says on the subject. "Marvel not, for the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and come forth." Let us not add to the Word of God nor handle it deceitfully, but let us take it as God says it. And His statement of the matter is that the whole world has gone down into death and that in due time they shall come forth. And if we are in the right condition of heart, we will say—"Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth;" and we will hear Him say—"Marvel not, for the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and come forth." And I am simple enough to believe it. When He says these are all in their graves, I know they must be there; and when He says they shall come forth, I believe they will.

He says that one class, "those that have done good," will come forth to a resurrection of life. They shall be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye"—the church. And then another class that "have done good,"—the Ancient Worthies—mentioned in the 11th of Hebrews as "having obtained a good report through faith." They have not yet received their promise, because the Church must first be glorified. And what does it mean when it says "those who have done good?" It means those who have been acceptable to God. Did the Ancient Worthies do good? Yes. Were they perfect? No. But they have “done good” and will come forth to a resurrection of life. And who have “done good” in this Gospel age? Will the hypocritical class, those who have attached themselves to the various nominal systems without having been justified, have God’s approval? No. Have those who are justified “done good?” No, they have “received the grace of God that bringeth salvation,” but they did not use it. They received it “in vain,” as the Apostle says, because they did not go on and make a consecration. They are not of those who have “done good.” Will they be in the resurrection of life? Oh no, surely not. Those who have “done good,” having gone on and made a consecration and fulfilled it, these are the only ones to be approved for the resurrection of life.

Now then, think of what this means for nearly all your friends, and acquaintances and your family. Just think where it is going to put them. They have not been saints, have they? They have not made a consecration to the Lord. No. Well, what about them? It is not nearly so bad as our common version translation has it. It misrepresents the Lord’s thought when it says: “They that have done evil, to a resurrection of damnation.” The word here rendered “damnation” is in five other places of the same chapter rendered “judgment;” and it should be so rendered here. “They that have done evil to a resurrection by judgment.” Quite a different thing, you see. And who have “done evil?” They that have not done good. Either you are in the one class or the other. Now as a matter of fact, the majority are those who have not “done good.” Well, what about them? “They shall come forth.” Thank God! Why thank God? How do you know but that it will be to injure them? Well I am sure that if God could do us no good, He certainly would do us no harm. “A good man doeth good works” and a good God will do good works. And what does a “resurrection by judgment” mean? Resurrection means to raise up. How? By faith? No. To raise them up actually. How actually? By the repair system. Do the Scriptures speak of that? Yes, see the words of the Apostle Peter in the 3rd of Acts, 19 and 21 where he speaks of the “times of restitution.” What does that mean? Times of repair, bringing them back again to all that has been lost in Adam. Some Christians get the idea that the rocks and mountains are to be restored. Well, if God was careful to restore these, how much more creatures who are made in His own image?

The Lord said: “It shall come to pass in those days that I will make a new covenant,” etc. But how? Will He break His law, or bend it in order to be merciful to sinners? No, God’s law will maintain itself with rigidity. The Father will never look upon sin with any allowance; but He provides that during the Millennial age, Christ as King over all the earth, in that day shall dispense mercies and blessings and lift up the poor fallen race, just as we hear people say to day that society needs a great uplift. It does, it does, but it needs a greater uplift than you and I are able to give it. It needs the uplift that the glorified Christ can and will give it. That will be the uplifting time and a thousand years have been provided for it, and whosoever will hear His voice shall be blest. "For Moses (who was a type of Christ) verily said, a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you like unto me. Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever He shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass (in that day) that the soul that will not hear that prophet shall be cut off from amongst the people." You and I know who this great prophet is—Christ the head, the Church His body. The head was raised up to glory 1800 years ago, and the church, His body, has been in process of selection all this time; but bye and bye the body shall be added to the head in glory and the whole body shall be raised up. And when this great antitypical Moses is in power "It shall come to pass that the soul that will not hear that prophet shall be cut off from amongst the people." They will have to hear or die the second death. The time is coming when there shall be no more crying, or sighing or dying. The Lord will create a new heaven and a new earth. Yes, the present world, or order of things, of which Satan is the head, is to pass away in a great time of trouble, at the close of which the new dispensation will be ushered in. And in this connection, we are to expect a great "falling away." It is called the "fall of Babylon." We find it recorded in the 18th chapter of Revelation. What does it say? It says: "Come out of her, my people." Come out of whom? Come out of Babylon. The whole nominal system is called Babylon because Babylon means confusion. You and I know that the whole Christian world is in confusion; but the prophet Isaiah says that it "will be a vexation only until He shall make you to understand doctrine," and when you understand the Lord's doctrine, you will see something of the plan of the ages and where the true church is, and the position of the justified and the hypocrites, "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it, and the covers narrower than that he can wrap himself in it." As long as we are babes, we can lie upon the various beds, the Presbyterian, the Methodist, etc., and even after we have grown a little, we can still stay in these "beds." But when we come "to understand doctrine" and grow to be a "man," then the beds get too short and the covers (the creeds) become too narrow, and we find that if we want to get any rest, we will have to get out of the bed.

Let us lift up our heads and rejoice then, knowing that we are in the harvest time, and let us not feel—"Don't thrust in the sickle, Lord." Why not? Well, it will make a great tumult, Lord. Don't you want the harvest gathered? Yes, we do. Is it not necessary then before the grain can be gathered into the barn that it must first be cut and threshed? Yes. "Well why then have a dread?

Haven't you confidence that I am able to bring you off conquerors and more, and that I will do better for you than I have said?" Yes. Very well, then, "come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues." Are there certain great plagues and troubles coming upon Babylon? Yes. Are there certain sins connected with it? Yes. One of the greatest sins today is blasphemy. I don't mean that they blaspheme intentionally, but whether intentional or otherwise, it is blasphemy nevertheless. In what way is God's name blasphemed? By saying things of the great God Almighty that they would not wish any one to say of them. To say that God, to all eternity, purposes to torture any of His creatures is to blaspheme His character and to speak regarding His perfection in a way that we would not wish to have anybody speak respecting our imperfection. So then as long as you are associated with those who teach eternal torture, you are blaspheming God. We do not want to misrepresent anybody, and most of all, we do not want to misrepresent the Lord. It is not honest for us to remain in that condition. The right thing to do is to "Come out." What are some of the plagues coming upon Babylon? Throughout the whole civilized world, the doctrine of the ransom is going down. People are ceasing to believe it. Well, says one, what would lead them to give it up? They are receiving another theory. They are claiming that man never fell at all, but that instead of falling, he has been growing better and that if God will only leave him alone, he will keep on evolving upward until he shall become a god. It is faith they are losing. Are we trusting in the precious blood of Christ? Let us remember the Lord's words in connection with the matter: "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thy dwelling."

TRUE HEIRS OF GOD'S KINGDOM

The religious debate between Dr. E. L. Eaton and Pastor C. T. Russell was not continued yesterday in Allegheny Carnegie hall, the arrangements of dates having provided for the skipping of a Sunday, in order to have the sixth and last session of the series close on next Sunday afternoon. The usual services of the North Avenue Methodist Episcopal church and of the Bible House congregation were held throughout the day.

At the Bible House chapel in Arch street the interest of the public in the debates was reflected in the attendance of a large number of strangers at the regular afternoon preaching service at 3 o'clock—the only service when a regular discourse is preached, the other service of the congregation being in the form of Bible studies. Deep attention was given to Pastor Russell while he discoursed upon “The Opportunities and Responsibilities of the Kingdom,” the text being, “How hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom of God!” He said:

THE RICH MAN’S DILEMMA

Our text is found in the 18th chapter of Luke, verse 22, relating to the rich young man who came to Jesus, and to whom Jesus said, “Sell that thou hast, and distribute to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come, follow Me.” When he heard this he was very sorrowful, for he was very rich. And when Jesus saw that he was sorrowful He said, “How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God! For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle’s eye than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom.”

Very many are the scriptural testimonies to the effect that riches are unfavorable as respects saintship—that there are difficulties and trials, oppositions to be encountered by those who are rich, that exceed the difficulties which are to be encountered by others. One of the other gospels records that the young man having gone his way, the disciples said to Jesus, “Lord, who then can be saved?” as though they had the thought in their minds that if the rich are not to enter into the kingdom, how can there be any kingdom?

We are to remember that the disciples, in common with all Jews, were expecting the establishment of an earthly kingdom. They had been, with all the other Jews, expecting Messiah, and as they said themselves, “We had hoped that this (Jesus) had been He which should have restored the kingdom to Israel.” As they looked about them they saw that all the notable persons in the kingdom then existing were the wealthy class, the rich; as for instance, it is illustrated when we read that “they saw the rich casting their gifts into the temple treasury,” and again we read that “the scribes and the pharisees were money-lovers.” And everything goes to indicate that the poorer class were underestimated, the publicans and sinners and the poor were supposed to be rather under divine disfavor, and these who were the prominent ones in the nation were supposed to be the ones chiefly in God’s favor.

And since they were expecting the establishment of the kingdom they were evidently expecting that the scribes and pharisees and prominent ones who at the first did not show any disposition to receive the Lord must ultimately recognize the fact that this is the very Christ. “Do our rulers,” said they, “know that this is the very Christ? Can they not realize that this is the very Christ?” So the apostles, who were themselves of the humbler class, were astonished to see that these more wealthy ones, more prominent ones of Israel, were not accepting the Messiah, who seemed to them to fill the very picture of the prophecies; and so when Jesus said, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom," it seemed to overthrow all the expectations of the apostles, and they said, "Who then can be saved?" Where then is the kingdom to come? How will the kingdom be set up if all these in influence and power be rejected, because nearly all who are influential are wealthy, or in comfortable circumstances at least, how then can there be any saved? What will be the prospect of having any kingdom at all? How can the poor ever set up your kingdom, if these wealthy ones be not turned ultimately?

From their standpoint he should have encouraged this young man, saying, "Now my young friend, I am glad to see you; it is not often the rich come along, and we need your assistance; we will make you specially welcome; take a prominent seat amongst the disciples; we want you to be perfectly at home here, and perhaps your presence will attract some more of the great ones!" We have no doubt the disciples were astonished that Jesus discouraged the young man, saying there would be very little hope for him unless he would go to this extreme measure of giving all his goods to the poor. Jesus answered that from the human standpoint that might seem an impossibility, that God should carry out His great plan and promise and establish His kingdom, and yet hardly any of the rich be in it. That might seem to men to be impossible, but it was not impossible with God.

DISCIPLES DID NOT UNDERSTAND

The disciples could not see or appreciate that matter, because the holy spirit was not yet given; the time for understanding it was not yet come. The time for understanding began with Pentecost, and with the enlightenment of the church under the spirit's influence and instruction. We can see how God is taking out of the world a people that shall ultimately be this kingdom class, and that through this kingdom class all the promises of the prophets shall be fulfilled. (Acts 15:14-17; 3:19-21.) All the families of the earth shall be blessed, and this shall be the great kingdom. And yet not many great, not many wise, not many noble shall be in the kingdom, but chiefly the poor of the world, rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him.

In harmony with this is the general statement of our Lord. "It is easier for a camel to go through the needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." The needle's eye, probably all know, was the name of a small gate, or of several gates, in the walls of the city of Jerusalem. The larger gates were opened in the day time, but at sundown they were closed, and these smaller gates, needle's eyes, were opened, through which belated travelers might enter the city; they were large enough for a man to go through without burdens, but not large enough for a multitude; they could be easily guarded by a single watchman, while large ones would more readily admit enemies who could overcome a guard and gain a great deal of power before the citizens were awakened. With the larger gate closed and only the needle's eye open, the city was comparatively safe, at a time when roving bands might be found here and there through the surrounding country and who might make an attack upon unprotected places any time.

Our Lord's illustration is a very forceful one. It would give the thought that the arrangement of these needle's eyes was such that if any traveler with a camel came at night to the city, he would not necessarily be forced to remain outside, but by taking the load from the camel, the camel could go through on his knees, and thus both would find shelter and protection. And I presume the Lord had this in mind in connection with all the affairs of Israel. The matter of building the city and its gates and needle's eyes, I presume, was all a part of the Lord's arrangement, for we find everything connected with natural Israel was typical of things pertaining to spiritual Israel.

So we find it now, that in the present time, the night-time of the Gospel age, there is no entrance into the New Jerusalem for any except those who go by the straight and narrow way. Only those can find access now. Straight is the gate, narrow is the way—the needle's eye way—of coming into the kingdom, the New Jerusalem; no other way is accessible, no other way is open. And so if you and I would find entrance to the New Jerusalem now, the only way is the narrow way—and “How hardly shall they that have riches” enter into the narrow way! They will have to remove all the riches, and as the camel was unloaded of its burden, they must go in in a humble attitude. By and by, when the morning comes, as in the typical Jerusalem, the gates were opened and there was a general passing to and fro, so when the Millennial morning shall fully dawn, and the gates of the New Jerusalem shall be opened, they “shall not be shut at all,—no need of shutting after that!—”and the kings of the earth shall bring their glory and honor into it,” is the record given in Revelation—not through the needle's eyes, but through the broad open gates into the grand highway that leads up to the blessed perfection of humanity promised to those who shall be obedient in that time. Not that God will ever receive sinners into the New Jerusalem; not that he will ever admit the wicked, for that is one of the special statements respecting the New Jerusalem, “Nothing shall enter therein that defileth, nor he that loveth or maketh a lie.” Outside are the abominable, adulterers, etc., and so we are not to think that because the time is coming that the gates of the New Jerusalem shall be opened that any except saints, holy ones, shall ever enter.

But in the present time there is the narrow way, made difficult by the opposition of the world, the flesh and the devil. All these conditions hedge in the way that leads to life eternal and which leads to harmony with the Lord and his arrangements and constitutes a difficult way, as our Lord declared. And so it is now that comparatively few find this way and comparatively few after they do find it delight to walk in it. Only those who when they find it shall follow the instruction here given to the young man, and are willing to give all that they have, whether that be much or little, only those can enter into this narrow way, can become members of that glorious city.

In this connection I was thinking that there may be some who would consider that our Lord's statement was an extreme one. Our Lord said to the young man, "Sell all that thou hast, and distribute to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come, follow Me." Did our Lord mean that the young man must himself become a pauper, sell all he had and give everything away to somebody else? Are those the terms and conditions upon which we can become the Lord's disciples? Are there no other conditions? And if those were the terms and conditions upon which this young man might have a place in the Lord's following, have they changed, or is it still incumbent upon you and me that we shall sell all we have and distribute to the poor, and, follow the Lord, if we would be His disciples? We answer, that viewed from that standpoint it would seem as though the Lord had put a specially heavy test on the young man, or else that you and I have been more or less laboring under some mistaken idea about what are the terms of access to the kingdom.

Now, what did the Lord mean when He said that he must sell all that he had and distribute it to the poor? I presume that the Lord was speaking in general terms to the young man, and if he had said, "Well, good master, I accept your terms; I am yours; all that I have goes. How shall I proceed with the matter?"

THE ANSWER--OF THE LORD

I presume the Lord would have said to him, "That is the point I wished to bring you to, where you would be ready to surrender all. And now, just consider that you have given all to Me; that you have given all to God; that you are a steward now of these things--that they are put back into your hands as a stewardship, and you as a steward shall count everything the Lord's and consider yourself as responsible for the things under your control to Him to whose service you are committed. If you see any necessities for the use of some of these mercies in the Lord's work, use them just as you find opportunity; use them freely, not as though you were giving something--for you have given them already; they are not yours any longer to give; they are the Lord's; merely use them as a steward would use his master's money or property in service he believes his master would have him use it in."

I do not suppose the Lord had any thought that this young man should sell all the property and accumulate the money and then announce through the criers of that time, "All who are poor, come, for I am going to make a scramble, throw the money in every direction!" and the next day say, "I do not know where I will sleep tonight, for I have sold everything and do not own any possessions, and will have to live upon charity, a pensioner upon the bounty of others." I do not have a moment's thought in that direction. I understand, on the contrary, that the Lord meant that the young man should become a steward of his property. If, for instance, he had many herds and flocks, and that some of those were needed, for the literally poor or for the Lord and the disciples, who were amongst the poor, or for the Lord's cause, let some of the flock be sold; let some of the plantations be sold, and not all necessarily at once; but if there is necessity for more in a month or year, sell some more; and if still necessity for more later, then sell some more. And so proceeding, as a wise steward would proceed, to use the money as he might be able to understand would be in harmony with the Divine will. Viewed from this standpoint, the requirement would not be an unreasonable one; but is the same requirement that the Lord makes of you and of me. Whatever property you have belongs to the Lord; whatever property I have belongs to the Lord, if we have made a real consecration of ourselves to him. It is no longer yours or mine. We have given ourselves to the Lord, and when we do that we have given all that we are and all that we have, and if we had the proper view on the subject our sentiment was, "It was an offering far too small," that we were ashamed it was so little, but glad that the Lord would accept our little offering, and realize that it was accepted, not for its own worth, but in the name and merit of Him who loved us and who bought us with His own precious blood.

There is another part to this subject. There are other riches besides money. Some have riches of education, some of influence; others have riches of talent; and all these are so much of wealth, so much that has value to it. So that, whatever you may be or whatever you may have, talents, opportunities, riches, influence, in whatever your wealth may consist, when you came to the Lord you gave all of that to Him. If you did not, then you are not his disciple. Those are the terms of discipleship: "Sell all that thou hast, and take up the cross and follow me." So now I trust that you and I have taken up this matter from the right standpoint; that we have realized that the only way we could be accepted of the Lord at all, under the call of this Gospel age, is to take this step. Mark you, this is the time of the needle's eye entrance to the New Jerusalem; this is the time when there can be no loads or packs taken in; this is the time when the kings are entering in, those who shall be kings and priests unto God, joint heirs with Jesus Christ their Lord; those who shall be heirs of the kingdom, as our Lord said, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." But while He promises the kingdom thus to this special class, He is going to give a great blessing through the Kingdom to all the families, peoples, kindreds and tongues of the whole world.

HEIRS OF THE KINGDOM

But in order to determine who are the little flock, who shall be counted worthy to be joint heirs of the kingdom, our heavenly Father has made this arrangement of the narrow way and this needle's eye entrance to the New Jerusalem, so that all those who will be of that little flock, that kingdom class, who will be of the church, the bride, the Lamb's wife, or under another figure, members in particular of the body of Christ, of which our Lord is the head, all these will have this one characteristic, that they have nothing of their own; they have given everything to the Lord. This is the only condition they have, to take up their cross in this matter and follow Him. In what sense follow Him? Not walking up and down the roads of Palestine and the streets of Jerusalem; but following His example, His precepts, walking in His steps, in this sense, that He took the very same course. What did He give up? The Scriptures are full of testimony on the subject. "Though He was rich, for our sakes He became poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich," and He has "set us an example, that we should walk in His steps." Therefore the apostle, after speaking of this matter, says, "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God," as our Lord humbled himself; and took upon Him our nature, and suffered for us and gave His life as well as all His glory. So arm yourselves with the same mind, after this same principle. He who has called you to glory, honor and immortality has called you to walk in these same steps, to take up your cross and follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth.

Some might be inclined to say that this is a very irksome journey, and that this is a very severe condition that the heavenly Father has laid upon His Son and upon all who will be acceptable as members in the house of sons. As the Apostle puts it, "Christ as a son was the head over His own house (a house of sons), whose house are we, if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end."

Says some one, these are hard conditions which God has placed upon the house of sons. I answer, no! Those who consider these hard conditions are not of the house of sons. The house of sons have the other spirit. They say, "I delight to do Thy will, O my God." That was the spirit of the Son himself and that must be the spirit, the disposition, of those who would walk in His steps. If they are always feeling that it is a great mountain, a terrible thing God has put upon them, then they have not the spirit of Christ.

I do not mean to say that there are not times when all of the Lord's people feel that the narrow way is very rugged to their feet. The Lord himself had such experiences. We remember that the Lord in Gethsemane garden said, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me. Yet not my will, but Thine, be done." So it need not surprise us if, following in the footsteps of Christ, we should sometimes come to the place where the way is very narrow and very rugged, and that we in turn might with our dear Redeemer, cry out, "If it be possible, let this pass from me." And yet those who have the Lord's spirit, who are begotten of the spirit, and have a true appreciation of the glorious things which God hath in reservation for them that love Him, that they would not think of exchanging these prospects and glorious promises by which they have been begotten, and be without them at any price or cost. I trust everyone of us witnesses to the fact that not only these views and prospects of coming glory, honor and immortality and joint heirship with the Lord in the Kingdom have a weight and influence in our hearts that counteracts and overbalances these trials and difficulties of the present narrow way, but we find that we have in the way so much of the joys of the Lord and the peace of the Lord as more than overbalances, so that with the apostle we are able to say, "I do count that these things which are behind, and which I have forsaken and sacrificed for Christ's sake are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

ATTAINING THE STANDARD

That is the sentiment of all who are the Lord's—not all alike; there are babes, youths, young men, in Christ, and those who are of full stature, according to the Scriptural picture of this matter; but they all have more or less of this same spirit, and in proportion as we feed upon the promises and grow strong in the Lord and the power of His might, in that same proportion we attain more and more to this standard which is represented in the words of the apostle and represented in the words and conduct of our dear Redeemer himself. So that we are able, with the apostle to say we count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations, trials, difficulties.

But why call it joyous to fall into difficulties? Because, says the apostle, these trials and difficulties are working out for us, something. We realize that God has called us to a wonderful position of joint heirship with His Son in the kingdom, and we realize that the terms of joint heirship are proper and necessary; it is not to be expected that God would want anyone in the kingdom that was not considerably developed in character of heart, intention, in will, that those who loved unrighteousness in their hearts would not be chosen of God to be representatives of the kingdom for the blessing, instructing and assisting of the world in the future. So when we look into God's plan, and see the wonderful preparation, He is making for blessing the world, and is calling out His church to be His representatives in conferring that instruction and uplift to the world in general, we see good reason why we should have trials and disciplines and various experiences in life which would test, fit and prepare us to make us “meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.” Consequently, when we find ourselves in these very conditions, and experiencing trials and difficulties, we recognize that this is another witness of the spirit that we have the Lord’s favor. “Through much tribulation we shall enter the kingdom,” so when we find ourselves in such experiences it is proper to say to ourselves, these are precious experiences. They testify to us that we are in the narrow way. If we were without these, “if we be without chastisement, then are we spurious, and not sons.”

So we “glory in tribulation,” because it is an evidence that we are sons, and that God is dealing with us, educating us, making us ready to be glorified in due time with His great Son, our Lord, and after the education—what? Then, says the apostle, comes the great time when the sons shall be manifested (Rom. 8:18,19). They are not manifested now. The apostle says, “The world knoweth us not, even as it knew Him not.” But we are not relying upon the world. The world is not going to exalt us to the kingdom; they are not going to say to us, “We will vote for you.” We are not anticipating any such matter as this. What are we looking for? For the Lord’s approval, and for the time when He shall say to His people who are faithful, “Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,”—the kingdom of God, the promised blessing.

So, in one of our Lord’s parables, He represents that at His second coming He will reckon with His servants, as to the use they have made of their talents. To the one who had been given one talent, He will ask for an accounting; he may have had a talent of influence, to talk with others, to sway their minds; or, he may have had the talent of money, and no other. And so with those who have two talents, or three, or five. They are responsible for what they had and how they used that. When the Lord came to reward them the record is that to the one with five talents it was said, “Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over five cities.” To the one with 10 talents, “Have dominion over 10 cities.”

Where are these cities? Some people say that at that time the whole world is going to be burned up. Where will the cities be? If there is going to be nobody but the saints then, what will they rule over? If everybody gets destroyed or sent to hell, how will these overcomers rule over anybody? If there will be a kingdom there must be some logical object in its establishment, or else what is the use of talking about a kingdom? If we do not give words any meaning we will be all confused. If we do give them the real meaning that the Scriptures give them, we find in God's word the most wonderful plan, with the most wonderful outlines that could possibly be conceived of.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KINGDOM

The selection of a little flock, to be heirs of the kingdom with Christ; then the establishment of the kingdom after the glorification of these heirs, in their hands, and for the administration in a wise and perfect way of all the laws of God, for the benefit of the whole race, as it is written: "The kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." Dan. 7:27

What will they do in the kingdom? Will they have rotten politics? No! Because there won't be admitted into that kingdom any political tricksters. The Lord is picking out His own administrators, the Lord is picking out His saints, those whom He can rely on, those who have been faithful in a few things, and who He knows will therefore be faithful over larger responsibilities. But he is looking for those who will be faithful in the few things, whether it be, as in the case of this young man of our text, that he has the one talent of riches, or whether it be with regard to more talents and privileges.

This young man was unfaithful in the use of that talent. He would not consecrate it to the Lord; and he cannot have a part in the kingdom. All of the kingdom class must be willing, not only willing, but glad to sacrifice all other interests for the Lord, whatever their talents may be. This does not mean that the young man who went away sorrowful, and whom the Lord said could not get into the kingdom because he did not sacrifice what he had, went into eternal torment. He was a good young man. The record is that when Jesus looked upon him, "He loved him." The Lord did not mean that because he did not make a sacrifice He would condemn him, and say, "Here, devils, take him! Roast him!" Such a course would be unjust and inequitable. The words merely mean that he was not fit for a place in the kingdom—the ruling class. If, afterward, he repented and went to the Lord, saying, "I appreciate the matter better now; I am ready to give up all, and to walk in the narrow way," I am sure Jesus would have been glad to receive him any time under those terms. But he would never be in the kingdom class until he did that. And so you and I must be ready to do that, or we can never be in the kingdom. There is only one law and only one way to attain so great a favor.

Whatever you hold most precious is your riches. Some say I have no particular care for money; I would just as soon be poor. I heard of a man who was thought so much of, as a fine character, by a friend, that the latter gave him a deed to a cottage; and after the poor man had it for a while, he brought the deed back, saying: "I wasn't contented while I had it. I couldn't any longer sing, 'No cottage do I here possess, while traveling in this wilderness. '"

The brother had a mistaken idea, but the thought is in some respects right. If he was going to make a treasure of that cottage then it would come between him and the Lord. If you are going to make a treasure of something else, whether a million or a dollar, the effect is the same. I have found people just as much money-lovers with a few dollars as some who had many dollars, and just as unfit for the kingdom as if they had a million. It is the love of money, and not the possession of it, which is the root of all evil. He who loves money will hold on to it, though it hinder every spiritual interest, and the Lord thus tests all of us, not only in respect to money but every other talent.

If one says, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," and "I would do anything to preserve that good name; I would not sacrifice it for anything," he cannot be the Lord's disciple. Whatever you have, that is the Lord's treasure, to be laid at His feet. Unless we love Him more than houses, or lands, or parents, or children, or brothers or sisters, we cannot be His disciples. Love of self, love of popularity, love of admiration of others, must give place to the Lord, or we are not fit for the kingdom!

Put the emphasis where it belongs on the word kingdom—"Not fit for the kingdom!" After the kingdom class, the saints, holy ones, shall be selected, the Lord will have a plan in respect to the world, and there will be some not fit for the kingdom that will be fit for some other place, that under other circumstances than those of the present time would be of good, noble character, but from what they have now to contend with, the world on one side, the devil on the other, and the flesh always near, they find that the way is so narrow that they have not enough love for God to make them willing to count all other things as loss and dross, that they might win Christ and be found in Him.

CALL OF THE LORD

Our Lord has given to us a wonderful call, and has attached to that call certain tests which will prove everyone who would be His disciple. The tests are extreme, because the glory, honor and immortality attached to the call is an extremely high honor. If we would be acceptable with the Lord we must be glad to sacrifice the little trifling things of this present time.

I fancy that when we shall get beyond and look back, our view of these things will be so different from what it has been while here and in contact with the things that are seen, that we will see matters very much as John Bunyan saw them. You remember he pictured the man at the seashore with his muck rake gathering seaweed, straw and sticks, and various other things, attaching great value to them; but Pilgrim, as he viewed them, thought the man very foolish, for he had a scroll and a call, and he was going to the heavenly city, and was not wasting his time with the muck-rake and the things of the present time, of little value, compared with the eternal things beyond. When we view matters from the true standpoint, and contrast the riches of God's grace and favor with Him, with all the things of this world, we shall take the broader, higher, deeper view, and rightly appreciate these temporal things, giving them their true place, and that would be a low place indeed.

Not that we are despising money; not that we are despising influence, or good name, or any of these privileges and talents. On the contrary, we appreciate them all the more because we see that it is our privilege to present them to the Lord, and because we see that while they are not worthy in themselves to be presented to the Lord, yet He accepted them through our Lord Jesus, and counts them as worthy, trifling though they otherwise would be.

And our Lord Jesus—how does He regard them? He is not ashamed to call them “brethren.” But He says of those who would be ashamed of Him, and who are ashamed of His truth, and who are selfish money-lovers, He says of all them, “Of such will I be ashamed before my Father and before the holy angels.” Of those who confess and rejoice to follow in His footsteps, He says He will take pleasure in declaring their names before the Father and the holy angels.

Let that be our position, dear friends, and let that be, by the Lord's grace, the great reward which we shall not only strive for now, but, by the Lord's grace, shall surely attain. We are not exaggerating the requirements of the Lord's word in connection with discipleship, but we well know those precious promises that His grace is sufficient; that He will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, and will, with every trial, provide a way of escape; that He will cause all things to work together for good to them that love Him, for their best interests as new creatures, as the heirs of the kingdom. How gracious are those promises! What, then, is there for us to do, if the Lord is going to will and to work in this way? For us, is the full surrender of the will.

*Here I give myself away;
“Tis all that I can do.”*

I can will to do it all. If the Lord sees the will in each heart, He is pleased with that condition. That is the pure condition of heart which He commends. There may be imperfections and mistakes and coming short of the perfect standard of God—because that standard is God's own perfection, and we are all short, as measured by that—but the Lord's grace is sufficient for us in that it makes up whatever we are short. On what terms? On the condition that your heart is right; that your will is right; that you have made a full consecration of all you have and hold precious, and to the extent of your ability you are carrying this out in your daily life.

A TEXT FOR THE NEW YEAR

Phil. 4:8

Pastor C. T. Russell of the Bible House chapel, Allegheny, yesterday afternoon spoke on "A Text for the New Year." The series of discourses at Carnegie music hall, Allegheny, on "Prophetic Time-Proofs that the Dawn of the Millennium Is Nigh" will begin next Sunday, so it was decided to have the New Year's text yesterday. Mr. Russell said in part:

I choose for my text the exhortation of the Apostle Paul to the church at Philippi—appropriate to us also: I suggest that we each make it our year-text, and trust that our minds continually recurring to it may be profited, strengthened and assisted in the right ways of the Lord. The words are:

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are reputable, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:8

Few seem to realize the power of the mind—the power of thought as an element in the formation of character. "As a man thinketh so is he." How important, then, it is that we should think properly—that our minds should be rightly directed. The Scriptures assure us, and the experience of the noblest people of the world convince us, that we have all so inherited degeneracy, from our father Adam, that "there is none righteous, no not one, all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." This degeneracy affects us physically—we are a dying race under our Father's sentence, "Dying thou shalt die." And this dying affects us not only physically but mentally and morally, "We are prone to sin as the sparks to fly upward;" The taint is in us from our birth, for were we not "born in sin and shapen in iniquity?"

NO GENERAL RULE APPLIES

There are various methods of appealing to humanity, the success of each varying with the individual. Some need imprisonment and "stripes," others can be profited by moral suasion; by appeal to their reason, by appeal to the better elements of their natures, even though tainted or tarnished through original sin. Both of these methods of appeal are recognized in the world today.

Pulpits and newspapers are appealing to the minds of men with more or less propriety and with more or less success; but nevertheless society protects itself by penal institutions—reformatories, jails, penitentiaries, etc. So it is with the divine government. Nature has some general laws by which the whole world of mankind is dominated—laws of retribution, by which every virtue brings a certain degree of reward, satisfaction and peace, and every crime brings a certain measure of chastisement, pain, trouble and unrest.

Nevertheless, the course of nature is so disordered in the present time by the prevalence of sin and its penalty and the operation of the laws of heredity that we cannot say that the laws of nature are at the present time absolutely just as respects each individual, whatever we may say of their general justice in respect to the race as a whole. Hence, as the Scriptures declare, “some men’s sins go before to judgment and some they follow after.”

In the coming Millennial age, when Christ’s kingdom shall administer justice amongst men, the rewards and punishments will be equitable. No longer will the child suffer for the sins of the parents. No longer will the righteous suffer; but only the evil-doers, for thus it is written, (Jer. 31:29; Psa. 122:7.) In that blessed time, the Lord will use both methods of appealing to the world. (1) An appeal will be made to their hearts and consciences, with inducements and rewards for obedience to the principles of righteousness—the reward of physical, mental and moral restitution or uplift, which will bring the obedient gradually back to the full image and likeness of God enjoyed by father Adam before his fall. (2) This appeal to the hearts and consciences of mankind will be supplemented by stripes, judgments, chastisements “upon every soul of man that doeth evil.” We can to some degree realize the great advantage that will accrue to mankind under such dealings—how great will be the assistance.

CHANGES AT THE PRESENT TIME

In the present age the Lord does not use this double method of appeal, but merely the first. He appeals to our hearts, our reasons, saying, “Come, let us reason together.” But those who will not reason with the Lord now are not chastised, even if they go into grievous sins, the worldly are permitted to take their course; they receive no particular stripes or corrections from the Lord, because the day of the world’s trial or judgment has not yet come. As the apostle says: “The wicked shall do wickedly and none of the wicked shall understand,” and so we have on every hand sin, wickedness abounding, and that without interference from the Lord. Only with one class is the Lord now dealing, namely, the church.

We recognize, of course, that there is a divine supervision over the nations; that the Lord has kept in his own power more or less of the times and bounds of the nations, as the apostle expresses the matter. Acts 17:26

However, these dealings with the nations have little to do with the world as individuals, and nothing to do with the world's trial, which belongs to the next age. "God hath appointed a day (the millennial day—a day with the Lord is as a thousand years) in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath afore ordained"—the Christ, head and body. Acts 17:31; 1 Cor. 6:2

We repeat, then, that the Lord's special dealings at the present time are with those who believe and not with unbelievers. He sends his message "speaking peace through Jesus Christ" to him that hath an ear to hear and a heart to receive the message—and these are very few, comparatively. The appeal of the evangelist who follows the scriptural pattern is an appeal to the heads and the hearts of the people who have the ears to hear. He is not privileged to meet out stripes or other judgments or corrections to those who disregard his message. Those who have the ears, and who receive the word with gladness, get a great blessing—and that in proportion as they receive it into good and honest and obedient hearts. Those who do not hear at all, whose hearts are not in the condition to respond to the gospel message, suffer a loss—a loss of the joy and peace and blessing and "comfort of the Scriptures" which the believers enjoy.

BY THE FOOLISHNESS OF PREACHING

Not only does the Lord begin the work of grace among his people with the above described message speaking forgiveness and peace through Jesus, but, to those who do receive the message and who are exercised by it he continues the same process of dealing—still appealing to their hearts, heads and consciences. This is what the apostle means when he says, "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." 1 Cor. 1:21

To the world this method of appealing merely to the heads and hearts seems like a weak and unsatisfactory method of dealing. The world finds it necessary to resort to force, and wonders that the Almighty does not resort to force to compel obedience to his laws rather than merely to exhort obedience to them. We have just seen that in the Millennial Age the Lord will use both methods, and the question properly arises, why does he not use both methods of appealing to mankind in the present time—first appeal through the intellect and heart, and second appeal through force?

We answer, that the reason lies in the fact that God is now selecting a peculiar class—to use scriptural terms, he is now electing "a peculiar people." The class he is now seeking needs no stripes or punishments to constrain their obedience. They are constrained by love—love for God, love for the Redeemer, love for the principles of righteousness and a sympathetic love for the whole world of mankind, even their enemies.

If force were introduced in the present time it would be a hindrance to the development of this particular class which the Lord is now seeking, each of whom must be in heart, in intention (not in flesh) a copy of God's dear Son. Those who require stripes, punishments, etc., to enforce obedience to the divine requirements cannot be of the "very elect" whose disposition of heart is represented by the words of our Lord expressed through the prophet: "I delight to do thy will, O my God; thy law is written in my heart."—Psa. 40:8

HOW GOD WORKS IN US TO DO HIS WILL

It is in harmony with this thought, that God is now operating in the church along the lines of appeal to our sentiments and not along the lines of force. As the apostle says: "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." God works in this class through the intellect and heart. He makes known to them "the riches of his grace"—little by little as they are able to appreciate and willing to respond.

The first effect of this upon the proper heart is to induce a responsive sentiment expressed by the apostle thus, "The love of Christ constraineth us; for we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that we who live should henceforth live not to ourselves, but to Him who died for us." (2 Cor. 5:14.) The class represented in this text have experienced the truth working in them as the power of God up to the point of willing—willing to do the Lord's will; willing to renounce self; willing to follow in the footsteps of our Lord Jesus; willing to be copies of God's dear Son. The power of God continues to operate in such and unfolds to them more and more of the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the love of God which passeth all understanding, and which is expressed to these in the "exceeding great and precious promises" of the divine word.

These promises operate upon the heart and mind and lead to works—obedience, self-denial, self-sacrifice—even unto death. It is such as are thus rightly exercised by divine grace and truth who may now hope to attain to all the great and wonderful things which God hath in reservation for them that love him.

Not only does God thus appeal to our minds, our thoughts, our reasoning faculties, with His explanation of right and wrong, truth and untruth, righteousness and sin, and promises of His continued favor unto life eternal or for the disobedient His disfavor unto cutting off from life in the second death; but He urges upon us co-operation with Him along the same lines—that we take hold of our minds, of our thoughts and shape them into conformity with the divine mind, with the divine will.

This is the signification of our text: On the principle that every thought has its influence upon our words and conduct, the apostle urges that our thoughts be the special objects of our solicitude, care, watchfulness. Another apostle expresses the same sentiment in different language saying, "Out of the abundance of the heart (mind) the mouth speaketh." And out of the heart (mind) proceedeth envies, malice, strife, etc.—or contrarywise kindness, gentleness, goodness, love.

IMPORTANCE OF A RIGHT HEART

It is all important, then, that we have right hearts; for as a bitter fountain cannot send forth sweet waters, neither can a heart that is in the bitterness of sin send forth blessing to those in contact with it. We admit that a certain amount of refinement and grace belonging to the children of God may be copied by the unregenerate; but it has no depth, it fails easily, it quickly discloses the real bitterness, selfishness and acrimony of the natural heart which underlies.

In the present time, therefore, the Lord does not appeal to these bitter hearts to send forth sweet waters. The appeals of the scriptures are to the regenerated hearts of consecrated believers, addressed in all the epistles as "saints," "children of God," "the sanctified in Christ Jesus," "the Lord's brethren," etc. These having new hearts, new wills, sanctified or set apart to the Lord, to righteousness, to truth, to goodness, need nevertheless to keep watch over their every deed, word and thought.

Our text is the apostle's appeal to this class along this line. It is well that we should scan our outward conduct, to take note that our good intentions may not be so exhibited to others that they will misapprehend our real sentiments—"Let not your good be evil spoken of." It is right, too, that we should "set a guard upon our mouth lest we should sin with our lips," lest our words be such as would not be honoring to the Lord or edifying to the brethren or to the world. But the number of watchmen or pickets doing duty and standing guard over our actions and words will be fewer in proportion as the picket line guarding our minds, our thoughts is a strong one. It is here that we need to be specially on the alert.

"Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." This general truth is particularly exemplified in the regenerate, who are more open in their conduct and language, proportionately, than others. Having the right sentiments at heart they are less on their guard in respect to their manner of expression perhaps than previously; but all the more, they need to remember the words of the apostle "if any man sin not with his lips, the same is a perfect man." James 3:2

LIKELIHOOD OF ERROR

The inference is that even the most advanced of the Lord's people are liable at times to err with their lips. Hence the appropriateness to all of the Lord's people, of the prayer, "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."—Psa. 19:14.

Before coming more particularly to the items of our text let us briefly glance at the preceding context: for we notice that the apostle introduces the text with the word "finally." What comes before finally? Let us see, his words are, "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, Rejoice! Let your gentleness be known to all men. The Lord is at hand; be not worried about anything; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and minds (thoughts) in Christ Jesus."

What a wonderful exhortation this is! Those of us who are able to do so will do well to take the entire four verses from our scripture-text for the new year. The Christian is not to be sorrowful and moping. If he is a true Christian and understands the Father's message he must rejoice. True, as the apostle elsewhere remarks, through manifold trials, discouragements, weaknesses, etc., there may be moments of dejection and sorrow; but these are only like the sun-showers of the summer time; to the true followers of the Lord, instructed through His word, the light of the Lord's kindness shines through all earth-born clouds and troubles, to bring him joy and peace and rejoicing.

FORGETTING THE THINGS BEHIND

At the present time, at the close of the old year and the dawning of a new one, it is especially appropriate that the Lord's people should clearly apprehend the great lesson which the apostle is here inculcating and which he also taught in another place saying, "Forget the things which are behind, and press forward to things which are before." In the year that is past every enlightened and proper-minded child of God will be able to discern both weakness and success, defeats and victories. We know this because "there is none righteous, no not one"—none that come fully up to the mark of perfection.

Hence all may look back and find in the year that is closing sources of regret as well as sources of joy and rejoicing. Are we to mourn over the failures of the past? Is this the will of the Lord concerning us—that we should stop, because we find that we have not been able to walk perfectly in every particular—not even up to our own imperfect standards? Nay, verily! With the apostle we exclaim, "Let us go on to perfection."

Perfection is not a thing of the past, but of the future. We cannot be satisfied with the past but we "shall be satisfied when we awake in His likeness” sharers in the glorious first resurrection. For this we are pressing along, forgetting the things that are behind.

We forget the things that are behind, because it is right that we should do so. Because God forgets them, and declares that He has cast all of our imperfections behind His back; that our imperfections are all covered from His sight by the merit of Him who loved us and who died for us, and whom we love, and in whom we are trusting, and in whose steps we are seeking to walk with more or less of imperfection according to the defects we have inherited in the flesh. We are not meaning to suggest that slips or failures should be lightly esteemed or quickly forgotten; they should be rectified to the extent of our ability and Divine forgiveness should be sought for these defects daily.

It is for this very purpose that the Lord has provided access to the “throne of heavenly grace, where we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in every time of need.” We merely mean that it is not the Lord’s will respecting us that, having corrected errors to the best of our ability, and having appealed for Divine forgiveness, we should believe the Word of the Lord and accept His forgiveness and start afresh with rejoicing with each new day—and now, as we near it, start afresh for the new year, 1904.

CULTIVATION OF GENTLENESS

“Gentleness,” the forbearance or moderation, mentioned in the context is to be cultivated by each of us, to such an extent that it will only not be manifested to ourselves and to the brethren, but to others. This may not mean the same amount of gentleness in each of the Lord’s people, because the treasure of the new mind is in earthen vessels, in every instance; and the possibilities for one may exceed the abilities of another. But, in any event, this quality of gentleness (moderation or forbearance) should be increasingly an outward manifestation of the grace of the Lord, dwelling in us richly and abounding, so that those who have known us in the past will at least be able year by year to see in us progress, development along this line.

We have already referred to the necessity for prayer, supplication, mentioned by the apostle. We now observe that those who are dwelling in close fellowship with the Lord will be so appreciative of the favors and blessings already enjoyed that they will not feel like asking for greater blessings, but rather like giving thanks with a realization that they have already received not only more than they deserved at the Lord’s hands, but more than they could have asked or thought. And what has already been received is only a foretaste of the promised coming blessings.

Our requests should be, increasingly, for grace and wisdom and the fruits of the spirit and opportunities for serving the Lord and the brethren, and for growing more and more into the likeness of God's dear Son. Under these conditions who can doubt that the promised "peace of God beyond all understanding" would "guard" such "hearts" and their "thoughts." This peace would of itself dispel one of the great evils that afflict the hearts of many. Selfishness and ambition would find little room in a heart so filled with gratitude. God's peace, and not merely the peace of the world, would reign in such a heart, controlling ambitions and energies. Divine peace can dwell in our hearts and rule in them, so as to keep out the worry and turmoil of the world, even when we are surrounded by these disadvantageous conditions—even when the adversary himself is besetting us through deceived agents.

EMPTIED OF OLD; FILLED WITH NEW

Then comes our text, suggesting that, with this peace ruling in our hearts and keeping guard over our thoughts, so that they are spared from many of the intrusions of the world, the flesh and the devil, we should see to it that our hearts are not merely barren and empty of evil, but should give our thoughts food even as we provide sustenance for our bodies. We should see that their exercise is in a proper direction to produce proper and helpful conditions.

We all know how easy it is to allow the old natural mind to assert itself, to allow envy, gossip, backbiting, malice, strife, pride, vainglory, to enter our minds and to absorb time and attention. We all know that these need to be continually repelled; but all do not know how necessary it is that, while repelling these, we invite into our minds proper thoughts that will fill them and thus effectually bar the way and hinder the coming again of evil thoughts.

It is along this line that the apostle exhorts, and that we believe it will be profitable for us all to specially exercise our attention during the year just at hand. While thanking god for the forgiveness of sins and for the new hearts, new wills, which we have attained by His grace, let us keep guard over our thoughts—let us exercise them upon the lines the apostle lays down in this text.

"Whatsoever things are true." The Lord's people are to be so in accord with righteousness that everything that is false or unjust or untrue in word, thought or act will be offensive to them—cause them pain. Truthfulness, then, must be the first test to apply to any matter that will be accepted by our minds. It is not for us to waste our time and attention chasing imaginary matters, errors, fictions, etc. First of all, we want to know, is it true? While this truth will apply in a general way to everything in life, and to everybody, and promote a love for the right and the true, and a heart-opposition to all that is adulterated, yet the principle is specially applicable to the affairs of the new creation and to their spiritual food.

In respect to the latter, our first inquiry should be, is this the truth or is it to any extent contaminated with traditions of men, calculated to “make void the Word of God?” as our dear Redeemer expressed it. The prophet declares, speaking of God, “Thou desirest truth in the inward parts”—sincerity of heart. It is remarkable how many people would shun to tell an open falsehood, who nevertheless appear not to have a heart-love for the truth. Let us, during the year beginning, cultivate a love for the truth wherever we may find it, and at any cost. Let us take time to “prove” everything we receive as truth.

WHAT WE SHOULD TRY TO AVOID

“Whatsoever things are honorable.” This is a second test of what our thoughts should be permitted to rest upon. We cannot avoid the intrusion of thoughts which our judgments would disapprove, but we must scrutinize and test our thoughts, as they present themselves, and must refuse to entertain or harbor those which are ignoble, dishonorable, unworthy of us as human beings, and especially as members of the new creation, “the body of Christ.” Many things may be true which are not honorable, and their truthfulness must not give them a resting place in our minds if they will not stand this second test.

“Whatsoever things are just,” or equitable. This is the third test which the apostle would have us apply as we scrutinize suggestions made to our minds from any quarter. Things might be true and might be honorable so far as the principles were concerned, and yet not be just or equitable to others. A story might reach us of an honorable exploit of some friend; we might know it to be true, and yet it might reflect against some one else unfavorably, unjustly, inequitably. If so, the thought must not be entertained, but must be repelled.

“Whatsoever things are pure.” This is the fourth test which the apostle urges us to apply to our thoughts as they present themselves from any quarter. Many things are true, just and perhaps not dishonorable that are not pure—calculated to awaken impure desires. Such things are strictly barred according to this inspired rule.

“Whatsoever things are lovely.” This is the fifth test. Amongst true, honorable, just, pure things which we may properly consider there is a variety, some more and some less lovely, some more and some less admirable; and our thoughts, the apostle suggests, should give preference to the lovely and loveable as being more ennobling, more calculated to lift us up and profit us, and hence more inclined to help others through us; because our influence with others is on a parity with our mental status.

“Out of the abundance of the heart (the mind) the mouth speaketh;” and hence those who follow this counsel of the apostle will be found more and more speaking nothing but the truth, and avoiding truths that are not honorable, or not just and equitable, or not pure; and preferring especially those topics for meditation that are lovely. What a lovely character would be assured in one who could strictly and completely follow the apostle’s advice herein given. He would be a copy of Jesus—just what we all wish to be. None of us can attain this.

“Whatsoever things are reputable, possessing any virtue or any praise.” By this expression the apostle seems to throw out general lines of test and examination. His words imply that we should have a scrutiny of our thoughts to the intent that only things that could be profitable to us and to others should be entertained, considered, discussed. Frivolous things would be excluded also by this test. Who will not admit that a mind thus freed from rubbish and evil and allowed only to entertain true, good, clean, profitable thoughts would be a mind which the Lord would be pleased with and which would conduce to the development of the character likeness of our Lord Jesus, which is demanded of us, if we would be his joint-heirs in the kingdom.

“PERFECT AS YOUR FATHER IN HEAVEN”

The standard which the apostle has here raised resembles the standard which our Lord raised before us, when he said, “Be ye perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.” We cannot be perfect as the Father is perfect, but we can and do aim at that perfection; and wherever we come short while thus endeavoring is made up to us of the Lord’s grace through the merit of the precious blood. Likewise we cannot hope to attain so complete a control of our thoughts as the apostle’s words in this beautiful text suggest; but we can make that our standard; and in proportion as we view this standard and daily strive to measure up to it, in that sense and proportion no doubt we will have a blessing every day throughout the year, and at its close find ourselves considerably strengthened in mind, and advanced along these lines, which the apostle elsewhere speaks of as “bringing every thought into captivity to the will of God in Christ.” 2 Cor. 10:5

The Scriptural proposition is that even the most saintly of the Lord’s people, the most developed in character, will need the merit of Christ’s righteousness imputed to them until they are made perfect in the first resurrection. Only in our minds, in our wills, have the old things passed away and all things become new. Actually, this great change will be accomplished when this mortal shall have put on immortality, when this corruptible shall be raised in incorruption—raised in glory, in power, spirit beings. But, meantime, in order to be counted worthy of a share in the first resurrection it is required of us that we shall demonstrate our willingness of mind, our earnest desire to be all that the Lord would have us be; and in no way can this be better demonstrated to the Lord and to ourselves, or prove more helpful, than by keeping a strict surveillance of our hearts and of our thoughts. The Lord's blessing will surely be upon all who shall seek to follow this word of His grace during the new year.

EARTH'S GREAT JUBILEE

The first of a series of discourses on Prophetic Times and Seasons was delivered by Pastor C. T. Russell yesterday afternoon in Carnegie hall, Allegheny. The special topic for the occasion was "Earth's Great Jubilee." These meetings are in response to requests made at the close of the "Eaton-Russell Debates" in November. The requests, accompanied by unsolicited checks, more than meeting the expenses of the hall were interpreted as a providential guidance. Addressing a comfortably filled house the speaker said:

To those who have followed our presentations in the recent debates on millennial subjects, it is scarcely necessary to say that our expectation of a speedy introduction of the millennium is not based upon the usual theory—that it will come about through the conversion of the world of mankind to a voluntary service of the Lord and of righteousness. On the contrary, we see that even in the so-called converted countries—the countries in which Christianity has produced the highest forms of civilization—the masses are far from being saints. So that if the whole world were converted, after the ordinary application of that term, it would still be far from the glorious condition intimated by our Lord's prayer, which instructs us to pray for and to expect that God's kingdom will be established and his will be done in the earth as it is done in heaven.

As for the conversion of heathendom, statistics contradict the thought. No sane, reasonable mind can look the facts squarely in the face and any longer delude himself with the supposition that the millennium can ever be introduced by the conversion of heathendom under present human limitations and without divine interference. Let me give you a few of the facts, briefly stated:

SOME STARTLING FIGURES

The world's population is officially rated at 1,600,000,000. Of these count the entire populations of America and Europe as Christians—reckon a total of 400,000,000 Christians of every shade, "white, black, ring-streaked and speckled" as Bishop Foster describes them. This leaves at least 1,200,000,000 heathens living today. The United States census reports show that the present rate of population increase is eight-tenths of one per cent per year. This means that there were 9,600,000 heathens born last year! Far, far more than the converts of today, representing the laborers of the entire preceding century. What sane man will dispute these figures? And, with these facts before him, what sane man can hope that with missionary efforts multiplied ten fold we could ever bring about the millennium by such processes! And if the wildest hopes along this line were realized, would the results be those we long have prayed for—"Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth even as it is done in heaven?" Far from it! Even in quiet, religious Allegheny true Christians are a small minority. We are not deprecating good endeavors to assist the heathen, but merely showing that millennial hopes do not lie in that direction.

Our millennial hopes are based upon the grace of God, manifested in the great redemptive work accomplished by our Lord Jesus at Calvary, and resting upon the firm foundation of the divine promises, given originally with the divine oath to Father Abraham, and reiterated, amplified and explained through the prophets of old and through the apostles of our Lord Jesus. To our understanding this foundation is much more reliable than any that could be produced from any other quarter.

God not only promised Abraham that his "seed," the Christ, should "bless all the families of the earth," but in order that we might have strong consolation the apostle says he made oath to this declaration; that by two immutable things—the divine word and the divine oath—the faith of God's people might be fixed as an "anchor to our souls, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the veil, whither the forerunner is for us entered."—Heb. 6:19

NOT A FLESHLY KING AND KINGDOM

A great mistake has been made by many of our dear friends who see with us to some extent on this subject. They have followed the thought of the Jews, that the kingdom of God when established will be a fleshly, earthly kingdom. This mistaken view has not only done injury to their own conceptions of the kingdom, and thwarted their desire for a clearer understanding respecting it, but additionally this earthly, fleshly view of the matter has driven away from the kingdom hopes many of the brightest minds amongst the Lord's people.

The consistent objection of the latter class is that the Lord's dealings with the church have been on a spiritual plane, and her begetting has been to a spirit nature and heavenly hopes under earthly conditions is an absurdity and a retrograde movement. To this we largely agree. Our understanding of the teachings of God's word is that the kingdom class—the elect of this gospel age—will be “changed” from human nature to spiritual conditions in the first resurrection, which the apostle explains in 1 Cor. 15:42-44. His words are, “So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power; it is sown a natural (animal) body; it is raised a spiritual (spirit) body. There is an animal body and there is a spirit body.”

It is not supposable that our Lord, who left the spirit condition and became a man, simply and solely for the suffering of death and not with any intention of remaining a man, should be still considered as a man in heaven. On the contrary, the scriptures everywhere assure us, that he is now a quickening, life-giving spirit, and that “though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him so no more.” (2 Cor. 5:16) They assure us that he has not suffered by his obedience to the Father by becoming our redemption price. That on the contrary, “Him hath God highly exalted, and given him a name above every name.” It is because our Lord Jesus is thus so highly exalted and changed back again from human to spirit nature, that we have confidence and rejoicing in the apostle’s words when he assures us that we shall be “changed”—be made like our Lord and see Him as He is (not as he was) and share His glory.—1 Cor. 15:51; 1 John 3:2

SPIRITUAL KINGDOM—EARTHLY SUBJECTS

There is nothing mysterious or inconsistent in the thought of this spiritual kingdom ruling over and blessing earthly subjects. Such was the character of God’s original dominion instituted in Eden—man, an earthly being, subject to and under the laws and direction of the heavenly empire. Such also is the character of the kingdom in the present time as respects the church. Our Lord is now the king of those who yield their hearts to Him and seek to render obedience to His will. He is invisible to the eyes of the flesh, but nevertheless our minds are conscious of Him, and we can apprehend our Lord and king with the eyes of our understanding, and in our hearts render as good or better obedience and homage than if He were in the flesh, an earthly king. Why shall we not conclude that the world during the coming millennial age will be more greatly blessed by realizing their obligation to a spiritual king and kingdom than merely to an earthly one.

True, the Scriptures do speak of earthly representatives of the heavenly kingdom—“Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom.” When the spiritual kingdom is set up amongst them it will have for its earthly representatives these ancient worthies, perfected as men. Although the kingdom class, the Lord and his elect church in glory, will be invisible to men, they will be fully represented through these faithful and competent representatives.

The whole world will then realize what it is to have every word and thought and act of life discerned by their spirit rulers. Thank God, they can rest assured that the judgment of their words and thoughts will be with reasonable, proper leniency—with sympathy—since all of those who will be their judges in the kingdom will have themselves passed through experiences in many respects similar, and will be able to sympathize with those over whom they will be judges, as it is written, “Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?”

EARTH’S GREAT JUBILEE

Our topic for today relates to the great blessings of the world’s Judgement Day. Instead of calling it “doomsday,” the Scriptures represent it as the great “Jubilee” period. For long centuries, in every land in every part of the earth, Satan has been seeking to misrepresent the divine character and plan, in order to drive men further and further away from their great Creator—in order to hinder them from hearing and appreciating his “wonderful words of life” “speaking peace through Jesus Christ our Lord.” The great adversary has totally misrepresented the coming day of judgment. It is to be a day of judgment in the sense of rewards and punishments to the church for the deeds of the present life; but not to the world.

The church, having been freed from the original condemnation through faith in Christ, “justified by faith,” and having made consecration to the Lord, is now upon trial; and the Apostle assures us that each one in the church shall, at the conclusion of this age, at the dawning of the millennial age, “receive according to the things done in the body”—as members of the body of Christ. Some of these “overcomers” will be the joint heirs with the Lord in the kingdom, while others of these consecrated ones will fall short of this high attainment and will be of the great company mentioned in Rev. 7:9-15. They will not get into the throne with the bride class, but will be blessed with the great privileges of serving before the throne during the millennial age; they will not get the crowns, but they will get palm branches—because they were not sufficiently loyal to the Lord and to the principles which he enunciated and to the terms of their covenant. They get their white robes of justification sullied, spotted and wrinkled, and fail to properly care for it and have the spots and wrinkles removed through the precious blood, and therefore they must “wash their robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb”—in great tribulations. Still others who have been of the church, the Scriptures clearly indicate, will be judged worthy of the second death.

But as for the world, its judgment waits until the millennial age. Those who do not hear the gospel invitation of the present time will miss all opportunity of a change of nature from human to spiritual. The grand opportunity to be offered to them will be an opportunity for return to perfect human conditions, moral, physical, whose home will be the rejuvenated earth—"Paradise restored." The world will be then on trial, not for the sins of Adam, neither for the weaknesses inherited through him, for which they already are condemned and dying.

That judgment is passed; it is fixed irrevocably in the divine sentence upon father Adam after his disobedience,—which sentence has extended to every member of his family—"dying, thou shalt die." But the redemption price of Christ redeemed the whole world from that sentence and granted the whole world of mankind a fresh trial for life—a fresh opportunity to come to a knowledge of God and the terms to which eternal life may be granted, to see whether or not they will stand that trial or testing and be obedient to those terms.

So far as the world is concerned, this knowledge has never yet reached it—it has never yet had a trial of judgment under the terms of the new covenant. The promise of God's word is that the whole world shall have such an opportunity and trial. "God hath appointed a day (the millennial age) in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath afore ordained"—the Christ. This gospel age has been used of the Lord as the time in which to develop the Christ, head and body—the royal priesthood which is to reign over and judge and bless the world of mankind with an opportunity for return to divine favor and to human perfection, if they will, during the millennial age. And all who will not thus return under such favorable conditions will be cut off in the second death.—Acts 3:23.

TYPICAL OF THE TIMES OF RESTITUTION

The Apostle clearly indicates that everything pertaining to the law covenant which God made with the Israelites was typical, illustrative. This truth is generally recognized by Bible students as respects the sacrifices of the law, but very few indeed have seen to how large an extent all the affairs of fleshly Israel were typical of matters and incidents pertaining to spiritual Israel. We shall see more on this subject when considering the Jewish and gospel parallels in a coming discourse. Now we remind you of the Apostle's words, "The law was a shadow of good things to come."—Heb. 10:1

One of the shadows of the law is found in the admirable arrangement which God provided for Israel in what is known as the jubilee year. As some are not familiar with the matter, I will give details. The Lord gave the Jews a number of Sabbaths, and not merely the one seventh-day Sabbath with which we are familiar. The seventh day was the rest day which, in Hebrews 4, the Apostle explains typified the present rest of faith of the people of God, and in the still larger sense it typifies the rest that remaineth for the people of God which they will enter into on the millennial morning—on the seventh day, in the large sense of the word the seventh thousand year period.

It is not so generally known that the law prescribed a seventh-year Sabbath in which the Israelites were to allow the land to rest without cropping it. A cycle of these sevens, seven times seven years, was followed by a still higher and still grander Sabbath year—the fiftieth year.

KNOWN BY JEWS AS JUBILEE YEAR

In a general sense the word jubilee meant to the Jews joy and rejoicing—a release from difficulties. In this respect it typified the millennial age which now is near at hand, in which there will be a release from all of earth's woes and difficulties under the heavenly kingdom's administration of earth's affairs.

The jubilee arrangement was a very beneficial one as respected the earthly affairs of the Jews—aside from its typical significance. Its arrangement was that the land should be recognized as belonging to the Lord, and as being divided amongst the tribes of Israel in family allotments. These allotments were not transferable by sale and could not be divested on account of debts. Any sale which might take place could affect the land only up to the fiftieth year; so that when, through adversity or bad management, a family became poor and its members went into servitude and the homestead passed to another, this could only affect matters until the jubilee year, in which every individual would go free and every homestead be released.

For instance, if the next year after a jubilee a man got into difficulty, and the homestead were parted with, and himself and family obliged to go into servitude to others, his distress and the distress of his family in this matter could last not more than the forty-nine years ensuing—until the next jubilee year. And if he got into financial straits and debts forty years after the jubilee, the difficulties of his position could last no longer than ten years, or up to the next jubilee; and if he got into difficulty one year before the jubilee year, the difficulty could continue only up to the jubilee year. In the jubilee year all debts were cancelled and all estates reverted to previous owners. We cannot wonder that the jubilee year was greatly appreciated, especially by the poorer classes of Israel—and not much appreciated by the more wealthy.

BEAUTIFUL PICTURE GIVEN BY GOD

What a beautiful picture God has thus given us of His own gracious intention toward the world of mankind, which he has in his gracious plan arranged, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, for the setting at liberty of all the slaves of sin and death, and for the restoration to mankind in general of the original homestead, the earth. Already the church can realize by faith the redemption and deliverance from the power of the adversary, but it is only by faith.

The world is still under the power of sin and death—still under the sentence, “Dying, thou shalt die.” The time for the jubilee to actually set in has not yet come, but it is now even at the door. Christ has died for our sins. During this gospel age He has accepted some of the redeemed as members of His body and has permitted them to suffer with him, to lay down their lives—”To fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ.” Col. 1:24.

Soon the entire Christ, head and body, will have suffered in the flesh; soon the sacrificing time will all be ended; then the glory shall follow, when those who sacrificed will reign, not to the injury of those who crucified them and spoke all manner of evil against them falsely, but to their blessing, to their uplifting, to their salvation from sin and from the power of death and from the power of Satan. It is this great deliverance which is pictured in Israel’s jubilee.

God Himself is the one to whom the whole world is indebted. “Sold under sin,” God Himself has provided the arrangement by which this debt is to be fully set aside with the close of this gospel age, because paid by the dear Redeemer. God Himself has provided that man’s original possession, the earth, forfeited through sin, shall return to his possession and control under better and more favorable conditions which will be fully attained by the close of the millennial reign.

BLOWING THE SILVER TRUMPETS

When the year of jubilee arrived it was the duty of the priests to blow on the silver trumpets throughout all the land of Israel, that every individual might know of his liberty and avail himself of the opportunities thus granted. What does this mean in the antitype? We Answer--that the silver trumpet symbolized the message of the truth, which, very early in the morning of the millennial age, will be caused to sound throughout the whole world, that every creature, male and female, bond and free, barbarian and civilized, may come to know of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus and of the mercy of God extended to him through the precious blood—even the forgiveness of sins, and the release from the bondage of Satan and sin into all the liberties of the sons of God. It is of this coming release that the Apostle Paul writes so forcefully. After declaring that the “whole creation groans and travails in pain together,” under this bondage of sin and death under Satan, he declares that the “creature itself shall be delivered (set free) from the bondage of corruption (the bondage of sin and death) into the glorious liberties of the sons of God.”

But he also shows in the same connection that the creature must wait for this deliverance until God's appointed time—until the church shall have first been glorified. He declares that the whole groaning creation is “waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God”—Christ, the Lord, the chief, and the church, his brethren. These must first be exalted to the spiritual plane and kingdom power before the groaning creation can be lifted up and blessed. That glorious time will certainly be earth's great jubilee!

We wait for it with longing anticipation, confident that its coming will rectify all the difficulties now experienced both by the saints and by the world—every injustice, every unrighteousness. The apostle in view of this says, “Be patient, therefore, brethren; the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.” And the second coming of the Lord means the coming of the kingdom, with its great power to control and its great glory to bless the world, the groaning creation.

ALL TO BE NOTIFIED

The silver trumpets will be kept sounding all through the year of jubilee, that every individual of the human family may come to know fully his privileges and opportunities, and, if he will, to avail himself of them and to attain harmony with God, eternal life through faith and obedience to the great Life-giver, our Lord Jesus. They are already sounding. We are sounding this silver trumpet today in your ears, declaring from the Word of God that restitution times are at hand, that the jubilee period is about to begin.

Blessed are the ears that hear and the hearts that appreciate the joyful sound of these jubilee trumpets of this jubilee message. As for those whose ears cannot hear the sound now, we have reason to rejoice that the time is coming when all the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped. But they miss a great blessing in the present time who cannot hear and understand the glorious features of blessing which God has provided for the world; they miss much joy in the Lord and in the Word of His grace; they miss much of the “comfort of the Scriptures.” (Rom. 15:4).

This much of the scriptures can be grasped by all who have the anointed vision, and those of the Lord's people who can see the matter but dimly we exhort to make close scrutiny, to ascertain whether or not houses or lands or dollars are so close to them as to hinder a proper view of this great event.

ANTYTYPICAL JUBILEE BEGAN IN 1874

This may at first seem startling, and to some it may seem unreasonable until they have further reflected. Some will say, where is the restitution, and would it be possible that the “times of restitution” could begin while matters appear to go along nearly in the same manner as they have done in previous times? We Answer--that a right look at the matter from the right standpoint will convince any one that during the last 39 years an appropriate work of the jubilee times has been in operation.

If we will fancy ourselves back in Jewish times, when the jubilees were kept, we will readily see that the exact beginning of the year of jubilee would not probably be known to the masses at that time. They had no calendars such as are so common with us today, they had no daily papers, they were dependent upon the message from the priests to inform them of the due time by the blowing of the silver trumpets. We can imagine, too, that all of the priests would not begin to blow their trumpets at the same moment of time. We can imagine that, even if the trumpet tones were heard, the transition from slavery to freedom would not be the work of a moment but of hours or of days.

Some would perhaps endeavor to hold on to the possessions which had come under their control through the adversities of their neighbors, the spirit of selfishness would certainly lead to more or less difficulty at the dawn of the jubilee year. And we find today in our midst what corresponds precisely to this condition of things.

PEOPLE AWAKENING AND CLAMORING

We may well suppose that when the jubilee year was due that not only the priests, whose duty it was to announce the jubilee year, would blow upon their trumpets, but we can well imagine the tooting there would be from all kinds of ram's horns and every other kind of horn that would make proclamation of the liberty so longed for. We can imagine that among the Jews there was a regular din of trumpets and horns, somewhat resembling the commotion which we have today with the introduction of the new year.

The fact is that God has arranged that the jubilee shall be properly announced by those whom He will specially qualify for the announcement; but it is likewise true that others also will blow upon various trumpets, giving various sounds, all seeking to proclaim the great truth; but many discerning it mistakenly will proclaim it unwisely or untruthfully. This is just what we see today. The present message has been promulgated throughout the world since 1875, declaring that we are in the beginning of the jubilee times, and that the restitution of all things is surely to take place, and all the families of the earth are thus to be blessed by the Lord's anointed king.

But year after year has witnessed the blowing of all kinds of trumpets respecting the day in which we live. The anarchists are blowing trumpets and giving full evidence of the fact that many have not the slightest conception of how to properly use liberty, the socialists are blowing their trumpet, and while announcing some truths are, we believe, announcing many fallacies wholly impractical. Their great error is that they do not realize that it is not the work of men to introduce the jubilee.

LORD PROVIDES THE JUBILEE

The jubilee is provided by the Lord, and He will introduce it in His own way at His own time. There are many liberty-loving organizations trumpeting loudly for rights, liberties and privileges—many of which must be conceded to be properly theirs, though some of them are unjust—unreasonable in the extreme.

These false conceptions of liberty, and the impetuosity displayed in desiring to grasp it, will bring about a great deal of trouble, which the scriptures clearly indicate in many places will constitute so prominent a feature in the establishment of the kingdom and in the jubilee. Many of the princes of the world, political, financial and ecclesiastical, see the restless spirit of the times in which we are living, hear the blowing of the trumpets, recognize that many of them are unreasonable and that many others of them are both reasonable, necessary and righteous. These princes would be disposed to arrange for the setting at liberty of mankind so far as is in their control, but they are in the minority and can do comparatively nothing.

The majority of the princes, political, financial, social, are actuated merely by selfishness and are determined that by force they will hinder the jubilee from taking place; they will prove to these trumpeters that neither noise nor numbers will count, but merely brains and money. They propose to prevent the jubilee arrangements from taking effect. They will not be able to do this, because the Lord's time has come. The jubilee is here, and it is only a question of method and time until present institutions will be wholly transformed and the new reign of righteousness and universal blessing will take its place.

HOW THE TYPE INDICATES THE DATE

Let us see what the type has to say to us respecting the time of its fulfillment—the time when earth's great jubilee of jubilees, the anti-type of the Jewish jubilee year, should begin. We notice that the multiple system prevails in connection with the Sabbath types. For instance, the seventh day multiplied by itself ($7 \times 7 = 49$) constitutes a cycle, which leads us to the fiftieth day, and the fiftieth day was the jubilee day and its anti-type was Pentecost. There the Holy Spirit was poured out upon the church, and the effect was the heart rest which the Lord's people may now enjoy every day and every hour—the true Sabbath of the people of God.

Likewise the seventh year multiplied by itself ($7 \times 7 = 49$) leads to the fiftieth, or jubilee year. This system seems to imply that its continuance would reach to an indicated time of the anti-typical jubilee, the great jubilee. And so it does. We continue the same principle of multiples with the thought that 50 times 50 years should reach to the jubilee of jubilees. $50 \times 50 = 2,500$ years.

We have found the measure now: How can we apply it? Where should this measure begin? If we can ascertain the exact time where it should begin we can very soon tell where the measure will end—where the anti-typical or great jubilee will begin.

Looking back in the scripture narrative we find that the jubilee begins to count when the children of Israel entered into the land of Canaan. The Lord's word to Israel before they came into the land of Canaan was, "Speak unto the children of Israel and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you then shall the land keep a Sabbath (begin the observance of a Sabbath system) unto the Lord," etc. Lev. 25:2-28

WHEN IT BEGINS TO COUNT

The cycle of 50 times 50 years, reaching to the great jubilee of jubilees, would not begin to count until the typical cycles came to an end, and there is nothing in the scriptures to say how many of the typical jubilees were kept by Israel. One thing we do know, however, and that is that they must be in their own land in order to fulfill this type. We know, therefore, that the typical system must have terminated at the time of the Babylonish captivity, because the land lay desolate seventy years, and thus we are assured that the typical system must have ended with the jubilee year which preceded that captivity.

We can locate that jubilee in this way: Bible chronology indicates the time of the Babylonish captivity to have been 969 years after Israel entered into the land of Canaan. They were six years dividing the land; 450 years under judges; 513 years under kings, and it was in the days of the last of these kings of Judah, Zedekiah, that Nebuchadnezzar's army overwhelmed and carried away captive the king and the people living in the land desolated for 70 years.

If we divide 969 years by 50 it will show us the number of jubilees which Israel kept up to that time, namely, 19, and the remainder of 19 would indicate that the last of the typical jubilees occurred 19 years before the 70 years captivity.

We are on the right track now. We know that the great cycle of 50 times 50 years, equaling 2,500, must have begun to count at the very time when the last typical jubilee ended. We know this assuredly, because our Lord declared that not one jot or tittle of the law could in any wise fail until all should be fulfilled. We know that the jubilee system of Sabbaths was much more than a jot or tittle in the Jewish arrangement, and we are sure that its antitype has never been fulfilled either to that nation or to the world whom they typify. We are sure, therefore, that the cycle must have kept on counting even when men were not aware of the fact, so that when the due time would be reached the antitypical jubilee would begin.

DATE OF DAWNING OF EARTH'S JUBILEE

I call your attention to the chart again. Here we have set forth the various periods of time reaching from that last typical jubilee, 19 years before the desolation of the land by Nebuchadnezzar, down to 1874. The periods are, 19 years until the desolation; 70 years of desolation; 536 years from the close of the desolation, and the return of Israel to their own land in the first year of King Cyrus and under his decree down to our year A. D. 1. Add to this 1,875 years of our A. D. and we have a total of 2,500 years—the great jubilee cycle.

We see, then, that whether anything occurred in 1875 or not, the typical jubilee great cycle pointed to that year as the beginning of “the times of restitution”—the dawning of earth’s great jubilee. Not that 1875 was the jubilee year, but that with that year began the antitype of the jubilee year, and the anti-type must be much larger than the type. We are not looking for a year of restitution, but for 1,000 years, the glorious Millennial time, the antitype of the blessing which God represented in Israel’s jubilee year.

Hence we should expect that the dawning of this jubilee period, the Millennial age, began in 1875, and that the dawning would be getting brighter and brighter, and the blowing on the trumpets by the priests and all manner of horns by all manner of people would be increasing the din continually since 1875. And this is just what we see; the whole world is getting awake to the fact that the great jubilee is due, that liberty is to be proclaimed throughout all the earth, that human rights are to return to humanity, etc.

NO SYMPATHY WITH ANARCHISTS

We have no sympathy, no wish to give any encouragement to fantastic views of liberty, anarchistical views. Our thoughts are the very reverse of this namely, that the people who introduce such unbalanced views of liberty are the ones who are not prepared to use the liberty, and whose use of it will bring danger and injury and suffering to themselves as well as others. But however we may deplore the fact that evil men and unbalanced minds will misconstrue liberty and misuse it, this cannot alter the fact that the time has come in the Lord’s great plan for the full liberation of humanity from bondage to sin and death—the time for Immanuel to take control of earthly affairs.

Happy are the people who have already put their cause into the hands of the Redeemer, and who have Him for their friend and counselor and king. Happy would it be for the whole world if they could recognize the fact that the kingdom time has come, and gladly and willingly submit their hearts and wills to the domination of Him who loved us and bought us with His own precious blood.

But nothing is plainer to our judgments than that the masses of the world do nothing of the kind. The rich, who hold the chief levers of power, see not the facts of the case—see not that the Lord has come to take control. They hear not His voice through His word, although many of them are in some measure His followers. They are not in sufficiently close touch with Him to be made acquainted with present truth.

They will feel and do increasingly feel, but erroneously so, that they are made the custodians of the world's peace and welfare, and that they must hold the lever and resist present tendencies toward liberty on the part of the people, and they will do so until the result shall be what the scriptures have clearly foreshown and what we will more particularly present in a later discourse, namely they will bring upon themselves and the whole world a "time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." (Dan. 12:1) A time of trouble which the Apostle James mentions as being specially severe upon the rich, the wealthy. His words are, "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon you." James 5:1

SITUATION IS NOT REALIZED

The poor and middle classes do not realize the true situation either. They do not realize that "restitution times" are at hand for the lifting up and blessing of all the families of the earth with blessings of every kind. On the contrary, they see nothing but a dark cloud and not the silver lining; to them it appears that liberty and manhood are in danger by the growth of capitalism, and in consequence of their fear they are striking out wildly in various directions, making some very absurd claims, and in many respects ignoring the golden rule quite as much as the wealthy.

We cannot blame either of these classes, for both are doing exactly what seems to them to be the only reasonable things under the circumstances. But the Lord's people, if they will draw near to the Lord at heart, will be instructed through His word respecting His glorious plans, and will see that there is no need of fear—that the Lord is at the helm. They will see that the jubilee time having come, all the blessings that the Lord our God has promised and has prepared for through the death of His Son are now ready to be presented to the world of mankind.

Those who thus see will have their minds cooled and their judgments clarified, so that they can look sympathetically on both sides of the coming conflict and yet participate with neither side, realizing that there are rights and wrongs on both sides of the great question and that nothing but Divine power can bring order out of the great confusion. Trusting to the Lord, they can sound forth the clear notes of the silver trumpets, declaring true liberty as the gospel declares it—liberty from Satan, sin and death—the lesser liberties, also, in respect to personal rights, privileges, etc.

JUBILEE TAUGHT BY PROPHETS ALSO

We have examined our subject only from the standpoint of the law; but the law and the prophets are in accord, and we find another strong line of testimony in full accord with the foregoing. We have it here outlined upon the chart, and many of you have doubtless perceived that the outlines here presented are identical with the outline given in the second volume of “Millennial Dawn Series,” entitled “The Time Is at Hand.”

It must strike us all as remarkable—evidently intended of the Lord—that the prophetic corroboration which we now proceed to consider lay in its own simplicity until its application in the jubilee type gave it signification. The seventy years usually referred to is the seventy years desolation of the land. As a matter of fact, some of the people of Israel were taken into captivity eighteen years previous to the desolation of the land, and some of the ten tribes long before that. It was not the captivity that the Lord referred to in giving the number seventy, but the year in which the land would be desolate and all the inhabitants gone from it. The Prophet Jeremiah made prediction on the subject thus:

“And the whole land shall be a desolation... shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.” (Jer. 25:11)

“Thus saith the Lord, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform My good word toward you in causing you to return to this land.” (Jer. 29:10.)

In 2 Chron. 36:17-21, the fulfillment of this prophecy is recorded, and the reason why it was just seventy years, and why the land of Israel was made completely desolate, is stated thus, “He brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon... and them that escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the king of Persia; to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths, for so long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath to fulfill three score years and ten (seventy) years.”

JUBILEES NOT PROPERLY OBSERVED

From this we perceive that God was not satisfied with the way the typical jubilees had been kept. Very evidently the prosperous and wealthy classes were indisposed to yield up the advantages they had gained over their less fortunate brethren when the jubilee years came around. Hence, finding fault with these improperly kept celebrations, the Lord ended them entirely and gave the land the full number of her Sabbaths at once, while her inhabitants were in a foreign land. The value of this point will be clearly seen. It shows us what the full number of jubilee cycles would be, namely, seventy-nineteen of the seventy improperly kept in the past, and fifty-one given in advance without waiting for the improper observances.

Look at the chart again and note the delineation, and how this agrees absolutely with the statement of the same matter from the law standpoint as already examined. The difference between the two methods of calculation is that the law sets forth the matter as it should have taken place, namely, that cycles of forty-nine years followed by jubilees should have followed right along, while the prophecies show the matter as it did take place, namely, nineteen cycles with their jubilees improperly observed, and fifty-one cycles following one another, but without jubilee years. The result is the same—both showing that the year 1875 marked the exact period at which the great jubilee was due to have commenced.

Some may be inclined to say, What great events occurred in 1875 or have been occurring since which would justify the belief that the great jubilee time has come? We answer, those who are expecting the restitution work to be accomplished in a moment of time must necessarily be disappointed, until they learn more respecting the divine methods, which are gradual—first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear, as the apostle suggests. When we perceive the Lord's gradual methods we find just what we should reasonably expect. We are looking for “times of restitution,” and what would properly be the first evidence or indication of such times?

Suppose that the necessary laws had been passed for the erection of a new city hall in Allegheny; suppose that the date fixed for its commencement was January 1. Would any sane man expect that on January 1 he would see the new building rising? No! What would he expect? He would properly expect to find on examination evidences that the demolishing of the old structure was in progress. He might see little or nothing on the outside, but going inside he would find doors and old fixtures being removed and the work of demolishing progressing.

WHAT WE SHOULD EXPECT

We should expect to see just what we do see, namely, a gradual disintegration of the affairs of this world—political unrest, social unrest, religious unrest—a spirit of revolution, a spirit of discontent, malice, hatred, strife. Not that we commend such things, God forbid! We inculcate the very reverse, but show merely from the prophetic standpoint that the great kingdom of God will be established on the ruins of present empires, which the children of this world will wreck for themselves, by going to mad extremes. We see that the Lord will permit “the wrath of men to praise him,” and to thus bring about the humbling of the world's pride, and thus prepare mankind with the plowshare of sorrow and trouble, driven deep by the selfishness of both poor and rich, to prepare them for the blessings of the jubilee time which he is meantime bringing forward. After the old structure falls the new will be erected along the grandest lines of love and justice and righteousness possible to be conceived by the human mind. Immanuel shall lay justice to the line and righteousness to the plummet, and bless all the families of the earth.

The Lord's lesson, the Lord's message through us to His people, is only for "Him that hath an ear to hear,—let him hear." Such may well rejoice in the glorious prospect, not only for themselves, but for all the world of mankind. Such can have patience to wait for the Lord's work to be accomplished. Such will not fret themselves in any wise to do evil, but will wait patiently for the king of kings and lord of lords to establish His righteousness and to confer His blessings. Such can have their hearts lifted above the cares and turmoils and worries of "this present evil world," and can center them upon the higher things which God has promised to them that love Him—love Him more than father or mother or children or houses or lands or self.

Let us, dear friends, be of this class; and then, more and more as we see the wonderful harmony and beauties of the divine plan, our hearts will rest in the Lord and we will be sanctified by the truth; as it is written, "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

Our topic for next Lord's day afternoon will be: "The Times of the Gentiles."

January 18, 1904

THE MILLENNIUM IS NEAR

Nearly 750 Bible students in Allegheny Carnegie hall yesterday afternoon listened to Pastor Charles T. Russell's third discourse of a series on "Bible Prophecy, History and Current Events, United in a Chain of Evidence Showing the Millennium Near." The speaker chose no single text but traversed the entire Bible record from the death of Jacob to the present time, showing the strong foundation of those who trust God's word. Pastor Russell said:

Today's subject I consider one of the most simple, interesting and conclusive demonstrations of our theme. All Bible students recognize typical lessons in the Jewish institutions, but few, we believe, have seen anything like the depths of this subject as we hope to explore them this afternoon. Let me say as an introductory word that we hope to show convincingly to every one acquainted with his Bible that the Jewish nation from Abraham's day to the first advent of our Lord was used of God as a typical people to illustrate great spiritual truths and lessons. Not only did their sacrifices and sin offerings foreshadow or typify the better sacrifices which can and do actually take away sin, but all the features of their history were typical of matters pertaining to spiritual Israel.

“THE LAW WAS A SHADOW OF GOOD THINGS COMING AFTER.”

(Heb. 10:1)

We use this word shadow in the very same sense today when we sometimes say, “Coming events cast their shadows before.” The great realities of God's plan of salvation began at the first advent and have since been in progress. The things of previous times were at their best and at their most shadows of these realities. Indeed, many of the glorious realities are still in the future and may be seen by faith through their shadows in the Jewish law arrangement. As, for instance, in the jubilee type, which we considered two weeks ago, we found the reality to be just at hand, whereas the type was instituted nearly 4,000 years ago. The apostle, referring to these matters of the law, declares that they “serve unto the example (copy) and shadow of heavenly things”—spiritual things. (Heb. 8:5) However strange it may appear to some to draw such a sharp line of distinction between the Jewish and Gospel age—between Israel after the flesh and Israel after the spirit—the clear discernment of this is absolutely necessary to a proper understanding of the divine word.

DEVOTED AND CONSECRATED

We are not in this casting any reflection upon the Lord's holy people of the period before the first advent. We hold that they were devoted, consecrated and acceptable in the Lord's sight; but that, living before the time appointed, they could have no part or lot in the special call of this gospel age. We might give numerous Scriptural testimonies in proof, but must content ourselves with a few at this time. The apostle speaks of our Lord Jesus as the captain or forerunner of His faithful followers in the narrow way which leads to the kingdom of glory, honor and immortality—“the new way of life” which He opens up for His followers. (Heb. 10:20) It would be inconsistent with these figures and terms to suppose that any ever ran the race before Him whom God set forth to be the captain and forerunner and exemplar. The apostle, himself a Jew and writing about the faithfulness of the ancient worthies, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and others, concludes his favorable comment on their faithfulness to God in these words, “All these died in the faith, not having received the things promised; God having provided some better things for us (spiritual Israel), that they without us should not be made perfect.” Heb. 11:39,40

This is very explicit testimony by one who, so far from having prejudices against the Jew, tells us in all candor of his devotion to their interests and that he would gladly sacrifice personal interests in favor of the nation as a whole. The same apostle, writing again, denominates fleshly Israel the house of servants, in contrast with spiritual Israel as the house of sons. He did not thus demean the faithful of the natural house, but honored them, for surely it is a great honor to be servants of the Most High God; but he did lay emphasis upon the fact that the church of this gospel age is very highly favored, in that its faithful few are recognized of God as the house or company of sons under the headship of the Lord Jesus. The apostle’s words are: “Moses verily was faithful as a servant over all his house, but Christ (was faithful) as a son over his house—whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.” Heb. 3:5,6

JESUS’ WORDS ON THE SUBJECT

Our Lord declared, “The law and the prophets were until John; since then the kingdom of heaven is preached.” (Luke 16:16.) Again our Lord speaks of John the Baptist, His forerunner, and points out that he belongs to the dispensation that was passing and not to the new dispensation, and that the humblest of His followers in the new dispensation would be greater than John the Baptist, because he belonged to the old one. Our Lord’s words were, “Verily I say unto you, there hath not arisen a greater prophet than John the Baptist; and yet I say unto you that the least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.” The thought is that the gospel age is for the development of the church class, and that the faithful of the Lord’s consecrated at the present time are the kingdom of God in embryo—the members and representatives of the kingdom which shall be shortly introduced in power and great glory to bless the world.

Let us for a little while leave the consideration of spiritual Israel and its interests and notice with particularity some things pertaining to natural Israel. But while doing this let us not overlook the fact that these various items will have a typical lesson for us by and by. Prophetic testimony marks the beginning and end of Jewish favor.

The history of Israel began with the death of Jacob, who was the last of the patriarchs, and who for his faith in God was surnamed Israel, which signifies a prince with God. The nation of Israel was otherwise called the children of Israel. It was when Jacob was on his death bed that he called his family and blessed them, and there it is for the first time recorded, “all these are the twelve tribes of Israel”—there their tribal and national existence began. They had tribulations in Egypt, in the wilderness and in the promised land; but in all of these the Lord’s blessing was with them, their adversities were overruled for good, and they were still His peculiar people. Even when, finally, they went into captivity in Babylon, His favor was with them, and so they continued in His favor and under corrective chastisements until the close of their age. We know exactly when their age terminated and the gospel age began. It was at the close of our Lord’s three and one-half years of ministry, when He offered Himself to them and was refused, except by a few, a remnant—as we read, “He came unto His own, and His own received Him not; but to as many as received Him, to them gave He liberty to become sons of God.” John 1:11,12

REJECTION OF THE SAVIOR

The exact turning point where divine favor passed from fleshly Israel is noted in the Scriptures as taking place just five days before our Lord’s crucifixion. At that time He rode to the city of Jerusalem as their king on an ass, in fulfillment of the prophet’s words, “Behold, thy king cometh unto thee; He is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass.” (Zech. 9:9) It was foreknown of the Lord that He would be rejected, and is so stated by the prophet; nevertheless, the full proffer or opportunity was granted to the nation. When they received Him not, weeping over them, Jesus said, “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, but ye would not.”

“Behold your house is left unto you desolate.” (Luke 13:34,35)

Prophesying, our Lord added: “Ye shall see me no more until that day when ye shall say, `Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. ’” Since that time the Jews have as a nation been cut off from divine favor as never previously. Their house has been desolated of divine favor in every sense of the word, as they are free to acknowledge. We hope to show most conclusively from the scriptures that God’s favor is to return again to the Hebrew people, that he will save them from their present blindness, bringing them back to their own land and to his own favor. That Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the holy prophets of fleshly Israel, resurrected from death, as perfect men, shall become the earthly representatives of the spiritual unseen kingdom—Christ and the church. At that time, and under those influences, the true-hearted Hebrews will return to divine favor and to corresponding prominence in the world, and become channels of divine blessing for all people, as is so clearly intimated in their part of the Abraham promise.

GOD'S FAVOR TO RETURN

We hope to demonstrate clearly from the scriptures that Israel's period of rejection and blindness, without divine favor, is to be of the same duration as was their previous experiences under divine favor. Please follow me on the chart. Notice that from the death of Jacob until the death of Christ, the Bible chronology here set forth shows a period of 1,845 years. I need not here take your time to cite you the chapters and verses for these figures; you will find them in your common version Bibles exactly as here represented. Anyone desiring the references, we will be pleased to furnish them, and those who already possess the second volume of "Millennial Dawn" will find the whole matter therein set forth.

Now if we can find scriptures to prove what we say, namely, that Israel will be without divine favor for a like period of time to that of their previous favor, we can very easily reckon when the promised return of favor would be due; for 1,845 years from the death of Jacob to the death of Christ, ended A. D. 33, and 1,845 years since A. D. 33 ended A. D. 1878.

We should not, however, expect that in 1878 God's favor would instantly be manifested, because, when we look back to the time when their "house" was left desolate, we find that there was a period of 37 years in which they, as a nation, were falling—from A. D. 33 to A. D. 70, when Jerusalem was utterly destroyed by Titus and his army, since then that people have been continually scattered and troubled and without divine favor. What we should expect, then, in 1878, would be a correspondingly gradual dawning of favor. As adversity began to come upon them in A. D. 33, blessings should begin to come upon them in A. D. 1878.

Is there anything to indicate a blessing upon fleshly Israel since A. D. 1878? There surely is. In that very year the Berlin Congress of Nations was held, and its chief was Lord Beaconsfield, the representative of the British government, and by birth a Jew. There was fulfilled the words of the prophet:

"Ten men out of all languages of nations shall take hold of the skirt of him who is a Jew, saying, we will go with you."—Zech. 8:23

GROWTH OF ZIONIST MOVEMENT

Those ambassadors of the great powers all went with Lord Beaconsfield, all adopted the policy which he favored. Under the arrangements of that conference Egypt and Palestine were all put under the protection of Great Britain, as others of the Turkish states were put under the protection of other powers. From that day onward Israel's star of hope has been rising little by little. The Jews have been granted liberties and advantages in Palestine such as they had not enjoyed previously for 18 centuries. True, these liberties as yet are very circumscribed; true, also, in this time great persecutions have arisen against them in various countries, especially in Russia; but all these experiences are favorable to them, and under them they are awakening to a fresh zeal for God, for His promises, and for the Holy Land. Under the stimulus of these persecutions and restraints, combined with the divine favor, the Zionist movement has sprung up amongst the Jews and is attaining national proportions, and whetting the appetites of that people for the divine favors and blessings promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the holy prophets and soon to have fulfillment under the millennial kingdom of Christ.

We are not drawing these conclusions from the facts in the case, but especially from the prophecies; for, as some present today well know, the speaker presented these same views from the same standpoint and in print in the seventies. Before the Berlin conference, and 20 years before the birth of the Zionist movement, he proclaimed the movement precisely as it is presented to you today. Day by day, however, the evidences of the fulfillment of these prophecies accumulate, yet so gradually that the world in general realizes not what is transpiring. Ere long the doors of Palestine will be thrown open for the general reception of the Jews, and people and money will not be lacking to cause that present wilderness to blossom as the rose. Moreover, the Lord's blessing will be upon the land and upon the people more and more as we near the end of "Gentile Times," which last Lord's day we showed will be reached in A. D. 1915.

Let us now examine the prophecies which tell us the length of Israel's disfavor and point us to the exact time of its beginning and where it will end.

PROPHECY OF JEREMIAH

Jeremiah was one of the most prominent of Israel's prophets. He it was that foretold of their captivity in Babylon, and that the desolation of the land would be for 70 years, and that then the people would be brought back by divine favor. But the prophecy we now cite refers to a still more serious captivity. It reads: "Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods (rulers), day and night; where I will not show you favor." (Jer. 16:9-13). These days of disfavor commenced with their rejection of Messiah, and the predictions have been most thoroughly fulfilled during the past 18 centuries, as the whole world is witness. The prophecy could not have referred to the Babylonian captivity, the only other one they have had since Jeremiah's day. We are sure of this, because of the words of the prophet—"into a land that ye know not; neither ye nor your fathers." Abraham and his family came from Babylonia, hence that land could not have been referred to. Besides, the Lord did show Israel favor in Babylon. But, as we have just seen, for more than 18 centuries Israel has been scattered amongst all the nations of the earth, and that without any marks of divine favor.

The Lord, through the prophet, next proceeds to explain how he will regather Israel in due time (verses 13-15): “Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north (Russia, where more than one-half of the Jews reside), and from all the lands whither he hath driven them; and I will bring them into their own land that I gave unto their fathers.” We might multiply testimonies both from the Old and New Testaments, to prove the restoration of Israel to divine favor in due time, but we must press on and notice a succeeding verse in the same prophecy: “And first, I will recompense their iniquity, and their sin double.”

ILLUSTRATED BY THE CHART

The Hebrew word rendered “double” is “Mishneh,” which signifies a second portion, a repetition. Thus understood, the prophet’s declaration is, that from the time of their being cast off from favor, until their time of return to favor, would be a repetition or duplication in time of their previous history during which they enjoyed divine favor. This matter is illustrated by the chart. Here we see the period of favor from the death of Jacob to the death of Jesus, 1,845 years long, and here we see, in this other column, the period of disfavor of equal length beginning at the death of Jesus and terminating in 1878. We remember, however, that the disfavor came on gradually for 37 years, and we perceive that the favor is returning gradually during a similar period of 37 years, which will end with the year 1915. How clear and explicit is this testimony, “I will render unto you misneh, a repetition, in land which ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers, where I will show you no favor.” Poor Jews! We are glad for them that the better day is dawning—that gradually their blessings are taking the place of the curses which they drew upon themselves, saying: “His blood be upon us, and upon our children.” Matt. 27:25

Some one may say, “Yes, that seems quite conclusive, quite in harmony with what you claim; and yet it is but one statement by one prophet. Are there any more evidences?” We reply that one statement by one prophet should carry conviction; many of the prophecies fulfilled at the first advent had no more testimony than this. But our Heavenly Father in great mercy—in condescension to our weakness of faith—has deigned to supply further evidences. Through Zechariah (9:12) the Lord refers to this same matter, using precisely the same word, “Mishneh,” but from a different standpoint.

Jeremiah took a standpoint previous to this scattering of Israel, and foretold it as a future matter. Zechariah took his stand down in the future, and in prophetic vision saw Jesus riding upon the ass to Jerusalem; and standing, as it were, by his side, the prophet cries, “Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion! Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem! Behold, thy king cometh unto thee. He is just and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass.”

FULFILLMENT OF A PROPHECY

Note the precise fulfillment of these words. (Matt. 21:4-9; John 12:12-15; Luke 19:35-40) Every item was fulfilled, even to the shouting; and when the people shouted Hosanna, the Pharisees asked Jesus to rebuke them, but He refused, saying, “If these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out. Why? Because it had been prophesied that there would be a shout, and every item of prophecy must be fulfilled. Let this particularity of detail in prophetic fulfillment give us confidence in this and other statements of the prophecies.

The prophet proceeds to note the evil consequences to follow the rejection of Messiah. Speaking for Jehovah, he addressed Israel thus: “Turn you to the stronghold (Christ), ye prisoners of hope; even today do I declare that I will render double (Mishneh) unto thee.” How distinct is this statement respecting Israel’s double, pointing us to the very day at which the turning point came in their history—“even today.” The facts of the case demonstrate that that was the turning point of their national career. The same thing was taught in the symbol of the Passover; it must be eaten at the full of the moon, the moon being symbolic of the law dispensation as the sun is the symbol of the gospel dispensation. The full of the moon signified the time when their highest attainment had been reached and where the waning began.

It is written that at the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. We have already heard two. Let us hear the third, Isaiah—another of the holy prophets whose prophecies have been time and again distinctly fulfilled. He, too, was given a message respecting Israel’s double, but his standpoint is down here in our day—in A. D. 1878, at the fulfillment of the double—and says, “Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, said your God. Speak ye comfortingly to Jerusalem and cry unto her that her appointed time is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord’s hands double for all her sins.” Isa. 40:1,2, margin

BUT FEW MORE YEARS

Isaiah’s word, translated double, is kephal, which signifies double in the sense of a thing having been folded in the middle. It is in full agreement and confirmation of what we have already seen. How wonderful that God has thus particularly stated, and yet, as the Scriptures declare, has “hidden” these things in His word, so that many of the wise and prudent have overlooked them; and they are only seen now because we are living today in the time of their fulfillment, and hence in the due time for them to be understood. What more could we ask on the subject? How conclusively all this demonstrates that Israel’s period of disfavor would be of equal length with the preceding favor, and how simple is the demonstration that this double has already been completed, in one sense of the word, and that it will be fully accomplished in its broad sense in 1915.

Our hearts rejoice in these testimonies from the Lord’s word respecting Israel’s favor, but as Christians we have another and more personal interest in these figures. We are interested in the Jew, but we are also interested in ourselves—interested in the welfare of the church of Christ, spiritual Israel, which is now being selected. And now, dear friends, I call your attention to a matter of striking importance, namely, that these measurements thus fixed by the Lord through the prophets upon the affairs of fleshly Israel serve also to measure certain great and important matters in the affairs of spiritual Israel.

I remind you of the apostle Paul’s dissertation on the affairs of natural and spiritual Israel in chapters 9,10,11, of his Epistle to the Romans. He here points out the rejection of Christ by the Jewish people, and their own consequent rejection by the Lord, and the blindness and stumbling consequent to that rejection. He quotes from the prophecies to show that the entire matter was foreknown to the Lord, and foretold. Then, in the 11th. chapter he asks the question, “Hath God cast off His people whom He foreknew?” He answers, “God forbid.” He then proceeds with his argument to prove that the Old Testament scriptures everywhere agree that future favor is to come to Israel, and that that future blessing of Israel is to be the precursor to a future blessing of all the families of the earth, and that this means “life from the dead.” Rom. 11:15

ST. PAUL’S ARGUMENT

St. Paul’s argument becomes especially interesting and forceful when we reach the 25th. verse. I will not take the time to read it all, but I trust that you will read in your own Bibles at your homes the apostle’s plain statement respecting Israel’s future and how it is to be brought about through the glorified church. “They shall obtain mercy through your mercy.” The whole matter is graphically set forth in verses 25 to 33. But our interest centers in one statement of the 25th. verse, “Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in.” We have already seen where this blindness began—when they rejected the Lord and crucified Him. We see that it has continued during all these intervening eighteen centuries, and we have just seen through the testimony of three of the prophets that this blindness is to be turned away, and a general blessing and restoration to divine favor to ensue as soon as their double is filled full—which we see will be accomplished in 1915.

Now, hold this thought fast while we investigate the apostle's words, "Until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." The significance is that Israel's disfavor or blindness will last until the full number of the spiritual Israelites should be completed, whom God is gathering out of every nation, people and kindred. The significance of the statement thus seen in its connections is that by 1915—by the time Israel's favor will be complete—all the special spiritual favors, which during this gospel age have been held forth, will be completely at an end. They will end as completely as did the earthly favors which Israel enjoyed, ended at the time when our spiritual favors began. This is a momentous question for the Lord's people.

To some it may bring a measure of fear to think that the end of the special time of special favor and opportunity is so near at hand; but to others, who are living close to the Lord, it will bring a measure of rejoicing, even as the Master instructed, saying, "When ye shall see these things begin to come to pass, then lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh." A part of our object in calling attention to these matters today is that some of the Lord's faithful people in all denominations, who have not heretofore been aroused to an interest in His word, and to an investigation of these important and grand subjects, may become enthused, quickened, refreshed, revived in their spiritual health and energy and service; and that thus they may be the better prepared to make their calling and election sure while still it is called today.

FATHER OF MANY NATIONS

Thus far we have investigated the subject largely from the standpoint of fleshly Israel, merely drawing the deductions in favor of spiritual Israel. Now we invite you to consider the matter from another standpoint, from the standpoint of spiritual Israel. Consider that God used the natural Israelite, his law and covenant and age, as types of the spiritual, higher, more glorious things which He has bestowed on us as the house of sons, in contrast with the noble ones of the past who were honored in being of the house of servants.

The law was a shadow of good things to come—every feature of it was typical of higher things. The earthly people, fleshly Israel, had earthly promises, but the anti-typical people, spiritual Israel, have heavenly promises. Throughout the entire Old Testament there is not a suggestion of spiritual or heavenly conditions as being the hope set forth. Good Father Abraham was encouraged not with heavenly promises but earthly ones when the Lord said to him, "Now lift up thine eyes and look to the north and south and east and west: For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever.” No such earthly promises were made to the spiritual house, but “exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might become partakers of the divine nature.”

These two seeds of Abraham were distinctly differentiated in one of the promises made to him, although he probably did not comprehend the matter fully. The Lord said to him: “Thy seed shall be as the stars of heaven, and as the sand by the sea shore.” The stars of heaven fitly symbolized the spiritual house of sons, the real seed of Abraham in the highest sense of the word—the Christ. Jesus is this special seed of Abraham, and the faithful of the gospel church are to be his associates in the spiritual part of the promises, as the apostle says, “If ye be Christ’s, then are ye Abraham’s seed and heirs according to the promise.”—Gal. 3:29

YET TO BE FULFILLED

But if we inherit the heavenly part of the promises, it still leaves the earthly part to be fulfilled, and as we have already shown, the ancient worthies are to have the most prominent place in the world as the representative of the spiritual kingdom when the Millennial dispensation begins. To them will naturally gather all the true ones of Israel according to the flesh; and to these in turn will gradually gather all the true-hearted of the whole world, all of whom by faith and obedience may be privileged to become the children of Abraham. As it is written, “I have constituted thee a father of many nations.”—Gen. 17:4; Rom. 4:17

Our present topic confines us specially to the two Israels and their two ages. We find the parallelism between them represented also in the cherubim of the most holy. These were a part of the lid of the “Ark of the Covenant,” their wings extended, their faces looked inward toward the center of the mercy seat—to the very spot where the blood of atonement was sprinkled. While these two cherubim represented wisdom and love waiting for the satisfaction of justice in the great atoning sacrifice, both on the wing to serve, to fulfill the gracious purposes of God so soon as the appointed time for the world’s blessing shall fully come, nevertheless they also well represent the Jewish and Gospel ages—the one looking forward to Christ and the atonement, the other looking backward to that great transaction. Let us note the harmony as well as the differences between these two dispensations—the law and the gospel, fleshly Israel’s period of favor, and spiritual Israel’s period of favor, the fleshly house and the spiritual house, the house of servants and the house of sons.

THE HOUSE OF SERVANTS

The house of servants was established in Jacob, who was surnamed Israel, a prince with God: the house of sons was established by our Lord Jesus, and in the scriptures is designated the “true Israel of God.” The house of servants was founded in “the twelve sons of Jacob” (Israel): the house of sons was founded in “the twelve apostles of the Lamb.” The house of servants had a mediator of a law covenant and a tabernacle made with hands: the house of sons has a better mediator of a new covenant and a tabernacle not made with hands. The house of servants had a priesthood, with chief priest, under priests, and a Levitical order whose chief business was “to offer both gifts and sacrifices” under the law: the house of sons has also a priesthood—“Ye are a royal priesthood.”

In this royal priesthood is first our Lord Jesus, the high priest of our order, and, secondly, associated with him the church, his body, the household of faith, whose chief business of life it is in the present time to offer up both gifts and sacrifices. The house of servants had the blood of bulls and goats for sin offerings and atonement, which as types were very expressive, but which “could never take away sin:” the house of sons, as a royal priesthood, has more effective sacrifices, or, as the apostle declares, “better sacrifices” than those—which do, forever, purge us from the consciousness of sin, and fully and completely effect our reconciliation to the Father. The house of servants had its capitol in earthly Jerusalem: the house of sons has its capitol in the New Jerusalem. The house of servants had a captivity in Babylon from which only a very few returned, because of lack of faith in the Lord: the house of sons had had a period of captivity in mystic Babylon from which only a comparatively few are returning and earnestly seeking the old paths. The house of servants had divine favor of an earthly kind for 1,845 years, ending with a great trial and testing in connection with the first advent of our Lord: the house of sons has passed a similar period of 1,845 years, into a period of trial and testing in connection with the second advent of our Lord and the establishment of His kingdom. How could these parallels be more striking than they are?

HARVEST THE END OF THE AGE

The close of the favor of the house of servants was called a “harvest” time, and in it the “wheat” was gathered out and the “chaff” renounced. The period of favor in the house of sons also closes with a “harvest” time, of which the Lord prophetically told us that it would mean a separation of the “wheat” from the “tares” and the gathering of the “wheat” into the “garner” of the new nature, and the rejection of the tares.

Do not these things impress us, dear friends, as being very remarkable? Could they be accidental? Do we not as Christians believe most thoroughly that our heavenly father’s guidance directs the affairs of his people in this gospel age as fully as during the preceding typical age? The lesson coming to us then is that we are living today in the harvest time of this age, and this may well account to us for the wonderful light and knowledge and truth shining upon the pathway of the Lord's faithful ones, the object of which is not to satisfy curiosity merely, but to ripen our characters, and to thus fit and prepare us for the heavenly and glorious things to which we have been "called."

The Lord willing, we shall have something more to say on next Lord's day afternoon respecting some of these matters—noting the prophetic fulfillments which specially mark this day in which we are living—the grandest of all periods in some respects, and the most trying time for the Lord's people in other respects. The special topic will be "Things which must shortly come to pass." This will be the conclusion of this special series of studies of prophecy.

THREE STEPS IN THE PLAN TO SAVE MAN FROM HIS SIN

Bible House chapel, in Allegheny, was crowded yesterday when Pastor C. T. Russell spoke on Christ's resurrection. The text and discourse follow:

Dear Friends: It is appropriate that we notice that the most important steps in the divine plan for the recovery of man from sin and its penalty are three in number. The first of these was our Lord's death as the redemption price of Adam and his race from the "wages of sin"—death. This we celebrated on its anniversary during the week just past. I am confident that I reflect the sentiments of all who participated on that occasion—that it was a most blessed and refreshing season, and that our hearts took fresh courage as we considered the love of God manifested in the gift of His Son, who died for our sins.

The second of these important steps in the plan of salvation was our Lord's resurrection from the dead; for be it noted that the redemption could have profited us nothing whatever had the Redeemer Himself remained under "the curse"—the death penalty—which he bore for us. Had our Lord Jesus remained under the power of death he could never have saved us; for the salvation promised us is a resurrection from the dead, and a dead savior would be no savior at all—Himself under the power of death how could He have released Adam or any of his family?

The third important step in the divine plan of salvation is the second coming of Christ, to actually bestow upon the faithful ones of His church the blessings promised to them, and to actually proffer to the world in general opportunities for reconciliation to the Father secured by the redemption sacrifice. Our topic for today is the second of these important items—our Lord’s resurrection from the dead, and we choose as our text the words of the apostle:

“Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man comes also the resurrection of the dead. For as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive; but every man in his own order.”—1 Cor. 15:20-23

RESURRECTION OBSCURED BY ERROR

It is unfortunate that a false theory respecting the penalty of sin (death) has so engrafted itself upon the minds of Christian people as to distort their views and really make meaningless much that the scriptures state respecting the resurrection of the dead. From the ordinary standpoint it would matter little to us whether our Lord Jesus arose from the dead or not—it would matter little whether anyone ever rose from the dead or not. The usual thought respecting resurrection is that it relates merely to the body and not to the soul. The theory is that the soul, so far from dying with the body, really becomes more alive without the body, and hence some speak of getting “free” from the body—being “liberated from the prison house of clay.” To such as have been misled by such false conceptions of the facts as are implied in this language, the resurrection must mean to a greater or less degree a reimprisonment, a restraint of liberties, a limitation of powers and attributes.

Such persons in reading the scriptures must feel more or less confused when they come across statements by the Lord and by the apostles and the prophets implying a great necessity for a resurrection—an absolute necessity—implying the utter nothingness of the person in death if there be no resurrection for him. In the preceding context the apostle has been discussing this very subject with some who, apparently, had come under the teaching of Greek philosophies, called Platonic philosophy—the same error which so generally prevails among Christian people today. Note the apostle’s words, “If Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some amongst you that there is no resurrection of the dead?”—or as some now would perhaps state it, there is no necessity for a resurrection from the dead.

The apostle could not agree with any such suggestion. In his theology as in that which prevails throughout the scriptures every hope of future life hinges upon a resurrection from the dead. The apostle states this in so many words: “If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen (if a resurrection of the dead is an impossibility, it must have been an impossibility in our Lord’s case, (the argument), and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that He raised up Christ; whom He raised not up if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.” Verses 12-18

FAITH VAIN WITHOUT A RESURRECTION

What strong language the apostle uses! He lays the whole stress of future salvation upon a future resurrection of the dead, and he unites the resurrection hope of mankind with the resurrection of our Lord. If Christ did not rise from the dead, no one will rise from the dead; if Christ did rise from the dead, it proves the possibility of a fulfillment of God’s promise—the hope of a resurrection for every member of Adam’s race sentenced because of Adam’s sin and redeemed by our Lord’s sacrifice.

All Christian faith is vain if there is no resurrection, all Christian preaching is vain, and all those who have gone down into death have perished—are without hope of any future life anywhere or of any kind—if there be no resurrection of the dead. Read these words of the apostle over to yourself quietly at home, ponder their meaning, and you will agree with me that our Lord’s resurrection was a most momentous event.

The scriptural presentation of this subject is that God’s penalty for sin includes the soul as well as the body—the intelligent and mental and moral qualities as well as the physical. From the scriptural standpoint Adam’s soul was sentenced to death, “The soul that sinneth it shall die.” It was necessary therefore, in order to Adam’s redemption, that whoever would pay his ransom price to justice must die, not only physically but in every sense of the word—must fill the conditions of the penalty.

In Adam’s case this penalty was represented in our Lord’s words, “Thou shalt surely die,” addressing the intelligence of Adam, and not merely saying, Thy body shall die and leave thee more alive than ever. The scriptural presentation of the sentence upon Adam is, “Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.” We have already seen on a previous occasion that the human soul or intelligence or existence is the result of a combination of life force (“spirit of life”) with physical organism, and that the death of the man is the death of the soul, resulting from the separation of the spirit or vital spark of life from the organism or body.

This penalty which came upon Adam has been transmitted in a natural way to all humanity as his children, as the text declares—all who were in Adam at the time of his fall have inherited the dying qualities implied in his sentence.

The scriptures represent that the whole world of mankind, thus dying, go into oblivion, into unconsciousness, into dissolution.

Thus we see that the death penalty upon man took from him all the rights and privileges which had belonged to him as a creature of higher intelligence, endowed with the moral likeness of his Creator—the privilege or boon of everlasting life.

This special provision of God for man above the provision for the lower animals having been lost by disobedience, man really was, therefore, on the same plane as the brute creation—without any right in God’s promise or any character of his own which could call to justice for everlasting life.

Whatever, therefore, God shall at any time proffer to man in the nature of a hope or prospect for eternal life must be wholly as a free gift on God’s part, entirely independent of any rights or privileges with which mankind was endowed at the time of his creation—for all these were “lost.” But our Lord Jesus explains to us the object of His first coming, saying, “The son of man is come to seek and save that which was lost.” Men by disobedience had “lost” the right to eternal life, and all the privileges and blessings and opportunities attaching to that great boon. It was this life-right that man needed and that Christ came to give back to him. The Lord explains this in so many words, saying, “I am come that they might have life—and that they might have it more abundantly.” (John 10:10) He tells us again that he came not to destroy men’s lives but to save them—to save them from the death sentence, the death penalty under which the race had then been for more than 6,000 years.—Luke 9:56

CHRIST’S SOUL DIED AND REVIVED

Our Lord explained further how he intended to give the world life, saying, “The son of man came not to be served unto, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many.” (Matt. 20:28) From this standpoint our Lord’s life was laid down in death in exactly the same manner in which Adam’s life was laid down, and for the very purpose of securing to Adam (and to the race in him when he was condemned) a release from the original sentence—a release from the death penalty.

In view of this, dear friends, what should we expect to find the Scriptures to teach respecting the character of our Lord’s death? Do they teach, as is generally believed, that our Lord only appeared to die, but that in reality He did not die, and merely allowed His body to die on the cross? Not so, the Scriptures teach very explicitly that “He made His soul an offering for sin” (Isa. 53:10). Again they tell us that “He poured out His soul unto death” (Isa. 53:12). They tell us further that eventually “He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied” (Isa. 53:11). It is evident, then, from these Scriptures that our Lord’s “soul” died and thus fully met the penalty against sinners—“the soul that sinneth it shall die.”

Whoever sees this clearly and distinctly sees that justice has been fully met, and that God, having thus laid upon His Son the penalty of Adam, can now be just in setting at liberty from death, the soul of Adam and the souls of all of Adam's posterity, all of whom came under this death sentence through his disobedience, as the apostle most explicitly states the matter.—Rom. 5:12

Not only have we this evidence that Christ poured out His "soul" unto death and made His "soul" an offering for sin—for our sins—but additionally we have the Scriptural testimony that His "soul" was delivered from death in His resurrection—thus proving beyond peradventure that he did pay mankind's penalty, that He did pay the "wages of sin"—"the soul that sinneth it shall die." The prophet David, speaking of our Lord, distinctly tells us that His "soul" was not left in sheol—the grave, the death state.—Psa. 16:10

Let us notice the Apostle Peter's testimony on this subject, as recorded in Acts 2:24-34. He is discussing our Lord's resurrection, in full harmony with the words of the Apostle Paul in our text. Does not the frequency of the Scriptural references to the resurrection of the dead and the infrequent mention of it in the pulpits of our day attest clearly what we have already been showing, namely, that a great and serious error has crept into the Christian faith which bears upon this subject, and which tends to make the word of God of none effect to them that are beclouded with the error? It surely does.

It must surely strike Christian people in general as remarkable that so much emphasis is laid upon the absolute necessity of the resurrection of Christ and of the church and of the world in the Bible mention of these matters, while the majority of Christian people have perhaps never heard the subject of the resurrection preached upon a single time in all their lives. Why? Because of the erroneous thought that men who have died know more than they knew before they died.

It all comes from the ignoring of the Scriptural testimony on this subject, to wit, that "the dead know not anything—so that their sons come to honor and they know it not, or to dishonor and they perceive it not of them. For there is neither work nor device nor knowledge nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." —Job 14:21; Eccl. 9:10

BEGAN AT CHRIST'S BAPTISM

The Apostle Peter's argument is quite to the point. He was preaching on the day of Pentecost; he was charging home to his hearers the fact that they had crucified Jesus, and then in offset declares that God raised Him up from the dead—that it was not possible that He should be holden of death. It was the Father's promise that our Lord's faithful sacrifice of His life as the man Christ Jesus should not signify to Him an utter blotting out of His existence.

It would indeed mean the termination, the complete blotting out of Him as a man—His human existence, which He had assumed in exchange for a previous spirit existence, being given up as a “ransom” price for Father Adam and thus for all who were involved in Father Adam's disobedience. He could not rise from the dead as a man, as a human being, as flesh—his flesh being given once and for all and forever for the life of the world, for Adam and his race.—Heb. 2:9; Matt. 20:28; 1 Tim. 2:6

But nothing in this arrangement for the complete laying down of His life as “the man Christ Jesus” interfered with another arrangement which the Father provided, namely, that at the time of His consecration when 30 years of age, He should be “begotten again” of the Holy Spirit to a new nature—a spiritual nature, higher than human. This spiritual nature developed as the earthly nature of our Lord was sacrificed day by day in obedience to the Father's plan.

The new nature, however, was merely the new will, the spirit-begotten mind of our Lord, and was entirely dependent upon His physical organization; and when, therefore, He was crucified, when He died, the new mind as well as the fleshly body was involved. With Him, as with all others, there was neither wisdom nor knowledge nor device in sheol.

Our Lord's resurrection, therefore, was not as a man, but as a spirit being—such as He was before he undertook the work of man's redemption and left the glory which He had with the Father before the world was—only that now His exalted position is still a superior one to that which He previously enjoyed. (Phil. 2:9) This is the teaching of the apostle when he says: “He was put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the spirit.” Speaking of our Lord's faithfulness unto death and the glorious exaltation to which it led, he says: He left the glory of the Father and took a bondsman's form and was made flesh for the suffering of death—that “He, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man. And, being found in fashion a man, He humbled Himself even unto death, even the death of the cross. Therefore God hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow... and every tongue confess to the glory of God the Father.”—Phil. 2:7-11; Heb. 2:9

St. Peter, after declaring our Lord's resurrection from the dead, makes various quotations from the Prophet David, showing that our Lord's resurrection and future glory were foretold. Then, proving that David was not speaking these things respecting Himself, but respecting Christ, he says: "Men and brethren, let me speak freely to you of the Patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried and his sepulcher is with us unto this day."

The fact of his burial proved that David's flesh did see corruption, that God did not deliver him from the power of death, and his sepulcher was a standing memorial, not of his resurrection, but of his death and corruption and hope of a future resurrection through Christ. The apostle, in the words of our text, proceeds to show that David, as a prophet, foretold the resurrection of Christ from the dead, to be the heir of the throne of Israel and the world, as God had declared to David, and as He had previously declared to Abraham.

"This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses," said St. Peter; and then he referred to the miraculous power of the holy spirit displayed in the eleven apostles as proofs that Jesus not only had arisen from the condition of death, but that He had ascended up on high to the Father and had sent forth the holy spirit, whose manifestations were generally perceived. As though to clinch his argument, and to prove that David was speaking of our Lord and not of himself, the Apostle adds in verse 34, "For David is not ascended into the heaven"—his prophetic reference therefore was to Jesus the one whom he represented in type and prophetically.

RESULTS FROM CHRIST'S RESURRECTION

As the fact of Christ's death attests His love and devotion to us and that the penalty for the sins of the whole world has been fully paid, so His resurrection from the dead on the third day assures us that the Father was pleased with the sacrifice, that justice accepted it, and that therefore it will be possible to justly exonerate the whole world of mankind from the Adamic sin and all the penalties and consequences, depravities and hereditary weaknesses which have come down to us through that original sin.

God can be just and yet justify all mankind from all things—from all the sins that are the result of our original impairment as a race, mental, moral and physical degeneracy. The resurrection of Christ assures us further that God, who changes not, is carrying out the stupendous plan of salvation which he at first arranged, concerning which the Apostle prayed that the early church might more and more have the eyes of their understanding opened, that they might be able to comprehend with all saints the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the love of God, which passeth all understanding.

This great, wide and deep and high plan of God relates to and has blessing for every member of our fallen race. As all who are in Adam shared his penalty, so all who shall come into obedient relation with Christ will in Him share the life which He has secured for the race. As yet only the church, only the "little flock," have had the eyes of their understanding and the ears of appreciation opened to grasp the situation and to appreciate the love of God which passeth all understanding.

This "little flock"—as we shall see, the Lord willing, next Sunday—is to have a special resurrection to spiritual favors and blessings and position, and from that standpoint in association with the Lord shall dispense blessings to the whole world of mankind in due time.

The due time for the world to have its resurrection privileges will be the next age, but this also we leave for consideration next Lord's day. Today we are dealing with the fundamental fact that our dear Redeemer died for our sins, and, as the apostle expresses it, "rose again on the third day from the dead for our justification." Blessed are our eyes and our ears which see and hear now of the grace of God! A special blessing comes to all of us who thus learn in advance of the world of the precious boon secured by the dear Redeemer's death, and which He lives to bestow. The bestowment of this blessing upon the world waits for the election of the church, the bride class, to be joint heirs with Jesus in His heavenly kingdom.

In view of this wonderful outcome—in view of how much was dependent upon the Lord's death, and then dependent upon his resurrection and is still dependent upon His coming in the power of His kingdom to pour out the blessings secured by his death—how much may we rejoice today and give glory to God that the grave no longer holds our Master. We rejoice that the bars of the prison house of death have been broken so far as He is concerned, and that shortly they shall be broken so far as the church, His consort, is concerned, and that the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall come forth—shall be released or have the opportunity of being released, from the bonds of death, as well as the bonds of sin, shall have the privilege of being delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

We do not wonder that farther along in the same chapter in which our text is found, the apostle—still discussing this momentous question of the resurrection of our Lord and its import of resurrection to the church and to the world—pointing down into the future accomplishment of divine promises, breaks out into the exclamation, "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory. O, death! Where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ”—victory over sin, victory over death!

Our Lord’s last great message to His people refers to the same victory, triumphantly saying: “I am He that was dead (not merely apparently dead, but really so) and, behold, I am alive forever more, and have the keys (the authority, the power over) death and hades (the grave or death state).”—Rev. 1:18

GOOD TREASURE AND EVIL TREASURE

Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny spoke twice yesterday to good audiences at Baltimore. His afternoon subject was, “The Divine Program an Index to the Divine Character.” The evening subject was, “Why Is the Gate So Difficult and the Way So Narrow Leading Unto Eternal Life, and Will They Always Be So?” The close attention given indicated clearly the interest felt in these weighty topics. The use of the “Chart of the Ages,” illustrating these subjects, while doubtless helpful to the hearers, rendered the matter of reporting more difficult. A synopsis of the two discourses follows:

The text for the afternoon was, “A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil.”—Luke 6:45 The speaker said:

Unbelief, infidelity, scans the work of God and judges it along the lines of our text, saying that if this be sound logic in respect to the conduct of a man, it must be equally a proper basis of judgment respecting the divine character—that if God be a good being His work as represented in the world must be a good work; and that if His work in the world be an evil one, it must be understood to imply an evil heart, an evil disposition. We cannot object to the terms of this criticism—surely right is right and wrong is wrong wherever found, irrespective of the person, his greatness or his littleness.

We must meet infidelity upon this reasonable platform, and must Answer--its charge: “If there is a God, He is an evil being, because evil, sin, trouble, sorrow, pain abound in the world.” Many Christian people find themselves weak at this important juncture, so that instead of being able to refute the charges of infidelity and atheism, they are obliged to take refuge in flight and in a closing of their minds, refusing to consider a question which they recognize as being reasonable, namely: “How does your God justify His claims respecting His justice, wisdom, love and power?”

We hope, dear friends, that one result of this series of meetings for Bible study will be the refreshment of your own hearts respecting the divine character, as illustrated in the divine plan; and that a secondary result will be your ability henceforth to so comprehend the divine program that it will justify the divine character in your own judgments, and will enable you to so present it to others that they, too, may be able to glorify God in their minds as well as in their conduct.

We have but one text book on this subject, the Bible; but by the grace of God it not only gives us the history of the world for the 4,000 years up to the Christian era, but through its promises and prophecies it unfolds the story of the present and also of the future. In the light of the past, the present and the future as presented to us in God’s revelation, we have an all-sufficient Answer--to every objection that can be urged from the standpoint of infidelity. Here we have the firm foundation of which the poet wrote, saying:

*“How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent Word
What more can He say than to you He hath said?
You, who unto Jesus for refuge have fled.”*

In coming to the Word of God for enlightenment we must beware of human tradition, which has done so much to confuse and bewilder, not only the world, but many of those who reverence and study the Scriptures. The Lord remarked this at His first advent, saying to some of the prominent teachers of that time: “Ye do make void the Word of God through your traditions.” Everywhere the Scriptures urge the Lord’s people to search the Scriptures. The Apostle Peter suggests to us that it is a lamp shining in a dark place until the day’s dawn--until the dawn of the Millennial day, the age which is to follow the present one. The intimation is that there is a great deal of darkness surrounding us on the divine plan at the present time, and hence that we as the Lord’s people need His Word and need to have it unobscured by human philosophies and theories. The same thought is presented to us by the Lord through the Prophet Isaiah, saying: “Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people” (Isa. 60:2). The Psalmist David prophetically represents the Lord’s consecrated church and says: “Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, an lantern to my footsteps” (Psa. 119:105). The intimation is the same that prevails throughout the Scriptures--that darkness is everywhere and that the only light that we have is in God’s revelation. The suggestion further is that this lamp is not one which enlightens a large space, but is merely for the immediate steps of the Lord's people, the illustration being that of a lamp fastened to the sandal to shed its light upon the immediate path of the traveler.

THE WORLD BY WISDOM KNOWS NOT GOD

The wisdom of this world, which God calls foolishness, but which calls itself light—philosophies, science, higher criticism, etc.—tells us that the Bible is not trustworthy, that it is foolishness, that it is read in the rocks that creation came purely and simply by processes of evolution, and that if there is a God, and if He had anything to do with creation, it was a very insignificant part that he played. It tells us that in the process of evolution monkeys, baboons and apes were finally produced, and that a still further step in the same process developed Father Adam, the first man, and that consequently he was but one removed from the monkey; that the process of evolution has been gradually and grandly lifting up the race, until it has attained its present degree of individual development; that their hopes are that nothing will occur to interfere with this good progress, and that in time men may be developed into gods. Indeed, some “higher critics” seem to think that they are very nearly at that point now—they are wise, they know all about it, they are better able to instruct us than any teachers who ever were in the world; they are sure of this, but we doubt it. We tell them that “the world by wisdom knows not God,” and that in God's Word we find a more excellent way. They were taught that we must base everything upon the testimony of the Bible, and they claim that they themselves are far superior to the God of the Bible as represented in His workmanship in nature and His messages in the Scriptures.

We reply, Not so! They have misunderstood the Scriptures. They have misinterpreted them. Their attempt to mix philosophy with divine revelation has confused them and made void certain teachings of the Scriptures necessary to be appreciated in order that the harmony and reasonableness of the divine plan and the divine character be seen.

Let us take up the scriptural view of this matter, dear friends, and note the declaration of the Bible to the effect that God specially created our first parents—not in the image and likeness of monkeys, but in His own image, in His own likeness—not imperfect, but, as declared by the Prophet David, a little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honor, as God's representative in the earth, the ruler and king of earth. Science tells us that there was no place in the world fit for a perfect man six thousand years ago. The Scriptures agree that the world in general was not in a condition fit for perfect humanity, but explain to us that God prepared for father Adam a suitable place, an Eden, a paradise, where everything was beautiful to look upon and where a full provision was made for everything necessary for his comfort and sustenance. The Scriptures explain that Adam was given a trial for life or for death, and that by choosing a course of disobedience he chose the course which he knew would result in death. They tell us the divine sentence passed upon him. They explain to us the laws of heredity, that all of his posterity inherited the bane, the curse, the sentence of death, and that in consequence we are all born in sin, and sickness and sorrow and pain attend us more or less directly and insistently from the cradle to the grave.

Infidelity points us to the barbarous and degraded and semi-civilized, and tells us that all men were thus once low and that evolution has been lifting them up. The Scriptures tell us through the Apostle Paul that these degraded conditions of the world are the results of sin and wilfulness. The apostle says that when they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful; therefore, God gave them over to a reprobate mind and to the doing of those things which were not proper, and they defiled and degraded themselves. (Rom. 1:21-28) The apostle points out to us God's foreknowledge of our fallen conditions, and His compassion for us, and His arrangement for our redemption from the curse of sin—from death, the penalty of sin. He tells us that as the whole race sprang from one man, and that one man was a sinner upon whom the sentence came personally, and through whom it came to all his posterity naturally by heredity, so if one man could have been found perfect he could have redeemed the first man, had he been willing to sacrifice his life for the purpose. But we are assured that there is none righteous, no, not one; that not one of our race is able to give to God a ransom for his brother, and hence the case was hopeless so far as we were concerned. The apostle explains that God Himself provided the ransom in the person of His Son, who left the glory of the Father and who became "the man Christ Jesus:" in order that He might "by the grace of God taste death for every man"—in order that He might thus pay the penalty for Adam, and release Adam and all of his posterity from the sentence of death—that he might make possible the resurrection of the race.

The Scriptures show us that the Lord Jesus fulfilled the divine program to the extent of giving His life as our redemption price, that He finished the work given Him to do, that He then ascended up on high, and that every preparation is thus made whereby God can be just and yet justify him that believeth in Jesus. These have been privileged to believe in Jesus Christ during this Gospel age, and to receive a blessing corresponding to their faith and their conscience, and this class is the Church, the Bride of Christ, and the household of faith, whose numbers all together are small.

The Scriptures clearly set forth that God's plan is not yet ended, that a very important part of it is yet future, and that part is the establishing of a reign of righteousness in the world and the blessing of all mankind with a knowledge of God and of His gracious arrangements on their behalf through Jesus, and of an opportunity for all to return to harmony with God and to return, proportionately, to all the blessings that were originally bestowed upon father Adam, lost by his disobedience and redeemed for us by Christ. The period of this blessing and uplifting and recovery of the world from sin and death and of their reconciliation to God, is the Millennial age, and for it the Scriptures tell us that we should wait patiently and prayerfully. We might quote many Scriptures on the point, but remind you of the words of the Lord Jesus, "After this manner pray ye, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven."

The Apostle James exhorts the Lord's people in similar strain, saying, "Be patient, brethren; the coming of the Lord draweth nigh," and the coming of the Lord means the coming of the kingdom for which we pray and wait—the Millennial kingdom—the "kingdom of God's dear Son." And in that kingdom the believers of this present time, who manifest a sufficiency of zeal for the Lord and the principles of righteousness, are promised a share with their Lord, His words being, "Fear not, little flock; it is your father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

OUTLINE SKETCH OF GOD'S GREAT PLAN

Now, dear friends, we have before us in our minds, I trust, a hastily-drawn sketch of the entire plan of salvation—the sketch which the Scriptures give us. Everything else in the Scriptures serves merely to fill in this general grand outline. Whoever can realize what we have presented to be the divine program must acknowledge that it is sublimely grand, that it meets the necessities of the case. Those who accept this as the truth, as the teaching of God's word, find in it a solution of every difficulty that has ever perplexed their hearts and heads. It shows us, "both the goodness and the severity of God." It shows us His goodness and justice in creating our race perfect; it shows us His justice in not sparing the guilty, but condemning sin to an utter overthrow. Although the experience of the past six thousand years under the reign of sin and death have been terrible experiences for our race; nevertheless, disobedience to God has merited the results—sorrow, pain and trouble. Whoever rightly learns the lesson, learns, as the apostle says, of the exceeding sinfulness of sin and its undesirability. Whoever learns this lesson to advantage, is profited by it forever.

In the arrangements for man's redemption from sin and its penalty, death, the love of God is manifested—"The great love wherewith He loved us even while we were yet sinners." God could indeed have hindered our first parents from disobeying Him, but in so doing He would have been violating one feature of His purpose. He desired man to be in His own likeness, free to choose between good and evil. Had He compelled obedience it would have meant the taking away of the choice, and hence would have meant the destruction of his free agency, and to that extent his likeness to his Creator. The plan that God did adopt preserved to man the liberties first granted him, but allowed him to experience the unwisdom of disobedience. The experience, we believe, has taught some of us a great lesson, and will ultimately teach a similar lesson to many when they shall come to have a knowledge and an opportunity for a different course, as we now have.

From this standpoint all the bitter experiences of the race for the past 6,000 years have been a legitimate and natural fruitage of sin, yet with it all there has been enough of hope and joy and pleasure to make life not only enjoyable but a blessing for which we might all well give thanks to our Creator, even had He made no provision for our recovery from sin and death to a future life and future blessings. The difficulty with infidelity and to a large degree the difficulty, too, with those who seek to know the Lord, is expressed in the words of the poet Cowper:

*“Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.”*

Unbelief is always blind, and this is the great difficulty with the whole world. As the apostle declares, they are blind—“The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not.” Many of the Lord’s professed followers believe very little, have very little faith in the Lord, very little trust in His word, and hence give it comparatively little study. It is due time, dear friends, that we should all wake up from this lethargy and realize that we are now living in a shaking time, and that whoever does not speedily become established in the truth of the divine plan will be shaken from all faith in the Scriptures, after the manner of the higher critics of the present time, who occupy the same position of unbelief that was prominently marked a century ago by the writings of Voltaire, Paine and more recently Ingersoll.

The key to the whole situation—the key that opens before us the divine plan—is the testimony of the Bible that our Lord Jesus gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. Not merely the church was ransomed but the whole world, and this matter is to be testified not merely to the church but to the whole world—“in due time.”

(1 Tim. 2:6) Whoever sees this clearly and distinctly sees in it the fulfillment of God’s promise to Abraham, that in the seed of Abraham, Christ, all the families of the earth shall yet be blessed. Whoever sees this by faith sees that the blessing is to come in the Millennial age through the great King, the antitype of David.

Our examination of the chart has shown us what have been the facts of the case; that sin and death have been reigning from Adam's time to the present time. It has illustrated to us the spark of hope which God's promise to Abraham ignited, and how that hope exercised an influence in the Jewish nation, and how it began to reach a realization in the end of the Jewish age, when our dear Redeemer appeared amongst men, and bought us with His precious blood. That hope is an anchor still to our souls, to us who believe God's promises, and who are hoping for the fulfillment of them in God's due time in the kingdom of his dear Son. We have seen that this Gospel age is the special time in which God is making a selection from amongst men of some of these believers to be joint-heirs with His Son in the kingdom, and that the Millennial age will be the time of glorious consummation, in which the light of truth will shine forth as the brightness of the sun, scattering all the darkness and unbelief and misunderstandings which now prevail amongst men. It is our joy, our privilege, dear friends, to see this harmony of the divine plan in advance of its fulfillment; but it can be seen only by the eye of faith through the word of God, which beholds this completion of the divine plan in harmony with the divine character, in the light of the divine word.

We hold this, dear friends, that the divine program, as outlined in the scriptures is an index to the divine character, and that it shows the character of God to be perfect, in justice, in love, in wisdom, in power. The world sees not all this as yet, but we may see it and we may rejoice accordingly. In due time the knowledge of the Lord, the knowledge of His wisdom and love, justice and power, shall fill the whole earth, and corresponding blessings shall come to every creature with that knowledge, and, we believe, a corresponding desire in the hearts of the great majority of mankind to return to the God-likeness from which our first parents and their posterity fell.

THE DIFFICULT GATE AND THE NARROW WAY

Pastor Russell's evening discourse was also from the chart of the ages, his text being "Strait (difficult) is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (Matt. 7:14) He said:

Our Lord's words are most reasonable when rightly understood, but most unreasonable as viewed by the vast majority of those who read them. To the majority, guided by the errors of the creeds of Christendom, the thought is that God—because of original sin, because of Adam's disobedience in Eden—sentenced him and all of his posterity to an eternity of torture, but that God more or less relented and made the provision for the saving of a "little flock," and that in pursuance of this plan He made a way by which the world could come from its broad, downward road of sin and degradation by a "narrow" obscure path, very difficult to travel, back to divine favor and everlasting bliss. The thought is sure to come to every reasoning mind that a great and good Creator would make a way of escape from eternal torment that would not be so very narrow nor so very difficult to find, nor so very difficult to walk in after it was once found. Reverence for God struggles in the minds of many of His dear children in the doubts and fears and rebellious sentiments engendered by these misconceptions of the divine arrangement. The scriptures declare that the liberal soul devises liberal ways. How then shall we see that our God is a liberal God when devising "narrow" ways?

The whole matter is confusing until we recognize two things:

First—That the world is not on its way to eternal torment; that God made no such penalty for sin. That theory was concocted in the "dark Ages" and is of the Adversary and not of God. It is contrary to His Word as well as contrary to His character. We cannot go into the details of this study now, but, realizing its importance to all of the Lord's people, we have prepared a pamphlet which discusses the subject amply, and examines every text having the least shadow of bearing upon it, from Genesis to Revelation. This pamphlet we offer you free; they can be had from the ushers as you leave this room, and if there be not a sufficiency to supply all who desire them drop me a postal card at Allegheny, Pa., and I will be pleased to supply you without charge. The public has been misled respecting this subject of eternal torment, not only by some mistranslations of the original text, which we show, but also by a false interpretation thrown upon the present translation.

This flashlight from the Dark Ages has taught us to attach a different meaning to words when we read them in the Bible from that which properly belongs to them, and which we attach to them when we read them elsewhere. For instance, the false theory has led us, in reading the Scriptures "All the wicked will God destroy," to understand it to mean the very reverse—that all the wicked will God preserve for torture at the hands of devils. When we read in the Scriptures, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," we have been mistaught that this means the reverse of what it says—that it means that their soul will not die; that the soul of the sinner will be preserved and tortured to all eternity. When we read that "the enemies of the Lord shall perish" and that they shall be "destroyed with an everlasting destruction," we have been mistaught that we should understand the meaning to be the reverse—namely, that they will not perish, that God will hinder them from perishing, and that, instead of being destroyed with an everlasting destruction, they will be preserved with an everlasting preservation that they may be tortured. I leave this subject, dear friends, with you and your Bible and the little helping pamphlet which I offer you without cost, which will, under the blessing of God, guide you to a clearer understanding of His plan and His character, by helping you to rightly divide the Word of Truth and to understand it and get your minds free from the gross darkness of the Dark Ages, which still beclouds in many hearts and minds the beauty of the divine plan and character.

Two—The second thing necessary to be remembered is that which we pointed out this afternoon, namely, that the world in general has not yet enjoyed the privileges and blessings secured for “every man” by the death of Christ—that these blessings and privileges and opportunities for returning to divine favor are to reach the whole world of mankind in due time—in the coming age. On this subject we will have something to say on next Lord’s Day when considering the Day of Judgment.

With these two matters out of our way, namely, the thought that men are under sentence of eternal torment, and the equally unscriptural thought that their whole opportunity for return to divine favor is limited to the present age—with these two difficulties out of the way, we are prepared to examine what the Scriptures have to say about the narrow way, and why it is so narrow.

It is sin that makes it narrow, difficult. God’s law is perfect and unchangeable. Its provision is that none may have everlasting life except as they shall be obedient to that law in the present time. Because of the fallen condition of the world of mankind “sin abounds,” and because of our own share in this fallen condition, any and every attempt to live in harmony with God brings into opposition not only the interests of our friends and neighbors, but also arouses in ourselves opposition of the flesh, opposition of the fallen tendencies of our nature. And when once we set out to walk in the footsteps of Jesus, to walk in harmony with the law of love, it means besetment from the world and besetment from our own flesh; and the Scriptures teach us that still further it means the besetment of the Adversary to the extent that he has power and influence in the affairs of earth. It is no wonder, then, if we find the way to God, the way of obedience to the perfect law of God, love, to be a narrow way, a difficult way. When we come to understand the matter we see readily enough that this way could not be otherwise than it is under present conditions.

But will present conditions always continue? Will it always be so difficult to go in the way that we desire to go—in the way of obedience to the law of God, which we recognize to be just and right and good? No! The Lord assures us that the time is coming when Satan shall be bound—when he shall be restrained of his liberty and power in respect to opposition to the truth and misrepresentation of things that are right and opposition to the Lord and to His people. More than this, we are assured that the blinding influence which he now exerts over the world of mankind will cease, the truth will no longer appear unreasonable and error no longer appear light, because the true light shall shine and all darkness shall be scattered. This will be in the Millennial day, during the reigning of the glorious kingdom of God's dear Son, which shall scatter the night of sin and ignorance and prejudice and superstition, and usher in the knowledge of the Lord, full, clear and blessed.

Under those new conditions, the Scriptures assure us, the "highway of holiness" will be opened and that there will be no difficulties in the way. The stones of misrepresentation and misunderstanding will all be gathered out—it will be a highway comparatively easy to travel. The adversary's agents will no longer be permitted to entrap, ensnare and stumble those who, under the knowledge of that time, desire to walk in the ways of righteousness. The declaration in symbolic language is, "No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast." (Isa. 35:8-9.) We all know that these ravenous beasts of the fallen condition prevail now, seeking to devour at every step, or at least to intimidate us in our endeavors to walk in the "narrow way." We are glad to know of the glorious time coming, when everything shall be so favorable, and when the world of mankind shall have such gracious opportunities for returning to divine favor and regaining all that was lost in Eden, at the hands of Him who "redeemed us with His own precious blood."

GOD'S WAY NOT UNJUST

But, some one will say, perhaps, "Then there is injustice with God. We of the present time find the way narrow, whereas others of the future will find it pleasant and a delightful way to walk, in harmony with the Lord, up to the grand perfection of restitution and everlasting life." No, we answer; there is no unrighteousness with God. We of the present time, who see this narrow way, are invited to walk therein in the footsteps of the Master; but we are not compelled to take this course. It is a privilege, not an obligation, to enter at the straight gate. Nevertheless, whoever enters the straight gate of consecration binds himself, obligates himself, to continue in the narrow way even to its end; but there is no compulsion respecting consecration. That is left open to ourselves—the Lord graciously telling us something respecting the privileges and blessings that will accrue to those who walk this narrow way faithfully.

But what advantage could come to this class that would offset the differences between the narrowness of the present way and the blessings and privileges and freedom of the highway in the coming age? Ah, we answer, much advantage every way, so that those who have entered the straight gate and walked for a time in the narrow way and been granted the privilege of seeing the favors and blessings of the Lord attaching to them as followers in the footsteps of Jesus—these would not for a moment think of exchanging the privileges and opportunities of the “narrow way” for the blessings and privileges of the “highway” of the future. Let me explain this matter and illustrate it to you from the chart. Here we see that the narrow way was the way that our Lord Jesus took, the way of self-denial, the way of self-sacrifice, the way of righteousness, and we see the high reward of His course. The apostle expresses the matter in these words, speaking of our Lord Jesus, “Him hath God highly exalted, and given Him a name that is above every name.” He has just explained that this favor to our Lord Jesus as a direct result of His obedience to His Father’s plan, His obedience unto death, even the death of the cross. Phil. 2:8-11.

During this Gospel age a limited number have been invited to association with the Lord in the sufferings of this present time—the sufferings and trials and difficulties of this narrow way—and to a share also in the glorious life on a higher plane which is its reward at the farther end. Our Lord spoke of this to some in His day, saying that none could be His disciples unless they would take up their cross to follow Him, and He urged that none do this except after they had first sat down and counted the cost. He assured us that the cost of discipleship would be the cost of everything of an earthly kind—the cost of every earthly interest and ambition would signify the full surrender of our hearts, of our wills, in every matter to do the Father’s will, but that the reward would be exceeding great, beyond all that we could have asked or thought.

My dear friends, I trust that a considerable number of those whom I address this evening are the Lord’s consecrated people, who have taken up their crosses that they may be followers of the Lord Jesus, that they may walk in this “narrow way,” and that they may gain in the end the life eternal with the Lord, the glory, honor and immortality of the divine nature, which the Lord promises not only to our Lord Jesus, but to all those who should thus be identified with Him who in the Scriptures are described figuratively as members of His body and again as His bride and joint heirs. I trust that, seeing distinctly what this narrow way is and to what it leads, may make us all the more earnest in our walk therein—that we may walk faithfully, perseveringly, counting not our lives dear unto us that we might win Christ and share with the Anointed One in the glorious company of the future, which is to be the kingdom of God and which is to bring blessing and uplift to the world of mankind. Those who thus see the glorious outcome of the narrow way will not begrudge the world the blessings and opportunities of the highway of holiness which will be opened up immediately that the kingdom is established and Satan is bound. Nay, we rejoice in the narrow way and in the privilege of walking therein, and we may continually give thanks to God for this great privilege of walking therein, and we may continually give thanks to God for this great privilege of suffering with Christ that we may also reign with Him—dying with Him that we may also live with Him and be joint heirs with Him in the kingdom.

The Lord willing, dear friends, we will next Lord's day, in the afternoon, consider the significations of the Day of Judgment and the great blessings that it means for the world of mankind, and in the evening our topic, "The Grand Consummation of the Divine Plan," will close this series of Chart Talks. Our hope, our endeavor, is that as we get clearer views of the divine purposes and arrangements, set forth in God's Word, we may be drawn nearer to our Redeemer in word and conduct—that thus His prayer for us shall be fulfilled, "Sanctify them through Thy truth; Thy word is truth."

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT GENERALLY MISUNDERSTOOD

Pastor Charles T. Russell of Allegheny visited Baltimore yesterday and in the afternoon and evening spoke to large audiences in Lehman's Music hall. His afternoon discourse was on the subject, "The Day of Judgment Generally Misunderstood," and in the evening "The Great Consummation." Both were illustrated by the Chart of the Ages. Mr. Russell's afternoon address follows:

I combine three texts in one, assuring you that examination of the contexts of the different citations will prove that they are properly used in harmony, as follows:

"God hath appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained"—"Jesus Christ, the righteous." "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son."—Acts 17:31, 1 John 2:1, John 5:22

Very vague and indefinite ideas prevail in regard to the day of judgment. The view generally entertained is that Christ will come to earth, seated upon a great white throne, and that He will summon saint and sinner in rank and file before Him to be judged, amid great convulsions of nature—earthquakes, opening graves, rending rocks and falling mountains; that the trembling sinners will be brought from the depth of woe to hear their sins rehearsed, only again to be returned to an eternal and merciless doom; and that the saints will be brought from heaven to witness the misery and despair of the condemned, to hear again the decision in their own cases, and to return.

POPULAR BUT ERRONEOUS THEORY

According to the prevailing theory all receive their sentence and reward at death; and this second judgment, which by way of distinction is commonly called “the general judgment,” is merely a repetition of that first judgment, but for no conceivable purpose, since they claim that a decision which is final and unalterable is rendered at death.

The entire time supposed to be assigned to this stupendous work of judging billions is a 24-hour day. A discourse recently delivered in the Brooklyn tabernacle voiced the general view on this subject. It affected to give a detailed account of the work of the day of judgment, representing it as completed within the limits of a single literal day.

This is a very crude conception, and is entirely out of harmony with the inspired word. It is drawn from a too literal interpretation of our Lord’s parable of the sheep and the goats. (Matt. 25:31-46) It illustrates the absurdity of attempting to force a literal interpretation upon figurative language. A parable is never an exact statement, but merely an illustration of a truth by something which is in many respects like it. If this parable were a literal statement of the manner in which the judgment will be conducted, it would apply to literal sheep and goats, just as it reads, and not to mankind at all. Let us now look at a more scriptural as well as a more reasonable view of the work and the result of the great judgment day which God hath appointed, with which reasonable and scriptural conclusions all parables and figures should and do agree.

The term “judgment” signifies more than simply the rendering of a verdict. It includes the idea of a trial, as well as a decision based upon that trial. And this is true not only of the English word judgment, but also of the Greek word which it translates.

HOW LONG IS THE DAY OF JUDGMENT?

The term day, both in the scriptures and in common usage, though most frequently used to represent a period of 12 or 24 hours, really signifies any definite or special period of time. Thus, for instance, we speak of Noah’s day, Luther’s day, Washington’s day; and thus in the Bible the entire time of creation is called a day, where we read of the “day that Jehovah God made the earth and the heavens.” (Gen. 2:4)—a long, definite period. Then we read of “the day of temptation in the wilderness”—40 years (Heb. 3:8-9); “the day of salvation” (2 Cor. 6:2); also “the day of vengeance,” “the day of wrath” and the “the day of trouble”—terms applied to a period of 40 years in the close of the Jewish age, and to a similar period of trouble in the end of the Gospel age. Then again we read of the “day of Christ,” the “day of judgment,” “His day”—terms applicable to the Millennial age, in which Messiah shall reign over, rule and judge the world in righteousness, granting trial as well as rendering sentence. And of that period it is written: He shall judge the world in righteousness, and in His day shall show who is that blessed and only potentate, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords. (Acts 17:31; 1 Tim. 6:15) Why any should suppose this day of judgment to be of 12 or 24 hours, while recognizing the wider meaning of the word in other similar cases, is beyond comprehension, except upon the supposition that they have been influenced by tradition, without proper evidence or investigation.

Those who will carefully consult a complete concordance of the Bible with reference to the day of judgment, and note the kind and amount of work to be accomplished within that period, will soon see the absurdity of the common view, and the necessity for giving to the term day its wider significance.

While the scriptures speak of a great judgment or trial day yet future, and show that the masses of mankind are to have their complete trial and final sentence in that day, they also teach that there have been other judgment days, during which certain elect classes have been on trial.

THE FIRST JUDGMENT OF MANKIND

The first great judgment (trial and sentence) was at the beginning in Eden, when the whole human race, as represented in its head, Adam, stood on trial before God. The result of that trial was the verdict; Guilty, disobedient, unworthy of life; and the penalty inflicted was death—“dying, thou shalt die.” (Gen. 2:17, margin.) And so “in Adam all die.” That trial time in Eden was the world’s first judgment day, and the decision of the Judge (Jehovah) has ever since been enforced.

“The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness.” It may be seen in every funeral procession. Every tomb is a witness to it. It is felt in every ache and pain we experience—all of which are the results of the first trial and sentence—the righteous sentence of God, that we are unworthy of life and the blessings originally provided for man when obedient and in God’s likeness. But mankind has been redeemed from the sentence of that first trial by the one sacrifice for all, which the great Redeemer gave. All are redeemed from the grave and from the sentence of death—destruction—which, in view of this redemption, is no longer to be considered death in the full, everlasting sense of the word, but rather a temporary sleep because in the Millennial morning all will be awakened by the Life-Giver who redeemed all. Only the church of believers in Christ are yet in any sense released or “escaped” from this original sentence and penalty; and their escape is not yet actual, but only so reckoned by faith. “We are saved by hope” only. Our actual release from this death penalty (incurred in Adam and escaped from by getting into Christ) will not be fully experienced until the resurrection morning, when we shall be satisfied to awake in our Redeemer's likeness. But the fact that we who have come to a knowledge of God's gracious plan in Christ "have escaped the corruption that is (still) on the world," so far from proving that others will have no future hope of escape, proves rather the contrary of this, for we are "first fruits unto God of his creatures." (James 1:18) Our escape from death in Adam to life in Christ is but a foretaste of the deliverance of whosoever wills to be delivered from the bondage of corruption (death) to the liberty of life proper to all whom God shall recognize as sons. All who will may be delivered from death to life, regardless of the distinctions of nature God has provided for his sons on different planes of being. The Gospel age is the trial day for life or death to those called and accepted to the house of spiritual sons.

WHY ANOTHER JUDGMENT

Our text declares, "God hath appointed a day, in the which He will judge the world." How can this be? Has God changed His mind? Has He concluded that His decision in the trial of the first man and the general sentence were unjust, too severe, that He now concludes to judge the world individually? No. Were such the case, we should have no better guarantee of a just decision in the future trial than in the past. It is not that God considers His decision in the first judgement unjust, but that he has provided a redemption from the penalty of the first judgment, in order that He might grant another judgment (trial) under more favorable conditions to the entire race—all of whom will then have had experience with sin and its results. God has not changed one iota from his original purpose, which he formed before the world began. He distinctly informs us that He changes not, and that He will by no means clear the guilty. He will exact the full penalty which He justly pronounced. But that full penalty has been paid by the Redeemer or substitute whom God Himself provided—Jesus Christ, who "by the grace (favor) of God tasted death for every man." Our Lord having bought Adam and his race, with his own life, can now legally, justly give a new offer of life to them all. And this offer to all is called the new covenant, sealed, ratified or made operative by His death. Rom. 14:9; John 5:22; Heb. 10:16-29; 13:20-21

We are further informed that when God gives the world this individual trial it will be under Christ as judge, whom Jehovah will thus honor because of his obedience even unto death for our redemption. God has highly exalted Him, even to the divine nature, that He may be a "prince and a Savior" (Acts 5:31), that he may be able to recover from death and grant judgment to all whom He purchased with His own precious blood. God has “committed all judgment unto the Son,” and has given Him all power in heaven and in earth. John 5:22

It is, then, the highly exalted, glorified Christ, who so loved the world as to give His life as its ransom price, who is to be the judge of the world in its promised future trial. And it is Jehovah Himself who has appointed Him to that office, for that very purpose. Such are the plain declarations of the Scriptures. There is nothing to dread, but on the contrary there is great cause for rejoicing on the part of all in looking forward to the judgment day. The character of the Judge is a sufficient guarantee that the judgment will be just and merciful, and with due consideration for the infirmities of all, until the willing and obedient are brought back to the original perfection lost in Eden.

GENERAL CONCEPTION WHOLLY ERRONEOUS

When the apostle declares we must all give account for the deeds done in the body, he is not referring to the world’s judgment day—he is not referring to the world at all, but to “we,” the church class whom he is addressing. We have had special light and special favor, the eyes of our understanding being more or less opened. We have entered into a special covenant relationship with God as spiritual Israel, and have been by Him passed from death unto life, passed from the condition of sinners to the condition of sons. We have been reckoned as members of the body of Christ, the church. It is this class that must give an account of the deeds done in the body whether they be good or bad; not only the deeds done in our own flesh, but still more particularly the deeds done in the body of Christ, which is the church. Our doing or not doing good or evil will have to do with our attaining the great prize set before us in the gospel. If we are faithful to our covenant the Lord will be faithful to give us the promised joint-heirship with Christ in the kingdom; if unfaithful to any extent we will proportionately lose; and to repudiate our covenant entirely would be to us the sin unto death from which there would be no recovery, no resurrection, no hope—the “second death.”

But before we could enter into covenant relationship with God, or in any sense of the word be on trial for life, we need first to be justified—cleared, released—from the death sentence which was against us as well as against the whole of Adam’s race. We were “children of wrath” even as others; we were under condemnation with the remainder of the world; but we have escaped the “condemnation which is on the world” through a knowledge of Christ, through faith in His precious blood, which reckonedly justifies us to life. Were it not for this reckoned release from death, this justification from sin and its death penalty, we could have no standing before God and could not in any sense of the word enter upon a life or death trial.

Do we not see then that the world is not now on trial in this sense; that the sentence of the original trial still rests upon the human family as a whole, and that only a small minority has by the grace of God escaped from that condemnation? Let us remember the words of the apostle, “The whole world lieth in the wicked one.” (1 John 5:19) Let us remember that if we who have believed have escaped the condemnation, then those who do not believe have not escaped the condemnation but are still under it—still under the sentence of death originally pronounced against Father Adam and his entire offspring.

THIS RAISES SEVERAL QUESTIONS

(1) Is it God’s purpose to discriminate amongst the children of Adam, and to allow some to escape from the sentence and to have a new trial, with the possibility of gaining eternal life through obedience, and not to grant such an opportunity to all? Is it God’s purpose that only a comparatively small number who have heard of and believed in Christ, and thus been justified, shall have any further trial than that which occurred in Eden, under which everything was lost, including life itself?

(2) Did Christ not give himself a “ransom for all—to be testified in due time?” (1 Tim. 2:6) Is it reasonable to believe that the ransom given for all will be available only for the comparatively few who have heard of it, who have believed in it unto justification—whose ears and eyes of understanding have been opened?

(3) If only those can be on trial for a future life who have been released from the sentence of the first trial, and if these consist only of the true believers, who therefore are by the grace of God now experiencing their second trial or second judgment, is it reasonable to suppose that the great majority of mankind who have not seen, who have not heard, who have not comprehended the love of God in Christ, and who, therefore, are still under the original sentence and not in a condition to be tried again, to be judged again—is it reasonable to suppose that these will have no judgment, no trial, no forgiveness, no opportunity for demonstrating their willingness to obey the Lord, to walk in the ways of righteousness and holiness?

We hold, dear friends, that according to the scriptures it has been God’s good pleasure to provide the redemption for the sins of the whole world—that our Lord Jesus should be a propitiation (satisfaction) for our sins (the church’s sins), and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world. We hold with the scriptures that the discrimination that God makes is merely in respect to the time and conditions under which all shall hear. Now the few are blessed with the opportunity under present unfavorable conditions, when sin abounds and when the prince of this world opposes and hinders and seeks to stumble men. By and by the many will be granted their opportunity, their second trial or judgment secured by the death of Christ for all; and theirs will be under more favorable conditions than the present, for we are assured that then Satan will be bound that he shall deceive the nations no more.

From this, which we believe to be not only the scriptural but the rational view of this matter, everything appears reasonable and harmonious. God in the present time is doing an advance work with a few who, being justified by faith, are now being tried under very severe tests and adverse conditions. Such of these as prove loyal and faithful will have the greater reward, as they have the severer trials. To these, who are being judged in advance of the judgment day of the world, God has given exceedingly great and precious promises—spiritual, heavenly, glorious promises. These, we have seen, shall be associated with the Lord in the great work of the future—the work of blessing the remainder of mankind, who as yet are still under the original sentence, and who will not escape that condemnation until the end of this Gospel age and the inauguration of the Millennial kingdom, when all the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped, and the blessing of the Lord, which is now upon the little flock of believers only, will be extended to the whole world of mankind—making all aware of the goodness and grace of God and permitting all to participate in the forgiveness of the Adamic transgressions, and granting to all a full opportunity and individual trial for life—failure in which will mean the second death.—Acts 3:23.

THE JUDGMENT DAY IS THE MILLENNIAL DAY

This proper, this scriptural view of the great judgment day which God has promised and which is referred to in our text is thus seen to be a great blessing, the outcome or sequel of God's great provision for the sins of the world—the grand result of the great redemption sacrifice which our Savior accomplished at Calvary. How reasonable to expect just such an outcome of the divine arrangement. How reasonable to assume that God, who pronounced the penalty of death upon the race and who had executed it for the past 6,000 years, having provided the ransom for all, would eventually give all an individual opportunity for proving their loyalty to Him and His government and of thus attaining through Christ eternal life. How could we expect less than this from the great, wise, loving, just Father and Judge of all? It is just like Him, just what we would expect.

And how consistent with this view of the judgment is all that has yet been done and all that is written in the scriptures respecting it! Our Lord Jesus is presented to us as the great High Priest, who, as the great Judge, our text declares, shall judge the world in righteousness, and the church, now on trial in advance of the world, are to be His associates, the under priests; in this great work of judging—of granting the world a trial under most favorable conditions, to prove their loyalty or their disloyalty to God—their worthiness of life everlasting or of death everlasting. This priesthood, we are assured in the scriptures, is a royal priesthood—they are to be priests upon their thrones. Their work of sacrificing belongs merely to the earthly life, and will be ended entirely when the last member of the body of Christ shall have suffered with Him in the flesh and shall have been glorified beyond the veil. This royal priesthood is not selected, polished, tested and proven for no purpose; their priesthood means a future work as well as does their kingship. It means that they not only will rule the world as kings, to govern it, to bring life and order out of present selfishness and confusion and sin and death, but it means that as priests they shall dispense divine mercy, compassion and assistance to the world of mankind in that great trial day, that great day of opportunity, the Millennial day.

Let me impress upon you the words of our text, “God hath appointed a day.” The apostle does not intimate that the day had begun at the time of his writing. He points forward to it as a future thing, saying, “in the which He will judge the world.” Again we are to notice that in the scriptures the world and the church are always kept separate and distinct. The apostle does not abandon this custom. He is not referring to the church at all, but to the world aside from the church. The church is to have its trial or judgment for eternal life in advance of the world in order that it may be associated with the Lord in the kingdom, in the judgment in the blessing of all the families of the earth.

Notice again the apostle’s assurance that the world will be judged “in righteousness”—it will be an equitable trial, a fair trial. The terms and conditions of eternal life will be fairly set before every creature. All the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped. All shall hear the voice of the Son of Man, and all obedient to that voice shall live, shall be completely released from all the weaknesses and imperfections that are now upon the world as the result of the death penalty, “shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption (death) into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.” Notice in the context of this last citation, that the apostle here also is not referring to the church but to the world. In another verse, in different language, he refers to the blessing for which the church is waiting.—Rom. 8:19-22,23

PRESENT RESPONSIBILITIES NOT IGNORED

We do not wish to be understood as ignoring the present responsibility of the world which every man has, according to the measure of light enjoyed, whether it be much or little, whether it be the light of nature or of revelation. “The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good,” and “God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil.” (Prov. 15:3; Eccl. 12:14.) The good and evil deeds of the present time will receive a just recompense of reward either now or hereafter. “Some men’s sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment, and some they follow after.” (1 Tim. 5:24) However, others than the Lord’s favored “little flock” have not as yet sufficient light to incur the final penalty, the second death. We here merely broach the subject of the world’s present accountability, leaving the particulars for subsequent consideration.

A judge, in ancient times, was one who executed justice and relieved the oppressed. Note, for instance, how, when under oppression by their enemies because of transgression against the Lord, Israel was time and again released and blessed by the raising up of judges. Thus we read, “When the children of Israel cried unto Jehovah, Jehovah raised up a deliverer,... Othniel. And the spirit of Jehovah came upon him, and he judged Israel, and went out to war, and prevailed, and the land had rest for forty years.” (Judges 3:9-11) So, though the world has long been under the power and oppression of the adversary, Satan, yet shortly he who paid for the sins of all with His own precious blood will take His great power and reign. He will deliver and judge those whom he so loved as to redeem.

With this conclusion all the prophetic declarations agree. It is written: “With righteousness shall He judge the world, and the people with equity.”—Psa. 98:9

This coming judgment will be on exactly the same principles as the first. The same law of obedience will be presented, with the same reward of life, and the same penalty of death. And as the first trial had a beginning, progressed, and culminated with a sentence, so also will the second; and the sentence will be life to the righteous, and death to the unrighteous. The second trial will be more favorable than the first, because of the experience gained under the results of the first trial. Unlike the first trial, the second trial will be one in which every man will stand the test for himself alone, and not for another. None will then die because of Adam’s sin, or because of inherited imperfections. “It shall no more be said, the fathers have eaten a sour grape and the children’s teeth are set on edge; but he that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.” “The soul that sinneth, it shall die.”—Ezek. 18:4; Jer. 31:29-30

It will be true of the world then, as it is of the church now, that a man will not be judged according to that which he hath not, but according to that which he hath. (2 Cor. 8:12) Under the reign of Christ mankind will be gradually educated, trained and disciplined until they reach perfection. And when they have reached perfection, perfect harmony with God will be required, and any who then fall short of perfect obedience will be cut off—judged unworthy of life. The sin which brought death to the race through Adam was simply one disobedient act; but by that act he fell from his perfection. God had a right to demand perfect obedience of him, since he was created perfect; and he will demand the same of all men when the great work of restoring them is complete. None will be permitted to have everlasting life who then in the slightest degree fall short of perfection. To fall short of perfection then will be to sin willfully against full light and perfect ability.

Any who sin willfully against full light and ability will perish in the second death. And should any one, during that age of trial, under its full blaze of light, spurn the offered favors, and make no progress toward perfection for a hundred years, he will be reckoned unworthy of life and will be “cut off,” though at the age of a hundred years he would be in the period of comparative childhood. Thus it is written of that day: “As a lad shall one die a hundred years old; and as a sinner shall be accursed he who dieth at a hundred years old.” (Isa. 65:20—Leeser) Thus all must have at least one hundred years of trial; and, if not so obstinate as to refuse to make progress, their trial will continue throughout the entire “day of Christ,” the Millennium, reaching a culmination only at its close.

PARABLE OF THE SHEEP AND THE GOATS

While the majority of our Lord’s parables related to the church and clearly apply to this Gospel age, there is one at least which unquestionably belongs to the coming age, the Millennium. It describes the world’s judgment during that age, and finally the eternal results at its close. Since this parable of the sheep and the goats is generally supposed to apply to this present time, it may be well that I call your attention particularly to the language with which the parable is introduced. A careful study of this introduction can leave no question in the mind of any honest person that it belongs to the future and not to the present. Its opening sentence is: “When the Son of Man shall come in His glory and all His holy angels with Him, then shall He sit on the throne of His glory.” Beyond question this is a description of the second coming of the Lord, and His promise to His disciples—to all of His faithful little flock of this Gospel age—is that when He sits upon the throne of His glory we also shall share it with Him as His “joint heirs” in the kingdom. Secondly, this parable describes the glorious work of the church in conjunction with her Lord in judging and blessing the world of mankind. It describes the great uplift of humanity during the Millennium.

An announcement of the establishment of the Lord’s throne or kingdom is tantamount to the declaration that the time has come of which God spoke to Abraham, saying, “In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.” Then will be realized our Lord’s declaration to the church, “Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Then will be realized the prediction of the Prophet Daniel that "The kingdoms under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High God."

The picture of the throne of judgment in this parable of the sheep and goats is a companion picture of the one given in Revelation 20:11, where the righteousness of the judgment and reign of the Anointed One is symbolically pictured in the whiteness of the throne—its purity. In the parable we read that before that throne shall be gathered all nations. In the picture in Revelations we read, "I saw the dead (the whole world dead in sin, under sentence of death), small and great, standing before the throne. And the books were opened." The opening of the books does not mean the opening of records of every sin and imperfection of the world, for their sins and imperfections were committed while under sentence of death, and the death sentence itself was the penalty for all of that evil condition which resulted from the fall. The open books represent the opening of the divine plan, the opening of the testimony of God, the unsealing of the Scriptures, which now are wholly misunderstood by the world, and, indeed, grossly misunderstood by many professedly the Lord's people.

The books shall be opened, as our dear Redeemer said "My words shall judge you at the last day." The world is to be on trial along the lines of our Lord's teachings, and the whole record of God's faithfulness and love, compassion and mercy through Christ, and of the requirements of His law, will be laid before them during the Millennial age—during their day of trial. The record is, "They shall be judged (tried) by those things written in the books"—not according to their faith as the church is now being tried, but "according to their works." Under the new condition of things which will then obtain good works will be possible, and good works will be required at that time and under those conditions. Faith would be no longer a proper test, because faith would then be easy. It will amount to absolute knowledge.

ANOTHER BOOK OF LIFE

In the Revelation account of this judgment day the statement is made that another book of life will be opened. When we come to understand that statement it means much. It is an assurance that those who shall then demonstrate their loyalty to righteousness shall have their names written in a book of life, just as the church in the present time is assured that the faithful have their names written in the Lamb's book of life; and if they persevere faithfully their names will not be blotted out. But, as we have just seen, the book of life which is for the church is a different one, as the call of the church is different. The book of life for the church will be completed before the world's judgment day opens, and only those found written in the book of life, only the very elect, will be with the Lord in the throne and associated with Him as kings and priests and joint heirs in His kingdom, to judge and bless the world. There will be no further opportunity to be written in that book of life—no further opportunity of becoming a member of that elect class, the bride, nor of obtaining the heavenly prize which she is to attain. But, praise God, there will be the opportunity of being written in the new book of life amongst the lists of those of humanity willing to be fully obedient to the divine will—“sheep.”

The parable of the sheep and goats shows the separation of the two classes as it will progress during the Millennial age, the obedient, or sheep-like class, coming to the right hand of favor with the judge; the goat class marked for disfavor—as unworthy of life eternal because not fully submissive to the divine arrangements in their hearts. The complete separation of the sheep and the goats in the parable finds its parallel in the Revelation picture in the great testing that shall come in the end of the Millennial age to prove who are faithful to the Lord and who are unfaithful, who at heart are in harmony with Him, and who have been yielding only outward and formal obedience to escape stripes. The result as shown in both illustrations is the utter destruction of the wicked and the passing of the sheep class to everlasting blessing in the paradise of God, the restored, rejuvenated earth, the whole of which by that time will be as the Garden of Eden, thoroughly fitted to be the habitation of the perfect men to whom it will be God’s good pleasure then to turn over the kingdom, the dominion of earth, the Millennial kingdom, having served its purpose, being dissolved.

The parable shows the reward of the sheep class, saying: “Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world”—a different kingdom from that prepared for the little flock, the bride, which is declared to have been prepared before the foundation of the world. The sentence upon the goat class is also stated: “Depart, ye condemned ones, into everlasting punishment, prepared for the devil and his followers.” This punishment is generally misunderstood to be eternal torment. God has pronounced no such penalty against sinners; the extreme penalty of divine law is death, destruction, annihilation, as the apostle declares: “They shall be destroyed with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His power.” The statement, everlasting punishment, does not tell us the kind of punishment, and obliges us to look elsewhere for a particularization of it. Elsewhere we read: “The soul that sinneth, it shall die;” “The wages of sin is death.” The parable emphasizes the utter destruction by another symbol, “fire.” The fire of the parable is as symbolical as are the goats and the sheep, and as a symbol fire never represents preservation of life, but always signifies destruction. And so in this parable everlasting fire symbolizes an everlasting destruction—destruction from which there will be no recovery by resurrection or otherwise. God purposes eventually a clean universe, and this means the utter blotting out of those who will not enjoy His blessings and favors in full accord with His righteous arrangements.

LONG PERIOD OF PROBATION

A period of about 6,000 years intervenes between the world's first and second judgment days, and during this long period God has been selecting two special classes from among men, and specially trying, disciplining and training them to be His honored instruments during the period or day of the world's judgment.

Under the sophistries of the great deceiver, Satan, both the world and the church nominal have been robbed of the blessed assurances of the coming time of righteous judgment. They know that the Bible tells of a coming judgment day, but they regard it with only fear and dread; and because of this fear there is to them no more unwelcome tidings than that "the day of the Lord is at hand." They put it far away from them, and do not wish to hear it even mentioned. They have no idea of the blessings in store for the world under that glorious reign of Him whom God hath appointed "to judge the world in righteousness"—to grant the world a righteous or fair trial for life or death. Among the greatest of the blinding influences which Satan has devised to keep men in ignorance of the truth regarding the judgment day have been the errors which have crept into the creeds and hymn books of the various religious sects. Many have come to esteem these errors paramount to the Word of God.

How differently did the prophets and apostles regard that promised day of judgment! Note the exultant, prophetic utterance of David (1 Chron. 16:31-34). He says:

*"Let the heavens be glad, And let the earth rejoice;
And let men say among the nations, Jehovah reigneth,
Let the sea roar, and the fullness thereof;
Let the fields rejoice, and all that are therein.
Then shall the trees of the wood sing aloud at the presence of Jehovah,
Because He cometh
To judge the earth.
O give thanks unto Jehovah, for He is good;
For His mercy endureth forever."*

The apostle points to the same day, assuring us that it will be a glorious and desirable day, and that for it the whole creation is groaning and travailing in pain together—waiting for the great Judge to deliver and to bless the world, as well as to exalt and glorify the church.—Rom. 8:21-22

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE DAY OF PENTECOST TO THE CHRISTIAN

Pastor C. T. Russell arrived home on Saturday from attendance at a series of conventions in the west. He was in excellent health, his long and rapid journeying apparently not affecting him. A crowded audience as usual greeted him at the Bible House chapel at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. His topic was The Significance of the Day of Pentecost to the Christian, from the text:

“And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.... And they were all filled with the holy spirit.” Acts 2:1-4 The Pastor said:

I am glad to be with the home friends again, and glad to talk to you today, especially concerning the meaning of Pentecost, of which this day is the anniversary. Strictly speaking, Friday last was the exact anniversary of Pentecost, but since Pentecost the difference between the Jewish method and that now in vogue for reckoning the calendar accounts for the difference. Pentecost, however, was on a Sunday, as was also the Lord's resurrection, memorialized in what we call Passover Sunday or Easter Sunday. Christians are generally agreed that the crucifixion took place on the afternoon of the sixth day of the week, which we call Friday, that our Lord was in the tomb on the seventh day of the week, the Jewish Sabbath, which we term Saturday. The word “Pentecost” signifies the fiftieth day. These 50 days began to count from the Jewish Passover Sabbath, the 50th day of Nisan; seven times seven weeks brought the account to another Jewish Sabbath, and the 50th day following that would be the first of a new week in Jewish reckoning the 50th day or Jubilee day. This reckoning of the passover and 50th day following it, namely, Pentecost, are the beginning of the “Feast of Weeks” which the Jews celebrated year by year during their dispensation, but understood not the deep significance of the ceremonies they performed. They had no conception whatever of the antitype to which these ceremonies pointed.

I need scarcely remind you of the great transactions of that Pentecost day which followed our Lord's death and resurrection and Ascension. You will remember the account, of which our text is a portion. You remember that before leaving His followers our Lord informed them that a new dispensation was opening, and that although He had previously forbidden them to go to gentiles or Samaritans, they should understand that henceforth their message would be unrestricted to “him that hath an ear to hear” of any nation, but that their mission, their work, was to begin at Jerusalem. You recall further that our Lord admonished the disciples that they were not yet equipped for the work of the dispensation, and instructed them, saying, “Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high.” (Luke 24:49) They probably knew not how long the tarrying would be, for “the holy spirit was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified” (Luke 7:39), and they could not understand spiritual things until they obtained this blessing. True, a measure of the holy spirit had been on the apostles during our Lord’s ministry, so that they worked miracles, healing the sick, casting out devils, etc.; but the power under which they then operated was not from the Father direct, but was imparted to them by our Lord Jesus, whose representatives they were in the teaching and preaching and miracle working. However, the Lord had promised them a recognition by the Father in due time, and it was for this that they were to wait.

They were not waiting as sinners for power for repentance, for they were already believers in the Lord Jesus, accepted Him, and, more than this, they were already consecrated to the doing of the Father’s will. But, although every proper step on their part had been taken, they had not yet been acknowledged of the Father they had not yet received the spirit of adoption into His family. They had left the house of Moses, the house of servants, and had attached themselves to Jesus, the Son of God, that they might be members of the house of sons, this liberty or privilege having been accorded them (John 1:12); but now they waited for the matter to be made bonafide, actual.

MANIFESTATIONS OF THE SPIRIT

The descent of the holy spirit upon them might have been as quiet a matter as was the descent of the holy spirit upon our Lord Jesus at the time of his baptism might have been no more marked a manifestation than there is on the Lord’s people today, when, becoming united to the Lord, they become partakers of His spirit and are adopted into the Father’s family. However, it was not only in the interest of the early church, but in our interest also, that the Lord marked this great and important transaction with wonderful outward manifestations the cloven tongues and flames of fire resting upon the heads of the apostles and possible upon others, the rushing mighty wind filling the place where they were and causing some kind of sensation, the after miracle of the tongues and other gifts of the spirit. All these attestations to the momentous significations of Pentecost we may well rejoice in. They impress upon us the importance of the great events which on that day had their beginning.

What great events? We Answer--in harmony with Peter’s words that the events of that day signified, first: That the Lord, who had ascended from them 10 days before, had reached the heavenly courts, had presented to the Father the evidence of His sacrifice and had made a portion of the merit of the same applicable to His people to the household of faith to all who would believe in and accept Him as their Savior. These things were shown back in the Mosaic types; the high priest, having slain the bullock, took its blood into the Most Holy and sprinkled it upon the mercy seat, to make atonement for his body (the under priests) and for his household (the house of Levi, which typifies the household of faith all believers). As soon as the blood of the bullock was sprinkled upon the mercy seat, justice pronounced absolution of sins for the particular class for whom the blood was applied, who, therefore, were thenceforward in fellowship with God and in harmony with the blessings he had to dispense. Justice relinquished its claim and divine mercy accepted the consecrated ones as prospective members of the body of Christ as sons of God (John 1:12). Second: The sending forth of the holy spirit marked the “adoption” of these into the family of God, into joint heirship with the Lord Jesus Christ, or under another figure it marked their “espousal” as members of the prospective bride of Christ.

The Apostle Peter, explaining this matter, says that it typified that Christ was exalted to the right hand of God that He had been received into the heavenly courts with glory and distinction as an overcomer, as one who had performed the Father’s will, and to whom the high reward was given of sitting down with the Father in His throne the throne of the universe. The sending of the holy spirit upon his faithful followers was to be to them an attestation of all this and of their acceptance with the Father through Him. (Rev. 3:21) Jesus, “being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the holy spirit (the holy spirit as promised) He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear.” (Acts 2:33)

PROPHECY SHOULD BE REVERSED

Peter proceeds to point out that this pouring out of the spirit was a partial fulfillment of a prophecy made long before by the Prophet Joel respecting the “last days.” We pause here to notice that this expression “last days” is generally misunderstood. It is generally forgotten by those who study the subject that a day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and that the entire period from the creation to the full eradication of sin is a period of seven days seven periods of a thousand years each, corresponding to the seven days of the week. Joel prophesied about 800 B. C., consequently before the middle of the great week of seven thousand years, and the expression, in the last days, would therefore properly refer to the thousand-year periods with which the great week should close. As a matter of fact, this Pentecostal blessing occurred in the beginning of the fifth of these great thousand-year days. However, the Apostle Peter does not say that the Pentecostal blessing fulfilled all that was predicted by Joel, but merely that it was in his prediction a part of it. And while it was a most important part, it by no means represented the larger part of Joel's prediction. The larger part is to be fulfilled now shortly in the morning of the seventh of these great days in the Millennial morning.

Turning to Joel's prophecy we see that it has two distinct parts one part exclusively for the "servants and handmaidens" of the Lord and the other part for "all flesh." (Joel 2:28,29) Pentecost marked the pouring out of the spirit of the Lord upon servants and handmaidens, and this blessing there poured out has been for all belonging to this class throughout this Gospel Age. Pouring out of the spirit of the Lord "upon all flesh" is due at the inauguration of "the Kingdom of God's dear Son," when Satan shall be bound and when the sons of God shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, for the blessing and refreshment and restitution of all the families of the earth. (Matt. 13:43; Rom. 8:17-19; Acts 3:21)

The statement of this prophecy is an illustration of the manner in which the Lord throughout the Scriptures has stated His truth in such a form that its force and meaning should not be understood until the due time should arrive and His people should be guided by the spirit into the understanding of the same. The peculiarity of the statement is that the blessings of the Millennial age are mentioned first, and the blessings of this Gospel age last so that this reversal of the order of occurrence has put a haze upon the whole subject. Nevertheless, when we rightly consider it, the statement is properly enough applicable to all, including the church. The operation of God's love and mercy through and in conjunction with the atonement sacrifice of Christ is to bring the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all flesh, but this general outpouring will be after certain days represented in this Gospel age, the fifth day and the sixth day the fifth thousand and sixth thousand years of the great week and hence it will be in the seventh. But the blessing of the Lord's servants and handmaidens will not be after those days (the fifth and the sixth days) but "in those days." The entire matter is simple enough, plain as could be, when once the eyes of our understanding open to a comprehension of the greater heights and depths and lengths and breadths of the love of God than we had at first anticipated.

DIVISIONS OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT

The same blessing is represented similarly in the types of the "day of atonement." That day was for the purpose of making atonement for the sins of "all the people" all Israel, who typified all mankind of all nations redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, who will enter into covenant relationship with God at any time by reason of the blood of the atonement. After making this general statement respecting the whole work of the day of atonement, the type proceeds to particularize and tells first of the sacrifice of the bullock, and, as we have just seen, shows that its blood was applied in a restricted sense not for all Israel not for all the people, who will eventually become God's covenant people through the benefits of the atonement. The merits of the sacrifice of the bullock were typically applied to those constituting the under priesthood (the body of the high priest), whose antitype is the Little Flock, the Royal Priesthood, the Tribe of Levi, the priestly family, representing the antitypical "household of faith," developed before the Millennial Age. This first part of the atonement, we see, was separate and distinct from the after part of it, just as the Pentecostal blessing upon the church is separate and distinct from the after outpouring of the spirit, which is to be general upon all flesh.

The second part of the atonement sacrifice, namely, the sacrifice of the Lord's goat was performed by the same priest, and represented the participation of the Lord's faithful footstep followers with Him in this great work. It is His work, not ours' but He accepts us as members of His body and permits us as such to share with Him in His work of sacrifice. He permits us to suffer with Him, to lay down our lives for the brethren, to be dead with Him," and in all this we are counted in as "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ;" so that really the entire period from the Lord's baptism of the holy spirit down to the end of this age is the Day of Atonement. The important feature of it all was that performed by our Redeemer Himself, which He finished at Calvary. In consequence of that sacrifice, we, His consecrated followers, are "accepted in the Beloved" and privileged to die with Him as members of His body. It is to this end that the Pentecostal blessing of the holy spirit has been poured out upon the servants and handmaidens of the Lord throughout this Gospel Age to enable them to walk in the footsteps of their Lord, to present their bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God, and because counted in as members of the body of Christ and suffering in this present time to be glorified as soon as the number is complete and the sufferings and testings accomplished.

According to the type, the completion of the church the last member of the elect having made his calling and election sure, having finished his course with joy, having had fellowship with Christ in His death the blood of the second sacrifice of the atonement will be offered to justice. It is all Christ's offering, since we are nothing of ourselves, but have our entire standing before the Father as reckonedly members of the body of Christ a royal priesthood under a royal high priest. As the Father accepted first of all the atonement sacrifice and blessed our Lord and sent the Holy Spirit upon the Church, so, when the second sacrifice shall have been offered, we may be confident that the remaining portion of Joel's prophecy will have ample fulfillment the Holy Spirit will be poured out upon all flesh.

DOES NOT IMPLY UNIVERSALISM

As the Holy Spirit was poured upon the waiting believers by the Lord, so the Lord and those believers glorified with Him in the kingdom will pour out the Father's blessing of restitution, of knowledge of God and spiritual assistances, upon all mankind; and in full harmony with this is the statement of the prophet respecting that glorious millennial period, "The knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep." "And they shall no more teach every man his neighbor and every man his brother, saying, Know thou the Lord, because all shall know Him from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord." This does not mean universal salvation, but a universal opportunity for securing "the gift of God, everlasting life," on condition of obedience. As the alternative of wilful sin now incurred by the "servants and handmaids" is second death, so the same alternative will confront the world "all flesh" when blest by the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit during the Millennium.

The servants and handmaidens of the Lord have needed the refreshment and guidance of the Holy Spirit throughout this Gospel Age, and without it none of us could surely hope to fight a good fight against the world, the flesh and the adversary. Without it we should be unable to comprehend the spiritual things, and consequently unable to grasp the blessings that are freely given unto us of God in the present time, as well as unable to appreciate the things which eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor hath entered into the heart of man the things God hath in reservation for those who love Him, which God hath revealed unto us by His spirit. (1 Cor. 2:9-10) Oh, how much the Pentecostal blessing, the spirit of adoption, the seal of our sonship, means to us who are seeking to make our calling and election sure to those heavenly things to which the Lord has called us the heavenly kingdom and its glory, honor and immortality!

Let me guard you, however, against a serious error into which many saintly people seem disposed to fall. They seem to expect Pentecostal blessings individually and collectively yearly or at least every few years, and some continually entreat the Lord in every prayer for a repetition of that Pentecostal outpouring of divine favor the Holy Spirit. This is the result of a misconception. The Pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit, was not merely for nor upon the early church, but equally upon and for all of us who are their successors throughout this age. It needs no repetition. To illustrate, consider our Lord Jesus, upon whom first of all the Holy Spirit was shed forth by the Father at the time of His baptism at Jordan at the beginning of His ministry. He needed not to go yearly to Jordan to receive fresh baptism; He needed not to receive them anywhere. The baptism which He received continued with Him the Holy Spirit once granted was not withdrawn. Its withdrawal would have meant His death as a new creature. The blessing which came to the church at Pentecost was part of that same blessing which came to our Lord Jesus the Head.

The whole transaction was typically represented in the anointing of Aaron, the typical high priest. The anointing oil was all poured upon the head, and Aaron's head typified our Lord Jesus, whom God hath given to be the head over the church, which is His body. (Eph. 1:22-23) God gave not the spirit by measure unto him, is the record it was poured out without limit, without stint; but it did not reach the body until Pentecost. The body could not be accepted or recognized of the Father until the atonement for our sins had been made with the precious blood; but the atonement having been applied and accepted, the Holy Spirit was poured out. In the type this was represented by the holy anointing oil running down from the head to the body.

CHURCH ONE ANOINTED BODY

Mark how the Prophet David draws this to our attention, assuring us that the anointing oil ran down Aaron's beard and over all of his body even to the skirts of his garments. The Pentecostal blessing is abundant for all of the members of the body of Christ. When by faith and obedience, justification and sanctification, we come into membership in the body of Christ, we come under this which was represented in the type by the holy anointing oil the antitype of which is the Holy Spirit. If ever we are "cut off" as branches which do not bear fruitage, it would mean our total separation from the Lord and His spirit, the anointing which ye have received of Him and which constitutes the earnest or foretaste of our inheritance. The inheritance will be attained in the life-resurrection promised to all the faithful.

Our petitions, therefore, properly contain no requests for fresh Pentecosts, even as in the petitions of our Lord and the disciples such requests are not to be found. Nevertheless it is entirely proper for us to pray with the apostles that the Holy Spirit may "abound more and more" in us, and to be in accord with our Lord's sentiment when he said that "the Father is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that seek Him than earthly parents are to give good gifts unto their children." This giving of the Holy Spirit enjoined in the Scriptures and appreciated by us should not be confounded with the Pentecostal blessings, which was never repeated except on one occasion, namely, when the Lord marked the acceptance of Cornelius, the first Gentile convert, and thus taught the lesson that henceforth there would be no distinction between Jew and Gentile as respects the favors of the Divine promises.

What then do we mean when we ask to be more and more filled with the Holy Spirit if we do not mean new Pentecostal endowments? The thought is that when we come into union with Christ through the consecration of our hearts and wills, when we are accepted as members of His body, all the blessings of God represented at Pentecost belong to us, not as individuals but as members of the anointed church. As members of the anointed body, under divine favor and leadings, it is our privilege to grow in grace, in knowledge, and in all the fruits of the spirit, and this properly is termed the filling with the spirit. At the beginning of our consecration, we surrendered our own wills that we might take the Lord's will in every particular, that we may have the Lord's spirit in respect to all of life's affairs, but it is one thing to will and another thing to receive. The surrendering of our wills, so as to desire to have the heavenly Father's will, spirit, disposition, mind, dwell in us, is the act of a moment, but it requires days and weeks and months and years to become fully transformed by the "renewing of our minds." (Rom. 12:2)

Gradually the Lord's favor toward us, as members of the anointed body, permits us to see the lengths and breadths and heights and depths in His love and in His character, and as we see this the transforming influences in our own thoughts and conduct progress. As the spirit of the Lord comes into our lives we come more and more to love things which at one time we did not love or appreciate, and to hate things which at one time seemed to have little or nothing objectionable in them. Right and wrong have remained fixed as they were; our views of them have changed as we have, under the guidance and blessing of the Lord, made progress from grace to grace and from knowledge to knowledge.

UNCTION FROM THE HOLY ONE

Today, dear friends, as we call to mind the great Pentecostal blessings at the beginning of the age and how its favor has extended down from that time to the present time, let us rejoice before the Lord, giving thanks in Jesus' name for this great blessing, for the relationship which was there established between God and those who accepted Jesus as their Savior, and who made consecration to Him and His service. Let us ever keep in mind that the benefits of this Pentecostal fellowship with God and anointing of His spirit is found in the sacrifice which was finished at Calvary, and that the Pentecostal blessings and favors could not come until He had died and ascended up on high, there to appear in the presence of God on our behalf, and there symbolically to sprinkle the blood of atonement by which our sins are canceled.

Correct thoughts respecting this subject will not only keep us very appreciative of the relationship which we enjoy with the Father and with the Son, and in fellowship one with another as members of the anointed body of Christ, but will ever keep us humble as respects our natural condition, for it will remind us that we are by nature “children of wrath” even as others, and require even as the world the forgiveness of sins through the merit of the precious blood. Nevertheless, all who receive the anointing of the spirit will be gradually, more and more, transformed thereby in thought and word and deed. Meekness, patience, gentleness, brotherly kindness, love will gradually, more and more, be apparent, however “crooked” the natural disposition may have been. And it is our blessed consolation that the Lord accepts our heart desires in these respects in lieu of actual perfection, which will be impossible until we gain our perfect, resurrection bodies. (1 Cor. 15:42-44)

Let us carry away with us another thought, namely, that the anointing which our Lord received and that came in due time upon His church, and in which we are sharers by His grace, is an anointing for a service a double service. In olden times the kings were anointed and also the priests, and respecting the church the Lord has informed us that we are a Royal Priesthood= that in this church both the kingly and priestly offices mingle. Christ being the Chief Priest and the Chief King, and we being His associates in the glorious commission represented in the two offices. He is to be the King of the world, to bring order out of present confusion, to destroy sin and everything contrary to righteousness, but He is also to be the Great Priest, the Great Teacher, the Great Helper, to assist sinners out of all the difficulties to which they have come through disobedience, to bring back into harmony with God so many as are willing to be brought back. In this commission and glorious work of the future, we are to be joint-heirs if we make our calling and election sure, and we wait until the time shall come when the last member of the king and priest class shall have been approved of God, and the earnest or foretaste of the coming blessings shall give place to the actualities of the kingdom and its gracious work on behalf of the world of mankind.

THE GATE OF CONSECRATION

Pastor Russell of Allegheny, Pa., spoke here twice today to thoughtful audiences. His afternoon discourse was on “The Oathbound Covenant,” from Hebrews 6:17-20. His morning discourse was from the text, “Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.” (Isa. 62:10) He said:

The Lord’s messages through His prophets of old were stated in such a form as to be applicable frequently in large measure both to natural Israel, and spiritual Israel. Our text and the entire chapter, of which it forms a part, is of this order. The preceding context refers to trials and difficulties of the Lord's people, and assures them that the unfavorable conditions of the present time shall not always obtain; truth shall not always fall in the streets; error, selfishness and sin shall not always prosper; the time for a change of dispensation is nearing, and the Lord's people are to have strong consolation in this thought. While this applies chiefly to spiritual Israel, it is in some measure true also of natural Israel during its period of relationship to the Lord, from the leaving of Egypt down to the time when Messiah was rejected and crucified. During that period the Lord's favor was with the Hebrew people in one sense, while adversity was with them in consequence of their relationship to Him in another sense. While the nations about them might indulge in idolatry to their hearts' content without special chastisement and correction, Israel, according to the covenant which God made with them, was not suffered to lapse into idolatry and other evil conditions without receiving chastisement upon chastisement time after time. In this sense of the word their being the people of the Lord meant special trials and difficulties to that nation. The advantages offsetting these the apostle mentions, saying "What advantage then hath the Jew?" He answers the question himself, pointing out that their advantages were not of a temporal kind. His words are, "Much advantage every way chiefly because to them were committed the oracles of God." Rom. 3:1-2

3H218

DIVINE FAVORS HUMBLE US

A proper view of Israel's experiences can only be had from the scriptural standpoint, as follows: That nation was called of God to be His special nation, an instrumentality for blessing all the families of the world by communicating to them the divine laws and establishing with them a righteous covenant. This, indeed, was a high calling, and doubtless appealed to the vanity of many in that nation, rather than excite in them reverence and humility and an appreciation of their unworthiness for so great and honorable a service and the preparing for it. Surrounded by idolatry, which sensuously appealed to the lower and fallen instincts of humanity in the name of religion and worship, it should not surprise us that this was one of Israel's continual besetments.

As we notice the history of the nation we perceive that the various besetments and corrections of the Lord tended to separate the more worthy from the less worthy of that people. Calamities were permitted to come upon them at times, which wiped out thousands of those who were idolatrously inclined; and at other times other thousands of those who were rebellious against the Lord, also suffered, and after the division of the nation into two Israel and Judah the tendency was to still further separate the loyal from the less loyal of that people, the more loyal being gathered to Judah. One national besetment after another followed upon each nation, evidently with a view of discerning those loyal to God and those not loyal. Finally, in the utter overthrow of the ten-tribed kingdom practically all of those loyal to the Lord were gathered into the two-tribed kingdom of Judah. Here trials, difficulties and siftings still further were upon them, until finally Judah was carried into captivity to Babylon for 70 years, at the close of which the Lord, through Cyrus, opened the way back to the promised land for such as maintained their heart-loyalty to Him. These were but few, about 52,000 out of all the twelve tribes that had gone into captivity, whose number had been millions. What a sifting, what a searching for loyalty in that people! Even then, while the Lord's blessings were with them on their return, they still had disadvantages in temporal matters as compared with other nations they were a subject nation.

The effect of all of these disciplines was the utter eradication of idolatry from the Israelites and the better preparation of them as a nation for the coming of Messiah, who, according to divine arrangement, must first offer Himself and the privileges of joint-heirship with Him in His kingdom, "to the Jew first." There is no room for question that the Jews at the time of our Lord's first advent were the most devout people in the world. There were well intentioned people among the Gentiles, as, witness Cornelius, the Syrophenician woman, the widow of Zarephath, etc.; but as a whole no other nation or people in the world would bear any comparison to the Jew in religious tendency of life. The apostle's words on this subject are forceful when he speaks of "our twelve tribes instantly serving God" and hoping to attain to the great promise made to the fathers. Acts 26:6-7.

ISRAEL GOING THROUGH THE GATES

In these experiences of fleshly Israel, God was saying to that people, "Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way for the people; cast up, cast up a highway, gather out the stones, lift up a standard for the Gentiles." Mount Sinai, the place of the giving of the law, where Israel entered into covenant relationship with God and became His people, was, so to speak, the first gate, the gate of consecration; and the experiences of that nation, to which we have already adverted, were that nation's steps in the narrow way leading them onward toward the gate of glory. We are not blaming the Jews for not keeping their law covenant; rather we are to sympathize with them and to remember the declaration of the apostle to the effect that they had undertaken an impossibility, "for by the deeds of the law, can no flesh be justified in God's sight." The fact, therefore, that as a nation they failed to come up to the requirements of their covenant is not to be wondered at.

Everything considered, that nation made good progress from the degraded depths into which they had fallen, first as a slave nation and secondly as surrounded by perverse influences continually. When, therefore, we point out that as a nation Israel failed to attain the gracious purposes for which she was called, we are not speaking disrespectfully of the Jews, for the same would undoubtedly have been true of any other nation. God foreknew their failure and His plan was arranged accordingly. He foretold through the prophets that the nation would stumble and fall from divine favor, and that the fall of them would mean the throwing open of the riches of God's kingdom proposition to all nations.

Faithful, noble ones there were in Israel throughout all its history Abraham, Isaac, Moses, David, Hezekiah, Josiah, Daniel, Elijah, and all the prophets, besides less notable ones than these, whose faith in God was abundantly attested by their works, and whose approved faith is yet to be rewarded, as the apostle points out in Hebrews 11:38-40. These faithful ones have specially profited by God's favor to that nation yet the entire nation profited largely by its experiences. And not only so, but a light from the promises of God and from the earnest ones of the Hebrew people went abroad through the heathen nations round about, and exercised a beneficial influence upon reverential souls such as Cornelius, Jairus and others, preparing them for the great blessing that in due time was thrown open. However, Israel as a nation failed to obtain the glorious things proffered them as a nation. They entered into the first gate of consecration, they walked for centuries the narrow way of discipline, they were benefited by the experiences of that discipline, yet as a nation they were not ready for the grand and glorious things at the farther end, and so the Lord indicated through the prophet, saying "They shall not enter into my rest."

PROPHECY OF FAILURE

The apostle calls attention to this prophecy of Israel's failure to get the blessings promised, saying: It is evident, therefore, that God intended the giving of a great blessing or rest or refreshment, and they to whom it was at first made known failed to enter in because of unbelief. On the strength of this the apostle urges us, who have turned to God from amongst the Gentiles, that we should seek to enter into that rest which Israel after the flesh failed to attain that we by the grace of God should seek to make our calling and election sure. The apostle again refers to the same thing, saying, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Of that specially favored nation, fleshly Israel, a few were Israelites indeed in whom there was no guile, These received the Lord, these entered into His rest, these became the nucleus of the elect Israel to whom God purposes to give the promised kingdom, and through whom He proposes to bless all the families of the earth. The Apostle John mentions this same matter, saying of our Lord, "He came unto His own (people) and his own (people) received Him not; but to as many as received Him (the Israelites indeed) to them gave He power (privilege) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name which were begotten not of blood, neither of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:12-13

GATHERED FROM ALL NATIONS

We have just seen how God's selective and refining processes made ready and gathered together to Jesus the Israelites indeed at the close of an experience of over eighteen centuries from the time the original promise was made to Abraham. After the gathering out of nominal Israel all the Israelites indeed, and after the experiences of these at Pentecost as the spiritual Israel, the house of sons begotten of the Spirit, we find that the door was thrown open that henceforth from all nations, peoples, kindred and tongues, the Lord might gather into this one company, spiritual Israel, all those who at heart reverence and serve Him, loving righteousness and hating iniquity. It is not surprising to us that the whole number of this class should be stated in the Scriptures to be a "little flock." Neither does it surprise us to note the declaration that it will contain not many great, not many wise, not many learned according to the course of this world, but chiefly the poor of this world, rich in faith, to be heirs of the kingdom.

Our text, while applying to natural Israel in a general way for a time, evidently applies specially to spiritual Israel since natural Israel failed to attain the glorious ends of their call, as the Lord had foreseen and foretold. It is to spiritual Israel that the prophet's words have special force, "Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the peoples."

The gates through which spiritual Israel is called to pass, corresponds much to those through which the typical people were called to pass. The first gate is consecration the second gate is glorification, the intermediate way is the "narrow way." Our Lord speaks of this gateway through which all must pass who would be heirs of the kingdom, who would attain to the wonderful things to which God has called His people, spiritual Israel, whose calling is declared specifically to be a "high calling" a "heavenly calling." Our Lord declares: "Straight (difficult) is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." The majority are still walking on the broad road for selfishness and sin, and only a very few have any heart for the suggestion that they should love righteousness and hate iniquity and walk separate from mankind in general, in the footsteps of Jesus. It will be seen from our remarks, as well as from the quotations we have made, that neither the Scriptures nor we imply a great multitude in this “narrow way.”

HEARTS FAR FROM HIM

True, we live in a day when hundreds of millions are called Christians, just as in our Lord’s day millions were called Jews, Israelites; but as He said of many of that time that they were of their father the devil; because his works they did, and that they belonged to the synagogue of Satan rather than to the church of God, so we believe it would be true of many who today bear the name of Christian. The Scriptures speak of these as tares, imitation wheat, and explain to us that they draw nigh to the Lord with their lips, while their hearts are far from Him, and, again, that they have a form of godliness but deny the power thereof.

We are not in any measure charging others, we are merely calling attention to the landmarks which the word of God points out, which delimit the narrow way, and those who walk therein and apart from the general world. If there is to be objection found with our statements on the subject, the objection should be studied against the Scriptures which we quote, and they should be shown to be false or their testimony should be accepted. But when we consider the straightness of the gate the elect of God are invited to enter, when we consider that it means a consecration of time and talents and influence and reputation, all that we have, all that we are, to the Lord and to His service even unto death; when we see that, in our Lord’s own words, walking in this pathway in His footsteps, as His disciples, means bearing the cross after Him, we are not surprised to find that few care to look for this gate, few find it, few enter it, few walk in the narrow way, and consequently few will be found emerging from the narrow way at the farther gate of glory, honor and immortality.

These travelers in the narrow way by the front gate of consecration to the gate of glory have a special mission under a special commission from the Lord. His words are: “Ye are my witnesses!” “Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify the Father in heaven.” “We are to show forth the praises of Him who hath called us from darkness into His marvelous light.” This part of our service is represented in our text by the words, “Lift up a standard for the people.” The Lord’s people, the little flock, the body of Christ, are to let their lights shine out in the darkness of this world which surrounds them, that they may thus bear witness to the light a witness which will in the present time attract some, in all a little flock, to the narrow way and its straight gate. But more, their lights are to bear a witness which will be profitable to the world of mankind in general eventually, when the world’s great trial day, the Millennial age, shall come. The apostle declares of this faithful little flock, bearing their crosses in the footsteps of their Lord Jesus, "We are made a spectacle to men and to angels." Laboring for the right, laboring for the truth, laying down our lives for the brethren, without regard to party or sect or denomination, in the name of the Great Captain of our salvation, we are a spectacle to angels respecting the power of God to sanctify and transform the hearts of those who were sinners, children of wrath even as others. We are a spectacle to men in that, as the apostle says, they shall behold your godly lives in attestation of the glorious message of God's grace which you bear. The standard that is set up is God's standard of righteousness—"Be ye holy even as your Father in heaven is holy." We would set up this standard before the world, even though obliged to admit that, because of weaknesses of the flesh, we are unable to measure up to the standard ourselves. Even though we are obliged to admit that there is none righteous, no, not one, still we are to raise up the standard. The standard is higher than we, the standard is to be seen by all people, and, whether in the present life or in the life to come, this standard is sure to have its beneficent effects.

HIGHWAY UNDER CONSTRUCTION

The highway mentioned in our text is not yet built. It is in process of construction, however. It is the grand highway of holiness which, during the coming age, the Millennium, will be the world's opportunity for return to divine favor. The world when its due time shall come to receive the blessing of the Lord at the hands of the little flock, Christ, the Head, and the faithful ones the body of Christ will not be required to walk in the same narrow way and through the same straight gate by which the elect of this present time are being disciplined and brought forward; for they are being prepared for a special service that they may be the kings and priests, the rulers and teachers of the world of mankind in the Millennial kingdom. The Lord mentions the highway of holiness through the same prophet elsewhere (Isa. 35:8,9), saying, "A highway shall be there (not here under present conditions, but there under Millennial conditions) and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it but it shall be for those, the wayfaring men though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed of the Lord shall walk there."

We rejoice that the poor world, which at present has no desire for the narrow way, will be blessed eventually with an opportunity for going up on this highway of holiness. It will be totally different from the present downward road of sin in which the world is traveling; it will be an upward road instead of a downward road, but it will be equally broad the opportunities for righteousness, for the blessing of righteousness will be then proportionately as strong as are the present inducements to sin and unrighteousness. Now, because of the reign of the prince of darkness, the "god of this world," the course of righteousness is a costly one. It costs the loss of many earthly good things—"Yea, whoever would live godly in this present time shall suffer persecution;" but in the coming age, when the highway of holiness shall take the place of the highway of sin, whosoever will live godly shall receive a blessing, and a mental, moral and physical uplift proportionate to his progress in the way of righteousness; and, on the contrary, whoever shall live ungodly in that time will suffer stripes and punishments.

Thus, during the reign of the prince of darkness evil has the smooth and downward course, and righteousness has the rugged and upward way, the disadvantages according to the flesh; but when the new dispensation shall be ushered in, when Satan shall be bound that he shall deceive the nations no more, and when the times of peace and righteousness shall rule the world of mankind to its blessing, the sinner will have the rugged and difficult way, and the redeemed of the Lord, the world of mankind, bought by His precious blood, and willing to accept and use the divine favors, will go up in liberty and joy, from strength to strength, from knowledge to knowledge, from grace to grace and from one degree of perfection to another on the highway of holiness until, continuing therein until its further end, they shall be absolutely perfect and ready for life eternal, the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Our text views this matter from the standpoint of the church, head and body, and their present and future work. In the present time we are to pass through the gate of consecration along the narrow way, and, if faithful, to enter through the gate of glory into the kingdom of God's dear Son; and the experiences of sacrifice and suffering which our Lord underwent and which His church is to participate in, "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ," is all with a view to the opening up of the grand highway of blessing for the world at the close of this age, the stumbling stones of darkness and error will all be gathered out of the way, the difficulties which now beset the faithful and make their way a narrow one the ravenous beasts of sin and selfishness which beset their pathway and threaten to devour them, and which need to be fought against with faith and determination these shall be no more; "no ravenous beasts shall be there," says the prophet.

In the divine plan this highway is nearly complete at the present time arrangements are under divine supervision and very shortly all of the faithful church will have passed through both gates. The highway shall be without stumbling stones, so that the wayfaring man, though simple, may not err therein, and the standard for the people shall be fully and clearly set forth. The kings and priests shall all have been educated and made ready for their work, and when the great time of trouble with which this present age is to end shall accomplish its purposes for making ready for the kingdom of God's dear Son, and humbling the hearts of men, of mankind, plowing them deep with the plowshares of sorrow, then the new dispensation will open, the Millennial morning will dawn, the highway of holiness will be opened, the curse will be lifted, and the blessing of all the families of the earth through the spiritual seed of Abraham will begin. Gal. 3:16-29.

Dearly beloved friends! I address you as those who ostensibly are walking in the narrow way as those who have already entered the first of these gates, the straight gate of consecration as those who have thus given their lives wholly to the Lord to serve Him and His cause. We are in the narrow way. At times it may seem steep and difficult. The world, the flesh and the adversary may buffet us and oppose us, and we may at times seem to ourselves, as doubtless we seem to the world, to be making very slow progress toward the gate and the farther end the gate of glory. But en route we have the encouragement of our Master's words, assuring us that all things are working together for good to them that love God to those who are called according to His purpose. (2 Tim. 1:19.) We are thus assured that even the disadvantageous conditions of propositions how encountered are all working out for us, if rightly received, "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." We are assured that we should look not at the things that are seen, that we should not set our hearts upon earthly things, that we should not take too seriously the joys and sorrows of this present time, but that we should look at the things that are unseen, the things that are eternal, the things that God hath in reservation for them that love Him.

LOOKING AT UNSEEN THINGS

We look at these things through the divine Word. We behold them with the eye of faith; they cheer us, they comfort us by the way, they put a new song in our mouths, even the loving kindness of our God. They evidence to us the Lord's love, sympathy and appreciation, assuring us that all of His people's afflictions are the Lord's difficulties (Isa. 63:9); assuring us that "as He was so are we in this world;" assuring us that greater is He who is on our part than all they that be against us, and assuring us that the glory, honor and immortality of the kingdom and its blessed privileges of participation with our Redeemer in the great work of blessing the world of mankind with the helpful influences of the Millennium, will far more than offset the trials and difficulties and sorrowful experiences to us that present experiences are necessary for our discipline and instruction and preparation for the kingdom opportunities.

In view of these things, dear friends, what shall we say? Shall we go through, go through the gates? shall we press along the line toward the mark for the prize of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus? or shall we draw back? I feel confident, dear brethren and sisters, that the apostle voiced well our sentiments when he said, "We are not of those who draw back unto perdition." We are going onward to attain the end of our course. For us to turn back and to take the position of the world would mean a great deal far more than if we had never taken the step far more than if we had never entered the gate of consecration and attempted to walk in the narrow way. In taking that step we consecrated earthly interests, giving them up in exchange for the heavenly opportunities offered us in this call; but if now we should renounce the call and turn to sin and do despite to the spirit of favor, there would remain no more interest for us in the great atonement sacrifice. Hence, as the scriptures declare, it were far better that we had never known the way of life, than having known it, having entered upon it, we should turn back to the things of sin and its service.

The apostle urges that we who are upon the narrow way and who feel our own weaknesses and are continually beset by the world and the adversary, should look away from these and should look away from the world, from its allurements, from its false ideals, look away from the adversary of whose cunning and power we have so many evidences, "We are not ignorant of his devices." We should look away from our own weaknesses, not in the sense of neglecting so far as in us lies to counteract these and to strengthen character even in the flesh, but we should look away from these in the sense that we should realize that our standing with the Lord is not in the flesh, but in the spirit that "He knoweth our frame, He remembereth that we are dust," and that His demands of us are loyalty of heart, and, so far as in us lies, obedience of conduct, and that more than is possible for us to do is not required.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS

Looking away from these things we are to look unto Jesus, the author of our faith, who shall be the finisher of it. We are to see in Him, in His sacrifice, the full satisfaction of divine justice on our behalf; we are to see in Him the captain of our salvation, who trod this narrow way before us; we are to see in Him the compassionate spirit He careth for us and helpeth our infirmities, having Himself been touched by a feeling of our infirmities. We are to look away to Him as the glorified king whose right it is to take the throne of earth as soon as the appointed time shall arrive; we are to see in Him the heir of the Abrahamic promise, the great prophet who is to bless all the families of the earth. We are to see in Him the heavenly bridegroom to whom we have been betrothed, who loves us and who has made such abundant provision for us that shortly we shall become His joint-heirs in

His kingdom and participate with Him in the great work of blessing the world of mankind. With such a view before the eyes of our understanding, with such promises, with such hopes anchored within the veil, how could we think of drawing back. How must we long, on the contrary, for the end of the journey, and strive that we may finish our course with joy.

There is a parallel between present conditions in nominal spiritual Israel and the conditions in nominal fleshly Israel as they existed at the first advent. The 1,845 years of the Jewish dispensation brought the Hebrew people up to a plane where as a nation they had their test whether or not they would enter into the blessings before them. Likewise, the same length of time from the death of Jesus to the present time marks the length of spiritual Israel's course in the narrow way, and today we find a parallel of conditions at the first advent. At that time there were many nominal Jewish Israelites, but, as the word explains, they were not all true Israelites who were natural children of Israel. (Rom. 9:6) So here with nominal spiritual Israel many are professing the name of Christ, but they are not all true. As the great mass of the Jewish nation fell short at the end of their course and failed to enter into the favor then opened to them, so now, according to the Scriptures, the great mass of those professing the name of Christ are in the present time about to fall short of the divine requirements and fail to enter into the gate of glory into the kingdom.

The Scriptures give us the suggestion that a multitude will fail here in proportion to the numbers who will enter into the kingdom. Just as it was in the end of the Jewish age, only a remnant were found to be Israelites indeed, and the great mass of that nation were found to be unworthy. The prophecy descriptive of this declares that "a thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand." The one who stands is the Christ, Jesus the Head and the Church the members of His body then faithful to the Lord, and their covenant shall never fail, but so an entrance shall be administered to them abundantly into the everlasting kingdom; but all the merely nominal professors and all sincere professors who fail to develop the fruits and graces of the Spirit, will stumble, will fall, will not be able to stand in this evil day.

Let us, beloved, put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand complete in the power and strength of Him who loved us and bought us with His precious blood.

Pittsburgh Gazette--July 25, 1904

WAGES OF SIN IS A LITERAL DEATH

Rev. Charles T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., appeared before a crowded house at the Valentine theater yesterday afternoon, delivering his widely celebrated discourse on "Jehovah's Oath-bound Promise to Abraham and His Seed."

Mr. Russell, the author of the "Millennial Dawn" series and the editor of Zion's Watch Tower, is forceful as a speaker as well as a writer, and while many of his hearers were not able to coincide with his teaching, all recognized the depth of his scholarship and admired the lucid way in which he set forth what he had to say.

He is emphatically a "no hell" man. He believes that the teaching of the Bible to the effect that "the wages of sin is death" Rom. 6:23. that "the wicked shall be destroyed," etc., are to be taken for just what they say. He believes that the "second death" is literally that, extinction, rather than eternal life in torment. He teaches that the "judgment day" is a thousand years, the millennium, wherein the peoples of the earth shall be tried and tested to their final salvation or doom. He said in full:

Only those who have strong living faith in the Almighty God and in his Son Jesus could have much interest in the words of our text. To the evolutionist these words have little meaning, as he is looking to a natural development rather than to any supervising power of God to bring the blessing which the world so greatly needs. To the higher critic, the apostle's reference to God's dealings with Abraham are nonsensical, believing as he does that the statements of Genesis are without authority and were written many hundreds of years after the death of Moses.

However, some of God's true children whose eyes of understanding have not yet been opened to a clear apprehension of the divine plan of the ages, may be inclined to question what interest we could possibly have in God's oath to Abraham given more than 3,000 years ago. Such are inclined to say to themselves, "That event was helpful to Abraham, but has nothing whatever to do with us or our day." It is our hope that an examination of this covenant, which God attested with His oath, as stated in our text, may be helpful to many of the Lord's people present, enabling them to see that God had a plan in Abraham's day; that He is still working according to that plan and that its completion will be glorious a blessing to His creatures and an honor to Himself.

The context shows distinctly that the apostles and the early church drew comfort from this oath-bound covenant and clearly implies that this same comfort belongs to every true Christian down to the end of this age to every member of the body of Christ. The apostle's words imply that God's promise and oath were intended more for us than for Abraham more for our comfort than for his.

Note the apostle's words: "That by two immutable things (two unalterable things), in which it was impossible for God to lie, we (the gospel church) might have a strong consolation; (we) who have fled for refuge (to Christ) to lay hold upon the hope set before us."

ASSURANCE OF ALMIGHTY'S OATH

Doubtless Abraham and all of his family, Israel after the flesh, drew a certain amount of blessing and encouragement from this covenant or promise, and the oath of the Almighty which doubly sealed it gave double assurance of its certainty of accomplishment, but the apostle intimates in the words quoted that God's special design in giving that covenant, and in the binding it solemnly with an oath, was to encourage spiritual Israel to give us a firm foundation for faith. God well knew that, although 3,000 years from His own standpoint would be but a brief space, "as a watch in the night," nevertheless to us the time would appear long, and the strain upon faith would be severe; hence the positive statement, and the still more deliberate oath that bound it. We can not but wonder at such descension upon the part of the great Creator that He should stoop to His fallen creatures, and above all that He should condescend to give His oath on the subject. An upright man feels that His word should be sufficient in any matter, and, therefore, would hesitate except under special conditions to confirm His word with an oath. How much more might the Heavenly Father have so regarded the matter! But our text explains the reason for such condescension. He was "willing more abundantly to show the unchangeableness of His plan."

It was not God's intention to show His plans to everybody to the world in general nor has He done so. The world by wisdom knows not God, understands not His great and gracious operations which for thousands of years have been gradually unfolding, and which are now near of accomplishment. God wished to show the natural seed of Abraham something of His plan, and, hence, they were granted an external glimpse of it; but the apostle points out that the clear showing of the matter was especially intended for the "heirs of the promise."

JOINT HEIRS WITH JESUS

Our Lord Jesus was the great heir of the Abrahamic promise, and the faithful of His consecrated people of this gospel age are declared to be His joint heirs in that promise, which is not yet fulfilled. For its fulfillment not only the church is waiting, as the bride or fellow members of the body of Christ, to be participants with the Lord in the glories implied in the promise but additionally the whole creation (the entire human family) is groaning and travailing in pain together waiting for the great fulfillment of that oath-bound promise or covenant. (Rom. 8.)

Those who follow the apostle's argument and realize that we as Christians are still waiting for the fulfillment of this promise, will be anxious to know what are the terms of this covenant which is the hope of the world, the hope of the church, and the object of so much solicitude and care on the part of God, in that He would promise and then back His word with his oath. We Answer--that every Christian should know what this promise is, since it lies at the very foundation of every Christian hope. The Christian who can not understandingly call to mind this oath-bound covenant or promise evidently lacks information very necessary to his spiritual strength and development. This is clearly indicated in the apostle's words in the context, for, after telling us that it is to give consolation to us who have fled for refuge to Christ, that we may lay hold on the hope set before us in this oath-bound promise, he adds, "which hope we have as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil, whither our forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus." (Verses 18,20.) Now how can this hope be an anchor to our souls in all the storms and trials and difficulties of life, in all the opposition of the world, the flesh and the adversary, if we do not know what the hope is, if we have not even recognized the promise upon which this hope is based?

GOD FORESAW THE PRESENT

This is the pitiable condition of many of God's true children; if they are merely babes in Christ, using the milk of the word. They have need of the strong meat of God's promises, as the apostle speaks of it, that they may be "strong in the Lord and in the power of His might;" that they might have on the whole armor of God, helmet, breast plate, sandals, sword and shield, and be able to quench the fiery darts of the wicked one able also to help the weaker ones in this day when the adversary is assaulting the Word of God, the citadel of the truth, with various infidel arguments in the hands and mouths of those who profess to be ministers of the Word. Let us awake in time, dear friends, before the poisoned darts of infidelity strike us and wound us and poison our minds, and blind the eyes to the glorious things of God's Word which have hitherto comforted us, and which have strengthened and comforted God's true people in all past ages. Let us now seek for this hope which we should have as an anchor to our souls to hold us in the storms of life, and especially in the stormy times of unbelief now and in the near future coming upon us. Let us start at once to investigate this wonderful promise which the apostle implies contains the very essence of the gospel. Let us investigate the promise which God, foreknowing present conditions, foresaw that it would be difficult for our faith to grasp, and therefore assured us by His oath in addition to His word.

Need I quote the promise the one so repeatedly referred to in the apostolic writings the one which is the basis or anchorage of our souls? It was made to Abraham and reads thus: "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." It was a promise for the future and not for Abraham's own time. The world was not blessed in Abraham's day, nor did he even have a child at the time this promise was given. Isaac did not fulfill the promise! he was merely a type of the greater seed of Abraham who in due time would fulfill it. Jacob and his twelve tribes, fleshly Israel, did not fulfill the promise, but still looked for a greater Messiah to fulfill it, to bless them and through them all, the families of the earth. The Apostle Paul referred to this very promise, declaring that the seed of Abraham mentioned therein is Christ. All Christians agree to this, even though they have not distinctively and properly associated it with the declarations of the promise. But the apostle makes clear to us that, in saying that Christ is the seed of Abraham, he had in mind not only the Lord Jesus as the head of the body, the head of the Christ, but also the overcoming saints of this gospel age as the body of Christ. This he distinctly states in many places, for instance, Gal. 3:16-29. Here he declares the matter expressly, saying: "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

GOSPEL CHURCH NOT COMPLETE

The "seed of Abraham is the gospel church, with her head the Lord Jesus." as the apostle states again saying: "We brethren, as Isaac was (typified by Isaac), are the children of promise (Gal. 4:28), it follows that the seed of Abraham mentioned in the promise is not yet complete and will not be until the full close of this gospel age the harvest time of which we believe we are now in. But what a wonderful thought is involved in this plain interpretation of the Divine word, it is big with hope for spiritual Israel, the spiritual seed, and no less it means a blessing to the natural seed, fleshly Israel, and ultimately the millennial blessings to all the families of the earth. Let us examine these three hopes: The hopes for these three classes center in this great oath-bound covenant. Let us thus obtain what the apostle tells us was the Lord's intention for us, namely strong consolation strong encouragement.

All through the prophecies the Lord foretold the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow; nevertheless the glories to follow have been granted much more space in the Divine revelation than the sufferings of the present time. The implication suggested by the apostle is, that when the glories of the future shall be realized, the trials and sufferings and difficulties of the present time will be found worthy not to be compared, but those glories and blessings have been veiled from our mental vision, and instead a great pall hangs over the future in the minds of many of the Lord's people. With some it is merely a mist of doubt and of uncertainty, with others it is the smoke of confusion, blackness and despair as they think of their own friends in connection with an eternity of torture, and the probability that a large majority of those whom they love will spend an eternity of horror in torment. We know that these clouds and dark forebodings come to us from the dark ages, and through theological twistings handed down from time to time. Many of us have learned to distort the simple language of God's word in such a manner as to cause us anguish and distress. For instance, destroy, perish, die, second death, everlasting destruction, etc., terms used by the Lord to represent the ultimate complete annihilation of those who will not come into harmony with Him after a full opportunity is granted them, are interpreted to mean the reverse of what they say life, preservation in torture, etc. It is high time dear friends, that we should learn that God's book is not the foundation of these horrible nightmares which have afflicted us, and which in the past hindered many of us from a proper love and reverence for our Creator. It is high time that we should take the explanation which the apostle gives us of this matter and of all the errors which assail poor humanity respecting the future. He says: "The God of this world has blinded the minds of them which believe not lest the glorious light of the goodness of God as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ our Lord should shine into their hearts." 2 Cor. 4:4.

OURS IS CREAM OF PROMISE

Now, what hope and interest has the church of Christ in this promise made to Abraham? To us belongs the very cream of the promise, "the riches of God's grace." The promise implies the greatness of the seed of Abraham which seed is Christ and the overcoming church. This greatness is so wonderful as to be almost beyond human comprehension. The overcomers of this gospel age, who "make their calling and election sure" in Christ, are to be joint heirs with Him in the glorious millennial kingdom which is to be God's agency or channel for bringing about the promised blessings the blessings of all the families of the earth. How great, how wonderful is to be the exaltation of the church is beyond human conception, as the apostle declares, "Eye hath not seen, neither ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man (the natural man) the things that God hath in reservation for them that love Him" that love Him more than they love houses or lands, parents or children or any other creature more than they love themselves and who show this by walking in the narrow way, in the footsteps of their Redeemer. Again the apostle speaks of the great blessings coming to the church as the seed of Abraham. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be (how great we shall be made in our 'change'), but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him." (1 John 3:2.) the Apostle Peter has a word on this subject of the greatness that shall belong to the church, the spiritual seed of Abraham, saying "God hath given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might become partakers of the divine nature." (2 Pet. 1:4.) To whatever extent we are able to grasp the meaning of these wonderful promises, they speak to us of blessings, favors, privileges, "exceedingly and abundantly more than we could ask or think." Eph. 3:20.

It is for this reason, we are told, that Christ died for our sins to release us from their penalty, and thus to have the right to release us from present sinful tendencies and conditions. He has already redeemed the world; it remains for him to become the great physician, the life-giver to heal the world of its sin-sickness and to raise up to life and to perfection, mental, moral and physical, all the human family who accept of His provision of the grace of God. And whosoever will not be obedient shall be cut off from amongst the people in the second death. The wages of sin was death in Adam's case; and the whole world having been redeemed from that sin and death is to be granted blessing through Christ, the forgiveness of sins, the opportunity for return to harmony with God. Only for deliberately rejecting this favor, will any come again under divine sentence and by becoming willful sinners bring upon themselves again the wages of sin, the second death.

THE MILLENNIAL PROMISE

The great blessing of forgiveness of sins which are past, and even the blessing of being awakened from the sleep of death, would profit mankind but little if the arrangements of that future time the millennial age were not on such a scale as to permit a thorough recovery from present mental, moral and physical weakness. Hence we are rejoiced to learn that in that time Satan will be bound, every evil influence and every unfavorable condition will be brought under restraint, and the favor of God through the knowledge of God will be let loose among the people—"the knowledge of our Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep." Blessing! Ay, favor upon favor, blessing upon blessing, is the Lord's arrangement and provision. All shall know Him, from the least unto the greatest, and none shall need to say to his neighbor or brother, "Know thou the Lord?" (Isa. 11:9, Jer. 31:34). The prophets spoke repeatedly of these blessings due to the world in the future. Mark how Joel tells that, as during this gospel age, the Lord pours out His spirit upon His servants and handmaidens, so after these days, in the millennial age, He will pour out His spirit upon all flesh. There will be worldwide blessing through the knowledge of the truth. Mark how Moses, the prophet, spoke of these coming blessings, and told how God would raise up a greater law giver than Himself, a greater teacher, a better mediator, and under the better covenant of the Lord would bring blessings worldwide. Mark how again He represents the atonements for the sins of the whole world in atonement day sacrificial arrangements. Mark how again He typically foretold the blessings of the millennial age, representing it in Israel's year of jubilee, in which every man went free and every possession was returned to its original ownership thus representing the blessings of the future, man's release from servitude to sin, to Satan, and the return to Him of all that was lost through Adam. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, Micah, have spoken of these coming times, so that the Apostle Peter, pointing to the future, could truthfully declare that the coming times of restitution of all things have been spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. (Acts 3:19-23).

PROMISE OF THE JEWS

The second class to be blessed under this Abrahamic covenant is fleshly Israel. We are not forgetting that the Jews were a rebellious and stiff-necked people; that they slew the prophets and stoned the Lord's ministers and caused the crucifixion of our Redeemer. Nevertheless, the Scriptures clearly hold forth that after they have had a period of chastisement, which they have been undergoing as a nation since the Lord's crucifixion, and after spiritual Israel shall have been glorified in the kingdom then a blessing from the Lord will come upon natural Israel; they shall be saved or recovered from their blindness and, as the prophet declares, they shall look upon Him whom they have pierced and mourn for Him, because the eyes of their understanding shall be opened. We rejoice, too, that the promise is clear and distinct that the Lord will pour upon them the "spirit of prayer and of supplication." Zach. 12:10.

The Apostle Paul elaborates this subject. In Romans, chapters 9 and 10, he points out how Israel failed to obtain the special blessing of this Abraham's covenant by rejecting Christ how only a remnant received the great blessing and the mass were blinded. In chapter 11 he proceeds to explain that their blindness is not to be perpetual, but only until the church shall have been gathered out, and that then the Lord's blessing will come to fleshly Israel saving them from their blindness and granting them mercy through the glorified spiritual Israel. I trust that every person in the audience will feel interested enough in this feature of the divine plan to examine carefully on his return to his home verses 25 to 33 of the 11th chapter of Romans. The apostle expressly points out that the Lord will do this for the natural seed, not because of their worthiness, but because of His promise made to the fathers—"for this is My covenant with them when I will cancel their sins."

BLESSINGS FOR ALL NATIONS

But if God is to have mercy upon the natural Israelite, whom He declares to have been stiff-necked and hard-hearted and rebellious, would it surprise us that the divine, benevolent intention should be to bless others than the Jews others who had not in the past the favors and privileges of this favored nation and whose course, therefore, was less in opposition to the light? It should not surprise us, and so we find in this great oath-bound covenant a blessing for all nations all peoples. Let us look at the promise again remembering that our Heavenly Father made it deliberately and subsequently bound Himself to its provisions by an oath so that we might not only be sure that He could not break His word, but doubly sure that He could not break His oath, and that therefore without peradventure this promise shall be fulfilled. It reads: "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." What is the blessing so greatly needed by all mankind? We answer, it is the very blessing that Jesus declared He came to give, saying: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Ah, yes. Life! Life! It is life that the whole world needs, and our Lord Jesus declares Himself to be the great life-giver. Indeed, in the Syriac language, in which probably our Lord discoursed, the word life-giver is the equivalent to our word Savior. Jesus came to save man from sin, and from the penalty of sin namely death. It is a human invention of the dark ages to attach eternal torment as the penalty of sin; it is the divine arrangement to attach to sin a reasonable and just, but an awful penalty Death! It is because we are sinners that we are all dying creatures, and for the Lord to give life implies that He will take away the sin and all necessity for its penalty.

SUBLIMITY OF GOD'S WORK

But so accustomed have we all become to measuring the divine plan by our narrow minds that I doubt not there may be some in the audience ready to say, "I believe, Brother Russell, that in your love of heart you would delight to do good in this manner to the whole world of mankind, and so would we; but God's ways are not so grand as our conceptions would be." Stop, my dear brother; you are looking at the matter from the wrong standpoint. Remember that God is all-wise, all-just, all-loving, all-powerful, and that it is His own word that declares that as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are His plans higher than our plans, and His methods higher than our methods. As the poet has expressed it—

*"We make God's love too narrow

It is time for us to wake up to the fact that we are no better than our God, but that we are poor, imperfect creatures of the dust, fallen by nature, and that it is time for us to stop misconstruing the Divine character and plan as against His creatures, and to hearken to the Lord's own word when He declares, "Their fear toward Me is not of Me, but is taught by the precepts of men." It is time for us to be praying for ourselves and for each other as the apostle prayed for some, saying, "I pray God for you that the eyes of your understanding may be opened, that ye may be able to comprehend with all saints the lengths and breadths and heights and depths to know the love of God which surpasseth all understanding." (Eph. 1:18; 3:18,19).

Do not misapprehend us; we are not teaching that heathen and imbeciles and the unregenerate in general shall be taken to heaven, where they would be utterly out of harmony with their surroundings and require to be converted and to be taught. Such an inconsistent view we leave to those who are now claiming that the heathen will be saved in their ignorance. We stand by the Word of God, that there is not present salvation without faith in Christ Jesus, and hence that the heathen and the imbeciles have neither part nor lot in the salvation in the present time. We stand by the scriptures which declare that any who are saved in the present time must walk in the narrow way, of which the dear Redeemer says they be few that find it. We stand by the scriptures, which say that salvation at the present time is only for the little flock who through much tribulation, shall enter the kingdom. We stand by the scriptures, which say that this kingdom class now being developed is the seed of Abraham under the Lord their Head, their Elder Brother, the Bridegroom. We stand by the scriptures, which say that through this Christ, when complete, a blessing shall extend to every member of Adam's race the blessing of opportunity to know the Lord, to understand the advantages of righteousness, the opportunity of choosing obedience and by obedience obtaining everlasting life.

JUDGMENT DAY OPPORTUNITY

The blessings of the future will be of such a kind that every individual who does not have his full opportunity in this present life will have it then. Not an opportunity to become members of the little flock. Not an opportunity of becoming members of the seed of Abraham. Not an opportunity to have part in the great "change" from human nature to divine nature. Not an opportunity to sit with the Lord in His throne. But an opportunity to obtain that which was lost human perfection, everlasting life under human, earthly, paradisiacal conditions. An opportunity of coming again into the divine likeness, almost obliterated in the human family through the 6,000 years of the fall. This period, in which this opportunity will be granted to man, is in the scriptures termed the day of judgment a thousand year day the millennial day. It will be a day of trial, a day of testing, a day of proving the world to see whether, with a full knowledge of God and of righteousness, which He requires, they will choose, it in preference to sin, choose life in preference to the second death. Thank God for that wonderful judgment, the trial day for the world, secured for all through the precious blood of Christ. "When the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." Isa. 26:9.

Before we close, dear friends, we wish to call attention again to another feature of this great oath bound covenant, of special interest to us who by the grace of God have been invited to be of the spiritual seed of Abraham, and who are seeking to make our calling and election sure as members of that seed which is, Christ. We have already referred to the high exaltation that the Lord designs for us, by which we shall be "changed" no longer be earthly, but heavenly or spirit beings. We have already noticed the privilege of participation with Christ in the glories of His kingdom, "to sit with Him in His throne." Now we notice the great additional privilege of association in the great work of uplifting the world from the sin and death conditions in which it now is. What Christian does not feel his heart beat fast with interest as he thinks of the glorious work of the millennial age and the uplift of the human family by the bringing of all to the favorable conditions then prevalent and to the knowledge then universal. And whose heart does not beat faster with the thought that it is the divine arrangement that he who is faithful shall have a share with Jesus and all the saints in this blessed work of uplifting the world!

FUTURE OF HEATHEN PEOPLE

As our hearts go out with sympathy toward the poor groaning creation in heathen lands and in home lands, and as we take pleasure in doing the little now possible for us to do, what is our joy when we think of that future glorious opportunity that is to be ours, and of the great results that are to accompany it. Surely the hearts of the Lord's people are stimulated as we contemplate the meaning of this great oath-bound covenant! Surely, as the apostle declares was God's intention, we have strong consolation in our ineffectual efforts to bring the majority of mankind to an appreciation of God's mercy and love now, but it gives us consolation also in respect to our neighbors and friends and members of our own families who are not saints, who are still blind to the grace which has brought salvation to our hearts in the present time, and which eventually is to bring salvation to the uttermost in the resurrection. It encourages us further, as the apostle points out, to lay hold upon the hope set before us to take a firmer grasp of the divine character and plan. It gives our souls encouragement beyond the veil when we see how gracious is the character of our Heavenly Father, how wonderful is the plan which He has devised and how He has been carrying it forward step by step up to the present hour, and that by His grace we are what we are, and have been called to joint-heirship with our Redeemer as members of the seed of Abraham. We reason that if the Lord so loved us while we were sinners that much more does He love us now that we have accepted Christ and are under the robes of His righteousness and seeking to do those things in harmony with the divine will.

Let us then take courage and hold fast to the Divine Word, and feed upon it more and more, and use all the various blessings and promises which the Lord has designed to fit and to prepare, to mold and to fashion, to chisel and to polish us for places in His glorious kingdom. Let us resolve that knowing our Heavenly Father better than before, we will be more faithful than ever as His children and servants more loyal to the truth and to the principles of righteousness, and that, copying Him and His generosity, we will be more kind even to the unthankful and to the unholy. Let us, then, accept the preparations, for the kingdom privileges, and by the grace of God make our calling and election thereto sure.

THE VICTORY OF RIGHT OVER WRONG TO BE ACCOMPLISHED BY THE REIGN OF CHRIST

Philadelphia, Pa. -Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny, Pa. addressed a very intelligent and deeply attentive audience here at 3 p. m. today. His topic was "The Victory of Right Over Wrong to Be Accomplished by the Reign of Christ." The speaker will return to Allegheny at once, where he is expected to preach next Sunday at 3 p. m. at Bible House chapel. His discourse in full follows:

We select for our text the words of the apostle Paul when discussing the great work which God has appointed to Christ: "He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet; the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. 15:25, 26. In the context preceding the apostle assures us of Christ's resurrection, that without it there would be no hope. He assures us that through him God has made possible the resurrection of the whole world; not only an awakening from the tomb, but a full raising up to that which was lost in Adam, to human perfection. There are, however, certain conditions attached, namely, that the individuals of our race, upon being brought to the clear knowledge of God's grace in Christ, shall fully accept the same and come into heart relationship with Christ. The apostle declares that as all in Adam die because partaking of his weaknesses, imperfections, etc., and coming under the sentence of death with him, even so all who shall come into relationship with Christ shall live. Then he declares that there will be different orders or companies of those saved through Christ—"every man in his own order."

We have already found that the scriptures speak of the "little flock," to whom shall be granted an "abundant entrance" into the kingdom and joint heirship with their Lord. We have already pointed out that there will be, in addition to these "a great company" who will reach the spirit plane of being through great tribulation. (Rev. 12:14), and who will be in many respects like unto the angels, though inferior to the little flock, the bride of Christ, who will be like our Lord Himself, "far above angels." We have already pointed out that a third class or order are to be saved during the millennial age, namely, a "restitution" class so many of the world of mankind as will, under favorable opportunities and knowledge of that blessed time, come into harmony with the Lord. The salvation provided for these is a restitution to the things that were lost originally through Adam's disobedience restitution or restoration to human perfection, to Edenic conditions, to harmony and fellowship with God through Christ. These are the orders the apostle refers to, saying that all that come into Christ shall be made alive: every man in his own order. Christ Jesus the Head, and the church the members of His body the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's during His presence." Verses 22-23.

Our Lord's second presence (for such is the meaning of the Greek word parousia) will last for a thousand years, the millennial age, during which He will be present and do a work of separating the sheep from the goats, as represented in His parable of Matt. 25, and He will find every true "sheep." To every member of Adam's race, bought with His own precious blood, He will then grant the opportunity of demonstrating whether or not he will be one of the Lord's "sheep," or, reversely, a "goat," a follower of the adversary. The work of separating will be complete with the close of the millennial age, and then the sheep of that time will be rewarded with the earthly kingdom originally given to Adam and lost by disobedience, but redeemed by Jesus for presentation to the faithful sheep of the millennial age. The goat class will be utterly destroyed in the second death, without hope of any recovery, as numerous scriptures show.

EARTHLY AND HEAVENLY KINGDOMS

The kingdom that will be given to the "sheep" class of the millennial age at its close should not be misunderstood or confused with the kingdom that is to be given to the saints of this gospel age, now shortly, at its close. The dominion conferred upon Father Adam was an earthly one. The Prophet David refers to it saying, "What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that Thou visitest him? Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands giving him a dominion. Thou hast put all things under his feet; all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field, the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea.” (Psa. 8:4-8.) This is the kingdom of earth which was prepared “from the foundation of the world” for man, and which will be given to the worthy and perfect members of the race at the full completion of our Lord’s work of restitution at the close of the millennial age, at the close of the “times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets.” (Acts 3:19-21.) But the kingdom that is offered to the church during this gospel age is a heavenly kingdom, a spiritual kingdom, of which our Lord declared that no one could enter into it or see it unless they were born of the Spirit. (John 3:3-5.) It is of this kingdom or dominion of the church which we wish specially to speak at this time; it is the reign of this kingdom which is referred to in our text, and which begins its dominion of the world at the beginning of the millennium.

Our text declares, “For he must reign.” The matter is not stated in a doubtful or problematical manner it is a positive assurance. God’s prearranged plan is that Christ shall reign, not permanently, not forever, but for a thousand years; at the close of that time, as our context shows, the kingdom will be delivered up to God the Father after Christ shall have put down all rule, all authority, all power. The apostle in no sense intimates that this reign has already begun he points us to the future, assuring us that such a reign will begin, will perform the work it is intended to do, and will then have a termination.

In this same epistle he refers to the fact that himself and others, earnest and self-sacrificing for the sake of the truth, were suffering hardships, while some believers at Corinth were so indifferent, so careless, so filled with the things of this world, that they found no opportunities for suffering for the truth’s sake. Ironically, the apostle suggests that they have begun their reign that it had that appearance in their fullness, in their self-satisfied complacency and in their prosperity in the worldly way, “Ye have reigned as kings without us.” Then leaving the ironical strain and coming down to the matter of fact, he declares, “I would to God that ye did reign for, the, we also (instead of suffering stripes and imprisonments, evil speakings, etc.) would reign with you.” (1 Cor. 4:8.) In a word, the reign of Christ means also the reign of the church, which is to sit with him in his throne. So long, then, as the Lord’s faithful people are not reigning, we may be sure that the reign of Christ has not commenced. Indeed, if we believe his kingdom already established, already in power, we should no longer pray “Thy kingdom come,” and it would be improper for us to exhort one another to seek the kingdom and to apply to one another the assurances of the apostle that if we suffer with the Lord now we shall reign with him hereafter in the kingdom. Suffering for righteousness has not yet been installed in power the surest evidence that sin and death are still reigning in the world.

Our Lord desired His followers to appreciate the fact that tribulations in this present time must be their experiences, in order to develop in them the character necessary to His service in the kingdom; and he explained through the apostle that, "Through much tribulation shall ye enter the kingdom." (Acts 14:22) And so it was that in the same prayer in which he taught us to look forward to the kingdom as the end of our tribulation and the beginning of the glorious consummation of all the divine promises, he instructed us also to pray, "Abandon us not in temptation, but deliver us from the evil one," as indicating that until the kingdom should come the evil one would not be bound, but would still have power to oppose and persecute all who seek to follow faithfully in the footsteps of Jesus. One of the very first acts of the kingdom, as the Lord delineates the matter, will be the binding of Satan, "That he shall deceive the nations no more" that he shall no longer oppose the truth that the darkness of error might give place to the true light, which will then shine throughout the whole world for the blessing and enlightenment of every creature.

"HE MUST REIGN"

"If, then, we concede the apostle's teaching namely, that God has predestinated that He will have a kingdom; that He promised that this should come through the seed of Abraham; that Christ Jesus, as the seed of Abraham, has already laid the foundation for the future work of the kingdom by redeeming mankind; and that, during this gospel age, the Lord is taking out from amongst the nations of the world "a peculiar people" to be associated with Jesus in the kingdom work then we see the confidence of the apostle in his declaration, "He must reign." There can be no doubt about it that after God has spent six thousand years in making ready for the kingdom, after he has laid the foundation in the gift of His son and His sacrifice unto death, and in the call of the church to walk in the footsteps of Jesus, to take up their crosses and follow Him after all this, God will not surely turn back from His purpose. He will carry forward His work and all the power of heaven will be at the disposal of Him who has redeemed the world when He begins His great work of reigning for the very purpose of blessing and uplifting those whom He bought with His precious blood. "He must reign."

Conceding, then, that the apostles were looking forward in their day to the second coming of Christ and to the work which he would accomplish at the second presence conceding that our Lord's parables and teachings taught the same things, and declare that He had gone into a far country, even heaven itself, to receive a kingdom to be invested with the power and authority and to come again and to receive his faithful ones, to Himself and to appoint some to greater and some to lesser stations of honor in His kingdom. (Matt. 25:14; Mark 13:34) conceding that everything of this kind has taken place, yet conceding that there are no evidences of a reign of righteousness at the present time, but, on the contrary, everything corroborates the testimony of the Scriptures and bids us look forward for the rising of the sun of righteousness, with healing in his beams; conceding all this and taking the positive ground that the reign is sure to come that "He must reign," let us note with interest and care what the apostle points out to be the object of Christ's reign.

He says "He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet." The expression "under His feet" is figurative, of course, just as when the apostle, speaking of the same great matter but referring to the church's share in the kingdom and its work, says, "The very God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." (Rom. 16:20.) The expression "under your feet" signifies to bring under control in the most absolute sense into subjection.

"UNDER HIS FEET"

To put "under His feet" is a very different expression from another sometimes used in the scriptures, namely, to "bring to his feet," as in the declaration, "Unto Him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess." These are separate and distinct thoughts. All who love righteousness and hate iniquity will be brought to the feet of Jesus in willing and glad submission to His reign of righteousness, love, justice and equity; while all of the reverse disposition, who, under the grand instructions and disciplines of that time, fail to correct their sentiments all who continue to encourage themselves in selfishness, pride, sin or any form of opposition to the Lord and the principles of righteousness, justice, meekness, purity, truth all such, with the evils with which they sympathize, shall be crushed, utterly destroyed. The stamping out of everything that is in enmity or opposition to the Lord and to the principles of righteousness, which his government represents, will mean the great blessing of the whole world with the purity and truth and equity for which all who have the Lord's spirit earnestly long and hope, according to His promise.

It may occur to some that a thousand years is a long time to appropriate to the stamping out of evil. Some may indeed say, Why, even humanity, if fully aroused to the subject could stamp out sin in a few years if not in a few months why require one thousand years for the work when it will be backed by omnipotent power and wisdom? We Answer--in the language of the Lord through the prophet, "My ways are not as your ways, neither My plans as your plans; for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My designs and My methods higher than your methods.” It is one thing to put mankind under restraints in respect to sin, and another thing entirely to root out of the hearts of mankind all sympathy or love for sin, and to eliminate all the weaknesses which have come to mankind through the fall and which tend to make him gravitate toward sin as soon as opportunities are favorable and to teach him love for righteousness and its divine rewards. The Lord’s ways are so high, so grand His designs, that He purposes the full elimination of every weakness and imperfection, mental moral and physical, not only from the material world, but also from the hearts of those who will become fully His, and who under those disciplines will become prepared for the everlasting life and perfection promised to the obedient.

DESTROYING HIS ENEMIES

We are to give this word “enemies” full force if we would appreciate the promise; we are to know that man in his ignorance and superstition is styled in the scriptures and “enemy through wicked works,” an enemy of God and of righteousness, an enemy of the truth. But many who are thus enemies of God are so only because of ignorance, blindness, weakness. Many, if they knew better, if they understood the divine character and plan, would be friends of God and would appreciate him as their best and truest friend; but the fall has blunted their sensibilities in a considerable degree, and false doctrines have aided in the matter by misrepresentations of the divine character and plan. The apostle charges this, not to the men who have prepared the false doctrines and misleading creeds, but to Satan, the great deceiver, the first great enemy of God and of righteousness, who now works in the hearts of the disobedient and leads them captive at his will and uses them often in high places, even in the pulpits, to propagate the error, to becloud the truth, to blind those who are “feeling after God if haply they might find Him.” 2 Cor. 4:4; Acts 17:27.

The “enemies” to be destroyed are wrong and persistent, intentional, wrong-doers, sin and willful, deliberate sinners. The kingdom of Christ, the “reign” of righteousness will demonstrate to the world the blessings and rewards of righteousness and the bitterness and penalty of sin; it will thus test the heart desires of all, and end with the “everlasting destruction: of all willful sinners and thus of all sin. Mark well that none of these ”enemies" are to be everlastingly preserved all are to be destroyed. This is the unanimous testimony of the scriptures except in a few misunderstood “parables and dark sayings,” fully explained in the “Hell pamphlet” offered free to all who will send me a postal card request to Allegheny, Pa.

The apostle declares, in our text, “The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.” He refers to the Adamic death, or, what some people improperly term, natural death. He does not refer to the second death, which shall never be destroyed and which is not an enemy, Adamic death, the death which has passed upon the whole human family, is an enemy, and everybody of common sense realizes the truth of this statement, no matter to what extent erroneous theology has endeavored to teach that death is God's Angel or messenger. Our hearts and our common sense, join in refusing to accept this statement as the truth. As death working through sickness strikes down our dear ones, we feel that it is an "enemy," and as it eventually thrusts the darts still deeper and our dear ones die, our very instincts tell us that the power which thus has operated to our injury and to the cutting off of our dear ones from life is not a friend but an "enemy," as the apostle declares. But much more important to us is the fact that God calls Adamic death an enemy.

WHY IS DEATH AN ENEMY?

This enemy, as we have previously seen, secured dominion over us by divine permission because of sin. Had sin not contaminated our race, death, which is the wages of sin, would never have been inflicted. But if God inflicted the death penalty, why should the scriptures denominate it an enemy? Is the servant or minister of divine justice God's enemy? How so? We answer, because it has stricken down and thrust into the great prison-house, the tomb, millions that if they now had a full opportunity of knowing the right and the wrong, the truth and the error, and if they had a full and fair opportunity of choosing between sin and its penalty, death, the righteousness and its reward, life, would be glad to choose the latter. God foresaw this and has provided the great Redeemer, who has given his life as a ransom-sacrifice for the world. His sacrifice "bought" the world, settled the claims of justice, and authorizes Him as the great Mediator to take possession of the world of mankind and to release them from the bonds of death and bring them up to full perfection and life. Sin and death now stand in the way of impediments to the great work of "restitution," as enemies or opponents to the great work which the great King has undertaken.

The apostle's declaration shows that sin, evil of every form, will be promptly suppressed, but that death will to some extent hold its sway for a long time and be "the last enemy" to be removed. We can readily see why this will be so. The laws of the kingdom will be enforced promptly, punishing sin and rewarding righteousness throughout the millennial age, and this, together with the binding of Satan and the letting loose of all the influence for righteousness and truth, enlightenment, etc., will very soon, more and more, crush out not only active sin but passive sin sympathy with sin. And in proportion as these are overcome, mankind will be rising higher and higher, mentally, morally and physically; more and more getting out from under the power, the influence, the weakness of the dying condition more and more be attaining unto life. But the attainment of life in its full perfection will be at the close of the millennial age, and hence death will continue to have some measure of hold upon mankind until that time.

GRADUAL DYING GRADUAL RE-LIVING

Father Adam in his original condition, sinless and in harmony with God, was perfect and free in every sense of the word from the power and dominion of death; but the moment he transgressed and came under the sentence of death, "dying thou shalt die," he was no longer in life but in death. He sank lower and lower into death conditions until finally he expired was dead. Similarly the lifting up from death conditions during the millennial age will be a gradual work. First will come the awakening from the sleep of death; but the awakened ones will still be in death, they will not be fully alive, they will still have the weakness and imperfections which are a part of death. Gradually as they will yield to the terms and conditions of the millennial kingdom, these weaknesses and imperfections will pass away, and to that extent death will be in process of being "swallowed up by life" in them; but it will not be entirely swallowed up, not entirely eliminated, until the close of the millennium.

Many, through a misunderstanding on this point, have supposed that Rev. 20:5 implies that all except the saints remain in death during the thousand years of Christ's reign. The passage in question reads, "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." As a matter of fact this clause is not in the oldest Greek manuscript of the New Testament. But, treating it as authentic, reliable, the word of our Lord, it is in every sense of the word in full harmony with the foregoing. Indeed, it is just a terse expression of what we have been presenting, namely, that although during the reign of Christ, for the blessing of the whole world, mankind will be rising more and more from the depths and degradation of sin and of death, yet not until the close of the millennial age will they have been fully delivered from the weaknesses and imperfections which are elements of death not until then will they really "live again" in the sense that man lived before he came under the sentence of death. The living of the present time the Lord reckons as so much of death, saying to one of His followers: "Let the dead bury their dead, go thou and preach the gospel."

From this standpoint the entire millennial age will be for the purpose of destroying the reign of the twin evils which the apostle personifies as "the reign of sin and death, which has lasted for now 6,000 years, causing "the whole creation to groan and travail in pain" waiting for this great deliverance at the revealing of the sons of God in kingdom Power and glory. (Rom.

8:19-22.) In verses following our text (54-55) the apostle looks down in the future and rejoices by faith that Christ's death has paid man's penalty, and, therefore, in due time death will be swallowed up in victory. To us who believe it is possible even now to speak of those coming and sure blessings as though already accomplished. Yea, we may even by faith speak of ourselves as possessing everlasting life, resurrection life.

THE FINAL TESTING

When, under the blessed influences of the millennial kingdom, the whole world shall have been blessed and restored, a great sifting work will come. The heavenly Father will test the work of Christ's millennial kingdom, will test the absolute loyalty of every member of the human family. The nature of the test is not clearly explained, but the fact is most positively stated. When the thousand years are finished, Satan shall be loosed for a little season to tempt, to test all that dwell on the face of the whole earth; all of whom, "as the sand of the sea," at that time will have a full knowledge of the Lord and will have attained to the full perfection of their beings by the restitution processes. They will all be tested to see whether or not their hearts are fully loyal, or whether they still retain a love for sin in any form or degree. The test will manifest all who might at that time in the future, if they have the opportunity, yield to sin, and they will be destroyed in the second death; while all of the "sheep" class, having come into heart obedience to the principles of righteousness, will be ushered into the everlasting life conditions which Father Adam originally enjoyed and lost, and to which these will be restored through the sacrifice and kingdom of Christ.

We have treated our text from the apostle's standpoint, and perceive that it, in accord with the entire scriptures, points us to the second coming of Christ and the glorious kingdom which He will then establish as the hope of the whole world of mankind. In that kingdom all the families of the earth shall be blessed through the great seed of Abraham, Christ Head and body. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. 3:29.)

JESUS NOW THE CHURCH'S KING

In conclusion, we wish to call the attention of the Lord's consecrated ones to a certain sense in which they have already come into the kingdom of Christ, as the apostle expresses the matter. "He has translated us not of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son." (Col. 1:13.) In the sense that we recognize the Lord Jesus as the anointed of the Father, in that sense and to that degree we recognize Him as our Head, our Lord, our King, and to that degree we render Him our worship, our reverence, our obedience, and to that degree we seek to bring our thoughts and words and conduct into harmony with the principles of righteousness enunciated by our dear Redeemer and King. His reign in our hearts is a reign of love and not a reign of force. To us He says; "If ye love Me, keep My commandments. This voluntary submission to the Lord on our part, this voluntary acknowledgment of Him as our King, this voluntary seeking to know what His will is and then seeking to do that will, are wholly different from His reign over the world in the future. He will no longer say, If ye love Me keep My commandments, but, on the contrary "He will lay righteousness to the line, judgment to the plummet." The law will go forth from Jerusalem, the earthly citadel and its earthly representatives of the heavenly kingdom, and the word of the Lord from Mt. Zion, the spiritual kingdom, whose messages and directions through its earthly representatives will constitute the law of the world. (Isa. 28:17; Isa. 2:3.) Obedience to those laws will receive recompense, blessing the reward of a measure of restitution; and every disobedience to those laws will receive "stripes," chastisements.

While the ultimate rewards of those who now accept the favor heartily and walk in the footsteps of the Master will be higher every way than the rewards of those who will receive the divine blessing during the millennium spiritual rewards, glories, honors, instead of earthly ones this should not lead us to glory in ourselves, but rather, as the apostle suggests—" Who hath made us to differ," "by grace are ye saved." It is of the Lord's favor that the eyes have been opened to see not only more distinctly than the heathens do, but also more accurately than the majority in the civilized lands see the divine character and plan set forth in the divine word. Since, in the Lord's providence, this knowledge has come to us now, we do well to use it and to attain to the glories and honors and privileges and blessings to which we are called. On behalf of our friends who cannot now see, let us rejoice that the glorious promise of God's word is that by and by all the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears unstopped. We cannot even then hope that all who hear will gladly enjoy and promptly obey it, but we can hope that a very large number will be thus affected favorably, as we would be under such conditions, and we can trust in the divine wisdom which has formed the great and wonderful plan, and which assures us that every creature shall yet have a blessing through that plan and a glorious opportunity for life eternal. The more we see of our heavenly Father's greatness, goodness, mercy, love, the more surely our hearts are constrained to obedience—" We love Him because He first loved us."

Let us sustain our hearts, let us support our hopes with the glorious testimonies of the Lord's word, and among these let us hereafter reckon the words of our text, "He (Christ) must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet (brought them all into subjection.) The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

With such a realization of what must be the end of sin and death and of everything sympathetic and affiliated with them, we will find our hearts more and more opposed to sin and desirous of being on the Lord's side, on the side of righteousness and truth. The reign of sin and death under "the prince of the world," Satan, will not last much longer; the reign of righteousness unto life everlasting is soon to begin under the headship of the Prince of life, our Lord, who has promised His faithful followers of this age a share in the glorious blessings and opportunities and privileges of that kingdom

How Sin Brings Certain Punishment in the Future

Scottsdale, Pa. – Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny, Pa., preached here twice today at the Opera house. Next Sunday he is expected to preach at "The People's Temple," Boston. The afternoon discourse was on "God's Oath-Bound Covenant to Abraham and His Seed," and was listened to by a large house with close attention. The morning address, which was on "The Certainty of Punishment for Sins," was as follows:

We take for our text the words of the Apostle in 1 Tim. 5:24: "Some men's sins are open beforehand (manifested), going before to judgment: and some they follow after."

The axiom, "He who sins must suffer," is an old one, well supported by scriptural testimony and in accord with all human conceptions of justice. The apostle's statement in our text accords with this. Suggesting that some, but not all, receive the reward of their evil doing in this present life, he assures us that those not rewarded for their evil doings in the present life will meet their just deserts in the future. Some have larger secretiveness than others, and thus a greater ability to hide their evil sentiments and deeds and to escape their just opprobrium and natural consequences, some others possess qualities or are surrounded by circumstances which seem to prosper them in their unrighteous ways—down to the very close of the present life. If there were no future life, no future retribution, no difference in the future between those who have received rewards for their sins in the present life and those who have wrought righteousness and those who have wrought evil—no difference, either, between those who have received rewards for sins in the present life and those who have been successful in evil doing—if these were to be the conditions of the future, there would seem to be a great inequality as respects the divine arrangement. But the more we know of the purposes of the divine plan in respect to sin and sinners in the present and in the future, the more we are impressed with the wisdom, justice, love and power to be exercised toward all by the great Creator.

One great difficulty met with in considering this subject is the very false conceptions of justice generally entertained among civilized people, coming down to us of the present day from our progenitors—from “the dark ages.” For nearly 15 centuries the Christian world was evidently asleep as respects the exercise of sound reasoning on religious subjects, and particularly in respect to the divine character and plan of dealing with humanity. Under the blinding influences of Satan, crimes were committed in the name of God, not only against love, but also against justice. In the name of divine love and justice human beings were racked, tortured with red-hot irons, had their nails pulled out with pincers, had their ears and mouth filled with molten lead, had their tongues cut out, had their eyes gouged out, were cut with knives, were burned at the stake—in a word, all that a devil could do or think of doing was done in the name of the God of love and mercy and justice. Is it any wonder that men possessed of such evil dispositions, such cruelty, so lacking in justice and love—so lacking in the spirit of holiness, should have gross misconceptions of the divine character and attributes? Is it any wonder that the creeds formulated by these men and under their auspices, or later by those who were to some extent still controlled by their errors—is it any wonder that these creeds contains gross errors, which thoroughly misrepresent divine justice and mercy in respect to sin and its penalty?

FROM THE PRINCE OF DARKNESS

We need not wonder, we do not wonder, that to a large extent these wicked sentiments have attached themselves to the thoughts and writings of well-intentioned people living since the dark ages. This gross darkness which gradually developed during the second, third and fourth centuries of the Christian era, and which was a horror of darkness upon the whole of Europe from then until the sixteenth century, should require an equal length of time to be thoroughly gotten rid of, Nay! We need not wonder if it should require longer time to get rid of error than to come under its influence, for such is always the case. The great adversary instigates the error still, and seeks to propagate it in various forms gas an angel of light to deceive." (2 Cor. 11: 14) Moreover, the fallen condition of our race points naturally downward and needs continually to be assisted to the higher and better and purer and truer sentiments.

The fault of present-day teachings of Christendom respecting the wages of sin is not because they teach that sin will be punished, but because they totally misrepresent the punishment. They teach that which enlightened Christian human judgment cannot accept. And teaching this in the name of God and the Bible, they misrepresent both, bringing both into contempt, and thus not only make void the true teachings of the divine word, but shake the confidence of all intelligent people as respects the divine inspiration of the scriptures, and thus, in the name of God, in the name of the Bible, in the name of Christ, are spreading infidelity.

Is it not time that Christian people should awake to a realization of the error, which as a great nightmare, has afflicted the best of them and which now is not only threatening but effecting the overthrow of all faith among Christians of all denominations? It is time for the truth to be told and hence, to the extent of our ability, you and I and all who would be faithful to God and to His word should cry aloud and spare not the error. God's true people must be awakened even though the spirit of the world, the spirit of indifference, the spirit of doubt, the spirit of ease, the spirit of sectarianism, all urge them to slumber on, saying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace'-when the time has come that the word of God and His character are being assailed, not only by infidelity from without, but also by so-called new theology and higher criticism from within the nominal church.

HIGHER CRITICS DISOWNED

But says some one, the new theology and the higher critics quite agree with you that there is to be no eternal torment; in fact, you will find that very few ministers and very few intelligent laymen believe in such a doctrine. Why, then, stir up the matter? Why discuss the matter, when the whole civilized world is gradually coming over to the same view?

We reply that in the foregoing argument is the very necessity which should and does appeal to us and to all who are loyal to God's word. So far as the Bible is concerned, the new theology, higher criticism and evolution theories are all so much of infidelity garbed under religious forms, using language in such a manner as to deceive the unsuspecting and illiterate. These theories are being preached throughout the whole civilized world, and thousands of Christian people are not aware that their well-paid instructors have abandoned all thought of the inspiration of the scriptures, all thought of an Edenic fall making necessary a redemption, all faith in a ransom of sinners from the condemnation of original sin and its penalties. Said teachers do indeed agree with us that eternal torment would be unjust as well as unloving, but they have reached their conclusion on the lines of higher criticism-they have reached their conclusion on the supposition that they are wiser, better informed and more logical than were Jesus and His apostles.

Our position, on the contrary, is that the Bible is a divine revelation, that it is true, that its presentation of the divine character and plan show them to be just, loving, reasonable. We strive not with the higher critics, evolutionists, etc., who have become so wise in their own conceits that they need not the wisdom that cometh from above, need not the word of God. Our endeavor, on the contrary, is to awaken those who still believe in the Bible as God's word, to show them that its teachings have been misrepresented to them through the creeds of the dark ages, and that the Bible itself is grand and its presentations just and loving and logical to the last degree. We feel more and more the necessity for our presentations on this subject, because day by day those who have abandoned the scriptures as not inspired, as the work of men inferior to themselves in wisdom and justice, are insidiously undermining the faith of believers in general, and before a great while all who do not receive the true view of the scriptures will be sure to be led astray by the erroneous views which misrepresent and reject them.

In other words, in the light of present-day intelligence, no thinking man or woman can very much longer believe in the doctrine of eternal torment-that it is the portion of all except the saints, the "very elect." That doctrine is already repudiated by the hearts of all good people, and the heads of the same class must repudiate the doctrine sooner or later. The whole question is, will they repudiate it on scriptural grounds, and because they see that the scriptures do not teach it, or will they repudiate it, and, thinking that the scriptures do teach it, repudiate the scriptures also?

We have already pointed out that the scriptures specifically declare that God's penalty against sin is death extinction. We have pointed out that Adam came under this penalty and that all of his children share it with him, but that God, in mercy, provided a redemption-that Christ did as Adam's substitute, and in redeeming him from everlasting extinction He redeemed also all who shared that sentence through heredity. We have pointed out that it is because of this redemptive work of Christ that eternal life has been offered during this gospel age, in limited measure, to some of the peoples of the world, chiefly those residing in Europe and their descendants in America, and to a very few of the other numerous peoples of Africa and Asia. We have pointed out that the present offer of eternal life, through faith and obedience, is limited still more by the fact that in the favored nations of Europe and America only a few have "ears to hear" and hearts to appreciate and understand the offer. We have pointed out that this is a part of the divine plan, by which a special class, a "little flock," is being gathered out of every nation, people, kindred and tongue, to constitute a glorious company of associates with the Lord Jesus in His kingdom. We have pointed out that His kingdom, for which He taught us to pray, is yet to come, is yet to be established in power and great glory under the whole heavens; and that it will control the world and suppress evil and cause the knowledge of the Lord to fill the whole earth, and ultimately bring about the conditions foretold, in which every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the Lord, when God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven. All this present and future opportunity for the world of mankind to return to harmony with God and to live everlastingly, both of which were lost by Adam in Eden, pivots upon the great ransom sacrifice which our Lord Jesus accomplished "for the sins of the whole world."

EVERYTHING DEPENDENT ON REDEMPTION

Had there been no redemption from the original sin there would have been no grounds on which to invite men to obedience to God, to righteous living. As the apostle declares, if there be no resurrection of the dead, let us eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die. Death being the sum of the penalty against the race, everything that any man could do in the present life could have done no more than hasten the extinction to which he had already been condemned. But God having provided through Christ opportunities for future eternal life for all, it follows that each member of Adam's race on learning of this should be glad-indeed the message is called good tidings, gospel.

Upon learning further, that the terms upon which he may have eternal life will involve his personal co-operation with the Savior in opposing sin and degradation and unrighteousness in himself, he must realize that every downward step into sin and degradation means the greater difficulty in raising up out of such at some future time, if he ever would attain to the glorious perfection made possible to him-without the attainment of which he could never hope for eternal life. Whoever sees this clearly sees a reason-the best of all reasons -- for his resistance to the downward tendencies of his own fallen nature and the best of reasons also for assisting those about him to resist sin and to strive for the attainment of their noblest ideals.

This is exactly what the apostle taught when he said: "The times of former ignorance God winked at.' That is to say, in former times when the world was ignorant of God's intention to provide a salvation and opportunity for eternal life, and when God had not revealed to mankind His purpose nor laid the foundation for the same in the redemptive work-the doings of the world under those conditions God winked at, disregarded, paid no attention to them. But, adds the apostle, "God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Why this change? Why command them now to repent and live godly, while He had sent no such message to them for over a thousand years previously?

The apostle answers our question, saying, "Because He (God) hath appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness." This signifies a second judgment and thus implies that the sentence of the first judgment is to be set aside. The sentence of the first judgment was death, extinction, and it has been set aside by the great ransom sacrifice already referred to; and now, as a consequence of the setting aside of that first sentence upon man, all mankind is to be granted another judgment, that is, another trial, another opportunity to see to what extent past experiences have been profitable, and which under the divine direction and corrections will learn righteousness so heartily and so thoroughly as to pass divine inspection as worthy of life eternal. Whoever will not pass that inspection must die the second death--become extinct.

When we learn of God's redeeming grace in Christ and of our future hope of eternal life, we learn also that the words and acts, and specially the heart intentions of the present time as well as of the future will have to do with our ultimate acceptance, our ultimate attainment of "the gift of God, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." The heathen world knows not at all of this, and hence has much less responsibility than have we of Christian lands. Whatever their wrong-doings their responsibility for them is merely in proportion to their little light of conscience. Likewise in the Christian lands the responsibility of each individual is proportionate to his knowledge of God and of righteousness. From this standpoint, as we have already seen, the chief responsibility now is upon the "Royal Priesthood," the "sanctified in Christ Jesus," who have been begotten of the Holy Spirit and hence have clearer views of the divine character. The apostle assures them that if they sin willfully, intentionally, with full consent of their minds it will be to them the sin unto death--the second death, but if they sin through weakness, indecision, etc., they shall have stripes, corrections. "For every son whom He receiveth, He chasteneth." These stripes or punishments for transgressions that were partly through ignorance and partly through weakness are designed of the Lord to be corrective, to develop in His people the peaceable fruits of righteousness. Those of the church who receive corrections in the present life may be reckoned among those mentioned in our text whose sins go beforehand to judgment - they receive their chastisements and corrections now to the intent, as the apostle says, that their spirits may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus--to the intent that they may be acceptable to Him at the end of this age when He sets up His kingdom.

KNOWLEDGE MEASURES RESPONSIBILITY

As for the sins of the world, the Christian world and the heathen world, all who are not of the fully consecrated church of Christ, their sins, as we have already stated, are proportionate to their knowledge of right and wrong, and their knowledge of right and wrong may come partly through association with the true church, partly through association with civilization and partly through the light of conscience not totally extinguished through the fall.

As our text declares, with some of these the sin is manifest in this present life and brings upon the transgressor its natural reward or penalty-perhaps loathsome disease; perhaps mental, moral or physical weakness, perhaps the loss of friendship, sympathy, perhaps the loss of competence, perhaps the loss of liberty by imprisonment, etc. Nearly all receive some measure of retributive justice in the present life. Indeed, as the apostle declares, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together." True, this pain and suffering, mental, moral and physical distress, is largely the result of inherited weakness and depravity. But to whatever extent any one yields to sin in violation of his conscience, to that extent he is apt to increase his degradation and suffering.

It is far from our thought that the great mass of these poor creatures need some special torture in the future; the great majority, we believe, will not be called upon by the Lord to suffer anything additional, yet they will have a purgatorial experience, if we may so designate it; that is, the uplifting experiences of the millennial age will require the co-operation of each individual for his own deliverance. He will be obliged to fight against his own weaknesses, though he will have the assistance of the glorified Christ in his battle, and he will not have the opposition of Satan and of an adverse world, as the church has in the present time, because in the world's day of judgment or trial Satan will be bound and no longer deceive and put darkness for light and light for darkness, evil for good and good for evil. And the world, relieved from its ignorance and superstition and blindness, and brought under control of the great kingdom, will no longer be the opponent of righteousness.

As to how the judgment of some men's sins will follow after them into the future life-as to how, after their awakening from the sleep of death, they will have varying experiences corresponding to their use or abuse of present knowledge and opportunities, is an interesting question. Protestant views in general would cast all such into a fiery torture which, the creeds assure us, will be never ending, hopeless. No attempt is made to show gradations of punishment proportionate to the sins and weaknesses of the culprit. And while it will be admitted that some of this class have been generous and kind in the present life, and have given cups of cold water in the name of a disciple, and according to the Lord's declaration should have a reward for so doing, no plan or arrangement for the mitigation of their sufferings is even suggested. In this respect the views of Protestants are more inconsistent than those of Romanists, who attach sufferings and tortures lasting for decades and centuries and thousands of years for various sins, but, nevertheless, hold out a hope that eventually the culprit may escape the torture. All of these views have the appearance and odor of the dark ages; they are unmerciful, unreasonable, unjust, loveless. To torture any creature for years or centuries for the evil deeds of an hour or even of a lifetime, would be most horrible injustice and totally ungodlike. Furthermore, all such unscriptural views of future punishment for sin are inferior to present worldly conceptions on such subjects. Our penitentiaries of the present time are backed by a better sentiment, and are much more in accord with what the Lord proposes as the future punishment for sin.

SOME WILL AWAKE TO SHAME

Through the Prophet Daniel, the Lord gives a brief pen picture of those who will come forth from the tomb during the millennium. They are divided into two classes, a similar division to that which our Lord makes in His account of the same. (John 5:28,29.) Our Lord said, All that are in their graves shall come forth, those who at heart have been loyal to Him and sought their best to do His will, however imperfect their accomplishment, are classed as the "good" -- as those who have divine approval and shall come forth to a life resurrection-raised completely out of sin and death conditions up to perfect life conditions. All the remainder of mankind, disapproved of the Lord because they have not done to the best of their ability, come forth from their graves that they may have opportunity for a gradual raising up to perfection by "judgments," by the system of rewards and punishments which will prevail during the millennial age.

Those who will submit to the judgments of that thousand-year day of judgment, will, under the Lord's discipline, guidance and assistance, obtain full perfection; while all who will persistently resist the reign of righteousness will be cut off from life in the second death. The picture of these same great matters given through the Prophet Daniel touches another side of the question, and shows us more what will be the experiences of the world during that millennium of uplift, or resurrection from sin-and-death conditions. The account reads, "Many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." (Dan. 12:2.) Those who come forth to a life-resurrection will be approved of the Lord, the "good." Those coming forth to shame and lasting contempt are the world in general, who have not approved themselves to God by the acceptance of Christ and obedience to His counsel to the best of their ability. Their shame and lasting contempt will be incidental to the judgments by which they will be rewarded and punished according to their conduct during the millennium.

As we have already seen, the living generations of the world will be dealt with before any are awakened from the sleep of death, and that they will make rapid progress under the instructions of that time is beyond question; the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth promptly, speedily. Secondly, when the awakening processes begin, many will find themselves well known, through the teachings of history, to those already well advanced in knowledge and character development. Moreover, the art of phrenology, character reading, and possibly mind reading, will be well advanced; and we may well suppose the shame covering many of the awakened ones as they find the secrets of their lives and the meanness of their characters known to all about them. Their condition will naturally draw upon them the contempt of each other, as well as of those by that time more advanced in character development. Some have had such an experience as this in the present life, and sometimes to their profit and reformation, their sins were open, going before hand to judgment; but others have succeeded in cloaking their real sentiments and character in the present life, and these will have double shame and contempt when they shall come forth from the tomb in the awakening of the millennial day. Will not this be torture enough? Will it not be punishment enough?

The prophet declares that they come forth to everlasting shame and contempt; but the Hebrew word "olam," here translated everlasting, does not signify without end, but literally means-to an end, to a completion. We can readily discern that under the new conditions those coming forth to shame and lasting contempt will continue to be under that shame and contempt until they shall have started upon the reform road and shall have gotten a reasonable distance thereon, with knowledge and perseverance marking a conversion from sin to righteousness. In proportion as their restitution shall progress mentally, morally and physically, in that same proportion their shame and contempt shall diminish, so that by the time they shall have reached perfection, under the Lord's guidance and instruction, none of the shame and none of the contempt will remain. Thus eventually the more depraved and most degraded, by obedience to the laws of the kingdom, may become absolutely pure, absolutely perfect, even in the Lord's sight, and be accounted worthy of life everlasting.

REFORMATORY JUDGMENTS TO COME

Such is the reasonable scriptural view of the judgments present and to come. How different from those that have come to us from the dark ages! It will be seen, too, that in this, the Lord's method of dealing with the world, outlined in the scriptures, there is a close correspondence to the latest and best methods of dealing with criminals throughout Christendom. The criminals are put under strict laws and regulations, but obedience to these brings rewards, greater liberties and privileges, and ultimately the quicker release-or brings penalties proportionate to the willfulness and viciousness of the culprit. We can see, too, that whoever undermines character in the present life, by sin, by violation of his own conscience, is thus laying up for himself a more difficult task for the future, when all these weaknesses of character must be offset, must be compensated for by the longer and more tedious upbuilding of the same, with the possibility that the depravity and degradation will have gone so far and will have so weakened and impaired the conscience as to make recovery in the future doubtful.

I cannot hope that every one in this audience is a true, consecrated believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thus a member of the church of the first-borns, whose names are written in heaven. Upon others I desire to impress the thought of the apostle in our text, that disregard of the divine will and the law of righteousness is sure to bring its penalty either in the present life or in the one that is to come. The lesson to all such is that they should make all possible haste to put themselves on the side of righteousness, in their hearts and general conduct; that they should realize that the present life is at most a vestibule to the larger and greater opportunities of the future; that wisdom now directs in the same course that she will direct by and by, and that the sooner her voice is heard and obeyed the greater will be the blessing both for the present and for the future life. And to those of you who are of the consecrated church of the Lord, let me suggest that while our subject has dealt largely with the world and its present and future punishments for sin, nevertheless the same question applies to the church and with peculiar force, for if we are the Lord's we have His guarantee that our sins shall go to judgment beforehand, in the present life-except we be reprobate.

Thus we see that among the Lord's people are two classes. They must all expect to suffer, for it is written, "Through much tribulation shall ye enter the kingdom." Again that class of the church which will not be accounted worthy of a share in the kingdom but will be granted, nevertheless, everlasting life-the great company of Rev. 7:9, who ultimately will stand before the throne as servants instead of being honored with the little flock in the throne as the bride, who will get palms of victory as overcomers, but who will fail to get the crown which the Lord has promised to His footstep followers-this class of the church also will pass through tribulation, as we read (verses 14 & 15), "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple."

See, then, that the church, the little flock, must have tribulation as disciplines and testings in harmony with their covenant, and that the "great company," less zealous, will also pass through tribulation, we inquire, in what way are the two classes of tribulations different? In what way do the experiences of these two classes of the church represented by the priests and Levites in the type-in what respects do their sufferings differ? We answer that the little flock, filled with the spirit of the Lord so enter into the joys of their Lord that their sacrifices and sufferings and self-denials for His sake seem to them but as light afflictions, but for a moment, not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us. This class is enabled to rejoice in tribulation and in everything to give thanks.

Evidently the Apostle Paul and his companion Silas belonged to this class, when, with bleeding backs in the Roman prison, at midnight, they were able to thank God for the privilege of being His servants, and to burst forth in a hymn of praise. The greater company of the Lord's followers, less faithful, less filled with the spirit of zeal and self-sacrifice, feel their trials and difficulties and self-denials and sacrificing keenly, even though their sacrifices be of themselves much less. Their lives are full of trouble, with much less of the Lord's grace and peace and joy to offset life's difficulties and trials. Nevertheless, to those suffering is a purgation, a discipline and correction in righteousness, to mellow their hearts, to test their loyalty to the Lord and to principle. And we rejoice that the Lord has made such an arrangement, by which some who would not come up to the standard that is ordained for the very elect may thus have a good though an inferior portion as servants in the kingdom. Let us, dear brethren and sisters, wisely choose that good part which not only has the promise of the glory, honor and immortality of the kingdom, but also in the present life has the joy and peace which the world can neither give nor take away.

PASTOR RUSSELL TALKED ON THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER

Pastor C. T. Russell was with his home congregation yesterday, and hopes to be with them next Sunday also. As usual he had a crowded house, with extra seatings in the aisles. He said: My text on this occasion is from the Lord's parable of the sower sowing good seed. "Some fell among thorns and the thorns grew up and choked them." —Matt. 13:7.

Attending to some business some time since in Washington city, I found myself detained over night, and while passing the Young Men's Christian Association building I noticed their bulletin board announcing for that evening a Bible study, based upon the words of my text, the thorns among the wheat. I attended and heard several who seemed to be principal men of the association address the meeting on the subject. They all interpreted this text in the same manner that the thorns that choked the wheat are theaters, saloons, brothels, gambling houses, etc., and on this interpretation they exhorted one another and the audience to beware of all such traps and snares of the adversary.

The last of the speakers, after expressing himself in the same strain as the others, indicated a little doubt in his own mind as to having a proper application of the scripture, remarking, "How we wish that we had our Lord with us this evening to expound this parable to us!" As the meeting was an open one, I improved the opportunity to call attention to the fact that our Lord was present representatively through His word and that he had already explained the parable. I then called attention to the explanation of the particular feature of the parable under discussion, found in the 22nd verse, where our Lord says: "He also that receiveth the seed among thorns is he that heareth the word, and the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful." Briefly, I indorsed the general sentiment that Christians should not be entrapped by the sins and snares which the brethren had mentioned, but pointed out that the real snares, the real thorns to which our Lord referred, are far more subtle than gambling, etc. Our Lord's parable, therefore, was meant to be far more heart-searching than the friends had supposed. Thousands of Christians, and worldly people, too, have too much principle, too much character, to be led astray by the grosser traps and snares of the adversary, who, nevertheless, are in great danger of being caught by the "thorns" which our Lord here mentions. Indeed, we believe that Christians of the present time are exposed to no greater danger from any quarter than from the thorns to which our Lord refers.

THORNS FLOURISH IN GOOD SOIL

When we come to see that "the cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches" are the thorns, we immediately perceive that the most earnest, the most upright, the most sincere, the most loyal of the Lord's people are in danger on this score, and this is in full accord with the general sentiment of the parable, for thorns flourish best in good soil.

We live in a time when luxuries have become almost necessities of life, a time when everyone is more or less looked down upon unless he lives in good style and this generally means in a style which is fully up to and perhaps beyond what his income justifies. We live in a time when riches are more generally possessed, a time when there are more rich, well-to-do, prosperous people than ever before. We live in a time when everyone feels more or less of the general push and strain, if not to get rich, at least to attain competence, and its advantages of respect and esteem amongst one's neighbors and friends. As a result, the world is rushing madly after riches as never before, and time and health and influence all is spent for the attainment of wealth and the luxuries which accompany it.

We need not count amongst these thorns temptations to swindle, to promote financial claptraps, to receive bribes, graft, etc.; because we assume that all represented in this parable as good ground, "hearers of the Lord's word," would not under any circumstances yield to dishonesty. The thorny ground of the parable was “good ground,” which would have brought forth abundant fruitage except for the choking of the thorns. We could not think that our Lord would consider boodlers, grafters, swindlers, gamblers, and such like, as good-ground hearers in any sense of the word. Our thought would be that the good seed would find no lodging whatever in the hearts of such people.

This brings the matter very close home to us. We trust that our hearts are “good soil,” into which the seed of the word of God has been well received. We trust that our hearts are in that condition in which they are ready for that message of the Lord, and in which they would bring forth much fruitage to His praise. To all such this parable especially appeals. Shall we or shall we not allow the thorns to which our Lord refers to choke the seed of truth, to stunt it, to hinder its development and thus make it unfruitful in our hearts and lives to thus prevent us from bringing forth much fruit, as we should like to do, to the Master’s praise?

It is difficult to draw the line, and if our Master did not draw it neither need we. We may suggest, however, that a desire to live in good style among his neighbors might so engross the husband in his business as to prevent the taking of the necessary time for the study of the truth, for the nourishment of his own heart, for communion with the Lord, and for fellowship with the brethren, for mutual upbuilding in the knowledge of the Lord and in the graces of the Spirit. This would come under “the cares of this life.” They are multiplied if the ambitions and ideals of the world become our ambitions and ideals. Or the matter might go further, and the desire to become rich in this world’s goods may invade the heart; and if so, every time of prosperity is an increased danger that is sapping the life and thought and energy which should be going to produce “much fruit” in the heart and in all the activities of life in spiritual things.

The Christian wife who has received the word of the Lord gladly into a good and honest heart, and who has made a full consecration of all of her time, talent and influence to the Lord, may find herself in danger along the same line in danger from the thorns. She may or she may not have as much love for the earthly riches as her husband, but she will surely have many little thorns, “cares of life,” to beset her way. The children, the home, the housekeeping, the garden there is a constant tendency to become so absorbed in these that the main duty of life, the duty toward the Lord, may be neglected, perhaps in time may be almost forgotten. In other words, with the heart fully desirous of being in accord with the Lord and of “bringing forth much fruit” to His praise, the best of the Lord’s people are in danger from the insidious spirit of the world, the pride of life, love of the beautiful, desire to appear well before others, desire to get along in the world, desire to keep up good appearance, or possible a desire to be rich. Of the latter craving, so common in our day, the apostle gave special admonition, saying, "But they that will to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." 1 Tim. 6:9.

NOT SLOTHFUL IN BUSINESS

We are far from suggesting that the Lord's people should be slothful and indolent, careless either in respect to their per sons, their children, their homes or their business. The apostle sums up the proper attitude of a true Christian as "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." The point is that with the Christian business, pleasure, luxury, name, fame, all are subordinate to the one thing to which he has consecrated his life. That one thing is to do the will of his Father in heaven to walk in the footsteps of his Master to cultivate in himself the fruits of the Spirit, the graces of the Spirit the divine character.

No fixed rule can be laid down on this subject; each of the Lord's people must decide for himself, must choose his own course, must determine whether he will be one of those who will bring forth much fruit to the Master's glory, or one of those who, because of the admixture of the spirit of the world, because of the permission of thorns, "cares of this life," "deceitfulness of riches," etc., will fail to bring forth proper fruitage. Some are prone to one extreme, and some to another. Occasionally I have met those who apparently were the Lord's true people and influenced by the spirit of the truth to a considerable degree, whose carelessness of personal appearance, of the home, of their children, of their business, spoke loudly against them, and, to a considerable degree, reflected unfavorably against the Lord's cause with which they were associated. These, however, we believe, are much less numerous than those who are being "choked" spiritually by the worldly ambition, pride of life and desire for riches and honor amongst men. Neither is it merely the rich that are in this danger. The apostle, as we have already quoted him, declares that it is those "who will to be rich" that are in the greatest danger. The strife after riches on the part of thousands upon thousands who never attain them constitute the thorns of our Lord's parable.

The parable does not relate to the world, but merely to those who have received the good seed. The world, with no interest in this seed and little knowledge of it, are not condemned by our text. The world needs ambition to spur it along, to keep it out of greater depths of degradation and sin; to the world, therefore, the cares of this life and endeavors to become rich may sometimes be advantageous rather than otherwise. These things may fill their hearts and time to such an extent as to more or less preserve them from degradation and bestiality, which are sure to beset those who have no ambitions, no cares those who are mere idlers, for “Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do,” and the idle mind is specially apt to become corrupt.

The hearts of the Lord’s people, represented in the “good ground” in which the “good seed” has been sown, have a special business, a special ambition, a special motive put before them in life, which, according to the Lord’s will, is to so absorb their time, their interests, their talents, their affections, that the “thorns,” the “cares of this life” will be killed. The apostle, addressing the Lord’s people along this line, says, “Set your affections upon things above, and not on things on the earth.” Our Lord on another occasion speaks from the same standpoint, saying, “Where your treasure is there will your heart be also.”

HEAVENLY TREASURES HEAVENLY CARES

The Lord’s proposition to His people, therefore, is that their treasure, their ambitions, their riches, their cares shall be in respect to the heavenly things, and that to such an extent that all earthly matters and considerations, pleasures and sorrows, will be as nothing in comparison with these heavenly obligations, joys, hopes, ambitions. If our affections are set upon the heavenly things, if the heavenly things are our real treasures, our lives will show it. However much we may love, the beautiful, the aesthetic, the sublime, we realize by faith that all these desires of our hearts will be fully, completely, absolutely realized when we shall gain the glorious things to which God has called us through His word. And this word, therefore, in the parable is represented by the good seed which brings forth the fruitage which the Lord approves and is seeking for at this present time.

Another thought in this connection: A great many nice people, of refined sentiments and of good hearts, have difficulty because they have not had the right kind of “seed” planted in their hearts. The seed that is generally sown today is, to a considerable degree, “tare” seed instead of true “wheat.” There is nothing of substance in the “tare” doctrines to satisfy our hearts or to fix them; and with those who have nothing better to fill their affections and ambitions, we do not wonder that the thorns and cares of this life flourish in their hearts. An intelligent person must have something upon which to center his interest, his affections; he must have some ambition in life in order to make any success of it, in any direction. The tare seed presents no real attraction to the intelligent mind; its hopes are intangible, indefinable, unsatisfactory. How important, then, that the good hearts should be sown with the good seed the kind which the Master sowed as represented in this parable.

Notice what is said respecting this good seed, that it was of a particular kind. Verse 19 tells us that the seed is the message or “Word of the Kingdom.” Ah, yes! we remember that throughout all our Master’s discourses He was continually telling His followers about the kingdom, the kingdom. He told them to pray for the kingdom, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." He told them that He was to be king of that kingdom, and in one parable He relates that as a young nobleman He would go to the far country, even heaven itself, to receive the investiture of the kingdom authority, and would return and establish that kingdom of righteousness amongst men. He told His followers that if they were faithful to him, when His kingdom would be established they should be His associates in it should sit with him in His throne. In His parables He continually referred to the kingdom, and told us that in the present time, in this present age, the kingdom class would be in process of selection from the world, and that at the close of this age they would "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father."

In numerous parables our Lord showed that the kingdom of heaven during this gospel age would have various vicissitudes during the period when the Lord would be calling, testing and proving those invited to be heirs of the kingdom, joint-heirs with His Son. He told them plainly that in this present time the kingdom of heaven would suffer violence that all of the kingdom class, all faithful to Him and to the principles of righteousness which He voiced, would be misunderstood by the world, persecuted, slandered, disesteemed as he was; but that rightly received all these experiences would be so many blessings, which would fit and prepare them for the honors, privileges and opportunities of the kingdom which would come in due time.

THE MESSAGE OF THE KINGDOM

The parable of which our text is a part represents this message of the kingdom, the good news that God is to have a kingdom which will take control of the world, overthrow the power of Satan and sin and bless and instruct mankind. It shows that the Lord is not expecting everybody to receive this message of the kingdom as it is now going forth, even amongst those who would come in contact with it. He illustrates the different kinds of hearts, and how many will fail to profit by the message. He shows, nevertheless, that there will be some seed that will bring forth fruitage, there will be some who will bear the gospel of the kingdom, in whom it will become indeed "the power of God unto salvation" in whom the ambition to please God and to inherit the glorious things which He is pleased to give to those who love Him better than they love houses, or lands, parents or children or any other creature, yea, better than they love themselves, will predominate and control.

Our Master clearly tells us that we are not to expect many to be thus exercised by the message of the kingdom. His words are, "not many great, not many mighty, not many learned, not many wise according to the course of this world, not many rich hath God chosen, but (chiefly) the poor of this world, rich in faith, to be heirs of the kingdom." And this company, He tells us, will be altogether a "little flock." His words are, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

Dear friends, I trust that you all like myself have heard something respecting the Lord's kingdom. I trust that the good word, the good message respecting it, the call to be members of that kingdom, has entered your hearts. I trust that your hearts are "good ground," honest, sincere, in accord with righteousness. I trust that the "good seed" is bringing forth much fruit in your hearts, in your daily lives, in your character that you are growing in grace, in knowledge, in love, in all the fruits of the Spirit, and bringing forth also in service to Him, to His praise. I trust that although you realize the tendency of "thorns" cares of this life, deceitfulness of riches, ambitions, the spirit of the world to encroach upon you, nevertheless by the Lord's grace, you are determined that it shall not be so; that your hearts shall be so loyal to him, so filled with the hope of the better things that He has promised, that earthly ambitions shall be thoroughly crowded out and that thus the "thorns" shall fail to flourish.

It is but a little time until the great Messiah who already has redeemed the world shall stand forth clothed in the plenitude of power, to bring to all mankind the blessings, the privileges, the opportunities, secured by His ransom-sacrifice finished at Calvary. The waiting time is nearly over. The dawn of the millennial morning may already be seen from the standpoint of the Lord's word, and is very encouraging to those who do see it. The long interim of delay, from the time the Master went until His return in kingdom glory, has been an opportunity for the good seed of the kingdom to flourish in the hearts of those who are really sincere, and to bring forth fruit to His praise.

The parable does not include the world, but only the church; it does not include those who have never heard the gospel of the kingdom, but those only who have heard it. The wayside and thorny-ground and stony-ground hearers of the message constitute the great mass of Christendom while the good ground hearers who bring forth much fruitage are the true "household of faith." The last only shall inherit the kingdom all the others will "suffer loss" the loss of all those heavenly things promised to the faithful. Thank God they will not be eternally tortured, however. No, no, the sufferer loses enough in the present, as well as in the future loses a share in the kingdom.

Very soon the harvest will be gathered in the elect of the Lord will be changed to His likeness; not a member will be missing, neither a member superfluous. As joint-heirs with our Lord in His kingdom they shall be associated with Him, even as He declared in His last great message. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my Father in His throne.” Let us be of good courage. Greater is he that is for us than all they that be against us. He has promised us grace and help in every time of need; He has promised to guide us with His eye and afterward to receive us to glory. But He is waiting to see whether we love Him and the principles for which He stands and the glorious things which He has promised us, or whether we love more the things of this present life.

THE PENALTY OF THORN BEARING

The Lord does not say either here or elsewhere that those good hearts which are now choked with the thorny cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches will be punished with eternal torture. Their punishment will be the loss of joint-heirship in the kingdom the loss of a share with the Lord and all the saints in the spiritual, heavenly glories of the kingdom class which, during the millennial age, will “bless all the families of the earth.”

Let us see to it that we keep constantly before our minds the gracious message of the kingdom and the glories and favors and privileges identified with it, that this may be a protection to us against the insidious, sapping influences of the cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches. Whoever does not clearly see and appreciate the kingdom, and keep it continually before his mind will certainly be apt to be overrun with the thorns and bring little or no fruitage to maturity. As we look over Christendom today how evident it is that the great mass of both “wheat” and “tares” are sadly overcharged with this world’s ambitions and cares and hopes and fears. Let us not only seek to be faithful ourselves, but to lend a helping hand to as many as are within our reach.

SALVATION OF THE HUMAN RACE BOUGHT WITH THE PRECIOUS BLOOD

Pastor Russell was at home yesterday, but expects to speak at New Albany, Ind., next Sunday. He spoke yesterday afternoon as follows:

“Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price.” “Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, such as silver and gold but with the precious blood of Christ.” 1 Cor. 6:19-20; 1 Pet. 1:18-19.

Ye do make void the Word of God through your traditions, was our Lord’s charge against the scribes and Pharisees and doctors of divinity in the “harvest” of the Jewish age; and we must bring a similar charge against corresponding classes in the “harvest” of this gospel age. Human theories are rapidly making void and meaningless the precious testimonies of God’s Word, recognized by all of His true people for centuries. One of the most serious deflections, one of the most important, because touching one of the most vital doctrines of the scriptures, is the rejection of the testimony of our text. The unreflecting among the Lord’s people will be disposed at once to say that this is a false charge that ministers and Christian people in general of all denominations are still loyal to this fountain principle of the gospel, that they still believe and teach the doctrine of the ransom, briefly expressed in the hymn once so generally sung, but now as particularly avoided:

*“Naught of merit or of price
Remains to Justice due;
Jesus died and paid it all—
Yes, all that I did owe.”*

This doctrine of the ransom or purchase of our race by the precious blood of Christ is not only ignored by modern up-to-date theologians, but is absolutely obnoxious to them, irritating. During the last 50 years all the colleges and seminaries of Christendom have gradually been absorbing human traditions and theories which are violently opposed to this scriptural teaching. If the one is true, the other is false there is no compromise possible. Maintenance of the scriptural teaching on this subject would mean the death of the false theory; the acceptance of the false theory means the rejection of this scriptural doctrine of “a ransom for all.” It will be recognized that I refer to the higher critical teachings and the evolution theory associated therewith. Inquiry will show that nearly all the ministers of nearly all denominations are believers in the doctrine of evolution that the progenitors of our race, instead of being created perfect and upright in the image of their Creator, were evolved from lower animals, and were much further from the Creator’s likeness than mankind in general of today even the most brutish.

On this point the whole of Christianity depends. We repeat that there is no possibility of compromise. If our first parents were but one remove from the brute creation they were not in God’s image and likeness, and consequently the scriptural declarations of their trial for eternal life are absurd, for who could think even for a moment that a being on so low a plane of life could in any sense of the word have been placed on trial before the perfect law of God. And if such a trial would be a mockery, an absurdity, then the scriptural teaching of a fall from the divine likeness and image into sin, degradation and death conditions would be equally untrue and absurd. How could a man who was but one step in advance of a monkey fall into sin and degradation? How could the account of Genesis be true? How could the testimonies of the apostles be true, “By one man’s disobedience sin entered into the world and death as the result of sin, and so death has passed upon all men because all are sinners”? Rom. 5:12.

And this line of thought, of man’s fall from the divine likeness into sin and under the divine sentence of death, prevails throughout the entire scripture record. God’s first dealings with the nation of Israel promised them relief from the conditions of “the curse” and promised that God would send a great Messiah with whom that people might become participants in the work of blessing the world and lifting mankind in general out of the sin-and-death conditions of the curse. How absurd, how false, how deceptive this would be if the views of modern theologians respecting the gradual evolutionary development of our race from Adam until now be true in any particular or degree.

JUSTICE DEMANDED A LIFE FOR A LIFE

It was in harmony with God’s declaration to the Israelites that they and all the world were sinners that He provided for their reconciliation to Himself through the media of atonement for their sins by sacrifices of bulls and goats, etc. These sacrifices, as the apostle points out, were not claimed to be complete, but merely covered the blemishes of that people for a year following their Day of Atonement. When the year expired the merit or covering of the sacrifice was at an end, and the whole people were again in sin and required to repeat the same sacrifices. The apostle points out that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins for that reason the sacrifices must be offered yearly.

St. Paul points out also that those sacrifices “offered year by year continually” never took away sin, but merely covered the sins temporarily. He explains that all this was typical as indicating the method by which God would eventually cancel completely the sins of the whole world through a better sacrifice than that of bulls and goats. He points out also that our Lord Jesus came into the world for this very purpose that he might be the real sin-offering, for the sins of the whole world, and that he might thus actually and permanently effect a cancellation of those sins. His message is: “God so loved the world that He sent His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life. God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world (the world was already condemned) but that the world through Him might be saved” delivered from the sins, weaknesses and blemishes affecting all by heredity and from the death penalty resting upon all because of sin.

Those affected by the higher critical and evolutionary blight will tell us that they believe that “in a certain sense” God sent His Son that they believe He came to give us more light than we could have had without Him, etc. We Answer--that we will discuss the “more light” emanating from our dear Redeemer as “the light of the world” at another time, but now we want to call attention to the fact that a Christian from the scriptural standpoint is not one who believes merely that Jesus was a great teacher and light-bearer to the world, for heathen people believe this much of Jesus, even as we believe that some of the heathen teachers were noble men, superior to the masses; and infidels of the rankest kind believe that Jesus lived, and that He died, and that He was a good man, and that He was a wonderful teacher, and that He left a remarkable impress upon the world. Such a belief is not to be considered a test of Christian faith in Christ.

The test of Christian faith which differentiates it from such beliefs as the foregoing that are common to infidels, heathen, higher critics and evolutionists and the whole world is a very particular one. It relates to Christ's death and to what was the object of His death. The Christian faith once delivered to the saints, in which heathen and infidels and higher critics and evolutionists cannot join, is expressed most pronouncedly in the scriptures. Mark the apostle's statement: “I delivered unto you first of all (as a primary foundation of Christian faith) that which I also received (as a primary teaching), how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that He was buried, and that he rose again on the third day”—“for our justification.” (1 Cor. 15:3-4.) The name Christian properly belongs only to those who thus believe that the death of Christ was not of an ordinary kind, not for His own sins, not a debt of nature, but a penalty or price which He paid for our sins, as expressed also in our text. “Ye are bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ.”

Hear again the word of our Master Himself, and who will dispute that He was well informed respecting His own mission and work? He says, “The Son of man came not to be ministered unto (served) but to minister (to serve others), and to give His life a ransom for many.” (Matt. 20:28.) The stress of this entire statement lies upon the word ransom, which in the Greek is lutron anti, and which means “a price in offset.” The harmony of this with our text is evident, and the thought is plain to every mind not warped and prejudiced by the traditions of men, which make void the word of God. It means that Christ in giving His life gave the offset or purchase price, for Adam's life, which for himself and his race was forfeited through disobedience. Since we were all in Adam's loins at the time of his disobedience and at the time the death sentence was passed upon him, his race were all sharers in his sentence, and consequently all must be sharers in his redemption; and hence it was the divine arrangement that our Lord Jesus should give His life as a price in offset, a price that would correspond to the penalty which was upon the race he would redeem.

ONE MEDIATOR BETWEEN GOD AND MEN

The Apostle Paul in his letter to Timothy makes this very plain, and distinctly declares, "There is one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." (1 Tim. 2:5-6.) Here again we have the same English word ransom with the same meaning, namely, "a corresponding price" a price in offset. The Greek word is a compound one, with the two parts in reverse order to their statement in the previous quotation. There it was lutron anti, here it is anti lutron. The signification is the same and is indisputable. In this last text the apostle is speaking about our Lord Jesus as a Mediator, and here again is the thought that man had so fallen from his original relationship to God that as a sinner he could no longer have access to or communion with God could no longer hope for divine favor and eternal life because a sinner; and that to meet the emergency, God still maintaining His justice of character and laws provided a Mediator a go-between who, dealing with God as the sinner's representative, might also deal with the sinner as God's representative, and thus eventually bring about a full and complete reconciliation. And the word reconciliation, elsewhere used in the scriptures, signifies that there had been a conciliation, a harmony between God and His creatures, which had been lost through sin, and the mission of the Mediator was and is to again conciliate, or bring again into harmony, God and man.

There are two parts to this mediation or reconciliation (1) The Mediator first of all as man's representative pays man's penalty at the bar of divine justice, and thus effects a cancellation of the just penalty against man the death penalty. (2) On the basis of such a payment of man's penalty, divine justice can accept the mediation, and can allow the Mediator to thus act as the divine representative toward man to bring him back to the state or condition similar to that which he had originally bestowed upon him and from which he fell where he can again in the image of his Creator possess the blessings and privileges originally bestowed in Eden.

It was to effect the first of these two steps of mediation that our Lord Jesus left the glory which he had with the Father before the world was, and was made flesh and died for our sins purchasing Adam and his race with His own precious blood from under the sentence of everlasting death, everlasting extinction. Had He not died for our sins the divine penalty "the soul that sinneth it shall die," would have remained forever upon Adam and all of his posterity there would have been no resurrection, no future life. It is in view of the fact that "Christ died for our sins" that we may have hope for a future life by a resurrection of the dead.

Time does not permit us to take up the numerous scriptures which corroborate the statement of our text and of the other passages already quoted from the scriptures showing that our race was purchased, bought, and that the price of this liberty from death, the price for this hope for reconciliation with God, centers in the death of Christ as our redemption price.

Lest there should be any misunderstanding on the subject, lest the misrepresentations frequently made should seem forceful, we call your attention to the fact that the word bought in our text is no mistranslation of the original, which is agorazo, and which signifies an open or public purchase, a purchase in the open market. We note also the fact that our English words redeem and redeemed, so frequently used in the scriptures have the same import and are from the same Greek word agorazo. For instance, this word is rendered redeemed in Revelation 5:9, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood." In Revelation 14:8, "Which were redeemed from the earth," Revelation 14:4, "These were redeemed from among men." Exagorazo signifies to purchase out publicly, and occurs in the following scriptures: Gal. 3:18, "Christ has redeemed us from the curse," Gal. 4:5, "To redeem them that were under the law."

True, other less forceful original words are sometimes translated redeemed and redemption, words which signify a setting free without signifying that the freedom is secured by the payment of the price, but this does not at all affect our argument, nor nullify the fact that a score of texts declare that the setting free must be effected by the payment to justice of "a corresponding price." The scriptures declare that the whole race was sold under sin through the disobedience of Adam, and that there is only one way for us to get free from his sentence of condemnation, namely, through the redemption which is in Christ; and that redemption is the ransom, the corresponding price which He paid.

CHRISTIANS BELIEVE IN BLOOD-ATONEMENT

Because the evolution theory, the no-ransom theory, is rapidly undermining and destroying true Christian faith that distinguishes a Christian from the world, that distinguishes the wheat from the tares therefore we emphasize this point and assure you, not that the great mass of religious teachers are in danger of falling from the faith once delivered to the saints, but that the majority have already fallen that they no longer believe the primary foundation of the gospel of Christ upon which all the other features of the gospel of Christ upon which all the other features of the gospel are built. They are no longer teachers whom God recognizes, but as expressed in Revelation 3:16, they are spewed out of His mouth, are no longer used as His mouthpieces for the promulgation of His message. Their deflection will be more and more manifest as days and months and years roll by. The true people of God, both clergy and laity, are gradually but surely taking their places either for or against the Lord and His message and faith in the efficacy of the precious blood for the cancellation of sins is one of the tests the principle one. And the cleavage on this line grows wider daily, separating "wheat" from "tares," in this the "harvest time." Those who take the traditions of the elders and the theories of the higher critics and evolutionists are against the word of God and hence are against God Himself opponents of God and His gospel no matter how dignified or learned, and no matter with what formalism they draw nigh to the Lord with their lips, while their hearts are far from Him and the plan of salvation which He has formulated and which He is carrying out.

The sooner all learn the true situation the better. Matters have already reached such a pass that every Christian parent should know that in sending his son or daughter to any of the colleges of today he is sending them to hot-beds of infidelity, and ninety-nine chances to one their faith in the teachings of the bible will be nullified, destroyed they will return to propagate their unbelief outwardly and publicly or in secret. Let us not be misunderstood; we have nothing personally against the gentlemen we criticize; many of them are fine men, talented, able, and generally speaking, honest. Many of them find it difficult to restrain themselves from the more honest expression of their views respecting the scriptures, the atonement of Christ, etc., and practice their deception against their preferences "for the good of the cause," hoping that gradually their evolutionary conceptions will displace the teaching of the scripture and that thus a complete revolution in the church will be effected with but slight commotion. Already, indeed, any who believe in the scriptures, in the story of the fall of our first parents, in the miraculous birth of Christ, in His death as our redemption price, in His resurrection as our redeemer to set mankind free from the original penalty by restitution, etc. whoever thus believes is already looked upon as an old fogy, a back number, stupid or ignorant, or both.

Let us not be afraid of such criticisms; let us stand for the Lord and for His word at any cost. The Lord's favor in the end and the peace and comfort meanwhile will far more than offset all the unpleasant things that may be said respecting us in the present time. "Greater is he that is for us than all they that be against us." God, His plan, and His book which reveals that plan, will be found triumphant eventually, and, as the scriptures declare, the wisdom of the worldly wise shall perish and the folly of their course will be manifested.

We do not claim to be own grounds; we do not claim to be able to prove from outward evidence the full truthfulness of all the statements of the Bible and its divine inspiration; we do not claim to be able to read the rocks and to explain every feature in full accord with the Divine Word; but we do claim that the scriptures give internal evidences which are satisfactory to all those who appreciate them. We do claim that the plan of God set forth in the scriptures, when rightly understood, is most reasonable, most just, most wise, most loving that no scheme which man could possible invent could compare in beauty and reasonableness with the plan which God has already arranged and of which the scriptures are His expression.

I received a letter last week which illustrates this internal power of the scriptures when rightly understood. It is from one of our colporteurs engaged in circulating the Millennial Dawn volumes. I will read from his letter: "Believing that it might be of interest to you I will relate how the truth of the Bible as set forth in Millennial Dawn, affected a very rank, outspoken infidel, an old French doctor 85 years old, a reader of the infidel journal, "Truth Seeker," and an admirer of Robert G. Ingersoll, of whom I was warned repeatedly that he was poison to all preachers and religious workers.

"Unheeding the warnings I called on him. He seemed nettled and asked if we taught that the Bible is the inspired Word of God. When I replied affirmatively he wanted nothing more to do with me or with the book, said that he had enough of Christianity, that its whole foundation is a fraud and a fake from first to last.

I asked proofs, which led him to a weak attempt to entangle the Biblical records, the Levitical priesthood, etc. Soon he left the Bible and attacked modern theology, Christian (?) governments, etc. I soon showed that his arguments touched neither the Bible nor the Dawn and presently got his attention. He bought the first volume, "The Plan of the Ages." had become deeply interested in Bible study, and is selling the books for me among his friends. Really words can scarcely express his great change of this man's disposition, once haughty and sarcastic, he is now docile and friendly.

From this standpoint we may see the force of the divine statement through the prophet, "Your ways are not as My ways, nor your plans as My plans, said the Lord; for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways and My plans higher than your plans." Isa. 55:8-9. Those who come to see the scriptures in their true light find no poetical exaggeration in the statement of the hymn, "It satisfies my longings as nothing else can do."

YE ARE NOT YOUR OWN

This first clause of our text would be meaningless if the purchase feature of the second clause were eliminated. As it is it stands in full accord as part of the divine testimony respecting what has been accomplished by our Lord, and the influence which a knowledge of this should have upon all those who have “an ear to hear” the good tidings. We have already pointed out that the secondary part of Mediator’s work is that, after having satisfied divine justice by paying the death penalty that rested upon man, the Mediator’s work will be to bring mankind back into accord with God. This work of Christ belongs to the next age, the millennial age, and respecting it the Apostle Peter declares, “Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and He shall send Jesus Christ who before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive (retain) until the times of restitution of all things that God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.” Acts 3:19-21.

During that glorious millennial age the great Mediator, Jesus Christ, and His faithful followers, the church “whose names are written in heaven,” glorified as His bride, will bless the redeemed world with every good favor necessary to them. All shall be brought to knowledge of the truth, all shall be taught of God through the great Mediator, all shall be helped out the weaknesses and imperfections which came upon them through the fall, and which in many instances were accentuated and increased by personal wrong doing; all shall be sympathetically dealt with with a view to making them understand fully and distinctly the love of God which passeth all understanding, and that the love of God is being manifested through the Redeemer and through no other channel that there is no other name given under heaven and among men whereby we must be saved, and that obedience to the great Immanuel will be the only terms upon which they can hope to return to their “former estate.” Ezek. 16:55.

The blessing thus extended through the Mediator will first reach to all the living families of the earth, and “the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the face of the great deep.” Eventually the same blessing shall be extended to all who sleep in the dust of the earth.” Dan. 12:2. As our dear Redeemer declared, “The hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and shall come forth.” Some who in the present life have passed their trial acceptably and have been approved by God as overcomers will come forth to the life resurrection, and the remainder, disapproved, will come forth unto the judgment resurrection (R. V.) The latter will be the great mass of mankind, since only a few at the present time have this testimony that they please God.

THESE FEW ARE THE SAINTS

But, some may inquire, why preach that Christ's work for the world as Mediator belongs to the coming age to the millennial age? Why should we not think that it belongs exclusively to the present age? Why should not our Lord have begun at once the work of reconciling the world to God as soon as He had finished the great atonement sacrifice? These are fair questions and they deserve a candid answer, which we will give them.

The apostle declares that God was, in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself, not imputing their transgressions unto Him but imputing those transgressions resulting from the Adamic fall to Christ, who died for those transgressions, and who redeemed Adam and us all from their condemnation. The work of reconciliation from God's standpoint in a large sense is one work, but divided into two parts. First, God would find a "godly seed," a little flock of a peculiar class, very zealous for truth and righteousness. These in the divine plan are to have a special salvation, different from others of the race; they are to be selected first, much as we would separate the cream from the milk. This cream class the Lord has designed yea, says the apostle, has fore-ordained "from before the foundation of the world" to be a special class, to receive special favors at His hands, including a participation in the divine nature and in the heavenly glory, honor and immortality, as the bride and joint-heirs of Christ.

Second, the divine arrangement is that when this special class shall have thus been glorified as the members of Christ and his joint-heirs, then the second step in the work of reconciliation shall proceed, and all the families of the earth shall be brought to most favorable conditions for character development and testing, with a view to their attaining the "restitution" to all that was lost human perfection, and those rights and privileges and blessings as earthly children of God, for whom he will prepare the whole earth as a "paradise of God," still grander and more complete than was the Eden garden that was lost through sin.

From this scriptural standpoint we can see distinctly why the Lord places the blessing of the world in the next age and the blessing of the church class in the present age. The trials and difficulties and oppositions of the world, the flesh and the adversary of the present time contribute to the polishing and testing experiences by which the Lord will prove and separate those accounted worthy to be joint heirs with His Son in the kingdom the "Bride, the Lamb's wife." The blessing of the world delays until this gathering, testing and glorification of the church is accomplished, because the church is to be associated with Christ in the millennial age blessings; hence they are called the kingdom class, as when our Lord declared, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." This is the same kingdom mentioned by the Lord in the prayer taught His disciples, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." It is this kingdom for which we wait, "The kingdom of God's dear Son," which is to institute a reign of righteousness, restraining evil, promoting good and eventually blessing and uplifting to perfection all who will obey the laws of that kingdom under full enlightenment and assistance, and will destroy in the second death all who will not thus come into accord with the Lord. Acts 3:23.

YOUR REASONABLE SERVICE

The scriptures declare that the majority of mankind are at the present time so blinded by selfishness, ignorance, prejudice, etc., as to be incapable of discerning the divine plan. The apostle specifically declares this, saying, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not." Our Lord intimated that those who will be able to see the truth in the present time are few when He said, "Blessed are your eyes for they see and your ears for they hear," and again, "He that hath an ear let him hear." While it is a part of our privilege to tell the good tidings to every hearing ear, to show the wonderful love of God to every eye that can see, nevertheless it is not for us to feel unkindly toward those who can neither see nor hear, but rather to rejoice that God's love and wisdom are such that the divine plan shall ultimately include in its provisions the opening of all the blind eyes and the unstopping of all the deaf ears, to the intent that all may know the Lord from the least to the greatest, that to Him their knees shall bow." Isa. 35:5; Phil. 2:10.

In the meantime during this gospel age, as our text implies, those who do see the divine arrangement, who do see that we are bought with a price, who do see God's arrangement for giving eternal life to those who will obey the Mediator all such should realize that they are "not their own," that they were bought with a price; that their lives and all they have, therefore, belongs to the Lord. The apostle in another place, addressing this class, says, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God (in your redemption), that ye present your bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God, your reasonable service." (Rom. 12:1.) Such a service, such a life of sacrifice, is reasonable only to those who see something, at least, of "the lengths and breadths and heights and depths" of the love of God; to others the world, including merely nominal Christians and moralists the matter is different. Because they do not see by faith, they cannot walk by faith, and from their standpoint the sacrificing of present interests in favor of a life and glory and honor unseen, would be an unreasonable service, Such are not "called." "The Lord knoweth them that are His."

By and by when the world comes to "see," when it comes to walk by sight and to have practical evidences and demonstrations of the power of God, and the will of God, the world's responsibility will proportionately increase, and eventually by the close of the millennial age it will be their "reasonable service" also to consider that they are "not their own," to appreciate that being bought with the precious blood of Christ their lives and everything they have should be freely at the Lord's disposal. Nevertheless the Lord will not then accept sacrifices as He does now. The privilege of sacrificing is a special and peculiar one, as it is written, "Now (during this gospel age or day) is the acceptable time" now is the time when God will receive these living sacrifices, accounted holy and acceptable through the merit of Christ. The holy angels have no such opportunities, neither will the holy people of the world in the next age have opportunities for sacrificing, so far as anything in the scriptures would indicate. This special privilege of realizing the Lord's favor and participating with Christ in the sacrifice, self-denials, etc. in the present time belongs only to the church class of this gospel age, and the rewards to this church class are correspondingly greater than any others God has ever given, and, so far as we know, will ever give glory, honor, immortality, the "divine nature." 2 Pet. 1:4.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us who have had the eyes of our understanding opened to some extent, watch and pray that they may open wider and still wider to all the grandeur and beauty of our Heavenly Father's character and plan; and let us show our appreciation of His great love wherewith He loved us in our devotion to Him; and let the words of our mouths and the meditation of our hearts and so far as in us lies, all the conduct of life, be such as will have the divine approval, so that ultimately by the Lord's grace we may be accounted worthy; that, having suffered with Christ in this present time, we may share also in the glorious time to follow the kingdom of glory.

The Lord willing, at some not distant date we will consider the fruits of the ransom, of the lengths and breadths of the salvation secured by the great atonement sacrifice. We close with the apostle's words, "We thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead; and that we who live should henceforth live not unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us." 2 Cor. 5:14.

A FEARFUL THING TO FALL INTO THE HANDS OF THE LIVING GOD

New Albany, Ind. -Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny, Pa., addressed a large audience here today at 3 p. m. on "God's Oath-Bound Covenant to Abraham and His Seed." His evening discourse is herewith reported in full. He goes from here to St. Louis, but is to be in Allegheny next Sunday. He said:

I choose for my text the words of the apostle: "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Heb. 10:31

There are two things about this text that are sure to strike the reflective mind as very peculiar until the reasoner has made some progress in the study of the plan of the ages. First of all he will say to himself, "Ah, how strange! If God is the good, loving being which the scriptures everywhere represent Him to be, why should it be a fearful thing to fall into His hands? Should we not prefer to fall into the hands of the Lord rather than into the hands of man or into other hands?" The second question arising in such a mind is "How could we fall into God's hands? Are we not His creatures? And as such are we not already in His hands? And is it not impossible for us to take ourselves out of His hands? And if these things be so, where is the consistency of this inspired declaration of the apostle "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. "' Such arguments are sound they cannot be contradicted. But the facts can be explained in full accord with them.

Taking the last question first: We agree that the world of mankind is in the hands of God, that Adam was his creature and that all of Adam's descendants likewise were in the hands of the Creator. Because of disobedience the Creator sentenced them all to death, and they are still in His hands as convicts, going day by day, hour by hour, minute by minute, to execution—"The wages of sin is death." It is true, then, that the world cannot fall into the hands of the living God, but it is also true that the apostle is not writing to the world nor about the world, but respecting the church. The Church of Christ has, in the scriptures, a plane or standing in the divine plan, separate and distinct from that of the world. The Lord's words on this subject are, "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but ye are not of the world, for I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." John 15:18-19.

But does not the apostle say that "of one blood God created all the families of the earth?" And if so, how can the church, gathered out of every nation, people, kindred and tongue, have a different standing before God from that of the remainder of the world? The apostle does so state and we agree, quoting again from his words, “We are children of wrath even as others.” But consecrated believers, “the church of the living God whose names are written in heaven,” are no longer children of wrath, no longer part of the world; they have been officially translated or taken over from the family of Adam to the family of God. In the language of the scriptures they have been begotten again to new hopes, new aims, new objects, new ambitions, a new relationship to God. It is this class and not the world that the apostle is addressing in our text. To these “New Creatures in Christ Jesus,” to whom “old things are passed away and all things have become new” to these it would be a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. 2 Cor. 5:17.

NEW CREATURES IN CHRIST

This expression, “New Creatures in Christ Jesus,” is full of meaning. It signifies that this class, the church, “whose names are written in heaven,” have no individual standing before God, separate and apart from the world; their standing, their justification, their peace with God, their acceptance as children of God, is based upon their union with Christ. As the apostle declares, we are “accepted in the beloved,” not personally. The scriptures set forth the Lord Jesus to be the great Mediator through whom those who believe on Him, trust Him, obey Him according to their ability, are reckoned as having passed from death unto life, from imperfection to perfection although this great change has not yet taken place in them, but is merely hoped for on the basis of the divine promise to be fulfilled in the resurrection morning.

Many in perplexity ask: Why is there need of a mediator if God is love and has sympathy toward his creatures? Why not deal with them directly, forgiving their sins and accepting them to himself as an earthly parent would do? Surely an earthly parent would not require his returning prodigal son to come through a mediator and refuse to accept him otherwise. Why, then, should God so deal with us? We Answer--that in our dealings with our fellows and with our children we are to remember that both are imperfect. Hence it would not be right for us to attempt to deal with one another on the basis of absolute justice, absolute righteousness. Our dealings must be on the basis of mercy and compassion, even as we hope to obtain mercy of the Lord as it is written, He shall obtain no mercy who shows no mercy. No other course would be reasonable for us. But with God matters are totally different. In the first place His dealing with our race took place over 6,000 years ago when it, as represented in the first pair, was perfect in the mental and moral image of the Creator. In our first parents the race was tested respecting its obedience and loyalty to the Creator. Disobedience brought its penalty sin, degradation and death, mental, moral and physical blemishes, resulting in destruction. That was a fearful experience. We are all witnesses to it still, for, as the apostle declares, “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.”

While the very essence of the divine character is declared to be love, there are other elements equally necessary, namely, justice, wisdom, power. While divine sympathy and love were unquestionably moved toward humanity from the very beginning of the execution of the penalty, “Dying, thou shalt die,” nevertheless divine wisdom and justice forbade the exercise of divine love in any manner that would conflict with wisdom and justice. For instance, divine wisdom would properly rule that if the Almighty were to break His word and lift the penalty of death from the condemned ones, not only would it not be right so to do, but it would furnish a bad lesson for mankind in the future, for they could say that if God could violate His terms on one occasion, He could with equal propriety repeat such exercises of mercy, and thus to some extent God would become particeps criminis--a sharer in sin by countenancing it.

Furthermore, this would be establishing a bad precedent, a wrong precedent in the sight of the entire universe. As the myriads of holy angels would look on and perceive that God could and did countenance sin and that He did lift from the sinner the death penalty he had pronounced on Him, it would be a suggestion that every holy angel would have a similar right to expect divine clemency for once at least. It would be tantamount to saying that God did not object to each of His creatures indulging once in sin that He was willing to pass by, overlook, forgive one transgression for each. What a lowering of the divine standard of righteousness on God’s part this would have been in the sight of all His intelligent creatures! Wisdom, therefore, forbade the exercise of clemency in the case of our first parents forbade that their sin of disobedience should be forgiven them, forbade that they should be restored by the Almighty to the Garden of Eden and all the privileges previously enjoyed. Wisdom insists that the death penalty, being once stated and having been merited, must not only be pronounced, but must be executed.

Divine justice, too, had a voice in the matter, declaring that the standard of righteousness as a condition for eternal life must be maintained that for God to cancel the penalty would mean a violation of justice upon the part of Him Who is the author of justice and Whose will is the standard of justice. Such a thought of such a forgiveness of sin and annulling of its penalty could not, therefore, be entertained by the Almighty no, not for an instant.

But divine love had another plan, with which divine justice and divine wisdom could and did fully concur; and that plan the scriptures tell us was formulated before the foundation of the world long before the creation of our first parents, whose fall into sin was foreseen. The remedy which love arranged for the recovery of the sinner and for the annulment of his death sentence was through the death of a substitute for Adam. If a substitute for Adam could be found who would pay Adam's penalty, justice could make no objection to Adam having another trial, for its claims would be met by his substitute. This was exactly the divine plan and what occurred when the Lord Jesus gave Himself as man's ransom-price or substitute when He died the "just for the unjust." 1 Pet. 3:18.

Of course no member of Adam's race could be his substitute, because all had shared in his fall; and, all being imperfect, were themselves under condemnation of justice. The Prophet Job expresses this matter clearly, saying: "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." (Job 14:4.) Again, we read: "None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him." (Psa. 49:7.) Thus it came that it was necessary under the divine decree that the Savior of men should be a being whose life was not tainted by Adam's sin, and yet must be a member in some way of the human family and associated with it in order that God might be just and yet be the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. Rom. 3:26.

It was to fill this requirement of justice that our great Lord and Master left the heavenly courts, laying aside His glory, permitting his life to be transferred, so that, in due time, he was born as the babe of Bethlehem. Thus he who was rich for our sakes became poor that we through his poverty might be made rich. (2 Cor. 8:9.) We have not the time on this occasion to consider the modus operandi by which this transfer from the heavenly plane to the earthly plane of being took place and yet maintained the purity, the perfection, the holiness of the child and subsequently of the man Christ Jesus. This showing of how, though born of an imperfect mother, our Lord was undefiled by sin and imperfection—"was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners" many of you already have in print, and others who desire it can readily obtain it in the fifth volume of the Millennial Dawn series.

Our Lord Jesus "poured out His soul unto death"—"He made His soul an offering for sin" He substituted in death His soul or being in exchange for the condemned soul or being of Father Adam; and in redeeming Adam, who was the one under sentence of justice, He redeemed the entire race of Adam which was sharing his sentence. Thus, in brief, we have an outline of the atonement for sin which God purposed, provided, accomplished. Our Lord gave Himself up and was put to death in the flesh as "the man Christ Jesus," as the ransom for the man Adam and his entire family and inheritance. But the Father, in harmony with His previous engagements, would not allow His obedient Son to suffer loss through this great transaction. The Father could not restore His Son to human nature without annulling the ransom-price paid to justice, and thus annulling the redemption of humanity; but neither was this desirable any way, for had Jesus been restored by resurrection to human nature it would have been an everlasting perpetuation of the "poverty" condition to Him Who previously had been "rich" and Who became "Poor" for our sakes. The Father, on the contrary, raised our Lord Jesus from the dead not to human conditions, neither to angelic conditions, but to the most glorious of all conditions, to the divine nature—"far above angels and principalities and powers, and every name that is named." (Eph. 1:21.) Thus the work of our Lord Jesus not only secured to mankind the unspeakable gift of eternal life, but it secured to Him the highest of all glory and honor and dominion and power next to the Father, in the Father, in the Father's throne. Rev. 3:21; Phil. 2:9.

The scriptures represent this great transaction from various standpoints, just as we may take photographs of a great building or of a city from various standpoints. One of these pictures of our Lord's work represents Him as having "bought" the whole world with His precious blood represents Him as having become the purchaser of Adam and his entire family of now some 20,000,000,000, all seriously impaired, mentally, morally and physically, and the vast majority of them in the great prison-house of death, in the tomb. The purchaser may do what He wills with His own, and His will on the subject is in exact accord with the Father's will, for He came to do the will of Him that sent Him and to finish His work. In harmony with the Father's will, the Son now takes possession of just so many of the human family purchased as the Father draws to Him. His declaration is, "No man can come unto Me except the Father, who sent Me draw Him; and he that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out."

The great mass of the world of mankind are, therefore, not at all included in this present dealing with the church of believers selected from the world, and with whom the great Redeemer began to deal, shedding forth upon such believers at Pentecost the holy spirit, thus accepting them according to the Father's plan, in this figure, as members of His own body, of which He is the head. It is in line with this illustration that the apostle declares that we, as members of the body of Christ, should recognize one another and appreciate the fact that every member of this elect church represents, to some extent, the Head, so that the hands cannot say to the feet, I have no need of you and vice-versa. (1 Cor. 12:12-27.) Under another illustration the Lord represents these called-out ones, these believers, these followers in His footsteps, as being a chaste virgin church espoused to Him, by and by, at the close of this dispensation, to become His bride and joint heir in all the glorious things and experiences of eternity.

BELIEVERS IN CHRIST'S HANDS

It is to this class of called-out ones, to this church class, that the apostle addresses the words of our text. They are not in the hands of the Father, but reckonedly are in the hands of the Son for mercy's sake. If each believer were recognized of the Father separately and individually, then each one of them separately and individually would come under the great law of the universe, the same that applies to the angels, the same applied to Adam in his perfection namely, "The wages of sin is death." These new creatures in Christ, not yet being perfect, would if in the Father's hands, subject to His inflexible law of do and live, fail to do and die, would all be sure of condemnation, because, however changed are their minds, however transformed their wills, however they are seeking to walk not after the flesh but after the spirit, nevertheless they still have, as the apostle declares, this treasure of the new mind, the new heart, the new will, in the old earthen vessels, in the blemished body, and cannot do the things that they would.

It is very plain, therefore, that we not only needed to be redeemed from the original sentence of death, but that we needed also to have our Redeemer's merit over us as an imputed robe of righteousness to cover our defects and blemishes, until such a time as having been trained in the school of Christ, having learned of Him, we finally have His approval and the Father's approval of the attitude of our hearts toward sin and toward righteousness, and that in the resurrection we shall be clothed upon with the new bodies unblemished by sin and imperfection in the which we can and will delight to do the divine will perfectly. Until that time we must abide in the hands of the Mediator, receive His schooling and assistance and preparation for a share in the first resurrection, to be His joint heirs in the kingdom. Then our Lord, our head, our bridegroom, will present His faithful "little flock" before the Father "faultless," (Jude 24), in which condition they will have the Father's full approval and be in no danger of condemnation at His hands.

Now note how the apostle's words are addressed in the context to this class that now take heed while in the school of Christ to make use of all the blessings and opportunities afforded them and to cultivate the fruits and graces of the spirit, so that they may be meet for the kingdom; ready for the resurrection change. In verse 23 he tells us that such must hold fast the profession of their faith without wavering; they must not only have this faith in their hearts, but in their lives, whatever it may cost them so to do in the way of the world's opposition and scorn. In verse 24 he tells us that all these pupils in the school of Christ should be studying continually the development of character, of love, and seeking to provoke one another to love. In verse 25 he tells us of the expediency of assembling ourselves together with those of like precious faith for mutual upbuilding and assistance in the heavenly life; and he intimates that as the great time of trial and testing in the end of this gospel age draws nearer and nearer there will be more need for the Lord's true people to have contact with each other, doing all in their power to uphold one another. In verse 26 he points out that for this class to enter willfully into sin would be an evidence that they had lost the spirit of holiness, that they had died to the new life, and he assures us that such need look no farther for mercy or favor from the Lord. His declaration does not in any sense of the word touch the world. It applies solely to the called-out class, the new creation who "have received the knowledge of the truth."

IF CONSECRATED BELIEVERS SIN WILLFULLY

For those of this class to sin with willful intention and deliberation, the apostle shows, would mean that they were fit subjects for the second death. Not only so, but he assures us that the interest of such in the sacrifice for sins is at an end they have their share of the merit of Christ's atonement and misuse it. We cannot hope anything for them, but can only look forward to the divine judgment against them, which will devour and destroy them in the second death as adversaries of God.

In verse 28 the apostle points out that this dealing with the church of Christ was illustrated and typified in the shadowy types of the law. As Moses was the typical mediator to fleshly Israel, so Christ is the anti-typical mediator to spiritual Israel, and as those who despised Moses' law died without mercy, those who despise the law of the anti-typical Moses, we may be sure, shall have still more severe punishment if they by willful sin show that they despise the spirit of God's grace, if they count the blood of Christ by which they were redeemed a common, ordinary thing, and in general exhibit a lack of appreciation for the privileges and blessings conferred by God through the great Redeemer.

We must remember, however, that the apostle's words refer to a class that has been "begotten again," that has received a clear knowledge of the truth, and that in the face of these favors turn from the Lord and His gracious provisions. The punishment upon the natural Israelite who despised Moses' law was death, and the penalty upon the spiritual Israelite who despised the law of the anti-typical Mediator will be death second death. This second death will be much "sorer" that is, more severe, more destructive a penalty than the one inflicted against those who disobeyed Moses' law; because the latter being typical, the individual merely died as he would have done anyway, to have his opportunity in due time, with the remainder of mankind, to secure the general blessings secured to all by the death of the great Mediator, Jesus; but the severer penalty for these will be the second death, from which there will be no recovery no resurrection.

In verse 30 the apostle fortifies his argument by quoting the word of the Lord, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord," and again, "The Lord shall judge (test) His people." The suggestion is that all who profess faith in Christ, who profess a love for righteousness, profess to be tired of sin and ready to abandon it, profess to accept Christ as their Redeemer and to make full consecration of their lives to Him these will all be tested as respects the genuineness of their professions. And if any of these through willful sin and through repudiation of the Lord's counsel and assistance and provisions, or if they reject Jesus as their Mediator by denying that He bought them with His precious blood, if they insist on appealing the case to the Father, ignoring the only name given under heaven and among men whereby we must be saved, they will have come to the testing point before they are ready for it, and their experience will be what our text declares, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

It is fearful for any of these who have been lifted out of the world and accepted Christ and have their standing in Him and under the robes of His righteousness it is a fearful thing for them by repudiating the Redeemer, to fall out of the hands of mercy's representative, Jesus, into the hands of Jehovah's justice. It is sure to condemn them, it will mean their destruction, the second death, from which there will be no redemption, no resurrection, no recovery of any kind.

PERSONAL APPLICATION OF THE TEXT

Let us apply the lesson, dear friends, very closely to our own hearts. We, in company with all the Lord's dear people of this gospel age, have been greatly favored by Him in the forgiveness of our sins, in our adoption into His family, in our begetting of the holy Spirit, in our instruction through the word, in our fellowship of spirit and the leading and guidance and instruction and corrections of divine providence as the members of the house of sons under the control of the great Son, the Lord, our Redeemer. Let us see to it that we follow His counsel, that we walk in His steps, that we may attain the great blessing of joint heirship with Him in the kingdom. Let us see to it that in no sense of the word shall we, either by word or act or thought, repudiate the necessity and efficacy of the great atonement sacrifice by which we were "bought," and under which we have already become participants in the favors of the new covenant. To such the Apostle Peter declares, "An entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. 2 Pet. 1:11.

Just another word respecting the application of the principles of our text to the world in the next age, in the millennium, when the world in general will be on trial. Under the new covenant fleshly Israel, yea, all the nations of the earth, will be transferred from the hands of justice, wherein they are suffering the penalty for sin, "Dying thou shalt die," to the hands of mercy, our Lord Jesus being the representative of the Father's mercy toward the imperfect race who need the mercy, and whom in harmony with the divine plan, He "bought" with His own precious blood. We well know that many Christians deny that the world in general was bought with the blood of Christ, and claim that only Christians were thus redeemed. But we might quote many scriptures to the effect that "Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man," and that this is to be "testified in due time." (1 Tim. 2:6.) One text in particular is emphatic it reads: "He is a propitiation for our (the church's) sins, and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John 2:2.) The world's time for getting its share of the blessings through Christ will be the millennial age after the church class has been called out, tested, tried, sifted, and the overcomers have inherited the kingdom and joint heirship with our Lord in His millennial work and glory.

During the millennial age, the Mediator, Christ (head and body), will have sole and absolute control of the world. At the close of this gospel age this great King is to "take to Himself His great power" and begin the reign of which the apostle speaks (1 Cor. 15:25) saying: "He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." The transfer of the world from the hands of justice to the hands of Christ means the ending of the "curse," the ending of the death penalty against our race. But while the penalty will be ended, while justice will no longer be requiring the death of mankind, while Christ's kingdom will be in power for the very purpose of blessing and uplifting mankind out of the sin and death conditions to the full perfection of life, and all that was lost, nevertheless mankind will still be "bruised by the fall," and still be imperfect and weak in the flesh and liable to sin; and it will require the entire work of the millennial age in the way of instructions and chastisements and blessings to help them out of their demoralization and imperfection. Hence the millennium is called the "times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3:19-21.)

However, should part of the world during the millennial age persistently, knowingly, willfully refuse to obey the great King and to walk in the ways of righteousness, they will be cut off in the second death that is to say, they will fall from favor, fall into the hands of justice and immediately be pronounced unworthy of life, and die the second death. At the close of the millennial age, when all who have given heed to the message of the great King and who have availed themselves of the glorious opportunities of His mercy and assistance, will be turned over to the Father perfect. Then the mediatorial kingdom of Christ shall terminate, as the apostle declares: "He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet.... And when all things are subdued unto Him then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all." That will be the end of the plan of salvation, when Christ shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father when He shall have put down all rule and authority and power. 1 Cor. 15:24-26.

With the mediatorial benefits of Christ thus withdrawn, all the world of mankind will be in the hands of the living God. But that need not be to them a "fearful thing," because the great Mediator during the period of His long reign will have blessed them and restored them to absolute perfection, in which condition they will be in some respects like Adam in his perfection, except that they will have a much wider range of experience and knowledge. Then the Father's law will test them, and if any of them be found in the slightest degree disloyal the penalty upon such will be the sentence of death, as it was in the case of Adam, only this time it will be the second death, from which there will be no hope of recovery. Rev. 20:10.

Coming back now to a consideration of our own standing in the present time and to the primary application of the apostle's words in our text, we have the picture of our own weaknesses and helplessness on account of the fall and our share in it by heredity. Our new minds are indeed willing and anxious to do the divine will, but our flesh is weak, and therefore how to perform perfectly we find not. But God has provided for us the great refuge in His Son, respecting which we sometimes sing with the poet:

SAFE IN THE ARMS OF JESUS

We are safe so long as we "abide in Him." We would be unsafe the moment we would depart from Him by departing from His counsel in respect to sin and our proper attitude toward it; for step by step the tendency would be toward death the second death. We would not say that none who have taken steps toward walking after the flesh, after they have become the Lord's people, may not be chastened and forgiven and restored to divine favor and mercy; but we do say that "the end of that way is death;" and that whoever is wise will seek to avoid any step in that direction. There is another way of departing from the Lord equally reprehensible with that of walking after sins; namely, to abandon faith in Him, to reject Him as our Savior, and to reject also His work of grace on our behalf as the great and only channel of divine mercy. To thus cut ourselves off from Christ by losing faith in Him as our Redeem is to cut ourselves off from the divine mercy which He represents—" neither is there salvation in any other." Beloved friends, let us hold fast the confidence of our rejoicing firm unto the end. Faithful is He Who hath called us, Who also with do for us exceedingly and abundantly more than we could ask or think if we abide in Him.

PASTOR RUSSELL DISCOURSED ON GREAT DAY OF SIN ATONEMENT

Pastor Russell was with the Allegheny Bible House congregation yesterday. Next Sunday he expects to be in Washington, Pa. To a large and attentive audience of yesterday he said:

Tomorrow Jews all over the world will celebrate "Yom Kippur" Sin-Atonement on the Day of Atonement, the tenth day of their seventh month, as instituted by the Lord through Moses, the great typical Lawgiver. To many of them, known as the Reformed Jews, the day and its ceremonial of fastings, etc., will be merely an empty form, for these, in company with many world-wise Christians, have accepted the doctrine of evolution and the guidance of "higher critics" to the extent that they have lost faith in Moses and his teachings and are practically infidels, with barely "a form of godliness, denying its power" and in general rejecting the divine revelations of the holy scriptures. Other Jews there are, however, and other Christians, too, who still maintain their hold upon the Bible, who still recognize it as the divine message, voicing the wisdom that cometh from above. Such believers in the divine institutions both Jews and Christians-are deeply interested in the great event which Jews will celebrate tomorrow, and whose lessons belong to both Jew and Christian. Let us examine some of them.

We take for our text the words of the great prophet Moses and the explanatory words of the great Jew, the apostle Paul: "The life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." "Apart from the shedding of blood there is no remission" (of sins.) Lev. 17:11; Heb. 9:22.

As a consequence of the baneful influences of the evolution theory, which has more or less contaminated the minds of the whole civilized world, leading men to believe that imperfections and shortcomings which they realize in themselves are not the results of sin, but simply evidences that their evolution is not completed. Notwithstanding the tendency of such a theory to make mankind self-satisfied and to lead them to ignore, deny that they are sinners, that they need a savior, that their sins need atonement nevertheless we see that the hearts of all mankind instinctively assent to the words of the apostle Paul: "All have sinned and come short." The realization that we have done those things which we ought not to have done, and have left undone those things which we ought to have done, and that we are fallen, imperfect creatures, needing divine assistance out of the horrible pit and miry clay of sin and death these thoughts continually revert to the true-hearted and well-intentioned of our race. Such realize a standard of perfection far beyond their own attainment, and that standard is the divine one; and, however clearly or obscurely they know and appreciate the scriptural explanation of present sinful conditions and how they came about, they realize, nevertheless, that they are sinners, and that the perfect God could not have fellowship with them could not recognize them, could not grant them eternal life on present conditions. Realizing this, such are looking away to God for the help which they are persuaded could come from no other source for forgiveness of sins and reconciliation and grace to help.

BLOOD OF ATONEMENT NECESSARY

This class among the Jews look continually and longingly to Moses, their leader, and to the laws and ceremonial cleansing from sin which he, as the Lord's representative, introduced 3,400 years ago. It is this class of Jews who tomorrow will fast and pray and look to the Lord for forgiveness of sins and for reconciliation with him for the new year just beginning. They read in the Law of Moses that God appointed that the tenth day of the month (Jewish time) should be the day for the offering of the sacrifices for sin-atonement, on the basis of which divine favor would extend to them for another year. Realizing that the merit of their previous Atonement day expired with the ninth day of the seventh month, they were to spend the tenth day as sinners in sackcloth and ashes, bemoaning their sins, their wretchedness, their separation from the Lord and His just condemnation against them. Meantime, according to the divine arrangement, the high priest and his assistant prepared the sacrifices of atonement and offered them, and at the conclusion of the offering came forth in the close of the day to pronounce the divine blessing remission of their sins for the new year and that they would be continued in the divine fellowship during the year.

The orthodox Jews tomorrow will go through this procedure, except the sacrificing, and at night will put away their sackcloth and fasting and begin to rejoice that they again have the Lord's favor and that it will rest with them for another year. But they make a serious mistake they overlook an important item mentioned in our text: "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul." The Jews today offer no Atonement day sacrifices, because they cannot do so. Those sacrifices could be offered only under the special conditions pointed out in the Law of Moses.

(1) They must have the Ark of the Covenant either in a tabernacle or a temple, with the corresponding holy and most holy apartments. The Ark of the Covenant is gone; no Jew even knows its present place.

(2) If they had the ark it would be necessary that the Shekinah glory should rest upon the most holy apartment, as indicating the divine presence, to which the priest must approach with the blood of the sin offering to make atonement, sprinkling the mercy seat with the blood.

(3) The priest who would thus officiate must be of the family of Aaron, must be able to prove his lineage all the way down otherwise he could not serve as high priest nor enter into the tabernacle nor make the sin-atonement. But among the Jews all records of the priestly families are lost. Not a Jew in the world today could serve as high priest to make atonement sacrifices; even if Israel had possession of the holy land, even if they had there a temple or tabernacle according to the prescribed arrangements of the law, even if they had the Ark of the Covenant in the holy place, and even if the Shekinah glory rested upon it, they would have no priest to make the atonement for their sins, to sprinkle the blood.

I do not mention these matters as something new on this subject, although as a matter of fact very few Christian people are aware to what extent all possibility of a revival of Judaism on Mosaic grounds has passed, and even the majority of the Jews are in doubt or in perplexity. It is not the custom of the rabbis to draw these matters to the attention of the common people on the contrary, the whole matter is so far as possible avoided. They reason that discussion would bring out these facts, and they prefer not to arouse questionings on matters for which they have no reasonable solution.

JESUS THE WORLD'S SIN-BEARER

If once our Jewish friends could get rightly awake to the facts already narrated their peace would be gone; they would see that they have no atonement day in the scriptural sense of the word for over 1,800 years, that they are in their sins and under the divine ban continually, that they have no atonement day and can have none, because they can have no blood of atonement for their sins, and hence their prayers and fastings and subsequent rejoicing after the manner of old are forms and ceremonies without real meaning. Would that the sincere and earnest of our Jewish friends could realize this need for blood atonement in order to a cancellation of sin, in order to a reconciliation to God.

As the apostle points out, the eyes of their understanding are blinded; they cannot see the truth on this subject yet. We are glad that he also points out (Rom. 11:25-32) that the time is coming when their blindness shall pass away and they shall be able to see the antitypical atonement day and to realize that the better sacrifice once for all canceled all sins and needs not to be repeated year by year. They will then see that God did not allow the typical priesthood to pass away until He began the establishment of the anti-typical priesthood, of which Christ is the head, and the saints of this gospel age, gathered out from Jews and gentiles, are the “under priests,” the “royal priesthood.” Then they will see that the Lord’s institutions at the hand of Moses were beautiful, elaborate and yearly repeated pictures illustrating higher and grander things a release from sin and its death penalty secured not only for Jews but for the whole world of mankind remission of sins, the rolling back of the death sentence resting upon the world for now 6,000 years and the bringing in of the everlasting blessings so long foretold by the Lord through Abraham and the prophets to be accomplished by the spiritual seed of Abraham, the Christ, head and body Jesus and His faithful saints gathered from the Jews and from the gentiles.

Let us glance for a moment at the picture of the day of atonement as portrayed in Leviticus (chaps. 9 and 16): On the tenth day of the seventh month the value of the previous atonement day, a year before, had ceased to have efficacy; the nation was in mourning for sins. The high priest offered first the bullock for himself and his house (chap. 16:6) not that our Lord Jesus needed to make a sacrifice for His sins, but that the high priest in this type represented not only the Lord Jesus, but also all of the “royal priesthood,” the elect church, which is His body. (Eph. 1:23.) Those faithful, consecrated believers constituting “the body of Christ” need atonement for their sins, and this is illustrated in the type by the body of the priest covered with the white garments, while the head is bare. Thus our Lord needed no covering, because He was actually perfect, while all of His followers do need to be covered with the robe of Christ’s righteousness.

But notice that the bullock was slain, was sacrificed not only for the body of the priest, but also for his house. Aaron was of the house of Levi, and the atonement sacrifice which he offered was efficacious for all who were of that house. The meaning of this in the antitype is that the merit of Christ’s death is not only applicable to the saints, “members of His body,” but also applicable to all the “household of faith.” Thus not only the saints are reconciled by the precious blood of Christ, but also all sincere believers who will to do right and to follow the Lord's direction, but who do not come within the scriptural limitation of "overcomers."

"These two classes are variously referred to in the scriptures; the first is called the "little flock," and has the promise of joint heirship with Christ in His kingdom; the other class in Revelation is called the reverse of a "little flock," namely, "a great multitude out of every kindred, nation and tongue," who, because not sufficiently zealous and faithful, will be obliged to "wash their robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb," which is explained to mean that they must pass through great tribulation to attain perfection. Their ultimate attainment will not be a place in the throne, but, as described, a place before the throne. They will not have the crowns which the Lord has promised to the members of His body, His joint heirs, but they will have the palm branches representing victory, that they are victors or overcomers. The little flock, however, we are told, are "more than conquerors" or overcomers they secure, the apostle Peter tells us, "an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom." The great company of the household of faith will serve before the throne, while the little flock, the "body," will share the Lord's glory, honor, and immortality in the throne.

TYPICAL VS. BETTER SACRIFICES

The first sacrifice of the day of atonement was the bullock, and its blood was applied as stated to the "body of Christ," the anti-typical priest, and to His house, the "household of faith." The bullock represented the Lord's human nature sacrificed on our behalf, while the priest represented him as the new creature, the mediator between God and man. His first work of mediation was to "offer up Himself." We cannot take time here to go into all the details of the matter. We already have this in printed form, and if any of you have not yet read on the subject, we proffer you a free copy of the pamphlet, which is entitled "Tabernacle Shadows of Better Sacrifices." A postal card will bring a copy to your address.

Passing over the subject hastily, without stopping to give the various scripture proofs, we remark that this part of the atonement day sacrifice was finished when our Lord Jesus died on Calvary. His resurrection on the third day represented His passing beyond the veil from the earthly to the spiritual condition; after His resurrection He was no longer the man Christ Jesus, but the new creature in nature and in power as well, "far above angels, principalities and powers." After miraculously manifesting Himself to His followers to qualify them to be His witnesses in the world, our Lord ascended upon high, there to appear in the presence of God on our behalf, there to do in reality what the Jewish high priest did typically when he sprinkled the blood of the sacrifice upon the mercy seat. Our Lord presented to the Father the evidences of His sacrificial death, meeting the demands of justice against mankind, and of that merit He applied a sufficiency too, for all true believers of this gospel age Himself, His body and His house," the household of faith.

None others are atoned for yet only believers. Unbelievers, no matter on what score they are unbelievers, are as yet without atonement, without any actual share in the precious blood. True, we see in the scriptures that it is the divine plan that ultimately the same atonement shall extend to all the families of the earth through the great antitypical high priest, but it does not extend to all at the present time. It is limited to those who believe, and the number of those who believe is still further limited in various ways, largely through the influence, of the god of this world, Satan, of whom the apostle declares, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not; lest the glorious light of God's goodness shining in the face of Jesus Christ should shine in their hearts."

But the types of the day of atonement show us that there is another sacrifice in addition to and following after the one already referred to. After the bullock had been sacrificed, after the priest had taken the blood into the Most Holy, after, by its blood, He had made atonement for the under priests, His "body," and for the entire "household of faith" of this gospel age. He next proceeded to sacrifice a goat, the record being that He did with the goat as He did with the bullock in all particulars. As we have already pointed out, the lean goat of sacrifice represents the Lord's faithful people of this gospel age it represents those who follow in the footsteps of Jesus as members of His body, and are gladly laying down their lives in His service, in the service of the truth, in the service of the brethren, as co-laborers with their Lord. The apostle frequently referred to the fact that those who would constitute the members of the body of Christ in glory must now walk in His footsteps of self-sacrifice, and, as the apostle Paul expresses it, must "fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." (Col. 1:24.) They must be partakers in the better sacrifices if they would be sharers with their glorious Lord, the High Priest, the head of the body, in the coming millennial age of blessing.

The type represents that the High Priest Himself lays His hands upon this goat and sacrifices it; and so all of the Lord's faithful consecrated people realize that it is the hand of the Lord upon them, the power of the Lord working in them, that enables them as well as permits them to be sacrificers with Him, sharers in His sufferings in this present time, preparing them also to be sharers with Him in His glories in the future. This goat in the type represents the entire number of the Lord's faithful, self-sacrificing little flock throughout this gospel age.

When we read that the blood of the goat was taken into the Most Holy and sprinkled on the mercy seat as the blood of the bullock had been sprinkled, but for a different purpose, it is specifically declared that the blood of the goat is applied for and on behalf of the cancellation of the sins of all the people.

In the type, after the Priest had offered the second of these sin offerings with the burnt offerings, He laid aside His linen garments, the garments of glory and beauty, representing the glory and honor of our Lord, the great King, and the church, his body, after the atonement sacrifices shall all be ended. The record shows that the next step in the program was for the High Priest to go with Moses to the altar and there lift up His hands and pronounce a blessing for forgiveness of sins upon the people, who at the time representatively were lying in the dust in sackcloth, bemoaning their sins and crying for mercy.

This typical picture represents, then, that as soon as the atonement day sacrifices shall all have been completed, as soon as Christ and the church shall have been glorified, the next thing in order will be for the glorified church as God's kingdom and representatives to begin the work of blessing the world by rolling away the curse of sin, degradation, superstition and death, including sickness and pain and sorrow, from the world of mankind, bringing in the reverse of all these, divine favor and blessing, knowledge and opportunity for a full return to harmony with God, and the full perfection of God-likeness originally represented in Adam, lost through disobedience, redeemed by the precious blood and to be restored in the "times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." —Acts. 3:19-21.

The atonement day of the type finds its antitype in the gospel age, which, beginning with the consecration of our Lord Jesus when He was 30 years of age, will continue until the last member of the elect spiritual Israel, the royal priesthood, has completed its sacrifice and entered into glory with the High Priest of our profession, even Jesus. It has been a long day of sacrifice, and throughout it all the world in general has been in the attitude described by the apostle when he says: "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God" waiting for the completion of the royal priesthood and their coming forth from the Most Holy, having finished the work of atonement, to confer upon all who will properly receive the divine favor, reconciliation, restitution, eternal life. It has been a long day of nearly nineteen centuries to the Lord's faithful ones, who have been glad to lay down their lives in the service of the King and for the brethren. The year of blessing and favor with God to the typical Israelite, following the day of atonement and based upon its work, represents the eternity of blessing that will result from the great atonement day sacrifices now in progress.

From this standpoint we can see the meaning of so many scriptures not previously appreciated scriptures which speak of the Lord's true people as being priests, and which assure us that every priest must have something to offer. It explains also the apostle's frequent urging of believers, "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies, living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God, your reasonable service."—(Rom. 12:1.) It explains the Lord's declaration that all who would follow Him must, like Him, take up their cross and walk in His steps, be baptized with the same baptism that He was baptized with, and drink with Him of His cup. It shows us in what sense we "fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." From this standpoint, then, that every member of the body of Christ is a priest and a sacrificer, the experiences of the present time are comprehensible, and the promise that all who thus suffer with Christ shall in due time reign with Him has the deeper and more reasonable signification. From this standpoint we see the force of the apostle's suggestion that we lay aside every weight, make every sacrifice and self-denial that is in our power, that we may run with patience the race set before us and attain to the glorious blessing which the Lord has in reservation for this "little flock," this royal priesthood, who, as overcomers, shall be made kings and priests unto God to reign on the earth to bless all the families of the earth.

AARONIC AND MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOODS

The royal priesthood has two types, one representing its experiences in this present life, the other representing the experiences of the future. Aaron and his sons typified the sacrificers of the present life under present conditions, while Melchizedek, both king and priest, represented or typified Christ and His associate under priests in the kingdom glory, ruling the world, judging the world, blessing the world rewarding their good endeavors and punishing their shortcomings with a view to their complete deliverance out of present evil conditions into the perfection and blessings of the future, secured by the great atonement sacrifices of the present. Nothing that we have said, however, should be understood as in any sense or degree implying or even intimating that any part of the atonement work is necessarily dependent upon the church.

The scriptures everywhere assure us that the Lord's faithful sacrificing ones shall ultimately share a glorious part as associates with Christ in His kingdom, as members of the seed of Abraham, through whom all families of the earth shall be blessed; but nothing in any of these scriptural assurances nor elsewhere in any measure teach or imply that the value lay in our work, in any sacrifice which we make. On the contrary, the scriptures everywhere declare clearly what our Master declared, saying, "Without Me ye can do nothing." The church's sacrifices would be of no value whatever were they not preceded by the Lord's sacrifice and the imputation to the church of the Lord's merit. This is shown in the type, because it is these who are made associates with Christ in the kingdom who were first themselves redeemed by His precious blood represented in the fact that the "body" and "house" of Aaron were atoned for typically by the blood of the bullock.

The great lesson in all this is that which is expressed by the words of our text, which assure us that the blood represents the life and that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. If Christ had not died for our sins, we would yet be in our sins and the death penalty would be against us. Father Adam was sentenced to death because he was imperfect through his disobedience, and we all have shared his disobedience. Man's life thus forfeited could never be restored to him he could never have a future life except as he might be redeemed, and, as the scriptures hold forth everywhere uniformly, the redeeming of man's life must be by the life of another. And so, as we have seen in previous examinations of the matter, it was for this purpose that our Lord Jesus left the glory of the Father and was made flesh and dwelt amongst men that He might give His unblemished life a ransom for ours, for the sins of the whole world, because it was His sacrifice and not in any degree our sacrifices which secured the release of the whole world from the death sentence in due time.

The types of the atonement day merely show the arrangement that God makes, whereby His faithful ones of this gospel age may come in and be participators of the sufferings of Christ, and thus be sharers also in the glories that shall follow the millennial glories and opportunities for blessing others. So far as God and justice are concerned, the death of Christ might have been with equal propriety applied, not for the body and household of faith merely, but for all the people. In that event the church would have been left out of any special privilege either of sacrifice in the present time or participation in the glorious reign of the future, and the blessing would have come directly from the Father through the Son to all the people. It was a precious provision, then, on God's part to permit of a high calling to self-sacrifice, to walking in the footsteps of Jesus during this gospel age. As the scriptures declare, God is seeking out of the world a godly seed, a special class of sons whom He is adapting by His Holy Spirit to a change of nature, from human to divine far above angels and every other name that is named, next to the Redeemer Himself.

ELECT MUST ALL BE SACRIFICERS

Consider the apostle's words, "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God (in the forgiveness of sins through faith in the precious blood) that ye present your bodies living sacrifices acceptable to God and your reasonable service." These words show us distinctly that the only merit we possess in God's sight is that which has been imputed to us through the merit of Christ's sacrifice. Hence when we present our bodies living sacrifices, we recognize that they are not holy, acceptable to God on their own merit, but simply and only on the merit of Christ. Hence, also, whatever atonement may be made by these sacrifices is not to be considered as credited directly to the sacrificers, but through them credited to the one who redeemed them and who made their sacrificing possible and acceptable.

In other words, we wish to make clear that the entire merit of the atonement work is in the sacrifice of our Lord, and that we who are seeking to walk in His steps and to fill up that which is behind of His afflictions, and thus to be dead with Him that we may also live with Him, and to suffer with Him that we may also reign with Him, are not thereby doing anything which of itself would redeem our brother or give to God a ransom for Him; but that God having justified us through Christ, and having accepted us as members of the body of Christ, can and does accept our sacrifices as part of His sacrifice, as shown in the type, and can and does associate us with our Lord not only in the sufferings of this present time, but also in connection with the glories which shall follow.

We emphasize our text that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins, and call attention to the fact that we are living in a day when an atonement by blood taught in the scriptures, in every book of the law, in every sacrifice of the law, in every book of the prophets, in every book of the New Testament, is being discredited. Nominal Christendom seems more and more to be drifting from blood atonement and from every thought of atonement. Hence it is expedient that the Lord's people read, mark and inwardly digest that this is the only arrangement for reconciliation with God set forth in His Book, that any other method or process of reconciliation is of human fabrication; attempts to "climb up some other way." Let us see to it that our faith is not resting upon the traditions of men, but upon the Word of God which liveth and abideth forever.

Let us study more and more clearly the philosophy of the great plan of salvation laid down in the scriptures and, seeing that philosophy, let us build every item of faith in full conformity with it. Thus we will have that faith structure which cannot be moved and to whose permanency our Lord referred, that it is like a house founded upon a rock, and when the rain descended and the floods came and beat upon that house, it fell not because it was founded upon a rock. The floods of infidelity, evolution, higher criticism, false reasoning and misunderstanding are sweeping down and will soon engulf churchianity. The question is, who will be able to stand? We reply that only those will be able to withstand the shock who see clearly and distinctly the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. That man was created in God's image; that disobedience, sin, brought upon him the divine sentence of death; that Christ accomplished for our race the redemption, the forgiveness of sins, and thus secured for our race, for all who will avail themselves of it, ultimately a full opportunity of reconciliation to the Father.

Those who now see this may also see that in the divine plan the church of the firstborns, the royal priesthood, is being selected during this gospel age or great atonement day, and that each one must of necessity be a sacrificer for the Lord and His cause and His brethren, and these with the Lord will shortly constitute the kingdom class exalted to power and great glory, the channels of divine favor, forgiveness, restitution, general uplift and eternal blessing to as many as will come into accord with the Lord and His righteousness. Whatever others may do, therefore, dear brethren and sisters, hold fast to the precious word and to the precious blood of Christ which it sets forth as the price of our redemption, and then in the language of the apostle let us conclude, "That if one died for all, then were all dead. And that we who live should henceforth live not unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us." "We ought also to lay down our lives for the brethren."

Ransom Implies Restitution Was Pastor Russell's Topic

Pastor C. T. Russell of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract society of Allegheny delivered two addresses yesterday at Washington, Pa. He is expected to address a convention of "Believers in the Atonement Sacrifice of Christ, a Ransom for all," next Sunday afternoon at St. Louis. His topic on that occasion will be "The Spiritual Lessons of the Great St. Louis World's Fair." One of the addresses delivered at Washington yesterday follows:

The Apostle Paul's words are my text: "There is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."(1 Tim. 2:5-6.) At another time we may consider the forepart of this text, but on this occasion invite your attention to the last clause, which explains that our Lord's sacrifice was a sacrifice for all mankind, and that in due time this great matter will be made known to all mankind with a view to their blessing by and through the fact and the knowledge of it.

Perhaps I should take a moment here to Answer--a question which I understand is frequently raised in respect to my preaching, namely, Why does Pastor Russell give so much more attention to doctrinal questions than do other ministers? Why does he not give more attention to scientific matters, political, moral reforms and practical living? My reply is in the words of our Savior, "After all these things do the Gentiles seek" all these are worldly matters, while the doctrines of Christ and the apostles are peculiar to Christians. Hindus, Confucians and Mohammedans have a common interest in the affairs of the world and its moral, physical and political welfare, but the Christian minister is divinely directed to "preach the word;" and the word ignores worldly science, politics, reforms, etc., and especially deals with doctrines. I am, therefore, merely following the example of Christ and His apostles, and the reason why this seems peculiar is that the majority of ministers largely neglect to heed the scriptural injunction and the apostolic models. When they do occasionally touch upon doctrine, they, alas, too frequently "teach for doctrines the commandments of men," from the creeds of the past five centuries rather than from the inspired word of the Lord.

It may be well here briefly to notice the value of doctrines the value of those teachings which differentiate true Christians from the remainder of mankind. The ignoring of the doctrines of scripture and the substitution of the doctrines of men during "the dark ages" have brought the world to the place where all doctrines are tabooed and distasteful, because said false doctrines from "the dark ages" are unreasonable and repulsive to the growing intelligence of the world. Instead of ignoring doctrine however, God's people should seek and find the proper interpretation of the Bible, which is everywhere reasonable, logical and harmonious with itself and with sanctified common sense. This, then, is my apology for so frequently discussing the "doctrines of Christ" and of the prophets and of the apostles.

NOT A LIMITED ATONEMENT

Our text declares a great fact, which Christian people generally ignore if they do not deny it the fact that our Lord Jesus' death was a ransom price whose scope covers and includes the entire family of Adam. The fact that the scriptures do speak of a specially elect class which is being gathered out of the world during this gospel age, and which is promised joint heirship with Christ in His coming millennial kingdom the fact also that the great mass of mankind at the present time and throughout the 6,000 years of the past have been "without God and without hope in the world," because without a "knowledge of the only name given under heaven and among men whereby we must be saved" these facts have led many to the erroneous conclusion that our Lord's death has not been and never will be a ransom price or offset price for the cancellation of the sins of mankind in general.

Their reasoning has indeed certain logical features; for if the world in general has not received and if it never will in future receive a blessing at the Lord's hands it seems the logical conclusion must be that justice did not receive and will never receive a ransom price for the world's share in original sin. In seeming harmony with this erroneous thought is the fact that only a comparatively small proportion of humanity has been specially favored of the Lord with an opening of the eyes of their understanding, and the privilege, through faith, of coming back into harmony with their Creator. Seemingly supporting this view also are the scriptural statements respecting the present narrow way and straight gate which "few" find, and the many references to the "elect" as constituting only a "little flock."

Building upon this erroneous foundation of a limited atonement for original sin, the fathers of the dark ages and since have proceeded to give various explanations of the eternal torture of the world of mankind the non-elect those not favored by the Almighty with a knowledge of the only name given under heaven and among men whereby we must be saved. These false doctrines built upon the "traditions of the elders" have had a nauseating effect upon intelligent minds; they contradict the scriptural declaration that God is just, loving, wise and all-powerful. What we need to correct the nausea, to refresh the hearts, to re-inspire love and zeal for the Lord and His word is to see with clearness what are the true doctrines of the scriptures respecting these matters.

The scriptures declare that our Lord Jesus "by the grace of God tasted death for every man." They show conclusively that His death was a "propitiation (satisfaction) for our sins (the church's sins); and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world." (1 John 2:2.) But to appreciate these statements to see how they can be and are true, it is necessary to know that the scriptures nowhere declare that the present gospel age is the only period of divine favor, the only period for the forgiveness of sins, the only period of reconciliation with God, the only period of opportunity for being taught of God and of obtaining His blessing and favor, lost through original sin in Eden.

As soon as we grasp this great fact our eyes begin to open to other facts. (1) That prior to this gospel age, during the Jewish age and previously, all the world except that one little nation, were aliens, strangers, and foreigners from God and His promises, "without God and without hope of the world" (Eph. 2:12); and (2) That the scriptures clearly indicate a "world to come,” a future epoch, in connection with the affairs of this world, under new and better conditions than now prevail. (3) That future epoch is called the “day of Christ,” the day of the Lord.” It is indeed the millennial day, the thousand years of Christ’s reign for the very purpose of blessing and uplifting the world of mankind, for whose sins His death was the atonement price and who are to be healed by His stripes. (4) We find that every invitation and injunction of the gospel age are with a view to the selection of an elect class, who shall be joint heirs with Christ during that millennial age, to share with Him in the great work of general human uplift.

A COMMON ERROR CORRECTED

At this point many good people laboring under a degree of blindness, the “smoke of the dark ages,” feel disposed to object and to insist that there can be no future probation. Ask them why, their reply is that the entire Scriptural teaching contradicts the thought of a future hope beyond the tomb. We reply that this is an error that the very reverse is true, as we shall show. We ask them for a single Scripture on their side of this subject. To their amazement they find none, but as a last resort quote from Ecclesiastes (11:3) the words: “Where the tree falleth, there it shall be.” But is not this a very slim text, indeed, to raise up as a barrier against the entire voice of the Scriptures, and against all the demands of reason and logic as well? And this very Scripture is in full accord with what we claim, namely, that as a tree when it has fallen is lifeless and powerless and cannot raise itself up, so is man in death under the sentence and wage of original sin. The Scriptural argument is that the whole race of Adam was thus dead without life, without power to raise itself out of its fallen condition, without any claim upon eternal life or divine favor in any sense, but our text declares that our Lord Jesus “gave himself a ransom for all for Adam the transgressor in particular and for all of his race who shared in his penalty, in order to rescue us from that dead condition by resurrection.

It is because man is in this helpless condition, dead, powerless to revivify himself, that God has gone to his relief through Christ, and not only caused the great ransom sacrifice to be made and paid to justice nearly 19 centuries ago, but in our text assures us that that ransom sacrifice finished at Calvary was on behalf of all mankind and is consequently to bring a blessing to all mankind—” in due time.”

We are not arguing that all who have died have gone to heaven; quite the contrary. We stick to the book, the Bible, in its declaration that the “dead know not anything.” (Eccles. 9:5) that a resurrection is necessary to any future living. We hold with the Scriptures that at the end of this age, the first resurrection will take place the resurrection of the “blessed and holy” those who have pleased God both by faith and obedience. These, the Scriptures declare, will be “kings and priests unto God and shall reign on the earth.” The object of this reign will be to bring blessings of knowledge and opportunity “to every creature.” These participants in the first resurrection are the “seed of Abraham,” our Lord Jesus the Head, and His church the members of His body, as the apostle declares: “If ye are Christ’s then are ye Abraham’s seed and heirs according to the promise”—(Gal. 3:29).

The promise to which Christ and His church are heirs is that they shall be God’s instrumentality for the blessing, instruction and uplifting of the world of mankind, and when will they do this unless there be a future millennial age? To be heirs of this promise made to Abraham, that in his seed all the families of the earth would be blessed, would be a meaningless farce and jest on the Almighty’s part had He not purchased us, and provided a time and means by which this blessing could accrue to the world. We perceive that He has arranged a time for granting the world a trial for life a trial respecting their willingness to abandon the ways of sin and death and to walk in the ways of righteousness under the enlightenment of the truth, which we are assured shall shine forth as the sun, whose beams shall heal humanity—(Mal. 4:2).

FEW HAVE NECESSARY KNOWLEDGE

The means for the blessing we see provided in Christ and His bride, the elect church of the Gospel age, but the guarantee of the whole is fixed beyond peradventure in the fact that “Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man,” or, as our text declares, became the Mediator between God and man by giving Himself a ransom for all. A point I desire to emphasize here is that the giving of this ransom price and the acceptance of it by justice imply divine intention for the blessing of all mankind, in full accord with the various testimonies of the entire Scriptures. Why should “a ransom for all” be given if it were not intended of God that all should benefit by it, or, at least, have an opportunity of benefiting by it, which would virtually be the same thing? We hold that it is beyond dispute that the giving of the ransom for all and the divine acceptance of it, in harmony with the divine promise, are the sure guarantee that ultimately a blessing must come to every member of Adam’s race as a result.

The fact that this knowledge has not yet reached all mankind in the past, and is not reaching all mankind today, but, on the contrary, a small minority, and the fact that knowledge of God’s favor and an intelligent acceptance of it on faith and a reasonable obedience in harmony with that faith are the demands of the divine word, require no proof. Proof could be given on almost every page of the Scriptures that faith, and endeavor to obedience in harmony with that faith, are necessary to salvation, but we will content ourselves by referring to a few citations. The Apostle Paul says: "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?" (Rom. 10:14,17.) "Without faith it is impossible to please God." (Heb. 11:6). "All that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God," and "the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep." (John 5:28; Isa. 11:9)." All the blind eyes shall be opened and the deaf ears shall be unstopped." (Isa. 35:5). "They shall no longer teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying: `Know the Lord; "for they shall know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord." (Jer. 31:34).

Our text is in full accord with all these statements of the necessity for knowledge, declaring that the fact that our Lord Jesus gave himself a ransom for all is to be testified "in due time." The present then is the due time for the church, the household of faith, to hear the voice of the Son of God, and they who now hear, pass from death unto life to newness of life, to begetting to newness of nature. By and by, when the present class of called "elect" ones shall have been glorified with their Lord, all the remainder of mankind shall hear, "All that are in their graves shall hear His voice and come forth" for this very purpose that they may hear, may understand, may appreciate and may be assisted to obey the voice of Him that speaketh from heaven, the great ransomer, who in that day will be king over all the earth and will bind Satan and will put down every opposing influence, to the intent that all may be judged worthy or unworthy of everlasting life, by their appreciation of God and His righteous laws and their full obedience thereto.

This is the apostle Peter's declaration in Acts 3:22-23; he points us to the fact that Moses was a type of Christ Jesus the head and the church His body and that this anti-typical priest God is raising up from among His brethren raising Him up to the glory, honor and immortality of the divine nature and to the power and authority of the kingdom, to the intent that as the seed of Abraham this great Messiah shall bless all the families of the earth with knowledge and every opportunity for return to all that was lost in Eden of divine favor and blessing. And what of those who will refuse to hear that great prophet, priest and king during the millennial age what of them? The apostle answers, "It shall come to pass that the soul that will not hear (obey) that prophet, shall be cut off from among His people" cut off in the second death, from which there will be no hope of recovery, no resurrection.

“TIMES OF RESTITUTION”

In full accord with all this is the apostle’s statement respecting the blessings that are to come to mankind during the millennial age, following our Lord’s second advent and the glorification of His church to joint heirship with Himself. He calls that period “times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, when He shall send Jesus Christ” at His second advent. He declares that in the meantime the heavens must receive Him, must retain Him, until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. In other words, He assures us that these restitution times will follow as a result of our Lord’s second coming and the establishment of His kingdom in glory and power.

That the times of restitution signify years of restitution, I need not state, nor need I point out to this audience that here the thousand years of Christ’s reign is referred to. The word restitution is or ought to be familiar to everybody. It signifies to put back or bring back something to an original or primary condition. The apostle is speaking of humanity, and hence the suggestion is that the work of Christ and His church in glory during the millennium will be to restore mankind to the condition and privileges and blessings and favors enjoyed before sin entered the world before the “curse” passed upon all by one man’s disobedience. Rom. 5:12.

Evolutionists would have little sympathy with the apostle’s statement here, for, according to their erroneous theory, restitution to the original condition would be the last thing for humanity to desire or hope for or for God to promise as a blessing. But we are not consulting evolutionists in this matter we are taking the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. In harmony with this promise we anticipate, therefore, that as the world of mankind has been in a fallen and falling condition with ups and downs, especially downs, for six thousand years, and that when the Lord’s time shall come and times of restitution shall begin the present downward or fallen conditions will give place to upward conditions, to restitution times, for the general uplifting of all mankind.

We have just seen that the great ransom sacrifice finished at Calvary is the basis upon which God can be just and yet be the justifier of those who believe in Jesus, and release them from the sentence of endless death which was justly upon them as the imperfect posterity of the fallen Adam, unworthy of life eternal under divine conditions. The more we look into this matter the more logical, reasonable and satisfactory we see the divine plan to be. The first man perfect, the image of God, sinned with deliberation, and received as a penalty a death sentence. After waiting more than 4,000 years God sent a redeemer in the person of His Son. Since man was not a spirit being but a human being, therefore the apostle declares that Christ took not hold upon the stature of angels, but humbled Himself and came to the still lower plane of humanity and became the man Christ Jesus holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners. Then as the man Christ Jesus He gave Himself a ransom for all, as our text declares, "to be testified in due time." The testimony has already been in the world for 19 centuries, and it has selected the very class which God foreknew and foretold a little flock of footstep followers who are to be joint heirs with their redeemer and Lord. Next in order will come the testimony to the remainder of mankind first those who have not yet gone into the tomb and secondly to those who have already gone there, and who will be awakened for the very purpose of receiving this testimony and of being tested by it.

DISTINCTLY DIFFERENT SALVATIONS

Here note the difference between the blessing God designed for the elect church He is selecting during this gospel age and the one he purposes for the world of mankind. The church's blessing is not "restitution," and in harmony with this we can see no evidence of restitution anywhere about us. The restitution work waits for the restitution time, which begins with the establishment of the kingdom. Believers of this present time receive, indeed, a faith equivalent to restitution, in that they are recognized as having their sins covered with the robe of Christ's righteousness, reckoned as having passed from the sentence of death in Adam to a share of life in Christ reckoned as having received again the fellowship and communion with God, lost by Adam through his disobedience in Eden. All this in a sense serves as an equivalent to the "restitution" which is to come to the world in its "due time." But the world will not get these things by faith, but will actually gradually attaining to them more and more during the thousands years, until at its close all who shall have appreciated God's favors and obeyed the voice of the great Prophet, Priest and King, will be actually perfect as perfect as was Adam in every talent, quality power and capacity, and with increased capacity through increased knowledge.

Not so the church of this gospel age. She gets none of these restitution blessings actually. She merely has them by faith, and this for a special purpose to sacrifice them to present her body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, her reasonable service (Rom. 12:1), her participation in the sufferings of Christ that she may be accounted worthy to participate in His glories the millennial glories. The gospel invitation to the church is to lay down her life, to exchange these earthly privileges and blessings bought by the precious blood of Christ, for heavenly privileges offered to her as a reward of obedience To Him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I overcame and am set down with My Father in His throne.

Glory, honor and immortality the divine nature will be the great “change” from present earthly conditions to heavenly conditions far beyond anything possible for the natural mind to appreciate, and seen even by the saints as though through a glass obscurely. This great change, which is to come to the Lord’s faithful bride in her participation in “His resurrection,” the first resurrection, the resurrection to spirit perfection, is the great hope and ambition set before us, dear brethren and sisters. It is for this that we are exhorted to lay aside every weight and every besetting sin and to run with patience sacrificing earthly things and treasures that we may have this better treasure, this pearl of great price, this participation in the kingdom with our dear Redeemer.

The apostle, in the text we have quoted, declares that these times of restitution that are coming were spoken of “by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.” We should like to take up this subject in detail and scrutinize the testimony of all the prophets to assure all respecting the accuracy of the apostle’s statement, and this we may do on some other occasion. Suffice it now that we take the apostle’s words, calling to mind merely the various statements and promises of the law and the prophets, pointing out these glorious good things for the world of mankind, that are delayed only until the completion of the elect church. The prophets speak of the restoration of Israel to divine favor, of how their blind eyes shall be opened, that they shall see in very truth that He whom they have pierced is the Messiah indeed, who gave His life for their ransom, and that God will “pour upon them the spirit of prayer and supplication” to this end.

The Apostle Paul most clearly points out in Romans 9th, 10th, and 11th chapters, that not only the falling away of Israel was foretold in the prophets, but also their regathering their restoration to divine favor; but this he points out to us will be after the completion of the gospel church spiritual Israel. Again he declares that “They shall obtain mercy through your mercy.” The glorified church, with Christ at her head as the great King, is to dispense the mercies of God to the Jew first, but also to “all the families of the earth” Rom. 11:12, 25-33; Acts 15:16,17.

Let us, dear brethren and sisters, hold fast to these “doctrines of Christ” as set forth, not only in His own teachings that He came to seek and save that which was lost (Luke 19:10); that He beheld mankind as a treasure in a field and bought the whole field that He might develop the treasure; but as set forth also in the declarations of the apostles and of all the holy prophets since the world began.

While the doctrines of men would be inclined to lead us away from God to make us think of the Almighty as unjust and cruel, heartless, loveless or powerless the doctrines of the scriptures open the blind eyes and give us to see the King in his beauty the glorious majesty of the God of love, the God of wisdom, the God of justice, the God of power. They give us to see, as declared by the prophet, that "As the heavens are higher than the earth so are God's ways higher than man's ways and God's plans higher than man's plans." From this standpoint of greater enlightenment respecting the divine character, we will have greater desire to serve and to please Him, esteeming it a great privilege to lay down our very lives in His service, counting all things as but loss and dross for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, that we might win Him and be found in Him and be made sharers in His resurrection the first resurrection to the change of nature, to glory, honor and immortality. Phil. 3:8-11.

"NONE OTHER NAME GIVEN"

We appreciate the tender sympathy which leads to the hope that dear friends and relatives and the heathen, who have died out of Christ are "safe in the arms of Jesus." True, they are safe in the care of him who died for all. He will not torture any of his enemies even to all eternity, as once we feared but now find to be unscriptural. But let us see that while the scriptures teach that the worst that can befall any of his enemies will be "everlasting destruction" without hope of a future life, there is a grand hope taught for the ignorant that all such shall be saved from their ignorance and be "brought to an accurate knowledge of the truth that they may be saved" in god's due time." (1 Tim. 2:4.) Let us recognize the truth of the Master's words and build a proper faith in accordance with its statement. "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son shall not see life" eternal. (John 8:36.) God's salvation is by knowledge and not by ignorance—"through faith in the precious blood" and not in ignorance of it; by a resurrection and Millennial Kingdom in which we are invited to share with our Redeemer and his bride and joint-heirs to accomplish the uplift of all who will then prove willing and obedient.

Pittsburgh Gazette -- Oct. 10, 1904

JERUSALEM ABOVE, THE GOLDEN CITY, THE CAPITAL OF THE GREAT KING

Pastor C. T. Russell preached to his home congregation in Bible House chapel, Allegheny, yesterday afternoon. He expressed himself as highly pleased with the St. Louis convention, from which he had just returned, and remarked that on its last day 144 "believers in the atonement," fully consecrated to the Lord, were symbolically immersed. Pastor Russell is booked for Schenectady, N. Y., for next Sunday. He yesterday addressed a large and attentive audience from the text, "Ye are come unto Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem." Heb. 12:22. He said:

Words are pictures, symbols, to convey thoughts from one mind to another. Thus, for instance, we hear one person spoken of as "lamb-like," another is said to be "foxy," still another "mulish," while still others are described as "angelic," "kingly," "queenly," etc. Word pictures which imply so much and can be so briefly expressed are used in connection with all the affairs of life, and abound in the scriptures. The apostle uses one of these in our text, in speaking of the future state of the church, as heavenly Jerusalem. This heavenly Jerusalem is referred to frequently in the scriptures, as, for instance, where the apostle speaks of it as "Jerusalem which is above, which is the mother of us all" (Gal. 4:26), and as "the city which hath foundations;" and our Lord speaks of it as "the city of my God, which is the New Jerusalem." Again it is described as the "holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven," and again as "the great city, the holy Jerusalem descending" Heb. 11:10; Rev. 3:12, 21:2-10.

Our fallen condition finds us as a race possessed of varying qualities of mind, so that some have more and some less of the poetic or picturing ability; consequently some find it easier and some less easy to grasp the meaning of this word picture of the New Jerusalem. The natural man, out of accord with heavenly things, is wholly unprepared to grasp the true meaning of this symbol. To him a city means walls and gates, or buildings and business, a police, fire department, etc. Such persons cannot grasp or at all comprehend the scripture presentation respecting the New Jerusalem, and the truth being presented in this symbolical form, the matter is quite hidden or covered from all such minds though they read the scriptures over and over.

The Lord declares to us that it is with this intention that the scriptures are written as they are—"that seeing they might see and not perceive, and hearing they might hear and not understand." The understanding of the scriptures is intended only for the Lord's specially consecrated people, and for them in proportion to their consecration: "To you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God, but to all them that are without (outsiders) these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings." (Mark 4:11-12.) Peculiar as it may seem, there is no danger of anyone interpreting the scriptures to the class for which they are not intended, because again the scriptures declare that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned:" spiritual things are "foolishness" to such.-1 Cor. 2:14.

THE NEW JERUSALEM SYMBOLIC

From the scriptural standpoint the New Jerusalem represents the millennial kingdom primarily the kingdom class, the glorified church, called in the scriptures a royal priesthood. This New Jerusalem has been under construction for more than 1,800 years, for we are specifically told that it is “the Bride, the Lamb’s wife” (Rev. 21:9); hence it dates from the Pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit adopting the waiting believers and constituting them the nucleus of the gospel church. There the handful of Jews who had believed into Jesus, and consecrated their lives to follow in his footsteps, became “living stones” to be fitted, shaped, polished and prepared for places in “the Holy City.” The walls of this symbolical city and its stones are as symbolical as the city as a whole. We are particularly told that there were 12 great foundations to the city wall, which represented the 12 apostles; and from their day to the present time other living stones have been in process of preparation and are now in process of aggregation in process of being gathered into the glorious union and completeness of the first resurrection Rev. 21:2-14

In ancient times a city was less a commercial metropolis and center of business than now, as business in those days was carried on largely by traveling merchants, caravans, etc., and a city chiefly stood for government and protection. The cities were walled and abundantly provisioned, and became fortresses to which the people might flee for protection from foes. This picture of a city ruling is maintained throughout the scriptures as, for instance, in Revelations we read of Babylon as the “great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth.” True, the reference is to a symbolical Babylon, but the figure of a city still carries with it in the symbol the quality of government, rule, authority, control. From the scriptural standpoint mystic Babylon is still ruling over the kings of the earth to a considerable extent, and is destined to have still more arbitrary control in the near future. In each nation there is a capital city which really stands for the nation as, for instance, St. Petersburg represents the Russian government; Tokyo represents Japan; Peking represents China; Berlin, Germany; Rome, Italy; London, Great Britain; Washington, the United States, etc. Thus we frequently read in dispatches that the Washington government says thus and so, but St. Petersburg answers thus and so.

The whole plan of the scriptures is laid out with reference to the coming “kingdom of God under the whole heavens” For it we are taught to pray and to wait; and this new government, still future, is representatively spoken of in our text and in other passages of scripture as the New Jerusalem, because the church symbolized by Jerusalem the golden will be the government of the new dispensation and have full control of all the affairs of the world under the whole heavens, for the purpose of establishing righteousness and peace amongst men and causing wars to cease unto the ends of the earth.

As natural Israel was made a type or pre-figure of spiritual Israel, so the capital city, the center of worship and government in natural Israel, was the type or prefigure of the New Jerusalem, the center of the ruling and blessing and uplifting influences of the glorified church in the future. Mount Zion was in and a part of Jerusalem, and as a mountain in the symbolical language of scripture is uniformly used to represent a kingdom, so this additionally represents the kingdom power of the New Jerusalem, and both natural and spiritual Israel have come to be known as the Lord's Zion, Mount Zion, the kingdom proper. Natural Israel was in the way to inherit the kingdom blessings and privileges, as the apostle points out, but it failed to attain this blessing and, instead, "the election hath obtained it" the acceptable ones of the Jewish nation became the nucleus of this spiritual Zion, this spiritual kingdom; and faithful people of God from "every kindred, people, nation and tongue" have since been gathered during this gospel age to complete this kingdom of Zion, this New Jerusalem class, which is to be granted in due time the rule or control of the world, for its blessing and uplifting under the reign of righteousness.

ZION'S COVENANT--TYPE AND ANTI-TYPE

In our text and its context the apostle draws our attention to the parallelism between these two Zions, natural and spiritual, and between the experiences of the two. Mentally he carries us back to Mount Sinai, where God revealed Himself to natural Israel and made a covenant with that people through Moses as the mediator. The apostle pictures to us the Israelites coming out of the bondage of Egypt and journeying toward Mount Sinai, inspired by the hope of the great privilege of being God's peculiar people and of entering into covenant relationship with Him at Mount Sinai. The people were not all at the mount some were nearer and some more distant, the mount itself being carefully guarded lest any should touch it, as indicating the absolute holiness and sacredness of that mountain. We have vividly pictured before us the terrible scenes enacted at Sinai, the fire, the smoke, the trembling mountain, the voice of God which to the people sounded like thunder Moses fearing and quaking, yet at the command of God going up into the mountain, where he received the law, which, coming down, he presented to the people, binding them under covenant relationship to keep it, and evidencing the completion of the covenant by the slaying of an animal which represented Himself, the blood of which was sprinkled upon the tables of the law as representing that it bound God to the engagement, and sprinkled upon the people as indicating that they were all bound similarly to the agreement.

The result of that covenant was ultimately the Jerusalem of the apostle's day, the multitudinous nation of Israel under divine care for centuries.

Having given us this general picture or type, the apostle contrasts the conditions of the church, the spiritual Israelites in his day with those of the natural Israelites of previous times, saying that we have approached something better, something grander, something higher. Natural Israel did not reach Mount Sinai all at the same moment, but approached it gradually; and, likewise, spiritual Israel has for 18 centuries or more been approaching the glorious things which the apostle here depicts. As natural Israel entered into covenant with God, so all the people of God, all who desire to be God's people, are shortly now to be brought to the great testing point when the new covenant will be introduced and go into effect. As in the type, it required time for the slaying of the sacrifice, whose blood would be sprinkled upon the people for their purification and separation to God, so time will be requisite in the anti-type.

We have come to the place of the slaying of the sacrifices. Christ has been slain, our Lord Jesus has died on behalf of the sins of the whole world, and the "little flock" has been invited to join with Him in the sacrificing, and it is to this that the apostle refers saying: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren... present your bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God." And it is in respect to these sacrificers that the apostle again declares that we "fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." The sufferings of Christ, the presentation of the better sacrifices, has thus been in progress throughout this gospel age and will be consummated with its close; and the apostle declares: "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." The reigning begins as soon as the suffering time ends. We are not in these remarks in any sense or degree suggesting the possibility of any sufferings of ours making atonement for sin. Quite the contrary. We hold with the Scriptures that the blood of Christ is alone efficacious, and that, so far from our sacrifices being necessary, a share with the Lord in the sufferings of this present time is a privilege granted to us.

With the end of the sacrificing, the whole Christ, Jesus the head, and the church, figuratively, "members of His body," will go up into Mount Zion as Moses went up into Mount Sinai, there to see the Lord face to face. This going up into the mountain signifies the "change" from earthly conditions to heavenly conditions, from human beings to spiritual beings, which must take place in all who would be of the kingdom class, as our Lord and the apostle specifically declare. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." "We must all be changed" changed from human to spirit conditions. (John 3:3-5; 1 Cor. 15:50-54.) This in the New Jerusalem type represents the gathering of all the “living stones” and the organization of the New Jerusalem in its glory and beauty in the heavenly condition. The description of the New Jerusalem given in Revelations gates of pearl, streets of gold, etc. are pictures representing briefly the grandeur and sublimity of the glorified spiritual Israel, the royal priesthood, the little flock, the bride, the lamb’s wife— (Rev. 21:8-9.)

THE MISSION OF JERUSALEM THE GOLDEN

The construction of the New Jerusalem is not merely for the blessing of those who will constitute its parts or members additionally it is to be God’s agency or channel for establishing a rule of righteousness throughout the world. And hence it is brought to our view as at once descending from God out of heaven to the earth. The signification of the picture is evident; it portrays a gradual establishment of law and order throughout the world at the hands of the glorified church or kingdom of God. It is the fulfillment of that petition of our Lord’s prayer, which says: “Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.” We are not to look for the kingdom of God to be established in an instant, as would be implied if a bolt of lightning were used to symbolize the matter. On the contrary, the gradual, dignified descent of the city is pictured, and when “the eyes of our understanding” are finally opened to its meaning we get the proper thought.

Let us glance back again to the type at Mount Sinai where Moses typical of Christ and the church, head and body, the great prophet, the great lawgiver went up into the mountain and was received into fellowship with God and commissioned thenceforth as God’s representative before the people of Israel. Presently he came down from the mountain to the people, and the record is that his face shone so that it was necessary that he should put on a veil in order to be able to communicate with the people. (Exo. 34:33-35; 1 Cor. 3:13.) Here we have another picture illustrating to us that the New Jerusalem, or the glorified Lord and his bride, will not be visible to human sight but will be veiled. As our Lord declared to some while on earth: “Yet a little while and ye shall see me no more.” Our Lord was done with the flesh when he sacrificed it on our behalf. The church, his body, will be done with the flesh when they have sacrificed in like manner as “members of his body,” and they must all be changed, must all be made spirit beings, or they cannot in any sense be members of and identified with “the Holy Jerusalem which cometh down from God out of heaven” the kingdom of God’s dear Son, which is to be present in the midst of men yet unseen.

When Moses descended from the mountain with the tables of the law, and while the mountain was shaking and the voice of words was heard by the people, who were in such great commotion that they entreated that they might not hear the Lord's voice any more, then they accepted the veiled Moses as God's representative, and as such they became subject to him and to the law he promulgated. The apostle (context, verses 26-28), calls attention to the parallel which we must expect here, only on a larger and higher scale. He says that God's voice then shook the earth; but respecting the parallel to that shaking, which will come in the end of this age, at the inauguration of the antitypical new covenant, by the antitypical Moses (the Christ), there will be a still greater "shaking" one which will shake not only the "earth" (society) but also the "heavens" (present religious institutions). The apostle goes on to tell us how thorough will be the shaking which must be expected, saying: "This word `yet once more' signifies the removing of those things that are shaken... that (only) those things that cannot be shaken may remain." (v. 26-28.) The apostle's thought is that in the end of this age divine judgments will be made so manifest against every hypocrisy (financial, religious, social and personal) as to cause a general shaking and overthrow of present institutions and arrangements that are contrary to the principles of justice, righteousness and love that nothing whatever shall remain of present institutions except such elements as have the divine approval. God will thus manifest Himself as "a consuming fire" against everything sinful, iniquitous, unrighteous.

OBEDY OR BE DESTROYED UTTERLY

Other scriptures show us that this symbolical "fire," with which this age will close, will be a period of universal anarchy, in which all present institutions will go down as not being acceptable in the Lord's sight. It is at this time that the new covenant is to be promulgated to the world through the antitypical Moses the Christ, head and body and the people will entreat that divine vengeance may be stayed and that they may have their dealings, under the arrangement of this new covenant and it shall be so. Thus the apostle describes the kingdom which is to be established and which is represented by the New Jerusalem the kingdom of God's dear Son. His words are, "Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord (Jehovah), and He shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive (retain) until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; to him shall you hearken in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul that will not hearken to that prophet, shall be destroyed from amongst the people." Acts 3:19-21.

That kingdom will have a rule-or-ruin policy sure enough! But, since its rule will be that of righteousness, administered by the great Mediator, who will be “a priest upon his throne,” it follows that none need fear it, but that all may rejoice in its righteous arrangements, knowing that the blessing of all is the purpose and that the ruin or destruction of all evil, and of naught except evil, will be the result.

Dear friends, we are face to face with the great fact that this New Jerusalem is in process of development, and that those of us who have made consecration to the Lord and who have been accepted of Him and adopted into His family as sons, are heirs of the glory and honor and privileges symbolized by this New Jerusalem, from which “the river of the water of life” shall flow to all the families of the earth. This is a part of the symbolical picture given in Revelation: “The river of life is seen to start from the throne of God in the New Jerusalem, and to proceed forth for the refreshment of the whole world of mankind. The river of life represents the truth and privilege and opportunity which will be extended to all mankind during the millennial age. This is indicated in various ways. For instance, there is no such city now, no such government in the world we are still praying for it, Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done in earth as in heaven. Neither is there any such river of the water of life flowing “clear as crystal.” At the present time, as our Lord suggests, the water of life is an individual matter, “a well of water springing up in you.” Only the consecrated have this well of water of life eternal; the rest of mankind are thirsty, and must remain so, until the favorable time which the Lord has appointed, when “streams shall break forth in the desert,” when “the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth.” Isa. 11:1-9; 35.

As a further indication that these conditions are still future, note the statement that then “the leaves of the trees will be for the healing of the nations” that will be the time of restitution. (Acts 3:19-21.) Note again the fact that it is “the spirit and the bride” that invite whosoever will take of the water of life freely. The “bride” is not yet in existence as a complete body the marriage of the Lamb has not yet come. The Lord intimates that the time of the marriage will be in the end of this age, when the church class will be complete then the marriage of the Lamb will come, for his wife will have made herself ready. (Rev. 19:7.) After she has become the bride or in the other figure, “the holy city,” Jerusalem the golden then she is represented as inviting all who will to take of the water of life eternal freely. This will not mean the inviting of those who are deaf and who cannot hear the invitation, for the promise is that “all the deaf ears shall be unstopped;” neither will it mean the inviting of those who are blind to their need of life eternal and blind to the way of life, for the record is through the prophet that “all the blind eyes shall be opened.” Isa. 35:5.

How thoroughly do we believe this presentation of God’s truth respecting the kingdom that is to come? How fully do we believe that we are heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord in this kingdom? Are we following in the footsteps of Jesus, that we may be accounted worthy of a share in that kingdom? To what extent are we laying up treasures in heaven? To what extent are we already identified with that holy city? Are we remembering daily the Lord’s testimony that we should seek first, chiefly, the kingdom of God and its righteousness, and that we should consider secondary all other things and affairs of life; so that our best endeavors would be expended in so preparing ourselves, in so developing character, that we should be accounted worthy a share in the kingdom? These, dear brethren and sisters, are serious questions, that have a bearing upon everyday life. Well has the apostle expressed the matter, saying, “He that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as He (the Lord) is pure.” 1 John 3:3.

A DREAM POINTED A LESSON

It is related of a young woman of wealthy parentage and social standing that, thinking upon serious matters, questioning to what extent her life was being spent according to her opportunities, she fell asleep and dreamed she was in heaven. There she saw an elegant mansion in process of construction and inquired of a messenger whose that might be. To her surprise the name given her was that of her father’s gardener, and she remarked; “Why, that is an elegant mansion for him; he has only a little cottage now.” A little later on she saw a very small, insignificant structure, and inquired who might be the owner of that little affair, and to her horror her own name was given. Inquiring why matters stood thus that her father’s gardener should have so stately a mansion in heaven while hers was so insignificant in comparison the Answer--was that the mansions were built according to the materials furnished; that the gardener had been laying up treasures in heaven while she had been spending hers on the earth. When she awakened and found it only a dream, a fancy of the mind, she was greatly relieved; nevertheless, in conjunction with the serious thoughts which she had had previous to the time of her dream, the result was a devoting of a much greater proportion of her time, energy, influence and opportunities to the service of the Lord to laying up heavenly treasures New Jerusalem treasures.

It would be far from our thought to intimate that the dream expressed the truth, or that such mansions as this young woman described are the ones that the Lord is preparing for His church; nevertheless, as a word picture, it serves fairly well to illustrate a great and important lesson which the poet sets forth in verse thus:

*“Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life’s unresting sea.”*

The fact of the matter is that none will have a place in the New Jerusalem except those who have laid up treasure in heaven. The entire city is of pure gold, which represents the divine nature, and the apostle points out that the divine nature whose special quality is immortality is only for the overcomers, “conquerors.” True, the Lord has other provisions, other plans. Some who will not get into the throne as the joint heirs with the Lord, sharers in the kingdom glories, will be “before the throne” as servants of the King, glorious and honorable in their position and service. Still others will be saved by the Lord’s grace on a still lower plane of being, to which the door of opportunity will be opened during the millennial age. But now it is for us to make our calling and our election sure as members of the New Jerusalem, members of the bride of Christ, by proving ourselves to be Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile.

An important question is, how shall this best be accomplished? and we can but briefly hint the Answer--here. The steps we have previously outlined first, repentance, reformation in conjunction with faith in the sacrifice of our Lord Jesus as our redemption price; and, second, a full consecration of heart and life, time and talents, influence and means, to the service of the Lord seeking first, chiefly, the kingdom, and allowing everything of an earthly character to be secondary as respects our love, our interest, our attention. This surrender of your will to the Lord was your consecration even unto death. That consecration, accepted of God, constituted your begetting of the Holy Spirit. Subsequently the influence of this change in the whole course of life, and of the Lord’s blessing and favor toward you as a result, has been the gradual opening of the eyes of your understanding to clearer conceptions of the divine character and the principles of righteousness, and this has doubtless led to greater love and reverence and prompter obedience, and thus your will, accepted of God and under the blessing of His Holy Spirit, has not only been at work transforming your mind and setting your affections on things above more and more, but it has also doubtless to a considerable extent affected a transformation in your daily conduct, the Holy Spirit thus “quickenning your mortal body” to the service of righteousness and truth and using it for the blessing of others and for your own progress in the narrow way.

Rom. 8:11.

Thus do we lay up treasure in heaven not necessarily the amount of money we may give to charities or to religious work, though these are by no means despised of the Lord, we may be sure. The sacrifice which the Lord most appreciates is the “broken and contrite heart,” and that delivered to the Lord constitutes our greatest treasure in heaven. It is in His sight a sacrifice of sweet odor. As a result of our heart devotion we further lay up treasure in heaven when we allow love to rule in our hearts at the cost of earthly advantage, either by way of giving time or influence or money to charities or by the practice of such honesty as love for our neighbor would suggest, which might hinder us from making some sharp bargain, but which, nevertheless, would be esteemed in the sight of God as of much more value than wealth. Love is indeed the sum of all the graces of the Spirit, so that we may say that in laying up a loving character we lay up these treasures in the development of joy, peace, gentleness, meekness, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, love. The apostle assures us that a loving character or disposition consecrated to the Lord is in His sight precious. He assures us that “a meek and quiet spirit in the sight of God is of great value.”

In view of all these things, dearly beloved, let us exert our energies specially, daily, for the laying up of treasure in heaven. Earthly treasures are but fleeting, even if we gain them and many there be who seek them and obtain them not. The heavenly treasures may be obtained by us under the most unfavorable conditions. The Lord’s grace is pledged to the assistance of those who are thus disposed and consecrated to Him and to doing His will. “They shall be Mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I make up My jewels” the precious “living stones” of the New Jerusalem.

WATCHMAN! WHAT OF THE NIGHT? THE MORNING, AND A NIGHT COMETH

Pastor C. T. Russell addressed a large audience in Bible House chapel, Arch Street, Allegheny, at 3 p. m. yesterday. His text was from Isaiah 21:11-12. “Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh and also the night.” The discourse in full follows:

For 30 centuries the world, led by the hopes of the Jews, has been looking for and hoping for and thinking about the coming golden age, in which all the families of the earth will be blessed with every conceivable prosperity. Nor did the thought originate in the Jewish nation. It came to them through the divine promise, the oath-bound covenant of God to Abraham, that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed. The hope set before the nation of Israel was that they, as the seed of Abraham, would be God's agency in connection with Messiah for the communication of this blessing to every nation, kindred, people and tongue. Under the stimulus of this hope their nation held together as no other nation has ever done.

Those who accepted Christ, both of the Jews and the Gentiles, lay claim to all those promises which center in Christ, and which the Jewish nation in rejecting Him cut loose from. Christendom claims to be spiritual Israel, and, as such, heirs of all the wonderful spiritual promises of God, as the apostle declares: "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abrahams's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—(Gal. 3:29). This hope inspired the apostles and all of the early church. They looked forward to the second coming of Christ as the time when the church as His bride would be glorified with their Lord and associated with Him in the work of the kingdom the work of restraining and destroying evil and exalting righteousness the work of rolling back the curse from every people, nation and kindred, and of uplifting the world of mankind from sin and death the work of raising up the dead world from its fallen condition to all that was lost in Adam and redeemed by the precious blood of Christ. This glorious time the Apostle Peter, for instance, referred to, saying: "Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive (retain) until the time of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began."—(Acts 3:19-21).

No Bible student of honest mind will for one moment question that the hope of union with Christ in His kingdom at His second advent was the hope of the early church. It was in view of this glorious exaltation that the apostles and all the faithful brethren were so willing to suffer persecution for the truth's sake and thus to follow their Master in the "narrow way." He foretold that those who follow Him in this present time would in the regeneration time, in the promised millennial age, sit with Him in His throne as His bride and associated in the government of the world, in its instruction in righteousness, in its uplift out of sin and degradation. The apostle emphasizes the Master's teachings, saying "If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him," and exhorts the church to count all things of this present time but as loss and dross that they might win Christ win a membership in the great Messiah, and thus share with their Lord and head in the great work He is to accomplish according to the promise.

The apostle links together most positively present faithfulness to the Lord and future association with Him in the kingdom, saying: "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—"We are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may also be glorified together with Him." He further declares that the "earnest expectation of the creature (the world of mankind in general) waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God" their manifestation or revelation in glory as the Christ, the Messiah, the great king, head and body, whose rule is to bring to earth the golden age and all the foretold blessings mentioned by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. Rom. 8:16-19.

CHRISTENDOM GONE ASTRAY

No theologian of any denomination will question the fact that so-called Chiliasm hope in the second advent of Christ and the kingdom which He will then establish was the dominating thought of the church of Christ in the days of the apostles, during the time when the New Testament was written. The followers of Christ understood themselves to be entirely separate and distinct from the world, to have different hopes and aims from the remainder of the race, because they were "children of the highest," "begotten again of the Spirit," "new creatures in Christ Jesus," to whom old things have passed away and all things have become new, through this hope inspired by the Lord's word and appreciated through His Spirit. But very very soon after the death of the apostles grievous errors crept in amongst the Lord's followers and a new theory or philosophy on the subject of the kingdom was started, namely, that instead of waiting for the Lord from heaven to exalt His church with a glorious change from mortal to immortal conditions and to clothe her with glory, honor and immortality, and equip her with power and authority to execute judgment on the earth, the program was to be a different one that the apostles had not quite grasped the thought that the church should understand it to be her mission to convert the world without her Lord, and that when she had accomplished this He would come, inspect her work and approve it.

The mistake was a serious one and its results have been far-reaching. The theory that the apostles had made a mistake in the teaching that the church was to continue to suffer until the second advent of Christ that it was to continue to be despised and rejected of men, and that whosoever would live godly in this present life would suffer persecution, were only partial truths applicable to the apostles' day, and not subsequently. The thought that the apostles' testimony needed to be supplemented led to the theory that prevails today in the Roman Catholic and all the Episcopal churches, namely, that the testimonies of the apostles are not the final messages of God, but that the living church is of equal power and authority with the apostle that the clergy through apostolic succession have the same right and the same authority that the apostles had to express the divine plan, and thus came the false teaching that the decrees of councils of the church, the creeds and doctrines which they established, were to be taken as the rule of faith and practice in conjunction with the writings of the apostles.

This serious error is widely manifest and has borne much bad fruit, permitting the introduction of various forms, ceremonies, practices and doctrines which the apostles never authorized and many of which are in direct opposition to their inspired teachings. The reformation movement under Luther and others was an attempt to get free from this error and to acknowledge what the scriptures so clearly present, namely, that there were but twelve apostles of the Lamb and that they had no successors in office, but are with the Lord's people as the representatives of the Lord and His message throughout the age, and constitute, therefore, the only divinely appointed teachers in conjunction with the Lord and all the holy prophets of ancient times, to whose utterances they have furnished the key.

Under the lead of these new teachers, who claimed for themselves apostolic succession and apostolic inspiration, the hope of the second coming of Christ as the world's deliverer from the thralldom of Satan and sin and death gradually faded and a new teaching took its place. That new teaching began the foundation of the papal theory and practice and descended in a legitimate manner from papacy to the various denominations of Christendom. That theory is that God has commissioned the church to conquer the world now not waiting for a millennial reign of Christ in which He shall reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet, as the apostle Paul points out. 1 Cor. 15:25.

THY KINGDOM COME

The theory that the time had come for the church to cease her suffering and to begin her reign over the kingdoms of the earth would naturally be a pleasing and fascinating theory, and no wonder it gradually enveloped the church to such an extent that any who still held to the old apostolic views were few and considered behind the times until finally when the error became known as "orthodoxy" and was established by councils of the church, those who held apostolic teachings on the subject were called "heretics." Under the new theory every energy was bent to attaining power over the nations, and the whole world knows of the wonderful success of the effort. The Roman empire was swallowed up by papacy, and the power and authority of the empire passed into its hands.

For century upon century papacy reigned over the civilized world, under the claim that it was the kingdom which had been predicted by all the holy prophets, the kingdom which was to conquer the world and to which all the kingdoms of the earth should do reverence. History tells us that in the enforcement of this theory that papacy was the kingdom of God and that the pope was the personal representative of Christ, His vice-gerent in the earth one of the kings of England, for venturing to ignore a mandate from the pope, was threatened with the loss of his kingdom and as penance was obliged for three days and nights to walk barefooted about the pope's palace, and then was admitted to the pope's presence and on his knees kissed the pope's great toe, as a fulfillment of the prophecy of the second Psalm, "Kiss the Son, lest he be angry and ye perish in the way." Psa. 2:12.

It was in accord with this same erroneous teaching that thousands upon thousands were persecuted to the death because they would not recognize this papal system as the kingdom of God's dear Son foretold by the prophets, our Lord and the apostles because they did not recognize the pope as the vice-gerent of Christ and the reign of Christ thus begun. It must be acknowledged that those persecutions of all opposed to papacy as heretics were in full accord with the theories advanced. The scriptures declare that when God's kingdom shall be established it shall rule the world with a rod of iron and put down all insubordination of every kind. If therefore papacy was that kingdom of God it should be expected that it would subdue with mighty power, as an iron rod, all opposition. Thus does an error of doctrine lead to an error of practice, and illustrates to us the necessity for having the true faith once delivered unto the saints, and the necessity also of rejecting as false, as anti-scriptural and anti Christian, everything which opposes or substitutes itself for that which the Lord has promised.

REFORMATION THEORIES TINCTURED

Martin Luther, at one time a Roman Catholic theologian, by the grace of God got his eyes so widely opened to the errors of the system with which he was associated that he withdrew and began a reformation work. A great blessing has come through that reformation movement with which Luther and others were identified a blessing to Christendom in general, including Roman Catholicism. Almost fierce were the attacks of Luther on the papal system as the anti-Christ. He realized that it was necessary that this point should be seen in order to break the superhuman influence of Satan, exercised through that great system to the enslavement of the whole world in gross superstition and unrighteousness.

We think it not unreasonable to believe that many honest-hearted Roman Catholics, looking back to the gross darkness of the sixteenth century, are glad of the reformation movement, and realize that a great change has resulted therefrom beneficial to every element of honesty and righteousness in the papal system.

We, too, rejoice in the benefits which have come through that reformation to all the people of civilized lands, but we wish to point out that the reformation movement in its wide influence has only restrained one of the open and violent results of the false doctrines, and has not changed the false doctrine itself, of which the papal hierarchy was the reasonable and legitimate fruitage. Unless this erroneous theory be gotten out of the way unless we say, not expecting that it will be, we may be sure that the proposed unification or federation of all religious systems of Christendom will speedily lead to autocratic assumptions in the world, very similar to those which papacy exercised in the zenith of its power though doubtless moderated to some extent by the changed conditions of our day.

We are not hoping to change these matters as regards the world in general. Our only hope is to reach the hearts and understanding of the Lord's truly consecrated people, for, as the Lord has declared through the prophet, "The wicked shall do wickedly, but shall not understand, but the wise shall understand" our Lord's little ones, who are wise in accepting His word and plan rather than human philosophies and earthly wisdom and policy. Instead, dear friends, of our entertaining a hope of swaying the world in this matter, we realize that it is clearly taught us in the Book of Revelation that this great federation of Christendom is very near, and that the Lord will permit it to have sufficient power in the world to estop myself and any other who will speak forth in defense of the faith once delivered to the saints; and to show the errors and inconsistencies of the theories which are dominating the "Christian world" today. It would not at all surprise me if only a few years hence any one using the language which I am using here today

WOULD MEET WITH VIOLENCE

Do you ask why? I Answer--that the public mind is so permeated with the error and so committed to its support, and so blinded to the greater beauty and harmony of the divine word and plan, that, in a fancied zeal for God and His cause, these persecutors of the future like those of the dark ages would verily think themselves to be doing God's service.

Christendom is infatuated with the thought of converting the world. In heathen poetry they read of the golden age, and in the scriptures they read of the glories of the day of Christ, the millennium, and logically they reason that evil and sin ought not to endure forever, and that the Lord has promised that the time shall come when Satan shall be bound, that he shall deceive the nations no more and carried away by this zeal with the erroneous theory that they are now the kingdom of Christ, and that they are now to reign over the world, and that they are now to conquer the world for Jesus and that it is the Lord's command upon them to subdue all things, and to bring all things into subjection to the Father, they will be ready to go to almost any lengths with any and everything opposing this theory, which has become so entrenched in their minds.

It is true that the glorious day is to dawn, that the scriptures affirm it; but Christendom in general stands with its back to the sunrise and is looking for the millennial blessings in the west. Hence Christendom in general fails to recognize the streaks of dawn already visible to the watchers who, being in line with the divine word, are properly looking toward the second coming of Christ, for the sunrise of the great millennial day, for the revelation of the great millennial king, for the glorification of the Lamb's wife at the promised marriage supper.

When preparing this discourse my eye fell upon a tabulation prepared for Sunday school teachers by a celebrated doctor of divinity, which was intended to show how rapidly the Lord's kingdom is now conquering the world. We refer to this as a proof of our assertion that our dear Christian friends, in general misled by the wrong theories on the subject of Christ's kingdom, are looking to the west-ward instead of to the east, the real point of sunrise. The table mentioned sets forth that in the year A. D. 1000 there were 50,000,000 of Christians; in A. D. 1500, 100,000,000; in the year 1800, 200,000,000; in the year 1880, 200,000,000; in the 1880, 415,000,000. I presume if the table were carried up to date the claim would be five or six hundred millions of Christians. The doctor of divinity who prepared this table, and many of those who will examine it, overlook the fact that the 50,000,000 of the year A. D. 1000 and the 100,000,000 of the year A. D. 1500, were nearly all Roman Catholics or Greek Catholics, and that similarly the 415,000,000 of 1880 consisted of more than two-thirds Catholics, Greek and Roman. This Protestant minister seemingly forgot and expected his readers to forget, that Protestant missionaries in France, in Spain, in Italy, in the orient and elsewhere in the world, are sustained for the avowed purpose of freeing those peoples from the darkness and superstition of a false Christianity.

The realization that no one body of Protestants could ever hope to dominate the world, yea, that all of them could never accomplish such a mission, is leading not only to a desire for Protestant federation, but also for a closer relationship with and a general recognition of the Roman and Greek Catholic systems. All this willingness to ignore doctrines and principles is the fruitage of this wrong theory that God expects the church to conquer the world and establish the millennial condition before Christ comes. This is called the post-millennial view and is the prevalent view amongst Christians everywhere.

FIGURES THAT DO NOT LIE

If our dear friends who entertain this unscriptural view (Catholics and Protestants) could but see its unreasonableness, there would be some hope that some of them at least would abandon it, but they seem blind to reason on the subject. Take their own figures, and look for the 415,000,000 of Christians that they say will shortly convert the remaining 1,100,000,000 and establish the millennium. Do we not see from the latest census returns that the natural increase of human kind the world over during the last decade was 8 per cent, and this compounded would mean 115 per cent in the century. Taking their own figures, Christianity is not increasing in any such ratio, and hence the conversion of the world is really further off every year.

To make my meaning more clear: The largest estimate of the world's population in the year 1805, was that given by Pinkerton, who estimated it at 700,000,000; Volney in the previous year, 1804, gave his estimate as 437,000,000. We grant the larger figures, 700,000,000, and then take the estimates made by the doctor of divinity already referred to that there were 200,000,000 Christians at that time. Allowing these figures, there were only 500,000,000 of heathen to be converted in the year 1805, while by the same figures there were over 1,200,000,000 that needed converting in the year of 1880. How long will it require to convert the world at this rate? Why cannot the bright minds that are identified with this erroneous theory see the fallacy of it and seeing its fallacy, why do they not promptly turn and confess the truth and throw their influence toward the re-establishment of the primitive faith of the church, the faith once delivered to the saints by the Lord and his apostles that the morning cometh only with the second coming of our Lord.

But, dear friends, suppose that facts did not thus knock the entire bottom out of this false theory, this false hope which Christendom is pursuing suppose that there were the best of reasons that the whole 1,600,000,000 of the world's population could be converted in the same sense that the 415,000,000 are converted, what would it mean? Would it mean the millennium which the apostles taught? Would it mean the kingdom for which our Lord taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven?" Alas! no. If churchianity ever succeeded in grasping her ideal we see that it would be but an apple of Sodom. Look for a moment at the Christians who compose this 415,000,000. The more you examine them the more you will be convinced that the thing they all need most is to be converted fully. Not only are the majority of them Greek and Roman Catholics, but the majority of all the infants and children whose future must needs yet be determined either for Christ or the world, for in this reckoning of Christians practically all of Europe is included as Christian except Turkey. Consequently it is from this 415,000,000 that we find growing lists of murderers, suicides, thieves, boodlers and grafters being recruited.

With a hope of the world's being converted to such conditions, dear friends, we have and should have no sympathy. Many of the poor heathen are much better off left by themselves than brought under such conditions as are farcically called Christendom. We do not praise the heathen; none, we believe, appreciate more than we the great needs of heathendom, but something far better than nominal Christendom has to offer them is needed. With Christendom goes certain measures of so-called civilization, which in some respects perhaps is advantageous, but in many respects is injurious. Comparing the 1,200,000,000 with the 400,000,000 called Christians, we find that, in some particulars, the heathen have quite the advantage. The 400,000,000 nominal Christians do the bulk of the fighting, swearing, liquor drinking and a considerable share of its general dishonesty and stealing. God forbid that we should be forced to accept any such millennium as would be brought about by the conversion of the world to such conditions. We are here reminded of our Lord's words to the Pharisees in His day; "Ye compass sea and land to make a proselyte, and when he is made he is two-fold more a child of Gehenna than yourselves."

LOVE FOR MISSION WORK

From infancy I have sympathized with the heathen and longed to help them. I still have this same love and desire, but my eyes of understanding have opened wider since childhood. I now perceive that God loves the heathen and the whole world not only as much as I do, but more. I have heard His message saying: "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways and My plans higher than your plans," and I have come to realize the truth of this and see the great plan which God has for the salvation of the world.

This plan I now see is first of all the selection from the world of suitable missionaries. Jesus is the head of this missionary company, and during the gospel age the Holy Spirit has been attracting under the terms of the gospel, along the lines of the narrow way of self denial and self-sacrifice, those whom the Lord is pleased to associate with Himself as His church, His bride, in the great missionary enterprise which was purposed from before the foundation of the world.

These missionaries receive their training under the present reign of sin and death, but as soon as the entire company graduates the scene will change. They will be invested with divine power and authority, and will scatter the present night of sin and death and constitute the sun of righteousness which shall heal the world with its benign beams. This is the glorious morning mentioned in our text the morning of the grand millennial age, the golden age of the poets, the day of Christ in the language of the apostles. The Psalmist declares: "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning," and our hearts are glad because we see the dawning of the millennial day already beginning and the shadows of the dark night fleeing.

This glorious day is coming not by the conversion of the world under present conditions, not by calling the kingdoms of this world the kingdom of Christ, not by calling all classes living in civilized countries "saints of Most High God." The morning is dawning because the Lord's time has come for the second advent for the establishment of the kingdom for which we pray. "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven" because the times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, are about to begin. I cannot here and now give you the proofs that we are already chronologically entering this great day of the Lord, but the proofs are abundant and clear, and for the asking may be had to read by any of you. They are found in the books entitled the "Millennial Dawn Series," which by the grace of God are scattered in various languages throughout the world to the extent of over a million and a quarter copies.

CLOUDS AND DARKNESS

In our text the prophet declares that not only the morning comes, but also a night. This signifies that while the morning is dawning a specially dark period will come over the affairs of earth and this dark cloud is already manifest. In the scriptures it is termed a "time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." (Dan. 12:1.) The various descriptions lead us to understand that this trouble will be occasioned by anarchy, which will overthrow all present institutions, social, political and religious, and cause the greatest suffering in the world that has ever been known. We can see the forces organizing whose conflict will eventuate in this anarchy; on one hand we see capital combining and entrenching itself and getting its hold on the necessities of life in every direction; on the other hand we see labor equally active in its combination and entrenchments, and undoubtedly the coming conflict will be between the two, and the scriptures show us the anarchious results.

We would not intrude this awfully dark scene in this connection, but that it is referred to in our text and frequently is necessary as an explanation of the process by which the Lord intends to establish His kingdom of righteousness. Man's extremity will become God's opportunity. The highest attainment of civilization resulting in anarchy will greatly humble the pride of humanity and make the world ready for the kingdom of righteousness and peace which will then be ushered in. The trouble of that awful time will be the plow-share of the Lord for preparing the hearts of the world for the glorious blessings of His millennial kingdom, and thus even the evil things shall work out good under divine Providence.

What manner of persons ought we to be who see the glorious dawning of the millennial day, and who see also the intervening night of trouble? As the apostle intimates holiness of life should be and is induced and assisted by this knowledge of the divine plan. Our hopes and affections rise above the things of this present life to the glorious things of the kingdom of righteousness, the kingdom of God's dear Son, and we long for the time when God's will shall be done perfectly and absolutely among men as it is now done among the angels of heaven. Truly the apostle declared, "He that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure."—(1 John 3:3.)

TRUE RICHES A GREAT BLESSING, GOD ADDETH NO SORROW THEREWITH

Pastor C. T. Russell was with his home congregation in Bible House chapel, Allegheny, yesterday and spoke to a packed audience from the text, "The blessing of the Lord; it maketh rich, and He addeth no sorrow therewith." Prov. 10:22. He said:

The rush and push and scramble for riches was never before so great as at the present time, and the reasons for this are quite apparent. The increase of knowledge which has reached the masses during the last half-century has awakened generally thoughts and aspirations which never before moved any except the extremely few. Added to these has come the examples of Vanderbilts, Astors, Carnegies and Schwabs, rising from the humbler positions in life to pinnacles of fame, affluence, luxury, in an incredibly short time. The fact that a ferryman, with a little boat which he propelled by hand, became a multi-millionaire and the head of one of the largest railway systems in the world, could not be without its influence on all who heard of his success. The fact that a peddler of coon and bear skins became a multi-millionaire, and that his representatives in the world today are the largest owners of real estate in the largest city of the United States, could not fail to impress a lesson upon the rising generation. The fact that a telegraph messenger boy rose from that position to be the controller of hundreds of millions, and a broad dispenser of public benefactions in his laudable endeavor not to die extremely rich, necessarily made an impression wherever known throughout the world. The fact that a country boy driving a stage coach should in a few years leap into world-wide prominence as a millionaire caused breathless astonishment. Naturally enough all these exhibitions of prosperity, or, as some would say, luck, have tended to stir the ambitions not only of the rich to be richer, but also of the poor to become rich. And so we see the millions of civilized lands eagerly straining every nerve and watching every opportunity peradventure some such good fortune should come to them, meantime encouraged by many examples less notable than those we have cited.

Is it any wonder that the world is seemingly gone mad in its pursuit of wealth? that mammon is worshiped or served in every conceivable manner and place in the hope of receiving name, place, honor and ease? And is it any wonder that those worshiping daily at the shrine of mammon, as they look about them and see the more favored ones on the social tiers above them, should come to feel that the attainment of wealth would mean the attainment of every blessing, comfort and joy that heart could wish? It is no wonder! It would be remarkable if it were otherwise! It would be strange if human reasoning were not to reach just such a conclusion!

ACQUISITIVENESS A GOD-GIVEN QUALITY

From the standpoint of some, all this would be set down as greed and selfishness. But this is not the proper viewpoint. We are to remember that acquisitiveness is an organ to be found in every cranium, and that so surely as we hold to the scriptural declaration that man was created in the moral image and likeness of God, so surely must we contend that acquisitiveness as originally possessed was an element of this mental likeness to the Deity. The desire to acquire is not an evil of itself, but a blessing; without its influence mankind would be ambitionless, drones, savages.

What then is the difficulty if acquisitiveness is of itself a good quality, a proper organ of our nature? Why are some of the fruits of its exercise evil some of them diabolical? We reply that this organ in the majority of people today is too active; but, on the other hands, the quality of activity as compared with its opposite, lethargy, indolence, is an admirable quality. Our highest conception of the perfect man, Adam, sees him full of activity, energy—"not slothful in business, but fervent in spirit." So then we can neither blame the organ of acquisitiveness nor the quality of activity, for both are good qualities under proper regulations and restraints. We must look further for the seat of trouble.

POOR COMBINATIONS RESPONSIBLE

The secret of our inquiry lies in the fact that as human beings we are not controlled by one or two of the organs of our constitution, but are influenced by all of them more or less. For instance, acquisitiveness as a quality of the human mind is surrounded by other qualities and influenced by them. To illustrate: Alimentativeness, or the love of eating and drinking, bears upon acquisitiveness and supports it, saying, I must acquire money, otherwise I cannot have the food I crave. The organs of music and mirthfulness have their bearing also, and urge: We cannot be gratified unless we have money for entertainment, etc. Ideality, or the love of the beautiful, calls loudly to acquisitiveness, saying: Whatever you have, dress or home, house or lawn, must be in good taste, and this requires money. Conjugal love love for a mate and appreciation of the family circle calls to acquisitiveness, saying: Bestir yourself, for without money and its products we will be deprived of our enjoyments. Acquisitiveness, pressed thus from every side, more under present conditions than in the primitive state, casts about for assistance, and finds the organs of combativeness and destructiveness ready to assist it in meeting the claims mentioned.

Combativeness and destructiveness are the artillery and cavalry of the human character, diverting every resource of human energy into their service, and waging life's battle against their service, and waging life's battle against everybody and everything out of harmony with their master, acquisitiveness, and the various co-related qualities associated with acquisitiveness. This is particularly the mental attitude of the whole world of mankind and the strife is growing day by day. The scriptures inform us that ultimately the greatest time of trouble which the world has ever known will result; and that this time of trouble will be brought about by just such selfish strife, in which, as the Lord through the prophet declares, "every man's hand shall be against his neighbor." The worldly expression on the subject, which is becoming more and more the world's rule of life, is expressed in the adage, "Every man for himself, and the devil gets the hindmost." The hindmost who fall in life's battle sometimes breathe their last in almshouses or in hospitals or as suicides. The clear intimations of scripture teach us to expect more radical things in the future than have ever been known in the past, except in the great period of anarchy which swallowed up the Jewish nation in A. D. 69, and in the great French revolution at the close of the eighteenth century.

THE SIDE-WHEEL STEAMER

Phrenologically considered, the part of the cranium representing acquisitiveness lies just above the ear, and, as we have just seen, all the other qualities of mind seem more or less to pay tribute to acquisitiveness to depend upon it for their sustenance and pleasure and all more or less serve it and obey its mandates through a kind of necessity. Thus seen the human head is very much like the side-wheel steamer, the wheel which propels it being represented by the organ of acquisitiveness. Every person who has made his mark in the world financially or socially we may surely know possessed this organ of acquisitiveness in large measure proportionately larger than the organs surrounding it. In some respects this is a good arrangement. If, for instance, the organ of ideality were the largest and dominating one and acquisitiveness were small, the result would be a lover of the beautiful without the energy and ambition to produce or acquire the beautiful. We see then that the difficulty with our race as a whole is not that we have the organ of acquisitiveness, nor that it is too large, but that our other qualities are deficient, too small, out of proportion, out of balance.

BENEVOLENCE, VENERATION, CONSCIENCE

Lying farthest from acquisitiveness are the higher reflective organs, benevolence, veneration and spirituality, conscientiousness, firmness. These latter are located in the fore-front and along the top of the head. As might be surmised from their location, they are more independent of acquisitiveness, than are the other organs; nevertheless they often pay tribute also. For instance, benevolence exercising itself along the line of charities, may appeal to acquisitiveness, saying, I cannot dispense wealth which I do not possess; I therefore need your assistance.

Veneration may also to some extent bow to acquisitiveness, saying, my reverence for God leads me to desire to place some trophy at his feet, and this means that I must have money. Spirituality may also turn to acquisitiveness for assistance, and conscientiousness may support the claims of both of these and call loudly to acquisitiveness, claiming it to be its duty to acquire in order to give in harmony with benevolence, veneration and spirituality. Wherever we see the qualities represented by these higher organs strongly manifested in character, we speak of the person as being noble-minded as desiring wealth and using it on a higher plane than those who are comparatively deficient along these lines.

All that we have here described belongs to the natural man. Even the noblest characters under such an organization of mind are not what the scriptures class as spiritual. This brings us to another feature of the subject, one of the most important factors of human affairs the office of the will.

Those who have followed the argument understandingly will have no difficulty in appreciating my meaning when I liken these various organs or qualities of the mind to the various members of a legislative body, such as congress or parliament. In every such gathering of men there are some who dominate and to a large degree control the others, who, while having functions of their own, practically become satellites of their leader. There are generally two leaders or parties, sometimes more, seeking control of such a legislative body, and the strongest party dominates the others, and places its leader in control as the speaker of the house, and passes the rules and by-laws governing the conduct of affairs under its regime. Thus, for instance, the late Thomas B. Reed not only belonged to the dominating party in congress, but by that party was made its leader, and in co-operation they made the celebrated "rules for the house" respecting the order of business and the rights and liberties of the members.

Applying all this to the human mind, we note that in some minds on some questions there would be full agreement of all the organs; as, for instance, they generally agree to follow the lead of and to support acquisitiveness, and acquisitiveness in turn recognizes the claims of the various members, watching after their interests. Where, however, conscientiousness or veneration or benevolence, for instance, are reasonably large and influential in the mind, there is apt to be more or less of conflict. Conscientiousness may refuse its consent to the methods which acquisitiveness and combativeness might be disposed to employ.

Or it might be such a question as would enlist in the support of conscientiousness the organs of veneration, spirituality, the more religious elements of the mind. These would oppose, and often quite a mental dispute arises over certain questions, with long debating and powerful arguments on both sides. Indeed, fortunately, this is the attitude of the large proportion of people in civilized lands. Otherwise if conscientiousness, etc., offered no opposition, and acquisitiveness, urged on by the various pleas of the surrounding faculties, had no opposition or restraint, the results in the world would be terrible indeed; murder and robbery would be everywhere prevalent. We are glad, therefore, that the "fall," which has so unsettled the mental balance of the race, has not in the majority crushed out or eliminated conscientiousness and its supporting organs of the higher realms of thought.

This attitude of mind, this continual conflict, makes the life of the average man more or less miserable, for he not only desires many things which he cannot obtain, but he is in continual conflict with his conscience and higher organism in respect to the methods employed in securing what he does obtain. The result in the majority is an agreement to disagree, an agreement to do neither the one thing nor the other, to neither satisfy conscience and the higher organs, nor to give full rein to acquisitiveness and the lower organs. This condition we might well term an armed truce between two opposing factions, neither one conceding fully the rights of the other. The apostle, speaking of such a mind, declares it to be a double mind, and says, "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways" he lacks full satisfaction, he lacks mental rest and peace; consequently the majority of the world of mankind, whether rich or poor, are dissatisfied, discontented, unhappy.

THE PEACE OF THE NEW MIND

If we are convinced of the truth of what we have just considered, we come properly to the questions: Is there a remedy? and what is it? We Answer--that there is a remedy, but comparatively few realize this even partially, and many of them hold back and never obtain the blessing. The first step in any reformation, social or individual, mental or physical, is to grasp the situation and realize the need of a change. Hence our endeavor to portray this need by a review of the conditions as they exist in the natural mind. Those who are satisfied with such a warring condition, those who do not seek peace and rest, we do not address, for the effort would be useless. To those who are seeking we quote the words of the great Redeemer, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." The whole world is laboring and is heavy laden. To such who have sought rest in other directions and have found none, we have a message the divine word speaks peace by the blood of Christ.

Our mental unbalance, no less than our physical blemishes and mental and moral weaknesses, all corroborate the scriptural narrative of the fall the fall out of divine favor with all that this signifies of disease and physical blemish culminating in the tomb the fall into sin and its penalty, death. Recovery is impossible except by divine aid, and this aid has been extended to us as a race in the great sacrifice finished at Calvary. Knowledge of that fact and an appreciation of our own needs are the strands of the cable of hope which draw us toward the Almighty, the Creator, for forgiveness, that we may obtain mercy and in His appointed way find grace to help in every time of need.

The gracious message of God to us is that if we are ready to forsake sin to the best of our ability, and will exercise faith in Christ as our Redeemer, the Lord will begin a work of reformation in our hearts and lives. He will do this through the instructions of His word, which extends "exceeding great and precious promises" to those who come unto Him in "the only name given under heaven and among men whereby we must be saved." This reformation enjoined upon us we naturally strive to accomplish for ourselves, saying if our past sins are forgiven we will see to it that we sin no more for the future. Good resolution! Noble endeavor!

However, before we have gone very far in the new way, in the way of righteousness, in the way of obedience to the Lord, we find ourselves woefully entangled, and at first are wholly unable to understand the matter. We find our will to be to do the Lord's will, which we recognize as absolutely right and proper; but we find in our members, we find in the different organs of our minds various combinations arrayed against our good intentions. Acquisitiveness insists that whatever be our change of intention, nothing must be done to the curtailment of its influence in our lives. Others of our members join in the same protest, and insist that the new resolutions are certainly extreme if they bring upon us any disadvantages of an earthly kind. With united voice almost every organ of our minds cries out that we must not be extremists, for this would make us in the eyes of the world fools and rob us of all the pleasures of life.

It requires a little time for the reformed will to right itself from the shock received from such assault as this from every quarter; it is a new experience and rather a surprise. The expectation perhaps was that as soon as reform became the watchword of life, the Lord would overrule matters so that everything would run smoothly, and joy and peace of heart would prevail. Not so, however. The Lord desires a still deeper work of grace than this, and hence the natural battle of the selfish organs preponderates against the will of God, if permitted. Of these the apostle says: "The carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Rom. 8:7.

It cannot be in harmony because of its derangement through the fall. If all the organs of the mind still maintained their original proportionate weight and influence matters would be different, and the reformed attitude of mind would be approved as the course of wisdom by the consensus of judgment of all the members or faculties of the mind. It is this loss of mental balance or equilibrium through the fall, and the many centuries of hereditary degeneration that constitutes the "worldly mind," or, what the scriptures designate the "carnal" or "fleshly" mind that is, overbalance toward the interests of the flesh, unbalance as respects the higher interests.

"CHANGE" START TO FINISH

What steps shall be taken to get rid of this conflict between the reformed will and the natural mind? What is the road to the peace our Lord referred to, saying: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest?" The step which the Lord directs as necessary to the attainment of full peace with Him is a very radical one, but one which once taken is never to be regretted. It is the step of full consecration the full submission of the mind or will to the will of the Lord. It means what in congress would be called the radical division of the house. The members are lined up, sworn to fidelity to the new will faithfulness to the Lord.

This is still more radically presented to us in the scriptures, namely, that every sentiment, emotion and principle of our hearts and minds are delivered over to obedience to the Lord, with a full enthronement of Him as an autocrat controlling our every interest and affair. It pledges to the Lord that ever talent and quality of mind and body shall be to the extent of our ability brought into subjection to His will, and that any other disposition shall be “mortified,” that is, deadened. The apostle expresses this thought to the consecrated ones, saying, “Mortify therefore your members which are on the earth.” That is to say, your earthly members or those organs of your mind which are abnormally interested in the earthly affairs, and not willing to be subject to the heavenly will or to be disowned and ignored and destroyed. From them is to be taken all power to vote or to exercise any influence whatever in the councils of our minds; because they are recognized as being rebellious against the Creator, against the Redeemer, and against all the laws of righteousness and truth which these represent.

The full renouncement of the old man, the old nature, the old mind, is the culminating step in the conversion which properly begins with acceptance of Christ as our Redeemer, and resolutions of reformation and righteousness of life. Such a consecration or giving up of the will to the Lord the apostle denominates a “sacrifice.” He explains to us that the will represents the whole person, and that the sacrifice of the will, or the determination to follow not our own will, but follow completely the Lord’s way, is accounted of the Lord as a sacrifice even unto death the death of the will, to last even to the death of the body. He tells us that this is pleasing in the Lord’s sight, that we are no longer to offer burnt offerings and peace offerings, but, says he, “I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God (in the forgiveness of your sins) that ye present your bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God, your reasonable service.” Rom. 12:1.

This is all that any one can do. We have nothing worthy of the Lord’s acceptance. The merit of Christ, ours by faith, has made us worthy and approved. The Lord’s acceptance signifies the adoption of such into the family of sons of God, that we might be “heirs of God, joint heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord, if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may also be glorified together.” (Rom. 8:17.) The next step of progress is the giving to such of the Holy Spirit not a miraculous matter, not attested and followed by “gifts” and “signs,” as at the beginning, for these are no longer necessary, but a development in the accepted ones of the mind of Christ, His disposition, His character likeness a development in such of the fruits and graces of the spirit meekness, gentleness, patience, long suffering, brotherly kindness, love. This begetting of the spirit to newness of nature as sons of God we are told is the first fruits of our inheritance the earnest or hand-payment of the blessings which the Lord proposes to give to such. The remainder of this blessing is to come to us in the first resurrection, when, if faithful, we shall be raised from the dead, "changed," made like our Redeemer, spirit beings, sharers of His glory, His honor, His immortality. Rom. 2:7; 1 Cor. 15:51

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE CHANGE

What is the philosophy of this change or renewing of the mind? How is it that with the same brain, and the same arrangement of organs, and the same disproportion of balance amongst them, and the same preponderance of the lower or fleshly elements of the mind how is it, with all these, that the new mind makes possible, which loves those things that once it hated, and despises those things that once it loved?

We Answer--that the secret of the matter lies in the will. The will, the general sentiment of the mind, having once committed itself intelligently, reasonably, on the side of the Lord and of righteousness, and having these characteristics of selfishness, acquisitiveness, combativeness, etc., and having deprived those organs of the power to vote (because they were found to be rebellious and not subject to the law of God), the way is comparatively easy, because only the higher organs are permitted to vote in the councils of the mind. Even they are not permitted to vote their own sentiments, but are merely permitted to say what thoughts and words and conduct from their standpoint would be consistent with a full devotion and loyalty to the Lord and His principles of righteousness. Now peace reigns in that mind because the obstreperous inclinations are cast out of privilege not permitted a voice in the guidance of the affairs of life. The divine will alone is the rule of life, and the divine promises feed, strengthen and support that mind.

For instance, spirituality finds its satisfaction in thinking of the heavenly things; conscientiousness approves, and declares it to be but our reasonable service to do the divine will; veneration reverences the Lord and takes pleasure in His worship, such as it could not derive from the worship of Mammon; benevolence also rejoices in endeavoring to copy after the pattern of divine love, of which itself has been the recipient. Gradually all the organs more and more come into accord with this new ruler, the new will, the mind of the Lord, the will of the Lord. Ideality takes pleasure in thinking of the heavenly ideals and the glorious things promised in the future, and, while still appreciating earthly things, appreciates the heavenly things as beyond all compare. Family love and love of home lose their merely selfish features and take on a new meaning as related to the family of God and the heavenly home.

Acquisitiveness, too, being restrained as respects earthly things, except as these are necessary and helpful in the spiritual way, takes pleasure in aspiring to acquire the heavenly things which God has promised to them that love Him. Even combativeness and destructiveness, once servants of avarice, being killed off as respects the earthly things in the same proportion, become alive to all the heavenly aspirations and love to fight avarice, to fight sin in every form, and enable the new creature to wage a good warfare against the world, the flesh and the adversary.

From this standpoint all the organs of the mind can come into full harmony as they could not all come into harmony from the opposite standpoint. When selfishness was in control, and sought to bring every talent into subordination to itself, there was continually the warfare with conscience and the higher powers; but now, since conscience and the higher powers have acknowledged the headship of the Lord, have enthroned Him as the ruler of the heart, and the lower elements of the nature at first barely restrained from sin are gradually enlisted in the active service of righteousness, the peace and joy and rest and spiritual comfort of that person proportionately increases.

HEAVENLY RICHES vs EARTHLY RICHES

Here we find the full application of our text. We see a heart into which has come the blessing of the Lord not the full blessing, indeed, for that will not be attained until the perfection of the first resurrection, but a great blessing. Do we need to point out in what manner this blessing of the Lord maketh rich the hearts of His consecrated people? This is not necessary, yet it may be expedient to stir up our pure minds by way of remembrance. What greater riches could anyone have in this life than the love and joy and peace of the Holy Spirit, which is the portion of those who have fully and heartily taken the steps we have indicated.

No wonder the apostle said, "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." 1 Tim. 6:17. Such as have passed through the experiences we have delineated can understand the apostle's words rich toward God. Rich in their appreciation of his favor toward them; rich in the appreciation that He is now their Father, because they have heard His voice and have accepted the privilege of adoption into His family; rich in that they have already received the first fruits of His Spirit; rich in that they have already the peace of God which passeth all understanding; rich in that to them pertain the exceeding great and precious promises of the divine word, both for this life and for the future; rich in the sense that the apostle referred to when he said, "All things are yours, for ye are Christ's and Christ is God's."

"He addeth no sorrow with it." There is a hidden suggestion in these words of our text, a suggestion that all other riches than those which come from the Lord have hidden in them a sting of sorrow, of disappointment. And is this not true? Is it not a fact that those who set their hearts on earthly riches, as so many at the present time are doing, are apt, as the apostle says, to be pierced through with many sorrows, whether they gain the riches or fail to gain them. He who thinks that riches can purchase peace and joy and relief from aches of heart and head has not correctly studied the object lessons all about us in the world. "The poor rich," as someone has termed the wealthy, deserve much of our sympathy, for, as the Scriptures declare, proportionately fewer of these are found amongst the saints—"not many great, not many wise, not many learned, not many rich, hath God chosen, but chiefly the poor of this world, rich in faith, to be heirs of the kingdom." God has not chosen the rich generally, because the rich, mastered more by their ambitions, and feeling less their needs, have to a lesser degree responded to the glorious opportunities of faith and obedience, to the extent of a full consecration of heart and head, mind and body, to the Lord, His will, His service.

But on the other hand, the blessing of the Lord which makes rich the heart of His consecrated ones, as we have just observed, adds no sorrow it is unalloyed. This does not imply that the Lord's consecrated ones have no trials or difficulties in life, that all things go smoothly for them. No! Quite to the contrary of this. As our Master's words indicate, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, in Me ye shall have peace." It is this peace of God, this rest in His care, this satisfaction with His plan, this realization of our riches in Christ Jesus that is our satisfying portion, and that protects us as "new creatures" from the sorrows, pains, troubles and difficulties of others. To us, in view of our spiritual relationships and blessings and promises and hopes, all these are "light afflictions but for a moment, working out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

THE RESTORATION OF THE TABERNACLE OF DAVID

Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny, Pa., spoke twice here today in the Auditorium of the Young Men's Christian Association. His afternoon topic was "God's Oathbound Covenant With the Seed of Abraham." The second discourse, on "The Restoration of the Tabernacle of David," follows. His text was: "After these things will I return, and will build again the tabernacle of David which has fallen; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up, that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom My name is called, saith the Lord, Who doeth all these things." Acts 15:16-17.

The Apostle James uttered the words of our text at a general church conference in Jerusalem. The subject of investigation was the course of Paul and Barnabas in preaching the gospel to Gentiles. Many of the brethren felt that this was a serious error a breach of the social proprieties as well as an infraction of the religious proprieties which the Lord had established. For over 1,800 years the natural seed of Abraham had been specially favored of God, and all the promises of the divine word had been to these alone, as the prophet Amos declared, "You only have I known (recognized) of all the families of the earth." (Amos 3:2.) All the other nations, as the Apostle Paul intimates, were left of the Lord without revelation or message or covenant, and were consequently "without God and without hope in the world."—(Eph. 2:12.)

Under these conditions it is not to be wondered at that the Jews had come to feel a religious exclusiveness, and to believe that although the Gentiles were fellow creatures and of the one general Adamic stock with themselves, nevertheless the Lord had made differences, and that, accordingly, to the stock of Israel alone belonged the chief divine favors. The apostle intimates the same thing, saying, "What advantage hath the Jew?" He answers, "Much every way, chiefly because to them were committed the oracles of God."—(Rom. 3:2.) We remember also our Lord's instruction to his disciples at His first advent, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."—(Matt. 10:5-6.)

"TO THE JEW FIRST"

Under all these circumstances we cannot wonder that the early church was disturbed with the thought that God's oath-bound covenant to their nation, as well as His providential dealings with them for eighteen centuries, should now apparently be set aside as though the special hope of Israel were a vain one, no more applicable to them than to others. The investigation of the matter therefore was deemed very important, as lying at the very foundation of all faith in the divine word, and this should not be considered as a proof of narrowness of mind on the part of these, but rather as a proof of loyalty to the Lord and His plan a jealousy for the truth a fear of leaving the old paths and by implication at least denying the foundation of all their hopes.

A somewhat similar question had arisen some years before when Peter, under the direction of a vision, visited Cornelius, the first Gentile convert, preached the gospel to him and his household and baptized them as believers after the Lord had witnessed by the Holy Spirit that they were acceptable and Israelites indeed. At that time Peter's course was criticized, but his full explanation of the Lord's dealings satisfied the brethren. Now, Peter was among the first at the present conference to speak in favor of Paul and Barnabas and their preaching to the Gentiles.

He reminded the conference that a good while before the Lord had indicated a breaking down of the middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles as respects the favors of this gospel age, and had illustrated this in the case of Cornelius and his family. Following this, Paul and Barnabas were permitted to explain their own course and the Lord's leadings, and how the blessing of the Lord came upon the Gentiles who believed, and the wonderful work of grace, and the miracles of healing, etc., wrought through the laying on of the apostles' hands.

Then the Apostle James, who seems to have been the chairman of the convention, arose and indorsed the course of Paul and Barnabas, and called the attention of the conference to a prophecy made by Amos, which constitutes our text. He pointed out the previous experience of Simeon, surnamed Peter, how the Lord first showed His favor to the Gentiles, even to Cornelius and his family through him, and there indicated the divine purpose to be that not only the faithful Jews, but also some from the Gentiles should be selected to constitute the peculiar people of the Lord. The early church, all Jews by birth at first, had already realized that God was passing by their nation as a whole, and was merely taking out of it a remnant, a little flock of Israelites indeed. The Apostle James was now getting a clearer view of the divine intention, namely that this little flock should be composed also in part of faithful Gentiles, begotten by the Holy Spirit and thus constituted spiritual Israelites indeed.

“A PEOPLE FOR HIS NAME”

St. James declared that God was taking from the Gentiles a “people for His name.” This may be understood to signify that as the faithful Israelites were invited to become the bride of Christ, and thus to take the name of the bridegroom, so Gentiles were now to be admitted to the same company, that they also might be sharers of the name of Christ members of the bride, the Lamb's wife. We must remember this thought of a special elect spiritual class being selected from among men, to be the bride and joint heir with Christ in His kingdom was to the Jews, as well as to us, a surprise. It was indeed included in the promises of the Old Testament, but so covered, so hidden, as to be unnoticed until brought to light by the Holy Spirit after Pentecost.

The Apostle Paul, it will be remembered, speaks of this as the “mystery of God (the secret of the divine plan), hidden from past ages and dispensations, but now revealed” because the time had come for the selection of this special or bride class.—(Eph. 3:3-6.) Although the fact of the bride class was kept a secret during the Jewish age, and although it is not very clearly understood by the majority of Christian people even yet, it was stated distinctly in the prophecies as well as in the types. In these types, for instance, we see how Abraham typified God, how Isaac typified our Lord Jesus Christ, and how Rebecca typified the church, related to God only by becoming the bride of Christ, even as Rebecca's relationship to Abraham was through her union with Isaac. Thus it comes about, as the apostle declares, that "if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise"—"heirs of God, joint heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord" our bridegroom. (Gal. 3:29; Rom. 8:17.)

In divine providence the custom of the wife dropping her own name and assuming the name of her husband is universal, and was so guided by providence that the matter might be a type or illustration of how the church loses her own identity and name and assumes those of her husband. Thus in the scriptures the name Christ, which signifies the anointed, while primarily given to our Lord Jesus in His own person, is in a secondary sense applicable to all the church, His bride, His body. This, too, was intimated in the Old Testament prophecies. It reads: "This is the name whereby He shall be called the Lord our righteousness," and again, "This is the name whereby she shall be called The Lord our righteousness."

THE HIDDEN MYSTERY

The early church learned gradually respecting this mystery of the bride class to be joint-heirs with the bridegroom in the kingdom, and they learned gradually, too, that in this bride class the Lord would accept Gentiles of the proper heart attitude to be fellow-heirs and of the same body. After calling this matter to the attention of the conference, the Apostle James proceeded to point out that all this was consistent with the prophecies of the past, one of which he quoted, After these things (in the future, in the end of this age, when the bride class is being chosen), will come the time for the restoration of the nation of Israel to divine favor, and then will follow a general favor to all the Gentiles also. The tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, refers to the family of David, which by divine arrangement was the royal family of the nation of Israel. The last representative of David upon the throne was Zedekiah, and it will be remembered that at the time of his overthrow the Lord's pronouncement was, "Thou profane and wicked prince, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, remove the diadem and take off the crown; this shall not be the same... I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it to him." Ezek. 21:25-26.

The overturning had lasted for over 600 years until our Lord Jesus came, and the disciples had asked Him, "Wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" Should we now expect that as the heir you will at once take your throne and power and re-establish the dominion of Israel, which passed away entirely in the days of Zedekiah? Our Lord's Answer--was that it was not for them to know the times and seasons on the subject that the Father had kept these in His own power and would accomplish them in due course. It was shortly after this that the disciples received the Pentecostal benediction, and under the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit were being gradually taught more and more respecting the divine purpose. The very conference in which the apostles were engaged at this time was a further feature of the divine leading in the matter, showing them that the “mystery” class, the church, the bride of Jesus, was to be composed of select Gentiles as well as select Jews, and not until after this had been accomplished would the kingdom be established and the tabernacle of David, which had fallen down in Zedekiah’s day, be re-established upon better, holier, more solid, foundations.

BLINDED ISRAEL’S STUMBLING

The Apostle Paul brings out the same facts in his epistle to the Romans. In chapters nine and ten he points out to us that the fall of Israel as a nation came through the rejection of Jesus, but that their course was not a surprise to the Lord that He had on the contrary previously foretold the same through the prophets. The apostle quotes several statements of the prophets to this effect that Israel’s table of divine bounties and blessings and promises would become their snare, their trap, and lead to their fall through pride and a feeling of self-sufficiency, which caused them to repudiate the great Life-giver, the way, the truth, the life. In the eleventh chapter the apostle, bringing up the other side of the question, assures the church, composed of Gentiles and Jews, that the nation of Israel, although blinded as respects the divine favors of this gospel age, although blinded as respects the “mystery,” is still beloved of the Lord for the Father’s sake, and that that nation, although blinded and cast aside, is not destroyed and will ultimately be recovered, “saved,” from their blindness, which happened unto them as a nation through their rejection of the Messiah.

3H272

Thus the Apostle Paul in these statements is in full agreement with the Apostle James in our text: The tabernacle of David is to be re-built the Jews as a nation are again to come into divine favor, after the mystery class has been completed, after the elect amongst the Jews and the elect from amongst the Gentiles shall all have been gathered to the number foreordained in the divine plan.

Mark how distinctly the Apostle Paul sets this matter forth. He says: “Blindness in part is happened unto Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles shall have come in” come into the fellowship and joint-heirship with the faithful Israelites as members of the bride of Christ and joint-heirs with Him in the kingdom promised to the seed of Abraham. To leave no doubt on the matter the apostle particularizes, saying, “As ye (Gentiles) in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief; even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief that He might have mercy upon all.” Rom. 11:30-32.

Here is the plain statement that the blessing which is coming to Israel will be God’s mercy exercised through the church after the church shall have been completed and glorified. No special mercy or divine favor or opening of the blind eyes of Israel or turning of them from their blindness to look upon Him whom they have pierced should be expected until the completion and glorification of the church. Whatever they may enjoy in the interim will be so exceptional as to verify this scriptural statement, which indeed has been fully attested by the history of the intervening eighteen centuries. While, therefore, we see with pleasure that the eyes of the Jews are opening to some extent, we have no expectation that this will become general nor that it will lead to a clearness of sight until the appointed time.

DAVID’S THRONE HOW RESTORED

The statement of our text respecting the rebuilding of the house of David, the repair of its ruins, etc., should be understood as figurative; certainly no literal residence of David could be referred to, no literal ruins of his ancient palace. The reference should undoubtedly be understood to signify the throne, or kingdom, of David the ruins in which that kingdom has been for centuries and the re-establishment of that kingdom. Looking back to David and his divine commission as king of Israel, we find that like all the other circumstances of the Jewish age this was typical, and hence when we read that the throne of David was the throne of the Lord’s kingdom we get the thought that the kingdom established in the hand of David was a typical one as the nation over which he ruled was a typical one, and that he himself was a type or figure of the great king who is to be of the house and lineage of David according to the flesh. We see then, that the establishment of Christ in kingdom power in the beginning of the millennial age will be the re-establishment of the kingdom of God, over which David ruled in a small and typical manner. Even in David’s name we see a significance which points us to Christ bridegroom and bride, head and body. David signifies beloved, and assuredly the glorified church, Christ the head and His gospel age faithful followers, the body, are the beloved of the Lord, the antitypical David.

As we have seen on previous occasions, and as we have presented in print in Millennial Dawn, this kingdom of Christ is to be purely a spiritual one, invisible to men, changed from fleshly conditions to spirit conditions. As our Lord declared to the Pharisees, the kingdom of God will be in the midst of mankind, yet none shall say, Lo here! or Lo there! for the kingdom of God cometh not with outward show that men should so recognize it. Luke 17:20.

There is, however, to be an earthly department of the kingdom and this department will be visible to men. Those who will constitute this earthly department of the kingdom and be the visible representatives of it before men will be those ancient worthies of the Abrahamic stock referred to by the apostle in Hebrews 11:39-40. These, the apostle declares, shall receive a share in the divine promise, though not the superior part of it, which has been reserved for the spiritual Israelites of this gospel age, "God having provided some better thing for us (than for them), that they without us should not be made perfect."

The resurrection of these ancient worthies will be to the perfection of human nature, a totally different resurrection from that which is to come to the overcoming class of this gospel age, which will be to a divine nature, invisible to mankind. These resurrected perfect ancients, approved of God, will constitute the earthly representatives of the heavenly and invisible kingdom of Christ, and to these the world of mankind will come for instruction, and through these the divine law and messages of justice and mercy will be communicated to all the families of the earth, as it is written, "Out of Zion (from the kingdom class, the church glorified) shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord (the message of the Lord, the announcement), from Jerusalem."—(Isa. 2:3.)

"THE PROMISE SURE TO BOTH SEEDS"

Thus the earthly plans of the kingdom of God will be in the hands of the Jews, and thus also the earthly features of the Abrahamic covenant will be fulfilled through the members of the natural seed of Abraham, and these as well as the spiritual seed will be used of God to bless first the Jews, the natural seed of Abraham, and subsequently every nation, people, kindred and tongue. Thus the apostle declares that the Abrahamic covenant will be fulfilled through both the natural and the spiritual seeds.—(Rom. 4:16.)

Here we remember the prophetic declaration respecting our Lord: "instead of the fathers shall be the children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth."—(Psa. 45:16.) Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and the holy prophets were continually spoken of by the Jews as the "fathers," and our Lord is spoken of as a son of Abraham and also a son of David; but matters have undergone a great change. He who was the son of Abraham, of David and of Mary, by his great sacrifice not only redeemed the world, but also became the heir of God's great oath-bound covenant and the life-giver for Adam and his race. Whoever of mankind shall be resuscitated, restored, resurrected to life during the millennial age, will receive that life from the Savior, the life-giver; and since every life-giver is a father, it follows that Jesus will be the life-giver or father to all the world of mankind who will accept His favor all outside the little flock of this gospel age called to be His bride, and those who will go into the second death. Thus we see that He will be the father or life-giver of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the prophets; and so, instead of being the fathers of Jesus they will become His children, and during the millennial age they will constitute the earthly representatives of the spiritual, invisible kingdom its agents among men, “princes in all the earth,” exponents of the glorified Christ, bridegroom and bride.

These princes of Jewish stock, according to prophecy, will be clothed with great power. They will be perfect men themselves. Their trial for eternal life having been passed successfully their resurrected bodies will be in every sense of the word complete, as was the original Adam, in the image and likeness of God. Possession of human powers in their perfection then will constitute them in every way superior to the remainder of mankind, and the superiority will be recognized by the world by the Jews first and later by the Gentiles. Their manifestation among the Jews will be after the regathering of many of the faithful Hebrew people to their own land, and when they will be in the midst of a great trouble, antagonized by their Gentile neighbors.

The promise is that the Lord will at that time manifest himself on their behalf, as when he fought for them in the day of battle, in the day of Joshua. The manifestation of divine favor will be so marked as to create a new era in the affairs of Israel; their period of rejection will be passed, their period of favor fully begun, and among the first things connected with this favor will be the opening of the eyes of their understanding that they may look upon Him whom they pierced, and then, as the prophet declares, the Lord will pour upon them the spirit of prayer and of supplication, and forthwith the new covenant blessings will be theirs their sins and iniquities the Lord will remember no more.—(Zech. 12:10.)

ISRAEL'S FAVOR NEARING

The turning of the living generation of Israel from their present condition of blindness is in the scriptures figuratively spoken of by the prophet as a resurrection from the dead, as the apostle declares, “What shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?” (Psa. 11:15.) It will be but the beginning of a revelation to the world of the great goodness of God and His wonderful plan of salvation, which extends His benefits and opportunities to every member of Adam’s race. Hear the various prophecies: One, for instance, represents the other nations as witnessing the prosperity of Israel under the new regime in contrast with the anarchious conditions prevailing in their own territories, and declares that the desire of all nations shall come, and represents the nations as sick of war and perfidy and graft and anarchy, saying: "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths."—(Isa. 2:3.)

This same condition is referred to in our text which, after telling about the setting up of the Davidic throne, declares as a result, "that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord." How grand a time that will be! The scriptures describe it, saying: In His day the millennial day, the day of Christ the righteous shall flourish and evil-doers shall be cut off. Again they declare that the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep. Again they assure us that at that time there will be no need of proclaiming the Lord or saying to one's brother and one's neighbor, know thou the Lord, know thou the Lord, because all shall know Him, from the least to the greatest.

Already signs of the budding of Israel's fig tree are visible; not only in their growing interest in Jesus as the renowned Jew, but also in their longing for Palestine, their old home evidenced in their "Zionist movement." But their blindness will not depart, nor their hopes of national independence be realized until the "little flock" of spiritual Israel shall be completed and glorified; for thus saith the inspired record.—(Rom. 11:25,33.)

The statement of the text, "Upon whom my name is called," is clarified by an examination of the prophecy from which it is quoted (Amos 9:11,12), where it is rendered, "And as all the heathen (nations) which are called by my name." The sense of the expression is, we believe, that in that glorious time the Lord will provide a blessing upon all who heartily and sincerely bear His name all who desire to be children of the great life-giver, and who accordingly hear and obey His voice. All such will be received back into harmony with God as members of the Christ family, as the apostle declares it is the divine purpose eventually to gather together under one head all things both in heaven and in earth. This gospel age accomplishes the unification of the bride and the bridegroom, the millennial age accomplishes the development of the children of Christ on the earthly plane of being.

All these blessings we have just examined were fully combined in the briefly stated oath-bound covenant, "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Another statement of God's favor in this respect was made to Abraham in the words, "I have constituted thee a father of many nations." Abraham was a type of God, and this expression implies that eventually all nations shall have the glorious privilege of becoming sons of God. First, the spiritual seed, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed;" secondly, the natural seed of Abraham, first the princes, and subsequently all of the Jewish race who will come into harmony with God; thirdly, many nations all nations, peoples, kindreds and tongues. These brought to a knowledge of their glorious opportunities during the millennial age, if willing and obedient, will be accepted also as Abraham's seed and as sons of God through Christ. No wonder the apostle in view of these great things of God's plan not only for the salvation of the church of this gospel age, but ultimately for bringing blessing to every nation, people, kindred and tongue exclaimed: "Oh, the depths of the riches both of the knowledge and wisdom of God! How unsearchable are His plans and His ways past finding out! except as they are revealed to us through His word and spirit."—(Rom. 11:33; 1 Cor. 2:10.)

ELSE WERE YOUR CHILDREN UNCLEAN, BUT NOW ARE THEY HOLY, SAID PAUL

Pastor C. T. Russell addressed a large audience yesterday in the Bible House chapel, Allegheny, from the text, "Else were your children unclean; but now are they holy." 1 Cor. 7:14. His discourse in full follows:

For centuries our text has been one of the bulwarks of Calvinistic theology the ground upon which the Westminster confession built its statement differentiating between elect and non-elect infants. It is only of late years that our Presbyterian friends of the Calvinistic school have withdrawn from this position, and now hold, according to their latest statement, that there is no difference in God's sight between the children of believers and any other children dying in infancy. The old expression of the confession that the children of believers only would be saved, giving the inference that all other children would go to torment, has certainly been outgrown and discarded, much to the credit of our Presbyterian brethren and much to the honor of our Creator's government.

But while our Presbyterian friends have changed their views, this text of scripture remains the same and has the same meaning that it ever had. It says not a word about the children of believers going to heaven if they die in infancy, and hence gives no inference to the effect that other infants go to eternal torment at death. Here we see the baneful effect of an error. The unscriptural doctrine that the wages of sin is eternal torment has made to appear inconsistent many of the grand and beautiful teachings of God's word, and the misrepresentation put upon this text and many others, to harmonize them with the eternal torment doctrine, clings to them even after the error has to a large extent been repudiated, so that our Calvinistic friends today know not what to make of these words of the apostles they are confusion to them. To them they still seem to teach eternal torment, and the repudiation of that thought leaves in their minds a doubt respecting the wisdom and inspiration of the apostle who wrote these words. Thus error leads to further error, to confusion and darkness. They surely do class children as clean and unclean, justified and unjustified, on account of their parentage.

Let us look at the text with, so far as possible, our minds freed from all bias and prejudice; let us see in it just what the apostle wrote, no more and no less. He is writing respecting mixed marriages. He is advising the Lord's followers that he who marries does well, but that he who marries not does better, as respects the carrying out of his consecration vows, the giving of his entire being to the service of the Lord. He declares, however, that such a celibate life is not possible to all, and that those who choose to marry shall not be considered thereby trespassing against the divine arrangement, though he forewarned them that the assumption of marital obligations will bring them in some respects increase of trials in the Christian way. In pointing out thus the liberty of the consecrated to marry, the apostle limits the matter with the words, "only in the Lord." He would not be understood as sanctioning the marriage between a believer and an unbeliever between a consecrated and an unconsecrated person. However, he recognized the fact that in his day and at all times it might be expected that some would come into relationship to the Lord who had previously married and who would be thus in union with unbelievers.

CHILDREN OF THE MISMATED

It was for the comfort and instruction of this class of believers, who had unbelieving partners, that the apostle wrote the words of our text. He meant that such should understand that God would count the children as belonging to the believing parent, and as sharers in the blessings of God resting upon believers. The apostle takes for granted that all Christians understand that there is a "curse" resting upon the world a curse or penalty of alienation from God through wicked works, which has been upon the human family ever since the first transgression in Eden the curse or sentence that came upon Father Adam and Mother Eve and which has descended upon all of their posterity. The apostle's preaching was to the effect that Christ had died to relieve mankind of this penalty, this curse, this alienation and separation from divine favor and communion that the rolling away of the curse will come by and by in God's due time, at the establishment of Christ's millennial kingdom, when all the families of the earth will receive a blessing and be brought to a full knowledge of the truth and a full opportunity for return to divine favor and to all that was lost through the original transgression. That meantime during this gospel age God is reckoning His favor to a certain class to a little flock, to the household of faith, and that these enjoy divine favor in advance of mankind in general before the millennial morning dawns, while it is still night, while sin still abounds and evil and trouble and sorrow and weeping.

This blessing, which comes now upon believers through faith in the precious blood of Christ, gives to such certain special privileges not enjoyed by the world. They may consider their sins forgiven; they may count the errors and weaknesses and imperfections of life as not imputed to them when not intentional; they may have fellowship with God and recognize Him as their Father and hear through the scriptures His voice speaking peace through Jesus Christ our Lord, and inviting them to progress from grace to grace, from knowledge to knowledge and from honor to honor, changing and transforming the characters of the obedient until by and by they may attain to all the blessed provisions of the heavenly calling the divine, spiritual nature and joint heirship with Christ in His millennial reign.

The words of our text were addressed to this class. Realizing as they did that a divine sentence rested upon the whole world, and that they themselves had escaped it only by hearing the gospel and accepting its terms, they could see readily enough that where both parents were believers and in fellowship with God, the children of such would naturally and properly inherit this relationship, just as when Adam and Eve got out of harmony with God all of their children inherited their lack of harmony. But now the question that the apostle is discussing is, what about those families in which only one parent belongs to the Lord through justifying faith? What would be the status of the children in such families? Would they be justified children or would they be of the world, unjustified, strangers, aliens, foreigners from God and His blessings and promises?

CHILDREN OF BELIEVERS FAVORED

The apostle's Answer--shows us conclusively the divine mind on this subject, namely that where one of the parents is a child of God his children during the period of their infancy, until such time as they attain a personal, moral responsibility, are counted as justified from all sin, as in relationship with the Lord, as privileged, therefore, with their parents to approach the throne of heavenly grace, to speak of and think of God as their father and themselves as the objects of divine favor. On the contrary the children of unbelievers are, like their parents, out of harmony with God, strangers, aliens, foreigners, children of Adam, under Adamic condemnation and alienation. Such children are, according to the inspired testimony of our text, "unclean" in the same sense that all sinners are unclean in God's sight, unworthy to come into his presence, not subject to special providences of this gospel age, which are exclusively for believers and their families.

It should be borne in mind, however, that while the scriptures clearly indicate that the Lord preserves this attitude of opposition and condemnation against all out of Christ, it does not signify any hatred of the sinners as individuals, but rather the maintenance of the general law of righteousness by which the Lord differentiates between the faithful and the unfaithful, the justified and the unjustified, not with a view to doing injury to the unjustified but the very reverse to the intent that the unjustified may realize their conditions as being without God and having no hope in the world, to the intent that they may "feel after God" and find him, and find Christ whom He has set forth as the way, the truth and the life, and by whom alone there is access to the Father's favor. That God has no unkind sentiments toward unbelievers the scriptures assure us, telling us that it was when we were all sinners that Christ died for the ungodly, and that in Him God manifested divine favor toward the whole world lying in sin and condemnation. They assure us that the time is coming when all of these unbelievers shall receive a great blessing at the Lord's hand through the glorified Christ and the glorified church in the millennial kingdom, and the blessed conditions which will then prevail in the world, scattering all the darkness and superstition and error and misrepresentation and making the entire plan of God clear as the noonday sun, that all may see, that all may accept, that all may be blessed.

It is entirely proper, however, that the Lord should confine the blessings of this gospel age to the believing class, because He seeketh only such as can and will exercise faith and an obedience based on that faith. Whoever has the faith without the obedience is not acceptable to the Lord and will soon find his faith waning, disappearing, because "faith without works is dead." And whoever cannot exercise the faith cannot be of the class which the Lord is now selecting from the world. We are of the opinion that some, through the fall, through heredity, are so constituted that it is impossible for them to come under the conditions of the divine call of this gospel age. Such will find themselves able to walk by sight by and by when the millennial morning has dawned and the Sun of Righteousness shall have arisen, but they cannot walk in the narrow way of this present time without faith, and hence they cannot be the recipients of the opportunities and privileges now being extended to believers.

If all could see clearly how the whole world is unclean in God's sight Adam and all his children and all their children they would see what the scriptures mean by the repeated declaration that we all need to be washed in the blood of the Lamb, washed from our sins, cleansed from our sins through the merit of Christ's sacrificial death the death of the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world. Ultimately it is to take away the sins of the whole world, but not yet. First that blood is applied during this age for the cleansing merely of believers, for those who will exercise faith and strive to be obedient to the Lord; by and by the Lord's gracious arrangements will be open to the whole world, after the believing class shall have been specially favored by the privilege accorded to it. Look now at our text, "Else were your children unclean; but now are they holy" washed, cleansed, justified through the blood of Christ, because their parents, being in this attitude, in this relationship to God, the children are in the same relationship, just as the children of the uncleaned are unclean from the divine standpoint.

ADVANTAGES OF CHILDREN OF BELIEVERS

The apostle clearly intimates that there is a difference, a great difference, between the unclean children of the unclean and the clean children of the justified, the blood washed. What is the difference? We Answer--that unbelievers cannot expect to understand, to appreciate the difference their unbelief, their lack of faith on other subjects, would hinder them also in respect to this one; but those who believe in their own cleansing and who know their own relationship to God can have full confidence that their children also, during the period of infancy, are as much under divine care and protection as themselves. As the parent rejoices in the divine promise that all things shall work together for good for him, he may rejoice in this promise as being applicable also to his children in their earthly affairs. When he rejoices in the divine promise that God will not permit us to be tempted above that we are able, but with the temptation will provide also a way of escape, he may also apply this in reasonable measure to his children, and know the protecting care will give all necessary shielding and assistance to those children. As the believing parent recognizes that "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of them all;" and when he recognizes that these afflictions are often the Lord's methods for bringing him valuable lessons and experiences, so on behalf of his children also he estimates that God in His wisdom and love may permit difficulties and afflictions to come upon them, but with the eye of faith he sees the outcome a blessing.

How many of the Lord's people who were born in this justified or cleansed condition, in our text called "holy," in looking back can see that the good hand of the Lord was over them even in early childhood, and that many of the interests and affairs of life were shaped to their advantage. We do not by this mean that they were born with silver spoons in their mouths, nor that they had more than heart could wish of earthly luxuries; but on the contrary we mean that they can see that the proper, moderate and middle course in which the Lord directed their interests and affairs was probably the most beneficial course for him. They can see how the trials and difficulties of life were so wisely shaped and so skillfully tempered to their conditions that they were helped through the difficulties and trials which otherwise might have turned them to destruction or have discouraged them, or have permitted them to go on in ways that would have led them far from the paths of righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Spirit.

The favor of our Lord mentioned in our text applies specially to this present life. Children dying in infancy without coming to years of discretion, understanding and responsibility, cannot be said to be overcomers of the world of the flesh or of the adversary. They died before reaching years of personal responsibility, either good or bad, and hence they could have no part or lot in the great reward which the Lord has proffered to the church, and on account of which the present testings and trials are given to the church to prove them, to develop character in them, to thus by trials and tribulations work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Children dying in infancy fail of these trials and testings in the school of Christ, and thus evidently fail also to attain the prize, the reward, specially held out to those that only fight a good fight and finish their course, and who, as wise stewards of their talents and bounties, shall be granted an abundant entrance into the glorious things of the millennial kingdom, in joint heirship with their Lord. Hence the children of believers and the children of unbelievers in the resurrection morning will find themselves all well favored of the Lord under the general blessings that will fill the whole earth at that time; and the only advantage that we can suggest that the children of believers would possess would be that there would be fewer of the natural marks of sin in their character, fewer of the stains of sin, less to fight against and overcome when they,

with the remainder of mankind under those favorable conditions, will be started upward on the highway of holiness. We may assume that with the better birth, the result of a better parentage, these would be better prepared for the millennial conditions and make more rapid progress toward human perfection than the unwashed, unclean children of unbelievers.

Thus does the Lord, not only in respect to the present life, but also in respect to the future one, show mercy unto thousands of them that love Him and keep His commandments, and unto many generations, and thus also we see that He has permitted the stain of sin to pass from generation to generation to the third and fourth and many generations of those who hate Him and who have neglected His counsel. While ultimately, therefore, all mankind shall have glorious opportunities, the Lord has placed a special promise, a special reward, upon those who in the present time become His people, and he allows this blessing to extend to their posterity up to the time when they shall have reached years of discretion and individual choice.

This period of personal choice varies with each individual. Some seem to have discerning minds quite early in life say 12 to 15 years of age others develop more slowly and seem not to reach the state of personal accountability until much later in life, while others seem so devoid of sound judgment that we may reasonably question if they attain at all in the present life a personal responsibility, and this latter class, we believe, is by no means a small one. They are still in Adam, his condemnation is still upon them, they have not escaped it, they are still unclean. But when the great High Priest shall have come forth at His second advent to give to the world the blessings secured by His sacrificial death, it will mean not the taking of these to heaven nor the making of them perfect, but it will mean the opening of the eyes of their understanding and the rendering to them of such assistance in mental, moral, physical and religious uplift as they need.

MORAL FREE AGENCY

Respecting the children of believing parents the Lord's providences over them are not to be understood as operating contrary to their wills, but merely as favors by providential dealings and the proper direction of those wills. When years of discretion are reached the child believer can no longer claim for himself the covering of his parent's faith and obedience. His conscience, his reason, as well as the instruction of his parents and teachers, should make this matter clear to the unfolding mind of youth, and the period of individual responsibility looked forward to should be anticipated as a time and opportunity for a full personal consecration to the Lord, to walk in His ways and in fellowship with all those who are walking in the same narrow way of faith and obedience. Thus does the child of a believer pass from its embryo or chrysalis condition to a newness of life, guided by the hopes and promises set before the Lord's people in His word.

True, not every child of the consecrated takes the proper course. Many, alas, attracted by the offers of the world, the flesh and the adversary, find pleasures along those lines and thus slip away from their cleansed or justified condition. Some of these may never return, may become so ensnared by the adversary that they will lose all the faith and hope and make void all the faith and hope, all the precious instruction received in childhood. Such a result to parental labors must necessarily be very discouraging, and seems to be contrary to the accepted law as set forth in the word of the Lord, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." It would be far from our wish to charge believing parents with all the misdemeanors of their children. We leave to the Lord to make clear and plain to all by and by wherein lay the fault in such cases, and why the good promises of His word were not realized. We would be inclined to fear, however, that in the case of such believers false doctrines, or misrepresentations of the divine word had hindered them from leading the godly life and teaching their children the truth, which might have stopped them from taking a wrong course.

Undoubtedly there are nominal believers and true believers those of little faith and those of much faith. It is not for us to attempt a judgment of our fellows, but it is for us as believers to apply to our own hearts the precious promises and consolations of the Lord's word. I say, therefore, to true believers who have works as well as faith, "Be not discouraged. Your work shall be rewarded. Your painstaking training of your children, your prayers on their behalf, your continual endeavor day by day to train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and by word and act to set them the proper example your endeavor even before their birth to favor them by prenatal influences and to manifest toward them the fruits and graces of the Holy Spirit these labors are not in vain. Even should the child for a time prove wayward, trust firmly in the Lord; continue earnest and instant in prayer, and we believe the results will justify your faith and perseverance.

From quite a number have we heard at various times that the thought of the faith and godliness of parents, and of their prayers, had come often to mind, and had frequently influenced them for good more than anything else, and had finally resulted in their full turning to the Lord and full consecration to do His will. Remember, that the Lord deals with them as free moral agents. He always recognizes the freedom of the will. He cannot change this feature of His general dealing on your account or on any account; but He can and evidently frequently does grant to the children of believers such providential care, such disciplines, such experiences as open eyes the more clearly to discern between right and wrong, between justice and injustice, between wisdom and unwisdom, between God and Mammon. Having done your part, leave all the results in the hand of the Lord. Rest assured that He will do all that can properly be done for the highest interests of those you have committed to Him, according to His own arrangement.

WESLEY COMMENDED, BUT NOT IN ALL

Brother Wesley properly stands high in the estimation of all true Christian people, and the movement which he headed and which today is represented by many large and influential Methodist bodies had its excellent features, but one of its prominent teachings has been productive of much distress and misunderstanding on the part of many of the best of Methodists. Nor is this to be wondered at; on the contrary, it would have surprised us had Methodism grasped every feature of divine truth more clearly and cogently.

Each prominent denomination represents, or was intended to represent, some reform movement. Calvinism marked the rebellion of consecrated minds against lax views respecting the sovereignty of God, His wisdom, His power to accomplish His will and His promises. In its zeal it carried many of its propositions to extreme conclusions, yet on the whole it gave strength and tone and character to Christian thought, and these have not fully lost their power to this day, though many of the extremes have been discarded. Similarly, Methodism was a rebellion against certain laxities and perversions of the truth in the day of its origination. Wesley perceived that formalism had taken the place of vital Christianity with the great mass of professing churchdom of his time. He perceived that there was much praying to the Lord with the lips while the heart was far from Him that many who had neither part nor lot in Christ had come to regard themselves as Christians. That time was in many respects like the present, is more and more coming to be everybody was regarded as a Christian who was not a Jew or an infidel. Wesley perceived that the matter of personal consecration was being overlooked, and that membership in a church, attested to by a "christening" in infancy, was deceiving multitudes, who, as a consequence, had a self-satisfied feeling, their religion consisting in an occasional or regular attendance at worship and little more.

It was against such conditions and with a view to awakening thought on the subject, with a view to differentiating between the truly consecrated and the merely nominal professor, that the Wesleyan movement was started. It was admirable in this particular; but it made the mistake of ignoring the fact that among the nominal Christians there were some true ones, and that the children of these true Christians, as our text shows, are justified in God's sight. True, these as compared with the whole are few; and did not deserve all nor even the larger proportion of Wesley's efforts; but they should not have been totally ignored.

The circumstances which called forth the Wesleyan movement directed its energies somewhat at a tangent, teaching that without exception every human being was through the fall a child of wrath and must feel the burden of sin upon his heart and the divine wrath against him, and must repent, go to the altar, or otherwise experience the profoundest revolution in his life, in his heart, in all of his sentiments. Much of this was entirely right as respects the vast majority of humanity except that Brother Wesley, laboring under the delusion that the Bible teaches eternal torment, according to the various misinterpretations of it handed down from the dark ages, preached not that the wrath of God is revealed against all unrighteousness in the sicknesses and sorrows and deaths that are all about us, but preached on the contrary that the wrath of God manifested in the present distresses is not a circumstance to the indescribable eternal torture of the future.

Eliminating this awful, indescribable, God dishonoring teaching of eternal torment, we are ready to indorse much that Brother Wesley taught respecting the alienated condition of sinners, respecting the Creator, and regarding all the features of His gracious plan of salvation. We urge, with Brother Wesley, the only way in which the world can approach God is by faith and repentance and reformation of life and a full consecration of all to Him and His service, and that until these steps be taken no individual can properly be classed as a Christian, or consider himself in any wise related to the Lord because he resides in a so-called Christian land not a bit more than could the heathen residing in a heathen land. The scriptural teaching on the subject is clear, that only by faith and obedience can we become united to the Son, and only through the Son can we have a relationship to the Father.

A METHODIST BROTHER'S DILEMMA

Brother Wesley's extreme view overlooked and ignored the class of people represented in our text the children of believers who were not born "unclean" not born children of wrath, but through the consecrated parent were born in a justified condition or relationship toward God. There are some of this class in the Methodist churches as well as outside of them, and to these certain features of the Wesleyan doctrines they profess have proved to be snares causing great disquiet of mind, sometimes to the extent of utter loss of faith in everything religious. Thus it is with every error, great or small; it is sure to have its baneful effect. It is like so much poison in the family baking.

Not long since, while in a railway train, a Methodist brother, a stranger to me, left another seat and came over and sat down beside me to tell me of a difficulty under which he had labored from the beginning of his Christian experience, but which he had feared to tell to others. He said: "For years I have been a member of the Methodist church and taken an active part in its services, and yet I have never felt what our church teaches should be the experience of everyone who is a Christian I have never had what our people describe as conversion. I never had that feeling of deep sinfulness, nor did I, when I made a consecration to the Lord in the Methodist church, experience the remarkable things which many of our people tell us and which our religious books lead us to believe are the only true marks of a change of heart, of a true conversion, of an acceptance with God. Not having had those ecstatic experiences related by others, I have for years fought against three doubts: (1) Whether or not others were mistaken in what they described; (2) Whether or not I was the one who had failed to get the Lord's blessing and acceptance, or (3) Whether or not the whole matter were not a delusion and Christian experiences largely made up of imaginations according to the various bents of mind. According to the general teachings of our church I am not a Christian at all, because I have not had these ecstatic experiences connected with what our church standards recognize as a true conversion. Now, Brother Russell, what is my real standing as you see it according to the scriptures?"

I questioned the brother first: Did he believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Redeemer? Did he accept, as his ransom price, the sacrifice of our Lord finished on Calvary? Had he repented of sins and, so far as possible, made restitution for any wrong doing? Was he now seeking to live righteously, godly, soberly? His answers to these questions were in the affirmative. I said, "Then, dear brother, you may rest assured that according to the scriptures you are justified in God's sight, your sins are covered with the merit of Christ's righteousness and you are no longer a stranger, alien, foreigner no longer a child of wrath even as others. Now let me ask you. Were your parents believers in the Lord as their Redeemer, and were they, do you think, consecrated to the Lord at the time of your birth, either of them or both of them?"

He answered that they were both truly consecrated believers in the Lord, so far as he was able to judge.

I replied, "Then, my friend, I see the reason why your experiences should be quite different from those of the world in general not so born."

I called his attention to our text and the explanation of it now presented to you, and said to him, "The more you will think over this matter the more you will appreciate the impossibility of your having under such circumstances the same experiences which some others might have. Conversion signifies to turn about, to take an opposite course; but from infancy reared in the nurture and admonition of the Lord by godly parents, your course was undoubtedly directed in the line of righteousness, reverence toward God.

"For you to have turned about or be converted would have meant the reversal of all this, turning to sin and unrighteousness and away from God. You will thus see, dear friend, that conversion was not what you should have expected.

"On the contrary, the man or woman whose life has been that of rebellion against God, or carelessness and disregard of Him and of all obligations to Him and to the principles of His government, such a heart recognizing the Lord, belief and acceptance would mean conversion or turning over, changing about from going after sin and unrighteousness to seeking after and pursuing the Lord and His way. To such a person such a change would indeed mean a reformation in life; but you, who from infancy have been pursuing this proper course with more or less of desire and earnestness, could not expect to experience a mental or moral reformation any more than you could expect a physical one.

DEFECTIVE WESLEYAN DOCTRINE

“The Wesleyan doctrine is defective, dear brother, on this point. It has not only disturbed your mind and hindered you, but others from properly attaining the peace of God which passeth all understanding. What should have been presented to you was this: Born in a justified relationship to God, under His providences you have come to the present time in sympathy with Him and the principles of His government, and desirous of avoiding sin and realizing Christ as your redeemer. Now there is another step for you to take, namely you should realize that, having been bought with a price, you have no right to regard yourself as your own, but should consider that every talent and power that you possess belongs to Him who bought you with His own precious blood. Moreover, your experiences up to this time demonstrate to you the impossibility of pleasing self and pleasing the world and at the same time pleasing the Lord, and you should be ready for the second great step set before us as believers, namely, a full consecration of yourself to the Lord. This should have been set before you, dear brother, long ago. You have been starving for years, and your Christian life has been correspondingly stunted because of the mistake made in your spiritual bill of fare. You should at once heed the apostle’s words, given, not to sinners, aliens, strangers, enemies, but to ”brethren” saying, ‘I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God (the forgiveness of your sins, etc.) that ye present your bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God, your reasonable service’.—(Rom. 12:1.)

Those who under the gospel call have taken the steps which the apostle here outlines pass from what the scriptures term the “household of faith” into what they term membership in the “body.” The “royal priesthood,” who present their own bodies living sacrifices upon the altar of the Lord, and being sanctified, are made acceptable through the precious blood of Christ. Those who never take this step of full consecration to the Lord are not to be of the royal priesthood, are not of the body of Christ, the “elect church,” will not become heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, their Lord, because they do not “suffer with Him” that they may also be “glorified together.”—(Rom. 8:17.)

Very many are in the same condition of mind as was that Methodist brother because, misled by an error, they had failed to grasp, to appreciate the grace of God which had already blessed and favored them and put them upon a different plane of relationship to the Lord from the world in general. I am aware that we are living in a day of general skepticism both in pulpits and in pews, in a day when the words of the apostle in our text are treated lightly by those who, according to their profession of faith, should esteem them very highly indeed as the words of inspiration. We cannot help this so far as the mass of Christendom are concerned, but we can say today, as the Lord said more than 18 centuries ago, “He that hath an ear to hear let him hear.” And, hearing, if he have the heart to obey let him obey.

It is to such as have the hearing of faith and the obedience of heart that the Lord’s blessings and mercies during this gospel age are specially extended. By faithfulness to Him we may become His jewels and, ultimately, at the close of this age, at His second advent, be gathered to Himself “in the day when He comes to make up His jewels.” (Mal. 3:17.) Then will come the great work of this selected, self-sacrificing, polished and prepared company Christ and His followers in the “narrow way.” They are to be God’s missionaries and representatives to the world of mankind during the millennial age, when all the world shall be made to hear the message of divine favor and love and to understand the demands of the divine law; when the willing and obedient shall be assisted step by step up to full perfection of mind and body, until thus eventually the whole world shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God as the waters cover the great deep.

O GIVE THANKS UNTO THE LORD, FOR HIS MERCY
ENDURETH FOREVER

Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny, Pa., spoke twice here today to large audiences. His afternoon discourse was explanatory of the Hebrew and Greek words, Sheol and Hades, rendered Hell in our English Bibles. He declared that the laity generally have a total misconception of the meaning of these words that their use in the original is equivalent to the word tomb, signifying the death state. The text of the morning discourse was: “O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever.” Psa. 139:1. Pastor Russell said:

In accordance with the recommendation of the president of the United States and the governors of the individual states of the union, 75,000,000 of people have celebrated with more or less sincerity a day of thanksgiving to God for the blessings of temporal prosperity enjoyed. A precious sentiment is associated with this custom, inaugurated by the Pilgrim fathers more than a century ago. The influence of the arrangement is certainly in many respects beneficial, drawing the minds of the people toward God as the giver of every good and perfect gift. Nevertheless it is painfully evident that to the great majority this annual observance is but a form, because, explain the matter as we will, only a small proportion are sufficiently well acquainted with the great Creator and His wonderful plan, and the laws which govern His dealings with the children of men, to be able to logically reason out and comprehend their proper causes of thanksgiving. We will enumerate some of the matters which hinder an appreciation of the Lord's providences, and which correspondingly choke and restrain true heart-thankfulness, true gratitude to God. If we, under the Lord's blessing, succeed in removing from the minds of some these obstacles to faith and gratitude, we feel sure that a blessing upon such hearts will follow, for gratitude and thankfulness to the Creator imply appreciation, and the appreciation of that which is good surely tends to the upbuilding of righteousness of character and fuller obedience to the divine standards.

Approximately 1,082,000 deaths occurred in this favored land during the past year, at the rate of seven every two minutes. The kindred and friends of these represent a much larger number, many of whom being ignorant of the nature of their calamities, why they were permitted, are perplexed as well as grief stricken and often the very reverse of thankful. Millions living under the favors and blessings of this land are, nevertheless, physically and mentally ill to such a degree that they cannot and do not feel thankful. Many notwithstanding the bounties of providence lavished upon this land, are in considerable poverty, and not always because of profligacy, wastefulness and indolence. It cannot be wondered at that these appreciate only in part the spirit of the Thanksgiving day.

Another class of unthankful ones enjoy the privileges and blessings of life to a considerable degree, but have awakened from the superstitions of the past, when all were taught that they had great reason for thankfulness to God that they were not burning in eternal torment. Convinced of the unreasonableness, the absurdity of such teachings, these have become skeptical in respect to all matters religious more so than they are generally inclined to declare. From their standpoint they have been either lucky or unlucky during the year past, and have their own energy or the kindness of friends or luck to thank for whatever prosperity they have had; to them there are no thanks due to the Almighty. They know Him not. The eyes of their understanding, while open to the errors of the past, are still closed to the actualities of the divine character and plan.

HELP FOR THE UNTHANKFUL

In the interest of all such unthankful ones, for the assistance of all such to a position where thankfulness will be possible nay, more, genuine and spontaneous let us briefly investigate the true situation from the standpoint of the divine word, the Bible. Let us divest our minds of everything that would prejudice our judgment of its teachings for instance, the various creeds and theories which have been handed down from the dark ages let us set these aside temporarily to examine the word of God. When once its statements are clearly seen we will be the better prepared to compare them with the various statements of the various creeds. The result, we are sure, will be to our benefit, to an increase of our appreciation of the divine character and plan, and to the increase of our thankfulness correspondingly.

We are to remember, however, that full, clear views on these matters, the scriptures explain, can be had only by consecrated believers, whose appreciation of divine things will be quickened and assisted by the Holy Spirit. While others cannot see, in the sense of appreciating the deep things of God fully and distinctly, they can, nevertheless, see in a general way the outward form at least; hence we trust that our remarks on this subject will be applicable not only to the sanctified in Christ Jesus but also to some who have not yet come into this position, but who may be enabled to see more clearly than in the past, and thus be led to sanctification and ultimately to still fuller appreciation from that standpoint, under the guidance of the spirit.

To suppose the whole world of mankind to be children of God, recognized by Him as such and treated from that point of view, is to induce in our minds skepticism. Who can contemplate the calamities of even this year by fire, flood, storms and tempest, and not feel that if God considers mankind His children He certainly deals with them as no kind earthly parent would treat his posterity? The same reasoning would hold true as applied to sickness, sorrow, pain and death. Hence the unscriptural claim held by some respecting the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man evidently disproves itself, at least in respect to the former part of the statement, for we see no evidence of the fatherhood of God as respects our race, nor that He is exercising a parental care for the world's welfare. Not only so, but such experiences have been the lot of mankind for now six thousand years. We cannot ask intelligent people to believe that they are children of the Almighty and receiving not only reasonable parental love and care, but a superabundance of this, to the extent that they should feel especially thankful, unless we can give them the true situation show them the real condition of things as the word of God sets it forth.

Harkening to the word of the Lord we find its declaration to be that only a comparatively few of our race can properly call the Almighty "our Father," or are recognized by Him as children of God. The scriptural testimony is that the great mass of mankind are "children of wrath," under the curse, under the sentence, aliens from God. The apostle in speaking of the matter declares to Christians, "Ye were once children of wrath" even as others still are (Eph. 2:3); and again he declares to these that they have "escaped the condemnation which is on the world," implying that the condemnation still rests upon the world as a whole. 1 Cor. 11:32.

What is this condemnation upon the world? Why are mankind under the curse or sentence, and called "children of wrath?" The Answer--is that all God's work is perfect; that when He had created man in His own image and likeness in Eden, man was perfect and in full harmony with God, and Adam at that time was recognized as a son of God. The scriptural explanation is that he fell from this relationship, from this fellowship; he gave heed to the voice of disobedience and came under the sentence, the curse which made him an alien, which deprived him of his fellowship and was expressed in its ultimate force in the words, "Dying thou shalt die," "Thorns and thistles shall the earth bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for dust thou art and unto dust shall thou return." The Apostle Paul sums up the matter in few words thus, "By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world, and death as a result of sin, and so death passed upon all men because all are sinners." Rom. 5:12.

A RACE OF CONVICTS

From this standpoint we perceive that Adam and his race are a convict race serving out a death sentence, and this accounts to us for the Lord's permission of conditions unfavorable to life, droughts, floods, storms, cyclones, plagues, pestilences, etc. We would not be understood to mean that all these calamities are directly the Lord's work, but rather that the present unsettled and unsatisfactory conditions of nature are permitted of the Lord to be man's experience because of sin and because of the lessons necessary to be learned during this penal period. From this standpoint in view of the fact that all human right to life was long since forfeited we get a new view of the blessings and favors of even the imperfect conditions under which we live.

We must acknowledge that as a race we are not worthy to be called sons of God, nor to be treated as sons should deserve; we must acknowledge that the race as a whole is in rebellion against

God, unworthy of His blessing or any favor from His bounty, and hence every temporary blessing should be esteemed a mercy, an extension of our privileges and prolongation of our condemned lives. It is from this standpoint that we read that the Lord causes His sun to shine and His rain to fall upon the just and the unjust, upon the evil and the good. The great majority of mankind are still in this alien attitude, not sons but sinners, rebels, “not subject to the law of God,” not even desiring fellowship nor seeking to please the Lord to the extent of their ability.

Present conditions, then, are such as are suitable to the majority, and not such as God would be pleased to give to those who, through Christ have been adopted into His family again as sons of a new order a new creation. Furthermore, so far as these are concerned, it is a part of the divine program that their faith shall be tested as well as their obedience, and hence, while the true condition of things is explained to them, they are treated in all general particulars, outwardly, the same as the world in general. Thus a part of their testing is that they must, during the present life, “walk by faith and not by sight.” 2 Cor. 5:7.

Such can give thanks in spirit and in truth, and the hearts of such should and do overflow with gratitude. Their words, their acts, their looks, all testify to the new relationship into which they have entered and to the thankfulness which invades their hearts. To such, earthly blessings are quite secondary; their chief concern is the heavenly treasure, and their prayer is,

*“Oh, may no earth-born cloud arise,
To hide Thee from thy servant’s eyes.”*

Let us glance very briefly at God’s provision for the world of mankind. It is revealed in His word, for the benefit of those who receive the spirit of adoption through faith and obedience, that they may know how to sympathize with the world from the divine standpoint, that they may know how to appreciate the divine dealings with the world, and that they may sorrow not even as others who have no hope in respect to dear ones of earthly relationship whose eyes are still blinded by the god of this world, and who as yet have never seen with the eyes of appreciation and understanding the need of a Savior whom God has provided. Indeed, the majority of them are so blinded that they cannot appreciate the testimony of God’s word respecting their need of a Savior and so great a salvation as is in Him.

ERROR OF THE DARK AGES

The people of God under the blinding influences of the adversary during the dark ages fell into the delusion that all the “children of wrath” were on their way to an eternity of torture, and in proportion as they possessed sympathy and love they were tortured with the thought. We thank God that in the light which is now shining upon His word we can view its teachings in a more reasonable light. We can see, as the prophet declares, that "their fear of me is taught by the precepts of man (Isa. 29:13); we can see that, under the delusion of the adversary, the simplest words were twisted into the story of the awful theory which burdens so many hearts, and which to so large a degree hindered true thankfulness and love toward God for so many centuries. We see the simple words "die," "perish," "destruction," wrested from their true literal meaning and interpreted to mean the very reverse, in support of error, to the further blinding of the Lord's people, and to the destruction of their own rest and comfort and peace and thankfulness.

We rejoice now that in the light of God's word we can see that, although He justly sentenced our race to death and although they are justly treated as convicts, nevertheless God, full of mercy and compassion, provided a great redemption price paid by our Lord Jesus at Calvary. We can see that the mercy of God is applicable only to believers, so that there is none other name given under heaven or amongst men whereby we must be saved but by the name of Jesus. But now we see further that, instead of God's mercy ending with those who now are granted the blessing of the opening of the eyes of their understanding and the ears of their appreciation instead of divine favor ceasing in the selection of the church of this gospel age, it is really only beginning with these, and that, ultimately, the same grace of God which has now brought salvation to us will bring salvation also to every member of our race. We are not in this claiming universal salvation, but we are claiming that the divine program is to give a universal opportunity for salvation to every creature, and that it was to this end that Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man, and that He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. Heb. 2:9, 1 John 2:2.

What a revolution of sentiment toward the Lord comes over our hearts when we get a convincing glance of the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the love of God which passeth all human understanding. Even a glance moves us to appreciation, to gratitude, to thankfulness; and day by day, as we go onward growing in grace and knowledge and love toward God, our appreciation of His wonderful love and wonderful plan increases until it fills more and more every crevice of our hearts, driving out more and more everything contrary to the divine standards.

But some one will say, if God designed ultimately to grant a knowledge of Himself and His plan to every creature, why did He not do this from the first? Why did He allow 4,000 years to elapse before He even sent His Son to be a ransom price for our sins? And why has He allowed nearly 2,000 years since to pass without making known to any but a mere fragment of our race His loving kindness, His tender mercy, His real character, His wonderful plan? Why should we hope that the Lord in the coming age would reveal Himself to all mankind since He has not done so in the present age nor in the previous ages?

We reply that our confidence in the full revelation of God's love and mercy to every creature in the coming age is based not upon speculation but upon the positive statements of the divine word. Time will not permit us to here discuss these momentous subjects in their details. Indeed we cannot hope on such occasions as this to do more than merely attract the attention of those who have eyes to see and ears to hear. Such as are of this class will hunger and thirst, seek and knock, for further instruction respecting the divine plan, and we will be more than pleased to hear from such and to put within their reach full and clear testimonies answering every question and clearing every doubt, which will cause their ears to ring anew with joy and praise and thankfulness to God. Limited in time, we can here throw out only the barest suggestions respecting the opulence of our heavenly Father's plan as it shall ultimately reach the whole world of mankind, and give to every individual of our race a full opportunity for returning to fellowship with God as his Father in spirit and in truth.

“FOR HIS MERCY ENDURETH FOREVER”

The wisdom of this world, unwilling to submit itself fully to divine direction, errs sometimes on one side of the question and sometimes on the other. Few seem willing to take the Lord's own word respecting His purposes at par value. The usual disposition for each one is to measure divine mercy by his own standards instead of by the word. The cruel and merciless think of God on their plane as cruel and merciless, and these have little difficulty with the teachings of the dark ages, that all not favored with a knowledge of the Lord and ability to appreciate righteousness are thereby marked as subjects for eternal torture. Some have even argued that a person who has lived in a civilized community, has heard church bells ring and seen a Bible, has, because of this contact, become so responsible that any deviation on his part from saintliness would promptly and justly merit eternal torture. Others go to the reverse extreme and contend that all must be saved; that God could not rest satisfied with His own work until every human being shall finally attain to glory, honor and immortality. How much better the scriptural proposition than either of these.

The plan of God set forth in the scriptures proposes that none shall be saved in ignorance but that eventually all shall be brought to a knowledge of the truth—" in due time." It proposes that each individual's responsibility shall be only in proportion to his knowledge, and that until he knows clearly and distinctly his responsibility is only partial. It proposes that all shall come to full responsibility each for his own acts; that to the world eventually shall be granted the necessary assistance, that good intentions may be carried forward to a full development of character in accord with the divine standards, and that the reward for such shall be everlasting life and blessedness; but that, on the contrary, all who are brought to a clear appreciation and fully assisted in every necessary way shall be responsible, and if they love sin and follow it willingly they shall die the second death everlasting destruction.

Thus the mercy of the Lord, which is now extended to those who, exercising faith, lay hold upon the Lord Jesus as their redeemer, will by and by through the church glorified, a royal priesthood, be extended to every creature, and shall continue to be exercised until every member of the human family shall have had the full, necessary, proper, reasonable knowledge and opportunity for attaining the gift of God eternal life. Many attack this position and declare that there is no mercy for any beyond the tomb. We are not pleading for mercy for those who have now sinned willfully after they have received a knowledge of the truth, but we are urging that our God in His mercy and love has provided a redemption for every member of the human family, and that those who do not have the opportunity for learning of the grace of God in this life will have such an opportunity during the millennial age by being awakened from the tomb.

As our Lord declared, "All that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and shall come forth. They who have done good (who have passed the divine inspection along the lines of faith in the present life, will come forth) unto a resurrection of life" perfected, glorified; while they that have done evil those who have not come up to the standard of faith and obedience will come forth unto a resurrection by judgments. (R. V.)

MILLENNIAL JUDGMENTS PROMPT

The entire millennial age is set apart for this resurrection by judgments. The judgments of the Lord will be abroad in the earth then and the inhabitants will learn righteousness, as the prophet declares. Every sin will receive its just recompense of reward, and every effort toward righteousness shall receive a blessing, and the effect of such a prompt dispensing of rewards and punishments for all the acts of life will cultivate obedience and be helpful to the whole world. The obedient shall rise up, up, up out of sin-and-death conditions until, by the end of the millennial age, they shall have attained to full perfection of being their raising up or resurrection being completely accomplished through the judgments or disciplines of that millennial period.

On the other hand, those who will refuse to make progress in that time, as the scriptures expressly declare, will be cut off from among the people in the second death. Acts 3:23.

To many it seems beyond belief that God should be thus merciful to the race, and grant to each member of it a full opportunity to benefit from present experiences with sin and death. Such should notice our text, and the entire psalm of which it forms a part. It declares that God's mercy endures forever, and this is 26 times repeated in this psalm, What an assurance God has given us that his mercy is not limited to the present life or to present opportunities and privileges! What an assurance we have of His goodness! He is not only able to save to the uttermost but willing to do so. Not only is this provision open now to whosoever cometh unto the Father by the Son, but we have the assurance that in God's due time, after the little flock, the church, shall have been completed and glorified then all shall come to a knowledge of the truth, and every knee shall bow and every tongue confess, and each and all shall have fullest opportunity of tasting of the mercy of God under the new arrangement of the millennial age, even as all now taste of the sorrow and pain and death which are the curse or penalty of sin.

As we glance down through the different items enumerated by the prophet in this psalm, we find therein food for thought. We read:

“To Him that smote Egypt in their firstborn; for His mercy endureth forever.” “To Him that smote great kings; for His mercy endureth for-ever; and slew famous kings; for His mercy endureth forever.” “Sihon, king of the Amorites; for His mercy endureth forever.” “And Og, the king of the Bashan; for His mercy endureth forever.”

Ah, here we have the key to what otherwise would be a great mystery! The Egyptians, the Amorites, the Amalekites, the Perizzites, etc., slain before Israel, are unexplainable from any other standpoint than the one we are considering, namely, that God's mercy is not limited to the present life, but endureth forever. In God's due time His mercy through Christ shall bring all these from the tomb, and shall enlighten them all through the true light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world. The mercy, still continuing, will make it possible for every member of the race to come back into harmony with the Lord, and to gain eternal life lost in Eden.

GOD'S LOVE CONSTRAINS US

“For His mercy endureth forever,” is, we say, the key explaining all the difficulties and trials of this present life, and assuring us that the lessons learned here shall not be without their meaning in due time. All the world is now learning of God's inflexible justice under His sentence of 6,000 years ago, "Dying thou shalt die." Only the church has yet the ear to hear the message of salvation and reconciliation through the precious blood, but eventually all shall know, from the least even unto the greatest, the mercy of God in and through Christ Jesus and the great High Priest, who has already purchased our race, shall bless and heal and uplift all who have the desire to come unto the Father through Him. O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; His mercy endureth forever!

Nothing in this can be understood as sanctioning a deferring of repentance from sin and turning to righteousness. On the contrary, those who now hear the voice and obey receive the great blessing, the great salvation, the spirit begetting to a new nature which will be perfected in them in the resurrection. This view of God's mercy, extending into the future and reaching every member of the race, shows us divine love co-operating with divine justice for the eradication of evil and sin along reasonable lines. It maintains the standard of righteousness and holiness as the only grounds for eternal life; it puts to the blush the various theories that half converted and unconverted and ignorant and superstitious and savage peoples are to be taken to glory in the present life. This theory also puts to the blush the prevalent purgatorial theory that the world is to be for centuries and centuries in torment until finally it works out its own salvation. On the contrary, this Bible view shows the mercy of God operating along the lines of reason and justice, bringing every creature to a mental and moral responsibility and to a full and complete deliverance, if they will, into all the blessings and privileges and liberties of the children of God.

On the other hand this mercy is not without its limitations, though the common version seems to so imply. The Hebrew word which in our text is rendered forever is "olam," and signifies, not forever, as without end, but more literally to an end to a completion. In this proper rendering our text declares, "His mercy endures to a completion." How grand! How sublime! There will be a completion, and the scriptures tell us that it will be at the conclusion of the millennial age, when Christ shall have put down all insubordination, all sin, and shall have lifted up all willing and desirous of being restored to the divine character and likeness. After stating this the apostle adds, then cometh the end, the completion. Mercy shall have its full opportunity in the thousand years of the millennium, even as justice had its long reign over the world during the 6,000 years of the past.

"Then cometh the end," when all insubordination having been brought under control, the kingdom, the dominion of the world, shall be delivered up to God, the Father. The work of grace begun at Calvary in the great atonement sacrifice will have then been completed by the reign of the Redeemer, for the binding of Satan and the overthrow of evil, and the uplifting of whosoever wills to accept divine favor under the knowledge and opportunities then afforded. Surely, in proportion as we come to know our Heavenly Father's character and plan, in that same proportion can we appreciate all the precious promises of His word. To the consecrated our text has its deepest meaning, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; His mercy endureth forever."

PASTOR RUSSELL LOOKS FOR SUNRISE

Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny addressed a large audience in Van Curber Opera House at 3 o'clock this afternoon. His text was from Isa. 21:11-12, "Watchman, what of the night? The Watchman said, The morning cometh, and also a night." The discourse follows:

For 30 centuries the world, led by the hopes of the Jews, has been looking for and hoping for and thinking about the coming Golden Age, in which all the families of the earth will be blessed with every conceivable prosperity. Nor did the thought originate in the Jewish nation. It came to them through the Divine promise, the oath-bound covenant of God to Abraham, that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed. The hope set before the nation of Israel was that they, as the seed of Abraham, would be God's agency in connection with Messiah for the communication of this blessing to every nation, kindred, people and tongue. Under the stimulus of this hope their nation held together as no other nation ever has done.

Those who accepted Christ, both of the Jews and the Gentiles, lay claim to all those promises which center in Christ and which the Jewish nation, in rejecting Him, cut loose from. Christendom claims to be spiritual Israel, and, as such, heirs of all the wonderful spiritual promises of God, as the Apostle declares, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." This hope inspired the Apostles and all of the early Church.

CHRISTENDOM GONE ASTRAY

No theologian of any denomination will question that so-called Chiliasm hope in the second advent of Christ and the Kingdom which He will then establish was the dominating thought of the Church of Christ in the days of the Apostles, during the time when the New Testament was written. The followers of Christ understood themselves to be entirely separate and distinct from the world, to have different hopes and aims from the remainder of the race, because they were “Children of the Highest,” “begotten again of the Spirit,” “new creatures in Christ Jesus,” to whom old things have passed away and all things have become new through this hope inspired by the Lord’s Word and appreciated through His Spirit.

But very soon, after the death of the Apostles, grievous errors crept in among the Lord’s followers and a new theory on the subject of the Kingdom was started, namely, that instead of waiting for the Lord from heaven to exalt His Church with a glorious change from mortal to immortal conditions and to clothe her with glory, honor and immortality, and equip her with power and authority to execute judgment in the earth, the program was to be a different one that the Apostles had not quite grasped the thought that the Church should understand it to be her mission to convert the world without her Lord, and that when she had accomplished this He would come, inspect her work and approve it.

The mistake was a serious one, and its results have been far-reaching. Under the lead of new teachers, who claimed for themselves apostolic succession and apostolic inspiration, the hope of the second coming of Christ as the world’s deliverer from the thralldom of Satan and sin and death gradually faded and a new teaching took its place and still generally holds it; that the Church must conquer the world before her Lord will come.

“THY KINGDOM COME.”

The theory that the time had come for the Church to cease her suffering and to begin her reign over the kingdoms of the earth would naturally be a pleasing and fascinating theory, and no wonder it gradually enveloped the Church to such an extent that any who still held to the old apostolic views were few and considered behind the times until, finally, when the error became known as orthodoxy and was established by councils of the Church, those who held apostolic teachings on the subject were called heretics. Under the new theory every energy was bent to attaining power over the nations; doctrines were sacrificed to numbers and wealth and influence. The whole world knows of the wonderful success of the effort which today counts the whole civilized world as “Christendom” (Christ’s Kingdom) and ignores the “narrow way” and “little flock” of the Scriptures.

We are not hoping to change these matters as regards the world in general. Our hope is to reach the hearts and understandings of the Lord’s truly consecrated people, for, as the Lord has declared through the prophet, “The wicked shall do wickedly and shall not understand, but the wise shall understand” our Lord’s “little ones” (the humble), who are wise in accepting His word and plan rather than human philosophies and earthly wisdom and policy. Instead, dear friends, of our entertaining a hope of swaying the world in this matter, we realize that it is clearly taught in the Book of Revelation that a great federation of Christendom is very near, and that the Lord will for a time permit it to have sufficient power in the world to stop all progress of the Truth the “faith once delivered to the saints.”

WOULD MEET WITH VIOLENCE

Do you ask why? I Answer--that the public mind is so permeated with error and so committed to its support, and so blinded to the greater beauty and harmony of the divine Word and plan, that, in a fancied zeal for God and His cause, persecutors of the future will, like those of the Dark Ages, verily think themselves to be doing God's service.

Christendom is infatuated with the thought of converting the world. In heathen poetry they read of the Golden Age, and in the Scriptures they read of the glories of the day of Christ, the Millennium, and logically they reason that evil and sin ought not to endure forever, that the Lord has promised that the time shall come when Satan shall be bound, that he shall deceive the nations no more and carried away by this zeal with the erroneous theory that they are now the Kingdom of Christ, and that they are now to reign over the world, and that they are now to conquer the world for Jesus, and that it is the Lord's command upon them to subdue all things and to bring all things into subjection to the Father, they will be ready to go to almost any lengths with any and every thing opposing this theory, which has become so entrenched in their minds.

The glorious day is to dawn, the Scriptures affirm it; but Christendom in general stands with its back to the sunrise and is looking for the Millennial blessings in the West. Hence Christendom in general fails to recognize the streaks of dawn already visible to the watchers who, being in line with the divine Word, are looking toward the East for the sunrise of the great Millennial day, for the revelation of the great Millennial King, for the glorification of the Lamb's Wife at the promised marriage supper.

When preparing this discourse my eye fell upon a tabulation prepared for Sunday School teachers by a celebrated doctor of divinity which was intended to show how rapidly the Lord's Kingdom is now conquering the world. We refer to this as a proof of our assertion that our dear Christian friends, in general misled by the wrong theories on the subject of Christ's kingdom, are looking for the millennial dawning in the wrong direction.

The table mentioned sets forth that in the year 1000 there were 50,000,000 Christians; in A. D. 1500, 100,000,000; in A. D. 1800, 200,000,000, and in A. D. 1880, 415,000,000. The D. D. who prepared this table, and many of those who will examine it, overlook the fact that the 50,000,000 of the year 1000 and the 100,000,000 of the year 1500 were nearly all Roman Catholics or Greek Catholics, and that similarly the 415,000,000 of 1880 were two-thirds Catholics Greek and Roman. This Protestant minister seemingly forgot, and expected his readers to forget, that Protestant missions in France, in Spain, in Italy, in the Orient and elsewhere in the world, are sustained for the avowed purpose of converting Catholics into Protestants.

The realization that no one body of Protestants could ever hope to dominate the world, yea, that all of them could never accomplish such a mission, is leading not only to a desire for Protestant federation, but also to a general recognition of the Roman and Greek Catholic systems. All this inconsistency is the result of the erroneous theory that the Church must conquer the world and establish the millennial condition before Christ comes, and from desire to see the millennium approach along the lines of their expectancy and effort.

FIGURES THAT DO NOT LIE

If our dear friends who entertain this unscriptural view (Catholics and Protestants) could but see its unreasonableness, there would be some hope that some of them at least would abandon it, but they seem blind to reason on this subject.

Take their own figures and look for the 415,000,000 Christians that they say will shortly convert the remaining 1,000,000,000 and establish the millennium. The latest census returns show that the natural increase of mankind the world over during the last decade was 8 per cent, which compounded would mean 115 per cent in the century. Since there is no such pro rata increase of Christianity, the conversion of the world is really farther off every year.

To make my meaning more clear: The largest estimate of the world's population in the year 1805 was that given by Pinkerton, who estimated it at 700,000,000; Volney in the previous year, 1804, gave his estimate as 437,000,000. We grant the larger figures, 700,000,000, and then take the estimate already referred to, made by the D. D., that there were 200,000,000 Christians at that time. Allowing these figures, there were only 500,000,000 heathen needing to be converted in the year 1805, while by the same figures there were over 1,000,000,000 that needed converting in the year 1880. How long will it take to convert the world at this rate? Why cannot the bright minds that are identified with this erroneous theory see the fallacy of it? And seeing its fallacy why do they not promptly turn and confess the truth, and throw their influence toward the re-establishment of the primitive faith of the Church, "the faith once delivered to the saints" by the Lord and his Apostles? that "the morning" cometh only with the second coming of our Lord.

CHRISTENDOM NEEDS CONVERTING

But, dear friends, suppose that facts did not thus knock the entire bottom out of this false theory, this false hope which Christendom is pursuing suppose that there were the best of reasons for believing that the whole 1,600,000,000 of the world's population could be converted some time in the same degree that the 415,000,000 of "Christendom" are now converted what would it mean? Would it mean the millennium which the apostles taught? Would it mean the kingdom for which our Lord taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in Heaven?"

Alas, no! If Christianity ever succeeded in grasping her ideal we see that it would be but an apple of Sodom. Look for a moment at the Christians who compose this 415,000,000. The more you examine them the more you will be convinced that the thing they all need most is to be converted genuinely. It is from this 415,000,000 tabulated as "Christians," that we find the growing lists of murderers, suicides, thieves, boodlers and grafters being recruited.

With a hope of the world's being converted to such conditions we should have no sympathy. Many of the poor heathen are better off left by themselves than brought under such conditions as are farcically called Christendom. We do not praise the heathen none we believe appreciate more than we the great needs of heathendom; but something far better than nominal Christendom has to offer them is needed. With Christendom goes a certain measure of so-called civilization, which in some respects perhaps is advantageous, but in other weighty respects is injurious. Comparing the 1,200,000,000 heathen with the 400,000,000 called Christians we find that, in some particulars, the heathen have quite the advantage. The 400,000,000 nominal Christians do the bulk of the fighting, swearing, liquor drinking and a considerable share of its general dishonesty and stealing. God forbid that we should be forced to accept any such millennium as would be brought about by the conversion of the world to such conditions. We are here reminded of the Lord's words to the Pharisees in His day, "Ye compass sea and land to make a proselyte, and when he is made he is twofold more a child of Gehenna than yourselves."

LOVE FOR MISSION WORK

From infancy I have sympathized with the heathen and longed to help them. I still have this same love and desire, but my eyes of understanding have opened wider since childhood days. I now perceive that God loves the heathen and the whole world not only as much as I do, but more. I have heard his message saying, "As the heavens are higher than the earth so are My ways higher than your ways and My plans higher than your plans," and I have come to realize the truth of this, and see the great plan which God has for the salvation of the world.

This plan I now see is first of all the selection from the world of suitable missionaries. Jesus is the head of this missionary company, and during this gospel age the Holy Spirit has been attracting under the terms of the gospel, along the lines of the "narrow way" of self-denial and self-sacrifice, those whom the Lord is pleased to associate with himself as His Church, His bride, in the great missionary enterprise which he purposed from before the foundation of the world.

These missionaries receive their training under the present reign of sin and death, but as soon as the entire company graduates the scene will change; they will be invested with divine power and authority, and will scatter the present night of sin and death and constitute the Sun of Righteousness which shall heal the world with its benign beams. (Mal. 4:2). This is the glorious morning mentioned in our text the morning of the grand millennial age, the golden age of the poets, the day of Christ, in the language of the apostles. The Psalmist declares, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning," and our hearts are glad because we see the dawning of the millennial day already beginning, and note the fleeing shadows of the dark night of ignorance, superstition, sin and death.

This glorious day is coming, not by the conversion of the world under present conditions, not by calling the kingdoms of this world the Kingdom of Christ, not by calling all classes living in civilized lands "saints of the Most High God." The morning is dawning because the Lord's time has come for the second advent for the establishment of the kingdom for which we pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven"--because the time of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began are about to begin. I cannot here and now give you the proofs that we are already chronologically entering this great day of the Lord, but the proofs are abundant and clear, and for the asking may be had to read by any of you.

Pastor C. T. Russell Discusses The Day

Pastor C. T. Russell addressed his home congregation yesterday in Bible House Chapel, Allegheny, at 3 p. m. His text was, "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, Father Everlasting, the Prince of Peace." Isa. 9:6. During his remarks he said:

It matters little to us that Christmas Day is not the true anniversary of our Redeemer's birth that the true date of that event was about September 25. It is the great event, and not the date that we commemorate. Indeed, in this respect our Christmas date is most appropriate, since it marks a date nine months previous to the proper date of our Lord's birth. It, therefore, marks the time of His conception, or what is known among Episcopalians as "Lady's Day," or the time of the annunciation referred to in Luke 1:31-35.

When thinking of our Redeemer eight prominent features of our Lord's work comes before our minds, the first of these being the one whose date is most appropriately marked by this day, namely, our Lord's leaving the heavenly glory the inception of His earthly existence, His begetting in the womb of the Virgin Mary. The second was His birth; the third His reaching of manhood's estate at 30 years, where he made His consecration to death and received the begetting of the holy spirit. The fourth point was His death, the fifth His resurrection, the sixth His ascension, the seventh His second coming, while the eighth and final feature will be the grand consummation of the entire plan of God respecting human redemption, when our Lord at the close of His millennial reign shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father. Well, therefore, may we to-day celebrate all these great blessings coming to humanity through Jesus by the Heavenly Father's grace.

Our text to a considerable degree grasps the entire situation as we have outlined it. Our Lord was a Son given by the Heavenly Father nine months before He was the child born in the manger at Bethlehem. It was because He was thus from above, and not in the ordinary sense a member of Adam's race, that the Scriptures declare that He was holy, harmless, separate from sinners. It was by reason of this purity, freedom from any share in the fall or any condemnation, that He was fit to be man's Redeemer, and by virtue of this fitness became in His death, as the Apostle expresses, "A ransom for all, to be testified in due time."-2 Tim. 2:6.

In our text the Apostle omits entirely the connection between the wonderful child and the wonderful blessing and glory to be dispensed through Him. But other Scriptures fully inform us respecting the sufferings of Christ, and how these were necessary for our redemption. They explain that Adam's race was all justly under condemnation of death, and that all of the pain and sorrow and trouble are incidental parts of that death sentence, called in the Scriptures the "curse." They explain that under the divine arrangement it was necessary that the penalty against us should be met, that no member of the human race could give to God a ransom for his brother, and that hence God in mercy evidenced His love and compassion, the Son co-operating, when he laid upon Him the iniquity of us all, providing Him as the sacrifice for our sins, by whose stripes we are healed. They explain to us that our Lord's death was a "propitiation for our sins (the Church's sins), and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John 2:2.) They explain to us that it was necessary in the divine plan that our Lord should not only redeem us, but by His own experience be touched with our infirmities, and thus be made fully competent to enter sympathetically into man's trials and difficulties, to the intent that by and by, when His kingdom shall be established, He may be a merciful and faithful high priest, full of compassion, and both able and willing to assist all that are out of the way, to bring back into harmony with God whosoever shall will so to come.

All the blessings promised therein in the only gospel story set forth in the Bible, all the hopes contained therein, are based upon the great work of Jesus as the mediator, the sin-bearer. This work applies first to His elect Church of the gospel age, and secondly to the world of mankind, the blessing of whom awaits the completion of the Church and its glorification with Christ. Then with His associates in the kingdom, His bride, He will bestow the blessing of restitution upon all the families of the earth all willing to accept the same on God's terms of obedience.

Very generally throughout the Scriptures this gospel age is apparently passed over or ignored. Thus the Apostle says that the prophets of old "spoke of the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow." The secret of this lies in what the Apostle calls the "mystery" that the Church of this gospel age, the "little flock," is reckoned in as the "body of Christ." Hence the sufferings and death of our Savior, Jesus, but also the sufferings and trials and death of every member of the elect little flock, the "Church" which is His body. (Eph. 1:22,23.) With the completion of these sufferings of the head, Jesus, and the Church, His body will come the glory made so prominent throughout all the Scriptures the "glory that should follow" the kingdom glory, the millennial glory, the blessings of all the families of the earth when our Lord, the Redeemer, shall be the great King over all, and the Church, as His bride, or, under another figure, His body, shall be associated with Him as the seed of Abraham in conferring the promised blessing upon all mankind. Gal. 3:16, 29.

THE GOVERNMENT OF CHRIST

Our text declares of Messiah, "the Government shall be upon His shoulder." This figure of speech is common to-day, as we sometimes say that the entire responsibility rests upon the shoulders of such a manager or workman or Emperor. Not upon the shoulders of the child Jesus did the governmental authority rest, nor upon the shoulders of the man, Christ Jesus, who was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. Not until He had “finished the work which the Father gave Him to do,” not until then was the government placed upon His shoulders. It was after our Lord’s resurrection that He declared, “All power is given Me in heaven and in earth.” Matt. 28:18.

Even then, although our Lord was raised from the dead to glory, honor and immortality, the Father’s time had not arrived for the exercise of His kingly authority, and hence He has delayed to use it. The delay is to permit the selection of “the Church, which is His body,” and which is to be associated with Him in the exercise of His authority and dominion in the uplift of humanity. When the last member of the Church shall have been tested, polished, tried, accepted and glorified with the Lord, then the time will have come referred to in our Lord’s last message to the Church the time when he shall take unto Himself His great power and reign. This time is noted as coming under sounding of the seventh trumpet, and we are informed that the first result so far as the world shall be concerned will be a great time of trouble. The prophetic language of Revelations declares, “The nations were angry, and Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that Thou shouldst give reward unto Thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear Thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them that corrupt the earth.” (Rev. 11:18.) In this brief statement the whole work of the millennial age is summed up, and this must be borne in mind if we would avoid confusion of thought.

SATAN, THE PRINCE OF THIS WORLD

The scriptural expressions “this world” and the “world to come” are more frequently misunderstood than if they were more correctly translated “this age” and the “age to come.” Nothing is more evident to intelligent Christian minds than the truthfulness of the words of our Lord and the apostles to the effect that Satan is the prince of this world, who now worketh in the hearts of the children of dis-obedience. These, being more numerous than the children of obedience, thus have the general control. Hence it is that the Apostle speaks of this present age or dispensation as “this present evil world,” or age or epoch. The common fallacy that Jesus is now reigning is too absurd for serious discussion with reasonable people. If what we have today is the reign of Christ the best government which our Lord Jesus could effect in the world we are sadly disappointed. If what we have today is what our Lord taught us to pray for and to expect—“Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven” then of all men Christians are the worst deceived and disappointed.

Present conditions do not represent the reign of Christ and His kingdom, but the very reverse. They represent the reign of the prince of this world, and it is a comfort to our hearts to realize this and to look forward to the early completion of the church for the introduction of the real reign of Messiah, when all sin, all evil, all ignorance, superstition and error shall be overthrown, when the true light shall lighten every man, when the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth, when the kingdom shall be the Lord's and He shall be "the Governor amongst the nations." Psa. 22:28.

Thank God for this blessed hope and for the light from His word, which enable us to understand why the things promised have been so long delayed. In the end we shall see the wisdom of the divine plan in permitting evil to have its temporary triumph in permitting the world to taste of the exceeding sinfulness of sin and the bitterness of its rewards of permitting the Church to receive her trials and testings, polishings and preparations for the kingdom conditions by contact with the world, the flesh and the devil, and the wicked spirits in exalted positions. Eph. 6:12.

EVERY KNEE MUST BOW

With joyful anticipation the Lord's people can look forward to the blessed reign of Messiah, which the Scriptures intimate will be very speedily introduced. Even though they perceive from the Scriptures that God will permit the wrath of man to praise Him, will permit sin and selfishness working through capital and labor to bring upon the world a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation, nevertheless they see beyond that dark cloud the glorious sunlight of the millennial kingdom, and the blessings of the better government which the Lord is about to establish upon the ruins of present institutions, which human selfishness is rapidly overwhelming. The glory that shall follow will more than compensate for all the trials and clouds and difficulties and sorrows of the few days full of trouble which each member of the race now experiences. And as for the Church, we have the divine assurance that from the standpoint of the future, looking back, the overcomers will be able to realize more fully than they now do that the present afflictions are light, and, as it were, momentary, working out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory in the kingdom. These are even now by faith enabled to sing with the poet

*"How light our trials then will seem!
How short our pilgrim way!
The light of earth a fitful dream,
Dispelled by dawning day!"*

The result or effect of the coming kingdom, the government upon the shoulders of God's anointed, is prophetically declared—"Unto Me every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God." There will be an enforced obedience at the beginning of the millennial age; just punishment will follow every willful infraction of the divine law and that speedily. The effect will be an early cessation of sin, a bowing of every knee and the confessing of every tongue. The Gospel

Church, now walking in the narrow way in the light of the Bible, as a lamp upon the pathway, walks by faith; but the world in the coming millennial age, lighted by the great Sun of Righteousness, the glorified Church, head and body, will walk by sight.

The judgments of the Lord, rewarding well-doing and punishing wrongdoing, will be abroad in the earth; every transgression shall receive a just recompense of reward, and every good deed and noble aspiration will receive encouragement and blessing. Describing the effect of this the prophet declares: "When the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness. Isa. 26:9.

It will not, however, be sufficient that men shall obey the divine law under compulsion that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess. The Lord seeketh such to worship Him as worship Him in spirit and in truth from the heart; and hence the Scriptures point out to us that before the close of the millennial age there will be a testing of those who bow the knee and confess with the tongue a testing that will prove whether or not they have come into heart accord with the Lord and his reign of righteousness; and all that by that time shall not have come into heart obedience will be accounted unworthy to go further, unworthy to enjoy more of the Lord's blessings. They shall not be permitted to go beyond the millennial age into the everlasting eternity of blessing, but shall be cut off in the second death. Acts 3:23.

WONDERFUL, COUNSELOR, ALMIGHTY GOD

Already the Lord's consecrated people are able to appreciate some of these titles which belong to their Redeemer, and ultimately the whole world shall realize their appropriateness. Believers, from the time they receive the begetting of the Holy Spirit, come more and more to a realization of their Redeemer's character. He becomes to them more and more wonderful, more and more is He their Counselor and Guide and Teacher, and more and more do they appreciate Him as the Mighty One whom the Father hath set forth not only to be the propitiation of sins, but the great Reconciler of the world, in due time. From the Apostle's standpoint the instructed people of God are able to say, "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him." (1 Cor. 8:6.) They do not confound the Father with the Son by saying that the Father is His own Son, nor that the Son is His own Father, nor that the two are one in person. They learn not to lean to their own understanding nor to human teachings, but to accept and believe those things written in the Scriptures as they are written. Thus they see Jesus glorified, a glory "far above angels, principalities and powers, and every name that is named,” but they also see what the Scriptures everywhere set forth, namely, that our Lord Jesus as a God whom all men should honor even as they honor the Father is not the Father, not the God; and when He shall have accomplished the work which the Father hath given Him to do He will, at the close of the millennial age, deliver up the kingdom of God, even the Father, by whose power and authority all evil shall be subdued. (Eph. 1:21; John 5:23; 1 Cor. 15:24.) To this agree the words of the Apostle again, “The head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God.” 1 Cor. 11:3.

THE FATHER EVERLASTING

Nothing in this statement implies that the child born and the son given is to take the place and the honor of the Father in heaven, of whom Jesus our Lord declared, “I ascend to my Father and to your Father, to my God and to your God.” (John 20:17.) This title, “The Father Everlasting,” appropriately marks one feature of our great Redeemer’s work. He is to be a Father without in any sense of the word interfering with or conflicting with the heavenly Father and His work. The Scriptures point out to us that the first man (Adam) was appointed to be the head or father or life giver to his race, but that through disobedience he failed, and, instead of giving everlasting life to his posterity, he bequeathed us a share in his own sentence, “Dying thou shalt die.” Our Lord Jesus, by the sacrifice of Himself, redeemed Father Adam, and thus redeemed every member of his posterity, all of whom shared his original death sentence. The Scriptures point out that our Lord’s payment of Adam’s penalty was to the intent that he might release Adam and all his children from the curse of that death sentence, that he might become the Father or Life Giver to Adam and all of his race, to so many of them as would accept life eternal through Him on the divine conditions hearty obedience.

This title, “Father Everlasting,” is still a prophetic one, for nowhere is Christ represented as being the Father of the Church, his “Bride,” otherwise called his “brethren.” On the other hand the Apostle declares that the “God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ hath begotten us.” Hence, it is that we are children of God and that our Lord Jesus Christ is our elder brother, otherwise our “Bridegroom.” His office of Father Everlasting will be toward the world of mankind in the next age, during the millennium. All who would come back into harmony with God must be regenerated, must receive from Christ their share in the life which He secured for them by His own death as substitute for Father Adam. This is the strict meaning of the word Savior life giver. Every father is a life giver, and so our Lord Jesus in giving life to the world during the millennial age will be assuming toward mankind in general the office of a father, and the life which He will give to all those who will obey Him will be everlasting life, and hence He will be the “Father Everlasting.” On the other hand, whosoever will reject His favors and mercies cannot have the life, cannot become His children, and will be destroyed in the second death. What a grand meaning! What a great hope for the world in general is in this title prophetically given to our Master Father Everlasting!

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

The title Prince of Peace as applicable to our Lord is still prophetic. He is not yet the Prince of Peace; He cannot be the Prince of Peace until, first of all, He shall have conquered and brought into subjection sin and sinners. Hence, respecting the inauguration of the Master’s kingdom, it is declared that in righteousness He shall judge and make war. Again, it is declared that the kingdoms of this world shall be broken in pieces as a potter’s vessel at the inauguration of His reign. There is nothing peaceful in such procedures. The title Prince of Peace comes after evil shall have been subjugated, and properly so. Who could think of the Lord inaugurating a reign of peace while sin is still rampant! The declaration is “He shall make wars to cease unto the ends of the earth.” Then He will forever after be the Prince of Peace, peace upon a stable foundation, upon the foundation of righteousness, for the scepter of righteousness is the scepter of His kingdom.

Dear brethren and sisters, our interest in these great matters is untellable in proportion as we have had the eyes of our understanding opened to an appreciation of the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the divine character. Let us each rejoice in so much of this plan as he is able to discern, and seek and pray for a still fuller opening of the eyes of our understanding. Enlightenment comes to all in proportion as we are willing and obedient. The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land, not only in the future, but also by faith in the present time. While at this season we call to mind specially God’s great gift, His Son and all the blessings associated with Him, and, while dispensing to those we love and esteem little remembrances, let us specially call to mind our consecration to be followers of God’s dear Son. We have given ourselves to Him; let us see to it that we are holding nothing back.

We have but a trifle to give at very most, a trifle which would be utterly unworthy of acceptance on other conditions than those He has arranged through the merit of our Redeemer’s sacrifice. Seeing that the Lord is calling upon us to pass through present experiences, to overcome present trials and difficulties and weaknesses with a view to our own blessing, to our own exaltation, to our own glorification with Christ as associates in the kingdom that shall bless the world, let us give more and more diligence to make our calling and election sure, that we may ultimately attain this great prize of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

SOLOMON'S WORDS ARE USED AS TEXT

Pastor C. T. Russell was with his home congregation yesterday afternoon at 3 p. m. at Bible House Chapel, Allegheny, and preached from the words of King Solomon, "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom." (Prov. 4:7.) A large congregation gave closest attention to his discourse, which follows:

Wisdom is defined to be (1) the power of discerning what is true and right, what is conducive to the highest interests. (2) Conformity, so far as one's own conduct is concerned, to the course of action dictated by such a discernment. The world-famed Gough summed up wisdom in these words: "Wisdom is knowledge made our own and properly applied."

The best-intentioned people find continually, under the pressure of their own weaknesses and the temptations which surround mankind, that they are inclined to slip away from the noble standards and sentiments of their hearts. Experience demonstrates, too, that all need frequently to look about them and to compare present attainments with the past to find their bearings, to note whether or not they are making progress or retrograding. Our advice to all consecrated Christians is that such introspection be taken nightly before we retire to rest that each day's progress be noted and that fresh resolutions be presented evening and morning at the throne of grace to be practiced to the extent of our ability daily. We advise, also, a special examination of our accounts with the Lord and of our conditions weekly.

But, notwithstanding these close examinations and reckonings, we believe that the majority of Christians, as also of worldly people, will receive a blessing in connection with the turning of the leaf at each New Year. It is a favorable opportunity for the summing up of the past year's progress. As bankers and merchants not only keep daily accounts of their business, but at this season of the year balance their accounts, more particularly ascertaining profits and losses, so should the Lord's people take advantage of the closing of one year and the opening of another to strike a balance in their spiritual accounts and ascertain definitely the exact amount of their spiritual gains. I sincerely hope that none of those whom I address will, under the most rigid examination, find spiritual loss. But whether the results show for loss or for gain it will be to our advantage to strike the balance and to know exactly where we stand and the net results of the course we have pursued during the year just ended.

BUSINESS ACCOUNTS BALANCED

Business men do not strike the balances of their accounts for the purpose of discouraging themselves in business, but to the intent that if profit has been made they may be encouraged and if losses have been incurred they may ascertain the point of weakness and loss and remedy the defect, so that the coming year shall be the more satisfactory, and this should specially be the case with the Lord's people. Indeed, under the special arrangement which the Lord has made with those who are His in Christ Jesus absolute discouragements are impossible, wrong, unjustified, no matter how poor the showing of the past may be, unless it be found that the little progress or retrogression was the result of willfulness either in wrong doing or in neglect of privileges or opportunities for well doing and growth in grace and knowledge. Of course, full, deliberate, willful, intentional wrong doing on the part of the Lord's people must be regarded as carrying with it divine displeasure and chastisement of some kind.

On the other hand, however, I trust that none of us, looking backward over the past year, finds willful shortcomings. If he shall find that his failures and little progress were the result of the lack of fortitude, lack of character, he may well feel grieved; but, resolving that henceforth he will be more careful to add to his faith fortitude, he may go to the great Mediator, whose sacrifice is the basis of our reconciliation with the Father and the forgiveness of all our sins, and, acknowledging his frailties, he may obtain mercy and find grace to help for future times of need. (Heb. 4:16.) None who are in the right attitude of mind on this subject will be perfectly satisfied with the attainment of the past year. For however good may have been our intentions, however pure, noble, just, true nevertheless, because we are members of the fallen race, because we have the treasure of the new mind, the new heart, in earthen vessels which are imperfect, we discern in ourselves much that is not to our own pleasured, and we may be sure, therefore, we are far from the perfection standard set before us in the scriptures.

WISDOM OUR WATCHWORD

But while, the eyes of our understanding opening wider daily and hourly, we discern the divine character in clearer lines and discern our own blemishes more perspicuously, nevertheless the eye of faith sees with the greater clearness also that a fair atonement was made by our Redeemer, not only for our share in the original sin, but also for our unintentional weaknesses, which result from our relationship to Adam and the fall. Thus the Lord's people may have a hope and joy and confidence toward him which others cannot realize which is not applicable to others which they can only obtain by coming to the heavenly Father in the appointed way, through faith in the redemption work of the Son.

Let us, then dear friends, at the opening of the new year, take Wisdom as our watch-word and daily at the throne of grace make fresh resolutions for wise endeavors which we will seek to put into practice daily in all the affairs of life. Let us see what a blessing we shall secure from thus giving heed to the divine Word, which informs us that “Wisdom’s ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace” (Prov. 3:17), and in our text declares, “Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom.”

But the word wisdom takes on a variety of shades as it passes through the lenses of different minds and hence it behooves us as the Lord’s people to make no mistake to get the right kind of wisdom to find the wisdom referred to in our text and to clearly distinguish between it and other wisdoms, which the Scriptures tell us are only foolishness. It is the Apostle Paul who explains that the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God and that likewise the wisdom which God inculcates is often esteemed foolishness by the worldly wise.

THE WISDOM OF THIS WORLD

To illustrate: One class of these worldly wise men say to us by their actions, which speak louder than words—“ Money is the principal thing, therefore with all your getting get money, for with it you can have all things and without it you can have nothing.” Of course, there is a certain amount of logic in this reasoning, else it would not appeal to so large a number of people as being the voice of wisdom directing to the proper course in life. Nevertheless, many of those thus taught after a few years have demonstrated by their own course the fallacy, the unwisdom of their proposition. There are things which money cannot buy and which the pursuit of money is almost sure to drive away. One of these is health, another peace of mind, another joy, another a restful conscience, another the knowledge of God, another growth in grace, another fellowship with the Father, the Lord Jesus and the brethren, another hope toward God in respect to the heavenly inheritance which he has promised to those who love him supremely better than they love houses or lands or money or any other thing or being.

Another class of the worldly wise, and these are usually the children of wealth though sometimes merely “spongers” who, like parasites, live off the energy of others tell us that true wisdom is the pursuit of pleasure, in field games, theatricals, cards, checkers, chess, dominoes, etc., or mental revelries in novel reading. The gratification found in these they tell us is their happiness, their joy, and that they know of no greater wisdom than to daily endeavor to gratify these tastes and appetites. We Answer--that they are making a mistake, that they are deceiving themselves; that if they will analyze their own feelings they will perceive that they are not really enjoying life, but are using their mental activities in the endeavor to find enjoyment in life. They engage their minds in stories so as to prevent their thoughts from dealing with more important matters; they are seeking to escape responsibilities, and to live as it were in a dream; their lives are neither profitable to themselves nor to others. They are surely not wise, for even supposing that their amusements and entertainments are absolutely devoid of bad influence upon others, amusements certainly do nothing to the betterment of themselves, for the present or future life, nor yet for the uplift and blessing of others.

Still another class of worldly wise tell us that from their viewpoint all the world is a stage and men and women are but actors on it, and that the play of life is a show and to a considerable degree a farce, a make-believe. Acting upon their theory of wisdom the principal thing in life is to make a good show in dress, in equipage, in the home everywhere to put on a gloss to the intent that their real heart condition and their real financial condition may not be discerned by their neighbors. This pride of life, this living for show, this stage life in which tinsel is worn as make-believe for gold, is not true wisdom. Not only will it end in bitter disappointment at the close of life, when all the masks will come off, but it is not a satisfying portion even when most successful. The heart requires something more than this. Man, made in the image and likeness of God has retained a measure of that likeness, notwithstanding the fall and the incidental degeneracy, so that shams, hypocrisies and make-believes cannot bring true happiness or contentment of heart.

SCIENTIFIC WISDOM LACKING

Another class of worldly wise tell us that science and philosophy are the only things worthy of the noblest minds and intellects. They tell us that the word science signifies that which is true and that the special aim of scientists is to help their fellow men by uncovering the truth, by getting rid of all the ignorance and deceptions that surround various matters and things and thus bring truth to the fore. They tell us that thus the scientists are the real teachers of the world. They tell us that philosophy signifies the love of wisdom, which leads to search for it, and that in the last analysis they are really the wise men of the world who make it their business to help other men to wisdom along all the pathways of life, in matters financial and social, mental, moral and natural science.

At last we seem to find in this profession what we are seeking, true wisdom with noble objects before it. We commend their love of truth and their desire to rid themselves of all superstition and error and we pause to examine the practical working of this wisdom and to note the blessings it brings to these philosophers. Our examination disappoints us; the philosophers are not happy. Like some of the others they are seeking pleasure, seeking happiness in their pursuit of wisdom, and that pursuit is a more noble one, but they do not find happiness in it. They lack the joy, the peace, the heart experiences which are the essence of happiness. Along various paths these philosophers go and the methods of the geologists and biologists will represent all of this class.

The geologist with his hammer, his tubes, his glasses, etc., chips and examines the rocks and philosophizes as to how long ago they were formed, the method of their formation, the probable conditions of the earth at that time, etc., etc., etc. He reaches a fanciful conclusion and takes a measure of pleasure in presenting his deductions to fellow scientists, but they all know that he does not know, that he is merely guessing at findings that neither satisfy his own heart nor can give satisfaction on such a subject to his fellow scientists.

The biologist studies the human anatomy and the anatomy of the largest animals with a view of tracing how men came from a monkey, and how the monkey came from some lower order of creature, and what arguments can be set forth to demonstrate that the lowest form of living creature was originally the highest form and how all others had been evolved therefrom. As a Darwinian he presents his arguments and theories to his associates and to the world. He plumes himself on the logic of his theory, and for a few short years has a place amongst his worldly-wise associates, a little later on to be branded as a back number in the light of some other theories and facts which some other biologist shall have conceived and set forth.

When listening to each other these philosophers are incredulous; past failures, past errors convince them that in all probability their own and each other's theories are erroneous. They know that they do not know, but they fain would have the public believe that they do know, that theories are scientific true. Their experiences, their uncertainties, lead them to doubt along all lines; hence these philosophers are generally unbelievers as respects God and his revelation, the Bible. They usually acknowledge themselves to be agnostics, and many of them proudly boast of their agnosticism, which merely means, we do not know, we would like to know, we are not satisfied, we have never found anything which does satisfy either our heads or our hearts. Truly this is not the wisdom which the Lord's word in our text advises us by all means to secure.

THE WISDOM FROM ABOVE

Let us now turn from these worldly wise men and their instruction that we may hearken to the voice of the Lord our God, which tells us that true wisdom comes from above. And what is more reasonable than this? Knowing so little of ourselves, why should we not expect to be informed, to be taught, to be instructed in the true wisdom by our Creator. As the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, our Lord should be the foundation of wisdom, and we should anticipate that from this foundation alone should come the sweet satisfaction and blessing which all hearts crave.

The Bible has a very terse manner of presenting divine instruction on this subject; its information is given in no uncertain terms; it declares that much of the earthly wisdom is merely bitter jealousy and strife—"earthly, animal, devilish." If we apply these words to the various wisdoms set before us by the world we may know their appropriateness. For instance, the wisdom which commends wealth as the goal does it not involve its wise men in bitter jealousies, envyings, strife, along the lines of commercial conflict and piracy? And does not this in turn destroy for the money-hunter the pleasure which he anticipated in it and to a considerable degree have a depraving and demoralizing effect upon his heart?

Take the second class of wise men mentioned those who pursue pleasure: Is there not in their course that which continually tends toward jealousy and strife? Is not their wisdom at very most earthly and animal, and is not the tendency of it in many instances to the depraving of the mind and heart and thus to devilishness? Take the third class those who deem it wisdom to make of life a vain show without any other particular aim or object. Is not such a course demoralizing? Does not such love of display lead to envyings, bitterness and strife, and frequently to dishonorable means and methods for gratifying their pride? Are not their hearts empty of the good and likely to be filled with greater or lesser evils according to their circumstances, conditions and environments?

Take the fourth class, scientists and philosophers. We have already acknowledged that in many respects this class would be attractive to those who are well born and mentally well equipped, and that in many respects their aims are laudable. Let us apply the apostle's words to them. We find among them the very conditions he describes, bitter envyings, jealousy and strife. True, these are kept in considerable measure under cover, though frequently we can read these sentiments between the lines of polished language, and frequently the apostle's assurance that their wisdom is purely earthly is corroborated by themselves. As a rule, whatever respect they have had in youth for the Bible and its God is sure to be lost unless they go beyond the philosophies of earthly sciences. The Apostle Paul pays his respects to many of these gentlemen, saying that their presentations are science falsely so called and that their philosophies are “vain philosophies.” (1 Tim. 6:20; Col. 2:8.)

It may be doubted by some if the apostle’s word devilish could be applied to this class of earthly wisdom, but in our judgment these scientists have done more injury to the Lord’s cause than any of the others. Usually well educated, their philosophies carry an underserved weight to the minds of the common people, including Christians. Their guesses are taken for scientific truths, and as these are frequently in conflict with the Bible it follows that they more than any others of the worldly wise, are opponents of the Lord and of His revelation, the Bible. Nor do they by such opposition gain any real blessing to their own hearts, for their philosophical errors blind and deceive themselves as well as others. Indeed, it has been a source of constant surprise to us to find that even scientists who turn their attention to astronomy are very generally infidels as respects the Bible being God’s revelation, and many of them out-and-out atheists who deny there is any living and true God, holding that nature is her own creator, developer, evolutionizer, etc.

“The testimonies of the Lord are sure, making wise the humble.”
Psa. 19:7.

Having examined worldly wisdom and found it unsatisfactory to our hearts and heads the inquiry arises, where shall we seek the wisdom which God in our text declares is the principal thing? We reply that it is the wisdom of God, which to man is foolishness (1 Cor. 1:23-25), but to us who believe is the power of God and the wisdom of God. This wisdom is found in God’s great book and that in proportion as we are enabled by His grace to rightly divide it, to understand it. The better we understand it the more wisdom we see in all its precepts and regulations. It came from above in the sense that it is not earthly, that it is inspired by the Lord and that its influence upon all those who receive it is lasting comfort, sustaining, strengthening, happifying, transforming, glorifying.

The Apostle James sets forth in contrast the wisdom of this world and the wisdom from above. Explaining the latter he says:

“The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy of entreatment, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, without variance and without hypocrisy”.

I want to suggest to you that we take this verse, which so particularly describes the wisdom from above, to be our year text for 1905, to be committed to memory thoroughly and repeated once each week throughout the year. And may the Lord bless His word to the honest-hearted that they may be able to appreciate the difference between heavenly and earthly wisdom and the difference between the fruitage of the two, that thus, growing wiser week by week, the closing of the year shall find us in still fuller accord with the words of Solomon: "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom."

Let us examine carefully this true wisdom from above which the Scriptures enjoin. It is first pure it sets purity as its highest standard, and the word pure takes in the thought of honesty, sincerity. Whatever questions arise respecting our dealings, our conduct, our thoughts, the first point to be decided would be, is it pure, is it honest, is it true? If this cannot be answered affirmatively that is enough, heavenly wisdom says, Have nothing to do with anything that is not pure, right, honest. Do not tamper with it, do not even turn it over nor think of what might be done with it, but immediately put it away.

If the question stands the first test the second one would be, is my motive a peaceable one? Would I thus be doing all that I properly could do to preserve peace, harmony, accord in my own heart and in my dealings with others, or would the course considered be likely to awaken strife? Only peaceable dispositions are approved by the Lord, and this thought should continually guide the Lord's people with a desire to be pleasing to him. This, however, does not mean a lack of firmness of character, nor the lack of a proper combativeness to oppose the wrong in the proper manner and on suitable occasions. It merely means that our conduct should be as peaceable as loyalty to righteousness will permit. "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory."

Gentleness is given as the third mark of heavenly wisdom. The world in general has grown to appreciate the sentiment that gentleness is a propriety. Indeed, to declare that some people are not gentlemen would be one of the surest ways of so arousing their temper as to cause a display of feeling which would be anything but gentle. The gentleness of the world is largely on the outside, polish, good breeding, but the gentleness which the heavenly wisdom inculcates extends from the inside to the outside. The thoughts are gentle brought under control by the various injunctions and instructions of the Word of the Lord. The whole life of the regenerated Christian is brought under control to the spirit of holiness, which is on all proper occasions a spirit of gentleness, meekness, patience and long suffering.

There may be times when the direction of the Lord's Word might cause His people exercised by His Spirit to seem ungentle, to seem severe even, yet would be the result of their failure to rightly discriminate on the subject. For instance, it might become the duty of a parent to exercise discipline in his family, and the disciplined ones might consider no discipline as gentleness; whereas the Lord has directed that the parent should have his children in proper subjection, and that he who spareth the rod hateth the child. From the standpoint of the Scriptures all chastisement, however deserved, should be given in moderation, and with the gentlest of heart sentiments toward the transgressor, and with the utmost sympathy for his hereditary weaknesses and blemishes, which require such extreme correction; and no such discipline should be given except at a time that the mind is thus well poised and full of parental sympathy and love. Gentleness and firmness are not in conflict, though sometimes their combination is not rightly understood or appreciated by those who lack the wisdom from above.

GENEROUS, WARM-HEARTED

The fourth point to be remembered in connection with the heavenly wisdom is that those who are exercised by it are easy of entreatment they are not hard hearted, cold, stony; they can be touched with sympathy, and will manifest their sympathy even though they may not always allow it to rule them nor always allow it to hinder them from exercising proper disciplines. There is a difference between being easily entreated and “soft,” flabby, spineless. The wisdom from above has a firm texture of character, without coarseness, roughness, rudeness, hardness.

The fifth element of heavenly wisdom is to be full of mercy overflowing with mercy, with generous impulses, with kindly feelings, with compassion and sympathy for those in any trouble or distress. This, however, would not mean a mercy without gauges and conditions. Mercy may fill one full and yet be limited and restrained in its course of action, because sound judgment may dictate that in some cases the restraint of mercy would be for the benefit, advantage of the offender. In a word, where the spirit of the world would be that of vindictiveness, hatred and animosity because of some evil done, the Spirit of the Lord, the wisdom from above, would be full of mercy, compassion, sympathy, and would be restrained from full forgiveness and remission of all penalties only as sound judgment should indicate that such a generous course would be contrary to the best interests of the culprit.

Lastly, the wisdom from above is full of good fruits, and delights in whatsoever things are true, honest, pure, lovely and of good report. Cannot we see the philosophy connected with this wisdom? that the possessor of it is sure to be blessed in his heart experience, to have happiness, joy, peace and blessing himself, as well as sure to scatter blessings wherever he may go. This is the tendency of this heavenly wisdom; this is the wisdom from above. This is the wisdom, therefore, referred to in our text, “Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore, get wisdom,” this wisdom with these characteristics.

“YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN”

We remark, however, that there is only one way to put ourselves into relationship with the Lord so as to be able to receive this wisdom from above. That way is Christ through faith in His blood as our sin atonement. Still more than this, it means a renunciation of our sins and endeavor to walk in the Lord's way, leading to a full consecration of heart and life to Him and the consequent begetting of the Spirit. Only from this last standpoint can any hope to receive the wisdom from above, the true wisdom.

I address chiefly, if not entirely, those who are the Lord's people by faith and consecration, and who are, therefore, among those begotten of the Holy Spirit and being guided thereby. It is for us, dear brethren and sisters, to so use our opportunities, to so practice the lessons coming to us through the Holy Spirit, that we may apply our hearts unto this heavenly wisdom. The more effort we put forth, we may be sure, under the Lord's guidance and favor, the greater will be our progress and blessing in this and in every good word and work throughout the year to come. The grace of our Lord Jesus be with us all as we seek faithfully to conform our thoughts and words and doings to the lines laid down in this wisdom from above.

GIVES HIS VIEWS ON TRUE BAPTISM

The congregation which usually meets at Bible House Chapel, Allegheny, met yesterday afternoon and evening at Carnegie Hall. Their chapel, usually crowded, would have been quite insufficient for yesterday, which was a special occasion. In the evening the annual memorial service was held, which Pastor C. T. Russell explained commemorated Christ's death on its anniversary, corresponding to the time when our Lord taking some unleavened bread of the Passover and fruit of the vine, instituted the Memorial Supper, by which he requested his followers to celebrate every year his death and their release from the slavery of sin and Satan, instead of the Jewish Passover Supper, which celebrated the typical release from Pharaoh and Egypt. About four hundred partook of this communion in the evening.

The afternoon service was evidently a preparatory one, on "True Baptism, its Import and its Symbol," from Rom. 6:3-5. Following it quite a number were buried symbolically (immersed) at Bible House Chapel fount. The discourse follows:

Christian people are a unit in understanding that the New Testament teaches baptism, although there is a great diversity or confusion of thought respecting its mode and significance.

EARLY DEFLECTION ON SUBJECT

The great falling away from the faith, alluded to by the apostles in the New Testament, had gained such headway by the second century that very superstitious views regarding baptism had gained control in the nominal church of that time. Water baptism was supposed, not only to bring the subject into relationship with God by canceling past sins, but also to bring to him certain graces or favors from God as a member of the Church of Christ, which could not otherwise be secured.

At that early day, not only did believers seek baptism for themselves, but also for their children; and because infants could neither believe nor enter into covenant for themselves, an arrangement was made by which other than the parents might become sponsors for the children—"spiritual parents." They solemnly promised that the children should believe in the Lord and walk in His ways. These were called godfathers and godmothers, or sponsors.

Both the teachers and taught progressed rapidly to formalism. In the third century special fonts for baptismal purposes were built outside the churches. They consisted of a private room which connected with an outside porch, the latter being open to the public, in whose presence the baptismal vows were taken, after which the subject was baptized in the font privately. The officiating minister exercised the candidate to cast out devils, blowing in his face three puffs of breath, as representing the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit.

BAPTISM IN HOLY WATER

The water in which the baptism took place was consecrated by an elaborate formula, constituting it sacred water, a part of the formula being exorcism or casting out of evil spirits from the water. The candidate was stripped of clothing, as representing the complete putting off of the old man, and was baptized three times, once in the name of the Son, once in the name of the Father, and once in the name of the Holy Spirit. All this was done outside the church, to intimate that the candidate was not yet a member of the church and could not be a member until thus inducted. After the baptism service the candidate for membership wore white clothing until the following Sunday.

Later on, the separation of the baptistry from the church ceased, and the baptismal pools were built in the churches. The Roman and Greek Catholics still maintain to a considerable degree the elaborate ceremonial of the third century, changed and applied to sprinkling.

It is not surprising that Protestants of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, having inherited these traditions and participated in them, would be considerably under their influences, and that while divesting themselves of much of the extreme ceremony, they maintained many of the same views and ceremonies. Even to-day, otherwise intelligent people have a superstitious fear respecting what might be the everlasting future of their children dying in infancy without having been baptized without having received remission of sins, and induction into the church.

WILL THE UNBAPTIZED BE TORTURED

In harmony with these superstitions we find that, although every effort is made in all denominations to keep all power, privilege and authority in the hands of the clergy and out of the hands of the laity, nevertheless it is very generally the custom that in extreme cases, where an infant is not expected to live, and where the services of a clergyman cannot be secured in time, any person may perform a baptism service the thought being that no risk is to be taken in respect to the child's eternal welfare.

The privilege of the laity under such circumstances is clearly recognized even in the Roman and Greek Catholic churches; and in the rubric of the Church of England in the time of Edward the 6th. the matter was ordered thus: "Pastors and curates shall often admonish the people that without great cause and necessity they baptize not children at home in their houses, and when great need shall compel them so to do that then they minister it."

We quote the following explanation of baptism from the authorized Roman Catholic Catechism (page 248):

"The first and most necessary sacrament is baptism, because before baptism no other sacrament can be received," and "because without baptism no one can be saved." "In baptism original sin and all sins committed before baptism are forgiven; the temporal as well as the eternal punishment is remitted by baptism." "In baptism we are not only cleansed from all sin, but are also transformed in a spiritual manner, made holy, children of God and heirs of heaven."

The Lutheran Church holds to a very similar statement on the subject. The Church of England, though with a slightly varied wording, attaches the same significance to infant baptism. The following extracts from their Book of Common Prayer show this:

"Sanctify this water to the mystical washing away of sin; and grant that this child, now to be baptized therein, may receive the fullness of Thy grace, and ever remain in the number of the faithful and elect children."

“We receive this child into the congregation of Christ’s flock; and do sign him with the sign of the cross.” “Seeing now, dearly beloved brethren, that this child is regenerate, and grafted into the body of Christ’s Church, let us give thanks unto Almighty God for these benefits.”

“We yield Thee hearty thanks, most merciful Father, that it hath pleased Thee to regenerate this infant with the Holy Spirit.”

PRESBYTERIANS LESS STRICT

The Westminster Confession, Art. 28, says: “Baptism is a sacrament... a sign and seal of the covenant of grace, of his ingrafting into Christ, of regeneration, of remission of sins,” etc. It declares it to be applicable to infant children, one or both of whose parents are Christians, but not to other children. It adds, “Although it be a great sin to neglect this ordinance, yet grace and salvation are not so inseparably annexed unto it as that no person can be regenerated or saved without it, or that all that are baptized are undoubtedly regenerated.”

Attaching less importance to baptism, Presbyterian rules permit none but ministers to perform the service, and by its ministers laying stress upon the importance of baptism, and comparatively few knowing of the last quoted clause, it follows that Presbyterians, as well as others, fear the consequence of their infants dying unbaptized.

A PERPLEXED PHYSICIAN

As illustrating this matter an anecdote is told of a certain doctor who was called late at night to attend a dying infant. He arrived just a moment in advance of the clergyman sent for at the same time. It being evident that the physician could do nothing further for the child, he at once stepped aside, while the minister hastily took a bowl of water, sprinkled a few drops in the face of the child, saying, “I baptize thee in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit.” The child a moment later expired, and as the doctor and minister left the house together the former remarked to the latter, “You arrived just in the nick of time; two minutes more and you would have been too late. May I ask what kind of shoes you wear?” “Congress gaiters,” responded the clergyman. “Ah, how fortunate!” said the doctor. “Had you worn laced boots you would not have been in time, and think what disaster that would have meant for the child!”

True, many of the more enlightened Christian people would deny any such false superstitious thought as that God would hand over an unbaptized infant to devils to eternally torment it, or do anything else to its detriment. Nevertheless, many of these same people manifest great concern if by any means one of their children should die without this ceremony; and some of the illiterate certainly have a most positive belief in the necessity of the rite, and a most torturing fear of the consequences if it is omitted so strong is the influence coming down to us from the centuries of false beliefs the “dark ages.”

SOME REPUDIATE INFANT BAPTISM

Amongst those who recognized that baptism is enjoined upon believers, and that one person cannot believe for another, infant baptism is repudiated as being unscriptural. Moreover, the same people generally hold that nothing constitutes the baptism commanded by our Lord and the apostles except an immersion in water. These call attention to the fact that the Greek word signifying baptism, “baptizo,” has the significance of immerse or cover or plunge or completely make wet, and that wholly different words are used in the Greek when sprinkling is referred to.

These believers in immersion in water generally practice one immersion backward in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, though a few practice it face forward three times, once in the name of the Father, once in the name of the Son, and once in the name of the Holy Spirit, the explanation for the latter form being that Christ bowed his head forward when he died, and hence His followers should be immersed in the likeness of His death, face-forward. It does not seem to occur to these Christian friends that Christ was not buried face forward, and that the Father and the Holy Spirit neither died nor were buried at all, and that, therefore, such symbolizations are wholly inconsistent, and that the significance of the words, “in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit” would properly be by the authority of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.

CHRISTIAN DENOMINATION ERR

Of those who practice one immersion backward are Baptists and Disciples, who, nevertheless, perform the service with very different sentiments respecting its significance and the results. The view of the Disciples or Christian denominations is that baptism (immersion in water) is for the remission of sins, and that such as have not yet been immersed in water are still in their sins, “children of wrath.”

This view of the subject cuts off the great mass of humanity, and even professed Christians of all denominations, not immersed Congregationalists, Methodists, Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, Lutherans, Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, Greek Catholics, etc. as sinners, unjustified before God and, therefore, exposed to the wrath of God, understood by nearly all, including the “Disciples,” to mean an eternity of torture.

This is a hard position to take, especially in regard to Christian professors, and we do not wonder that our “Disciple” friends generally avoid pressing the question to so extreme a statement, although the logic of the proposition is evident. We cannot accept this to be a correct view of baptism to us it is neither Scriptural nor reasonable. The Christian denomination errs. We deny that the Lord has made the eternal welfare of our race dependent on their immersion in water. The explanation of their proof-texts we already have in print, but we have not time to consider them in detail here.

SAYS BAPTISTS ALSO ERR

Our Baptist friends, while no less strenuous in their advocacy of immersion in water as the only baptism, set up a totally different claim respecting its efficacy. They deny that it is for the remission of sins, which can only be experienced through faith. They hold, however, that baptism is the door into the Church, and that only those who have been immersed have really entered the Church, and that others should not expect nor be granted the privileges and blessings belonging to the Church, either in the present life or that to come.

In harmony with this Baptists in general decline to welcome to the communion table any not immersed in water, saying that it is not for the world, but only for the Church, and that none are in the Church except those who have passed through the door of water immersion. The few Baptist churches which in recent years have relaxed their rules have done so in contravention of their theory. In illustration of this subject we quote from a recent article by Rev. J. T. Lloyd in the Religious Herald. He says:

“Christian baptism is the immersion of a believer in water in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost nothing else is baptism. Baptist churches are the only Christian churches in existence. Pedobaptists (child baptizers) have no right to the Lord’s Supper. Whenever they partake of the Lord’s Supper they partake unworthily and eat and drink damnation to themselves.”

ONLY THE IMMERSED

If the Baptist theory be the correct one it follows that all members of other denominations of professed Christians who have not been immersed in water have deceived themselves in thinking that in any sense of the word they belong to the Church of Christ. We do not wonder that our Baptist friends, and especially those of the highest standard of heart and intellect, hesitate to press upon the public these, the only logical, conclusions of their belief. To do so would be to bring down upon them the indignation and contumely of many whom they are bound to respect as Christians, notwithstanding their theory to the contrary. But what would it mean if this Baptist theory were true? We Answer--that, according to all the creeds of Christendom, it would mean that only immersed persons would be saved, and that all the remainder of all denominations would be lost, for is it not the theory of all the creeds that only the Church is to be saved, and that all others are hastening to destruction or eternal torment or some other awful future, the destiny to which is fixed at death.

WE ARE FORCED TO DISSENT

From all the foregoing, as imperfect human theories, whose inconsistencies are clearly manifest, the mere statement of them carries instant conviction of their erroneousness to every intelligent and unprejudiced mind. We cannot admit that either the Disciple denomination or Baptist denomination, or both of these constitute “The Church of the Living God, whose names are written in heaven,” to the exclusion of all the unimmersed of other denominations. We cannot admit that when the Son of Man sowed the good seed of the Gospel in the field, the wheat was all brought under Baptist fencing, and that the tares were all outside. Nor can we even admit that all the wheat is to be found amongst those immersed in water, and all the tares as well, so that all other Christians would be excluded from the Lord’s parable of the wheat and tares. (Matt. 13.) We claim that all these conflicting theories are wrong disapproved of God. We claim that all sects and denominations are contrary to the divine institution one Head, one faith, one body, one baptism. We are not claiming that the Lord’s Church, the new creation, is multitudinous, but admit that in all it is a little flock.

3H296

CONSIDER NOW OUR TEXT

“Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death?”

The Apostle is addressing those who are already members of Christ. He says, “Know ye not that so many of you as were baptized into Jesus Christ” he does not say, so many of us as were sprinkled with water, nor so many of us as were immersed in water, but, “so many of you as were baptized (immersed) into Jesus Christ” as members of His body, the Church. How do we get into the body of Christ? The Apostle answers that we were baptized into it, and hence are now counted as members of our Lord not members of the Baptist or Disciple Church.

But let us inquire particularly what was the process by which we came into membership in Christ Jesus. The Apostle answers the question in his next statement, “So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death.” Not a word about being baptized into Him by being baptized into water. No, no! How evident it is that if we were baptized a thousand times in water it would not bring us into membership in the body of Christ! But, accepting the Apostle’s statement, we realize that our union with Christ, our membership in His Church or Ecclesia, whose names are written in heaven, dated from the time that we were baptized into the death.

But when and how were we baptized into the Lord's death? We Answer--that this baptism into death with the Lord, this overwhelming or burial of ourselves, our flesh, which resulted in our incorporation by Him as members of His body, as new creatures, took place at the moment when we made the full surrender of our wills to him consecrating our all, to follow and obey him, even unto death.

The will represents the entire person and all that he possesses. The will has control of the body, hands, feet, mouth, eyes and brain. It has control, too, of the pocket, the bank account, the real estate. It controls our time, our talent, our influence. There is not a thing of value that we possess which does not properly come under control of the will, and, hence, when we surrender our wills to the Lord or, as the Scriptures sometimes represent it, our "hearts" we give Him our all; and this burial of our human wills into the will of Christ is our death as human beings, our baptism into death the burial of self. "Ye are dead; and your life is hid with Christ in God." (Col. 3:3.) This death, this burial, is our baptism into His death. Henceforth, from the divine standpoint, we are not to count ourselves as human beings, of human nature, of the earth, earthy, and as having earthly aims, objects, and hopes, but as new creatures in Christ Jesus.

THE OLD WILL BURIED

The instant of this burial or immersion of our wills into the will of Christ was followed by our begetting to newness of life to a new nature. As our Lord consecrated His human nature to death in the doing of the Father's will, and gradually spent His earth life, and was raised from the dead to a newness of nature, so we who thus in consecration become "dead with Him," sharing in His consecration, will not be left in death, but shall ultimately be granted a share in the First Resurrection. Nay, we by faith may reckon our resurrection as already beginning, and may instantly rise through faith to a realization of our kinship to the Lord as new creatures. Thus the Apostle declares, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the spirit of Christ dwell in you." Rom. 8:9.

WHEN JESUS' BAPTISM ENDED

That our Lord did not receive water immersion at the hands of John as the real immersion, but merely as its figure or illustration, can be readily demonstrated. In evidence mark His words about the time of the Last Supper: "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished." (Luke 12:50.) Here our Lord shows that His baptism was not the water baptism, but the death-baptism baptism into death, in harmony with the divine arrangement, as man's redemption price. He consecrated Himself to this death baptism at the earliest possible moment, when He attained 30 years of age, and having during the three and one-half years of His ministry carefully carried out the provisions of that consecration—"dying daily," "pouring out His soul unto death," using up His life, His energy, His strength, in the service of the Father, in the service of His followers, and, in a large sense, in the service of His enemies. His baptism into death was completed on the cross when He cried, "It is finished!" and died.

The "mystery" of our relationship to Christ in sacrifice, in death-baptism now, and the resulting relationship and union with Him in the glory that is to follow, is incomprehensible to the world. It should, however, be appreciated by the Lord's faithful, and is asseverated repeatedly in the Scriptures. "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with Him;" "If we be dead with Him, we shall also live with Him." We are "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord, if so be that we suffer with Him (if we experience death-baptism with Him as His body members) that we may also be glorified together." 2 Tim. 2:12; Rom. 6:8; 8:17.

In the fourth verse the Apostle repeats the same thought from another standpoint, saying, "Therefore are we buried with Him by baptism into death." Again no suggestion of water baptism, but a most positive statement of death-baptism, our consecration unto death. Proceeding, the Apostle carries forward the picture, stating the reason of our baptism into Christ's death, saying, "Like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Only indirectly does the Apostle here refer to our share in the First Resurrection, when we shall share the glory of the Lord in the Kingdom. He refers chiefly to the present life.

All who make full consecration of their lives to the Lord, to be dead with Him, to be joint-sacrificers with Him in the service of the Truth, are to reckon themselves while living in the world as being separate and distinct from others around them. They covenant to die to earthly things which so engross others, and may, therefore, only use them as servants of the new creation. As new creatures we became alive through the Redeemer to heavenly things and prospects which the world around sees not, understands not. In harmony with this our lives in the world should be new, distinct, separate from those of others about us; because we are animated by the new spirit, new hopes, new aims, the heavenly.

PLANTED AND RESURRECTED TOGETHER

Coming to the fifth verse, the Apostle still makes not the slightest reference to the water baptism, although some, at first, might think otherwise of his words, "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall also be in the likeness of His resurrection." If this being planted together in the likeness of His death be understood to mean water baptism, it would be laying more stress upon it than any teacher in the world would be willing to admit that water baptism will insure a part in the First Resurrection.

But when we understand this verse, in harmony with the two preceding it, to refer to baptism into death, to planting in the likeness of Christ' death, then all is plain, all is reasonable. Having been called of the Lord to be joint-heirs with His Son, and to suffer with Him and to be dead with Him, and to live with Him and to reign with Him, how sure we may feel that if we are faithful to this call, if we are planted or buried into His death, like as He was buried in death, we shall eventually get the full reward which God promises to such, viz., a share in the First Resurrection to glory, honor and immortality.

BEAUTY FOR ASHES

Our text this afternoon will be found in Isa. 61:1-3, and especially the latter clause of the third verse. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; the Lord has anointed me to preach the good tidings, to comfort all that mourn, to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes."

Our remarks today are a continuation of the last few Sunday sermons, accounts of which have been published in the Pittsburg Dispatch and the Ft. Wayne News of Ft. Wayne, Ind.

In a previous consideration of this first verse, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me to preach the good tidings," we called attention to the fact that this primarily applied to our Lord Jesus, and when the Father would have Him proclaim the great message He was first anointed to preach. You remember the record he gave to John. While being baptized the anointing of the Holy Spirit came upon him. From God's standpoint all the members of the body of Christ are included in this anointing, and all His consecrated people are members of His body. As the apostle says: "Members in particular of the body of Christ." The hand and the foot and the eye and the ear are represented in these different members. That is God's standpoint in this general order to the whole Church of Jesus Christ, of which Jesus is head and we are members. Now this whole body is anointed to preach, and here we see that our view of preaching differs widely from the ordinary view. All the members of the body of Christ are anointed to preach; they and they alone. Just so surely as you are one that has come through justification of faith and sanctified, the anointing is upon you, and just so surely as you come under the anointing it is your commission to preach. Why? The prophet tells us.

I want in this connection to call your attention to the point that not merely those that preach from the public platform are preachers. Every child of God must be a preacher; it is impossible to be a child of God without being a preacher. If he is derelict he is sure to begin to wane and lose his life. So you will find it in your experience; from the time you came into relationship with the Lord, as a member of the body of Christ, under this anointing, you felt that the greatest privilege was that granted of being a co-laborer with the Lord, a preacher of the good tidings of great joy. Those that are of this way are noted everywhere. What are we anointed to preach? Jesus and the resurrection.

There is another way of preaching: according to the Scriptures there is no authority for the sisters preaching in a public manner. How shall she minister then? There are many ways in which she can preach. He here gave an illustration, telling how at one time he was holding a meeting in New York and some lady came to him and asked him to pray for her that she might get more light on the truth. She had been an agnostic, but her sister had come into Present Truth, and it had worked such a marvelous change in her that she herself now wished to get the truth. We are to preach the truth by whatever talents we have, public or not. We are to be living epistles, and no way will send it to the heart quicker than living the truth, as did the sister in the above illustration.

Now we come down to the particular words of our text for this afternoon, "Beauty for Ashes."

Part of the preaching is to comfort all that mourn. A great many people seem to think they are to shake people over torment and comfort them with that. We find that our commission is that we are anointed to preach the good tidings, to bind up the broken-hearted not to break them. All that ever came into the truth had their hearts broken. It was not the Lord's saints that did it. I am sorry if they did. There are plenty of circumstances all around us that are breaking men's hearts, and our part is to "bind up the broken hearts;" the part of the "Good Samaritan;" to tell them of the good tidings of great joy, which shall be shall be. It has not been, but it shall be unto all people; it is bound to come in "God's due time."

TO COMFORT THEM THAT MOURN

It might seem strange, dear friends, that the Scriptures speak of the Lord's people having considerable to mourn for. "Blessed are they that mourn, etc." We are not to comfort those that do not mourn. They do not need our comfort. Let those go who are rejoicing, who have all the hilarity. You are neither to break their hearts, nor are you to comfort them. They do not need the comfort, neither have we the commission to break their hearts, but “bind up the broken hearts.”

In Jesus’ special message He called upon the “weary and heavy laden to give them rest,” not to dangle them over hell. He said, “Come unto Me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest.” Those that are not weary and heavy laden are neither in danger of torment.

Our friends say that they have no time to talk to Christians, but that we must go to the profane and wicked, but the Lord addressed His message and all the epistles are addressed to those that believed His disciples. He told His disciples that He sent them to the lost sheep of the house of Israel those to whom God had committed His oracles, those who had had Moses and the prophets for their teachers. Our Lord Himself preached to the lost sheep of the house of Israel and not to the heathen; there were plenty of believers to preach to all the household of faith. Our message is the same and to the same class of people, the household of faith. Our Lord’s plan is to “Gather My saints unto Me saith the Lord, those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice.” Others feel that they are justified by their own self-righteousness. The saint class, those whose hearts are broken, are the ones that need binding up.

HE MAKETH WARS TO CEASE

Pastor Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., preached here today. We report one of the discourses, from the text: “He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth.” Psa. 46:9.

The questions of war and peace, their rights and wrongs, come continually before our attention. That peace is desirable no right minded person will dispute, and yet all persons of sound judgment will admit that many of the wars of the past have brought to the world some of its choicest blessings and liberties. No one conversant with history, and capable of taking a broad grasp of the world’s affairs, could dispute for a moment this proposition. The question before us is, “How shall we harmonize these seemingly contrary thoughts? If peace is most desirable, if it is always to be sought, if wars are always to be shunned, why do we find that in every age of the world some of the very best of mankind have been embroiled in wars, rebellions, etc.? Why do we find that blessings have resulted from these wars, etc.?”

There is but one standpoint from which these questions can be answered satisfactorily, and that is the Bible standpoint. It explains the beauties and blessings of peace, and assures us that God's purpose, when ultimately accomplished, will establish peace on the earth on a permanent basis and make all wars to cease. This is the testimony of our text, "He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth." The Bible gives us the key, explaining why wars under present conditions are necessary, why God's people are to be peace-lovers and peacemakers, and how a permanent peace will be ultimately established under the whole heavens.

THE CAUSES OF WARS

As originally created in the image of God, man had too much sympathy, love, mercy, kindness and generosity for war. Where love prevails war is impossible. It was after the fall after years of gradual deflection from the condition of love into a selfish attitude of mind that the baser elements of the human nature maintaining their strength and the higher mental and moral qualities deteriorating, the selfish faculties obtained the controlling influence amongst mankind. Under the stress of necessity for earning bread by the sweat of the face, love gave place to selfishness, and it became the rule amongst mankind to each look out for Number One, and to see to it that whoever lacked, whoever suffered, it should not be himself. Since our Lord's advent this tendency has been checked in some who have received and profited by his teachings, but alas, these are now as ever since the fall but a small fragment of the race.

According to the Bible account man's first fighting was with the wild animals. As originally created man's dominating power over the lower animals was such that he was naturally their master, but with the fall came loss of power, loss of influence, antagonisms, until the hunting of wild animals to their death became almost a necessity. Nimrod is recorded as the great leader in the fighting of wild beasts he was a "mighty hunter," (Gen. 10:9); but this battling with the wild beasts took time and attention from the higher and nobler things, just as the fightings of earth have ever done. On the other hand it cultivated the spirit of combativeness and destructiveness. It was not long after this that among Nimrod's children the war spirit arose with the selfish endeavor to improve their own conditions at the expense of others to bring other families, tribes and nations into subjection, so as to collect tribute from them to the enrichment of the more powerful family, tribe, nation.

Added to this selfish and thievish desire to take advantage of others, came later a pride of national standing and prowess, which is but another form of selfishness. These two qualities have stimulated wars amongst the people of the earth for now six thousand years, an additional element closely blended with these being a sort of religious fanaticism the supposition of one people that it had a right to impose its religious convictions upon another.

THE WORLD'S SAD PLIGHT

This unbalance of minds, which we have just seen operating in all to a greater or lesser degree and inclining all to selfishly seek personal advantage, personal and national honor at the expense of others and the pride of thinking they must enforce their religious convictions upon others at the point of the sword, have put the poor world into a sad plight. Of course, no two persons being mentally exactly alike, there would naturally be some more benevolently disposed, some more peaceable, some more just, some with better conceptions of true religion than others; but the great mass of mankind would gradually sink down into the bog of indolence and lowest degradation or into despair.

What could the few who loved peace and more quiet pursuit of selfish interests do in the presence of neighbors and friends and relatives more ambitious and disposed to war and fight, to thieves and kill, to denude their neighbors and plume themselves? Could we expect these to quietly allow themselves to be slaughtered, and their goods and the fruit of their labor to be appropriated by others? Would it have been to the benefit of the world to its ennoblement and progress, if they had thus submitted? Truly, no. Surely the reign of selfishness would have come to still greater extremes than it has done had it not been for the oppositions encountered. Truly wrath meeting wrath, sword meeting sword, have had the effect throughout the world of hindering one family, class or nation from obtaining the complete power and influence, and making of the remainder the most ignoble slaves, depriving them of practically everything but their lives, and those to be merely used as they would profit their masters. Humanely speaking, this would have been the result if peace had been insisted upon, if the majority of mankind, were to have insisted that peace must be maintained at any cost. No one would claim that such an enslavement of the race to one man or one family or one autocracy or to one hierarchy would have been safe or beneficial.

ONLY ONE TRUSTWORTHY AUTOCRAT

Only one person could have been trusted with such omnipotent power over the race, and that is our Creator. His justice, His wisdom, His love, His power, would indeed have been all sufficient and have brought blessings instead of a slavery to the world of mankind. But it was this very autocracy that was rebelled against in the beginning, and human selfishness and the hope of sooner or later obtaining average blessings and perhaps a little advantage over a neighbor would still hinder the majority of the intelligent people of the world from desiring that the Almighty mind that if all the accrued blessings of the world were evenly and equitably divided with every member of the race at this moment, there would very speedily re-commence a fresh warfare, permitted by this selfish desire to have more of earth's comforts, conveniences and blessings, power and display.

DIFFERENT HOPES FOR MILLENNIUM

A considerable number of Christian people of apparent intelligence assure us that, after looking over this picture of the past and scanning the conditions of the world in the present, they have good hopes that a millennium of peace and good will toward men will very soon be ushered in by the conversion of the whole world to the principles of righteousness. Poor blind men! if they be even saints they should be able to measure the world's condition better than this by considering what the promptings of their own fleshly natures would be aside from the power of grace, the Holy Spirit of truth, working in them. Measuring the natural man by their own fallen nature they should see that the world would run with blood before those who have gotten control of the power and wealth, the honors and the influence, would relinquish these or even agree to keep just what they now have, to cease fighting for more.

We are to remember that in our day this warfare is carried on differently from what it was in the past. In olden times the strong nation looted the weaker one, confiscating their treasures. In our day the same is accomplished in effect but in a very different manner. The strong nation by treaties, gunboats, etc., seeks to exploit the weaker one to secure their business, their trade. Instead of requiring tribute as in olden times, they conduct themselves in apparently a much more just manner, though really it is as in the other case the wiser, the more expert, the stronger nation taking advantage of the weaker neighbor. Commercialism is now in control of the armies and navies and all the powers of the world, and all the wars of our time can more or less directly be traced to this. Take the Russo-Japanese war as an example. What was it but a commercial war, the endeavor of Russia to advance her financial interests in the far east at the expense of the Chinese and Japanese.

On the other hand the realization of this by the Japanese, and their appreciation of the fact that as a nation they would be strengthened financially and every way if they did not rise at once to repel the intruder? Look at the Transvaal war: see how its basis was commercialism. The British and the Dutch had come to that part of Africa for selfish interests, the Dutch for settlement, the British largely for commerce. The power of the latter; especially on the sea, gave it the control of the situation, and when gold and diamonds were found a commercial warfare ensued, the Dutch by taxes and in other ways seeking to hold the wealth of nature to their own special advantage, the British desiring to be untrammled in their pursuit of riches. The commercial warfare, as we all know, brought about a bloody strife, a terribly severe experience to both parties, for both apparently were to some extent at fault, selfishness, commercialism, being the foundation of the entire trouble.

A somewhat similar condition of affairs led up to the war with Spain. Selfishness on the part of Spain was hindering Cuba's prosperity. The United States, as a neighbor, as a friend of liberty, and as one who might reasonably expect to profit commercially by a change in Cuban affairs, espoused her cause, not purely for love of righteousness, but largely in hope of commercial advantage. No doubt the war was an advantage so far as justice is concerned and the welfare of the people of Cuba; we are merely pointing out the fact that selfishness in the form of commercialism is at the back of our present struggles of warfare.

But we need not look merely to these wars. There is a warfare of another kind at present in progress between all the civilized nations of the world a commercial warfare between the United States and Canada, between the United States and Germany, Britain and France. Tariffs on the one hand and special arrangements on the other are the fortresses behind which each seeks its own protection, while sending out pirate attacks upon the business and commerce of each other. It is the same warfare, permitted by the same selfishness, manifesting itself in a different direction from that of the past. The same competition is growing in intensity internally in every land, in every city, as between shops, factories, etc. Trusts, combines, federations, tariff agreements, are all endeavors to meet these conditions in such a manner as might be most favorable to the promoters of them. But the effect of all these conditions in a general way is that they unite the manufacturers of the world's necessities on the one side as against the consumers of these necessities on the other side.

THE SUM OF THE MATTER

Summing up the whole condition of the world, therefore, we see that the spirit of war, selfishness, no less than the fact of war, contention, opposition, strife, for name and fame and wealth, is greater today, more general, than it ever was before. We do not say that there is proportionately more danger of national wars, although we expect more of them, and do not expect that ague conferences in general will accomplish much more for the peace of the world in the future than it did to prevent the war between Russia and Japan. We do hold that the general warfare and strife amongst the peoples of the world is getting more intense day by day, year by year; and that the formation of trusts, so far from implying a cessation of this warfare, is merely combining the warriors into larger camps that the battle may be carried on more fiercely and more successfully than ever before the battle of the classes against the masses the battle for larger shares of this world's favors and blessings and privileges, opportunities, emoluments and honors.

The scriptures declare that what we must expect in the near future is a time of contention, wars, strife for wealth and advantage, such as has never been known on earth before. The scriptural declaration is that we are entering "a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation," nor ever shall be again. (Matt. 24:21.) It declares that in that time of trouble every man's hand shall be against his neighbor. (Zech. 8:10.) It is very nearly to this point now; national lines, party lines, all lines are ignored except as they prove advantageous to the individual. Self first is the rule of general conduct, and this legitimately means very soon every man's hand for himself and against his neighbor.

Those who are expecting the Millennium of peace and good will amongst men must be very blind indeed if they cannot see these things. They must see that it would not be sufficient to convert a nation, in the sense of having it agree that it would destroy its battleships, its fortifications, and disarm its soldiers, although nothing seems farther from the intention of the nations themselves than such a disarmament. They must see that if every nation were disarmed, the strife internally, every man's hand against his neighbor, is going on and will go on more fiercely as the days and weeks and years roll by. The increase of knowledge which has come to the world has brought with it an increase of ambition, a restless desire which, having a selfish basis of operation, can bring forth no other fruitage than that of contention and strife. We evidently must look to the Lord for help, and as we reverently turn to Him our attention and give heed to the Answer--of our fears, we hear the messages of His Word assuring us in the language of our text that "he will make wars to cease unto the end of the earth."

HOW GOD WILL DO IT

The assurance of the Lord comforts our hearts even before we learn of the method He will pursue to bring about the good result. We say to ourselves, there have been great evangelistic movements in the world and we have heard of thousands upon thousands being converted, and yet in spite of all these conversions, in spite of all these labors public and private, in spite of all the ministerial means and schools, we have seen that the strife amongst nations and individuals is on the increase, and that this is fully borne out by the apostle's testimony, "In the last days (in the close of this age, in the dawning of the Millennium) perilous times shall come; men shall be lovers of their own selves (selfish), without natural affection, covenant breakers, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," etc. 2 Tim. 3:1.

What a picture! And how well it agrees with what we have just seen. The apostle does not say that in the last days men will become more heathenish than before, less civilized, that they will abandon the arts and the sciences and take to living in dens and caves of the earth. No! but that with a form of godliness such as we see about us today, the power of it will be denied in their lives; selfishness will more and more obtain the control, with the result that it will lead to the wreck of the present social structure in anarchy, confusion and selfish endeavor on the part of each to look out for Number One, and will result in a maelstrom of trouble in which all law and order and government, social, religious and political, will be submerged. These wrecks of our modern civilization, these desolations that will ensue will all be the direct result of man's neglect of the divine wisdom, his rejection of the divine law of love, his following of the Satanic law of selfishness, and the Lord at this time will so direct the affairs of the world that selfishness will thus bring about its own destruction, its own disadvantage.

DESOLATIONS WILL PRECEDE PEACE

This is exactly the statement of our text. The prophet, speaking of the matter, says, "Behold the works of the Lord, what desolations He hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; He breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; He burneth the chariot in the fire." Thus it is plainly stated that the anarchy that is impending upon the world and which will doubtless be ripe within ten years, according to the scriptures, is the natural outworking of selfishness which the Lord is now permitting, to the intent that men may learn the better way through the failure of the wrong way, to the intent that the lessons which they would not learn from his messages may be learned through their own sad experiences.

Describing the matter in preceding verses, the prophet declares, "The nations raged, the kingdoms were moved; He uttered His voice, the earth melted." The voice of God, which speaks peace through Jesus Christ our Lord to all who accept Him, is about to speak justice to the world in general in the great time of trouble. All injustice, all unrighteousness, everything contrary to the spirit of love, is about to react upon the world in general as a great object lesson. We sometimes say, speaking of the social order, that the friction between capital and labor is getting hotter and hotter; and the scriptures, using the same figure of speech, declare that the earth that is, symbolically society will melt with the fervency of the heat of the strife and contention and anarchy which will prevail the entire social fabric will melt in the fire of that day, symbolical fire.

As a result of these experiences a great blessing will come to the world. Indeed, the Lord now only permits the selfishness of man to work the destruction of civilization because the proper time has come because the time has come for the establishment of the Kingdom of God's dear Son. In the past God did not utter His voice, else the world would have melted long ago, the savage passions of humanity would have been loosed long ago. He reserved the uttering of His voice, His bestowal of justice and recompense to mankind, until this time, when He is ready to make use of the trouble for the advantage of our race in general. He deferred the utterance of His voice, calling for justice and vengeance, until first the redemption had been accomplished by our dear Redeemer at Calvary and until, subsequently to that, the elect church, His Bride, had been selected. And this heavenly Bridegroom and Bride changed from earthly to spiritual, heavenly conditions and glory are to be the divine power in the world for the blessing of every creature, the teaching of the whole world a better way than the way of selfishness.

Six thousand years the Lord has allowed the world to try under various expedients and in various ways the operation of the law of selfishness, to prove its good and its bad elements and features and results; and now, when civilization has attained its highest degree of development, it has also attained its highest destructive power and is about to accomplish its own collapse. Then the Lord will speak through the glorified Christ to the world in peace and with power. He will speak peace through Jesus Christ to all those who will submit to the terms and conditions of righteousness. He will speak forth tribulation to all who will not submit their wills to that new arrangement called in the scriptures a "new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

BE STILL AND KNOW THAT I AM GOD

This is clearly set forth in the context, which represents the Lord as commanding the world to be still and to recognize Him, His law, His way, His plans, His methods, thus implying what we know has been the truth that the world for some time has been disposed to ignore the Lord and to follow its own way, its own course, a course that is rapidly leading to anarchy.

A part of the same statement is, "I will be exalted amongst the nations, I will be exalted in the earth." It will be the Millennial Kingdom of Christ that will thus exalt the law and word of Jehovah throughout the whole earth, causing all nations, peoples, kindred and tongues to know and to obey. A blessing will follow the institution of this Kingdom; the nations will find it to be to their advantage, as it is written, "The desire of all nations shall come." In their trouble and anarchy they will find consolation and rest in obedience to the institutions and laws of the Kingdom of Immanuel, and as the prophet again declares, "Many nations shall come and say, "Let us go up to the mountain of the Lord's house; He will teach us of His ways and we will walk in His paths." (Isa. 2:3.) Thus the promised blessing shall fill the earth, for Satan shall be bound, all evil shall be restrained, and during that thousand years the world of mankind shall come to fullest opportunity for comparing sin with righteousness, selfishness with love, and then those who love righteousness will be manifested and those who have still a hankering for selfishness will also be manifested, and the latter will be utterly destroyed, we are told, in the Second Death, from which there will be no recovery. Our hearts cry out in the language of our Lord's prayer, "Our Father who are in heaven, hallowed by thy name. Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as in heaven."

"THY WORD IS TRUTH"

Sound doctrine, the foundation of correct hopes and honest living, is very essential.

His text was: "Your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." -1 Cor. 2:5.

So-called "higher criticism" is rapidly effacing all Bible doctrines, discrediting them and claiming that they are unnecessary to the Christian life. We hold, to the contrary, that the sound faith is essential to a proper Christian living. The unchristian persecutions of the dark ages were founded upon false doctrines, the traditions of men, which made void the word of God. With the clarifying of the faith came proportionately better Christian living and proportionate cessation of persecutions.

The tendency today is to the opposite extreme toward the loss of all scriptural faith, hope and love. The claim that education will take the place of a divinely inspired faith, and will promote righteousness and love, is a misleading one. So long as selfishness constitutes the basis of the fallen human nature, that long it cannot be trusted to lift itself above selfishness into the realm of loving righteousness. The calamity of this error will be manifested to the world within a decade. It will manifest itself in selfishness and lawlessness anarchy.

THE OLD PATHS

Meantime it is expedient that all true Christians shall seek earnestly for the old paths and for the "faith once delivered to the saints." As our text declares, our faith shall not stand in the wisdom of men, however conceited they may be of their own wisdom as Higher Critics, Evolutionists, etc. The true Christian, if at all logical, will quickly discern that granting that the Bible is a divine revelation its testimonies should be received absolutely. If its divine inspiration be denied, it should be accredited no more honor than another book, but as the eyes of our understanding open more and more widely we discern internal evidences in the scriptures which demonstrate to their truthfulness and establish the believer's faith more and more firmly its records do stand investigation. The difficulty with many is that they do not investigate the old book on its own merits, but persistently they present to their own minds and to those of others the erroneous theories of the dark ages instead of the divine word. Thus they misrepresent the word of the Lord, and unintentionally hoodwink themselves and others.

FAITH'S FOUNDATION STRONG

We propose a series of discourses setting forth the credibility of the scriptures, and showing wherein various doctrines common to the creeds of Christendom, and gradually becoming more and more unreasonable and nauseating to the intelligent mind, are in reality perversions and misrepresentations of the divine message. As step by step we shall establish confidence in the word of God by exposing the unreasonable and false doctrines of sundry creeds, it will be our hope that thus we shall strengthen the faith of God's true people, with the result that, in the words of our text, their faith shall not stand hence-forth in the wisdom of men but in the power of God as revealed to us in the word of God.

AN INTELLIGENT CREATOR

The Bible does not attempt to prove the existence of a first great cause; on the contrary, it assumes and declares that the whole universe demonstrates God's existence and intelligence. It declares that "day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge, and there is no place where their voice is not heard." (Psa. 19:2,3.) Furthermore it declares, and mankind universally admits that the one who at heart denies the existence of a God is silly--non compos mentis. The declaration is, "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." (Psa. 14:1.)

If we knew no Bible, no revelation of the divine plan in connection with our earth and its inhabitants, we should instinctively look for one. Reason would teach us that the great system, the universe of which we are a part, could not have come by chance, and that the one so great, so powerful, must be correspondingly wise, correspondingly just, correspondingly loving. Such being his character he must have created our race with some good, just, wise, loving intention, which he would not be ashamed to have his creatures know.

Moreover, having endowed us with mental powers and aspirations, he must know that some at least of the human family would be deeply interested in every feature of his plan, however satisfactorily other minds might be able to satisfy themselves with the earthly things of yesterday, today and tomorrow. May we not assume, then, that the Almighty would be pleased to note the interest of some of His creatures in His plans, and that He would have pleasure in making known to them, from time to time, such features of His program as would be for their comfort and welfare? The very attributes of divine character, as we might conceive those without any revelation, would seem to imply that divine justice, wisdom, love and power would provide a revelation, a Bible. Our question then should be “Does the Bible furnish satisfactory proof of its divine authority, so that we can rest our faith upon its testimonials?”

EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL EVIDENCE OF THE INSPIRATION OF THE SCRIPTURES

Unbelief usually assails the Bible from the outside, claiming lack of evidence that it came from God, asserting that it is merely human production. We will not discuss this phase of the subject in detail, but will go rather to the internal evidences, remarking by the way, however, that no other book bears stronger outward evidences of the sincerity of its writers, and that the complete harmony, the oneness of these writings, spreading over a period of eighteen centuries, well corroborates their testimony that they spoke and wrote under divine inspiration. What other collection of writings covering so long a period could be found in absolute accord, one with the other? We know of none, and assert that this harmony of the sacred writings corroborates their old claim that they were all indited by the one spirit the Holy Spirit.

True, there are other books, heathen books, from which wise and just sayings may be quoted, but we believe that no one thoroughly acquainted with those writings would for a moment claim for them a parity with our Bible. Those, for instance, who claim that the Genesis account of creation is not sufficiently ample and scientific, will not appreciate the reasonableness and simplicity of the record until they begin to compare it with the statements of the heathen Bibles. Take for instance the teachings of the Chinese Bible upon this subject as an illustration. It represents the great God and His Son in a skiff. To prevent grounding, the Son-God put out His hand to push off from the shore and shallows and incidentally caught a handful of pebbles and mud, which he shaped into a ball and tossed out upon the waters, and which grew and grew until it became the present earth. The most obstinate critic who will turn from this record of creation to the one given in our Bible will cheerfully admit that the Genesis account is sublimely grand, clear and explicit in comparison.

“THY WORD IS TRUTH”

It is when we examine the internal evidences of the Bible respecting its credibility as the word of God that we find ourselves astonished. Happily astonished, because its testimony is so satisfactory and so far superior not only to the creeds of the dark ages, but towering high above the theories of its modern critics. Even its opponents must admit that it has been a torch of civilization and liberty. Its influence for good in society has been recognized by the greatest statesmen, even though they for the most part have viewed it through the various glasses of conflicting creeds, which, while upholding the Bible, grievously misrepresent its teachings.

The central figure of the Bible is Jesus of Nazareth. Every promise and every prophecy of the old testament points to Him as the one through whom comes hope for a fallen and condemned race. Every testimony of the new testament points to Jesus as the one through whose sacrificial death atonement alone has been effected, and they all point also to Him as the coming one, at whose second advent the blessing of God will be poured out in harmony with all the prophecies of the past. They give us the assurance that the work of this gospel age has been the selection from amongst believers of a "little flock" of fully consecrated followers of Jesus who through disciplines and trials shall ultimately be perfected in the first resurrection, constituting with their Lord Jesus the long promised kingdom of God, through whose just and loving rule all the families of the earth shall be blessed, and as many as will come into heart accord with righteousness shall obtain eternal life.

We hold that a plan of salvation so deep, so broad, so just, so kind, so far beyond the scope of human ingenuity, demonstrates that those who promulgated this gospel with such absolute unanimity and with such absolute faith in it themselves were indeed supremely directed. The sincerity of the prophets and the apostles is demonstrated by the fact that their faith was not to their earthly advantage, but, contrariwise, brought to them trials, testings and in many cases persecutions even unto death. The apostle Paul sums up the experiences of Abraham and of all the faithful who walked in his steps down to the time of Jesus, saying, "They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy." (Heb. 11:37,38.) The writers of the new testament give similar evidences of their sincerity. Their advocacy of Jesus as the Messiah brought them not wealth and influence and honor of men, but self denials, persecutions, etc.

According to all reasonable rules of evidence such men must be considered truthful, honorable, upright, witnesses of the highest character. No other history in the whole world stands upon such unimpeachable foundations, and we may therefore properly enough go on with our investigation. Let us examine the character of the writings claimed to be inspired, to see whether their teachings correspond with the character we have reasonably imputed to God, and whether they bear internal evidences of their truthfulness.

HISTORICAL AND DOCTRINAL DIVISIONS— THE BOOKS OF MOSES

The first five books of the new testament and several of the old testament are narratives of histories of facts known to the writers and vouched for by their characters. It is manifest to all that it did not require a special revelation simply to tell the truth with reference to matters with which they were intimately and fully acquainted.

It in no way invalidates the truthfulness of certain books of the Bible, such as Kings, Chronicles, Judges, etc., when we say that they are simply carefully kept histories of prominent events and persons of their times. When it is remembered that the Hebrew scriptures contain history, as well as the law and the prophecies, and that their histories, genealogies, etc., were the more explicit in detailing circumstances because of the expectancy that the promised Messiah would come in a particular line from Abraham, we see a reason for the recording of certain facts of history considered indelicate in the light of this nineteenth century.

For instance, a clear record of Judah's children is given, of whom came David, the king, through whom the genealogy of Mary, Jesus' mother, as well as that of Joseph, her husband (Luke 3:23,31,33,34; Matt. 1:2-16), is traced back to Abraham. Doubtless the necessity of thoroughly establishing the pedigree was the more important, since of this tribe (Gen. 49:10) was to come the king of Israel, as well as the promised Messiah, and hence the minutiae of detail not given in other instances.—(Gen. 38.) Similarly in the archives of the royal families of Europe records are kept of the illegitimate offspring, that there may be no doubt as to the true heirs to their thrones. It is well, furthermore, to remember that the same facts may be more or less delicately stated in any language; and that while the translators of the Bible were, rightly, too conscientious to omit any of the record, yet they lived in a day less particular and pure in the choice of refined expressions; and the same may be surmised of the early Bible times and habits of expression. Certainly the most fastidious can find no objection on this score to any expression of the New Testament.

The omission of the positive statement that these books were written by Moses is no proof against the thought; for had another written them to deceive and commit a fraud, he would surely have claimed that:

Thus it appears that the distinguished law-giver Moses, so far from seeking to perpetuate or increase his own power by placing the government of the people under the control of his direct relatives of the priestly tribe, to use their religious authority to fetter the rights and liberties of the people, on the contrary introduced to the people a form of government calculated to cultivate the spirit of liberty. The histories of other nations and rulers show no parallel to this. In every case the ruler has sought his own aggrandizement and greater power. Even in instances where such have aided in establishing republics, it has appeared from subsequent events that they did it through policy, to obtain favor with the people, and to perpetuate their own power.

MOSES A CHAMPION OF FREEDOM

So completely was the government of the people put into their own hands, that though it was stipulated that the weightier cases which those governors, could not decide were to be brought unto Moses, yet they themselves were the judges as to what cases went before Moses—"The cause which is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it." Deut. 1:17.

Thus seen, Israel was a republic whose officers acted under a divine commission. And to the confusion of those who ignorantly claim that the Bible sanctions an imperial rule over the people, instead of "a government of the people, by the people," be it noted that this republican form of civil government continued for over four hundred years. And it was then changed for that of a kingdom at their own urgent request.

The instructions given those appointed to civil rulership as from God are a model of simplicity and purity. Moses declares to the people, in the hearing of those judges: "I charged your judges at that time, saying, Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger (foreigner) that is with him. Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man, for the judgment is God's; and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it."—(Deut. 1:16,17.)

In view of these facts, what shall we say of the theory which suggests that these books were written by knavish priests to secure to themselves influence and power over the people? Would such men for such a purpose forge records destructive to the very aims they sought to advance records which prove conclusively that the great Chief of Israel, and one of their own tribe, at the instance of God, cut off the priesthood from civil power by placing that power in the hands of the people? Does anyone consider such a conclusion reasonable?

Again, it is worthy of note that the laws of the most advanced civilization, in this nineteenth century, do not more carefully provide that rich and poor shall stand on a common level in accountability before the civil law. Absolutely no distinction was made by Moses' laws. And as for the protection of the people from the dangers incident to some becoming very poor and others excessively wealthy and powerful, no other national law has ever been enacted which so carefully guarded this point. Moses' law provided for a restitution every fiftieth year, their jubilee year. This law, by preventing the absolute alienation of property, thereby prevented its accumulation in the hands of a few.—(Lev. 25:9, 13-23, 27-30.)

All the laws were made public, thus preventing designing men from successfully tampering with the rights of the people. The laws were exposed in such a manner that any who chose might copy them; and, in order that the poorest and most unlearned might not be ignorant of them, it was made the duty of the priests to read them to the people at their septennial festivals. (Deut. 31:10-13.) Is it reasonable to suppose that such laws, and arrangements were designed by bad men, or by men scheming to defraud the people of their liberties and happiness?

In its regard for the rights and interests of foreigners and of enemies, the Mosaic law was thirty-two centuries ahead of its times if, indeed, the laws of the most civilized nations of today equal it in fairness and benevolence. We read: "Ye shall have one manner of law as well for the stranger (foreigner) as for one of your own country; for I am the Lord your God." Lev. 24:22; Exod. 12:49.

"And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him; but the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt." Lev. 19:33,34.

"If thou, meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again. If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, wouldst thou cease to leave thy business and help him? Thou shalt surely leave if, to assist him." Exod. 23:4,5, margin.

Even the dumb animals were not forgotten. Cruelty to these as well as to human beings was prohibited strictly. An ox must not be muzzled while threshing the grain, for the good reason that any laborer is worthy of his food. Even the ox and the ass must not plow together, because so unequal in strength and tread; it would be cruelty. Their rest was also provided for. Deut. 25:4; 22:10; Ex. 23:12

PRIESTHOOD NOT PRIVILEGED CLASS

The priesthood may be claimed by some to have been a selfish institution, because the tribe of Levites was supported by the annual tenth, or tithe, of the individual produce of their brethren of the other tribes. This fact, stated thus, is an unfair presentation too common to skeptics. It was, in fact, founded upon the strictest equity.

When Israel came into possession of the land of Canaan, the Levites certainly had as much right to a share of the land as the other tribes; yet, by God's express command, they got none of it, except certain cities or villages for residence, scattered among the various tribes, whom they were to serve in religious things. Instead of the land, some equivalent should surely be provided them, and the tithe was therefore this reasonable and just provision. Nor is this all; the tithe, though, as we have seen, a just debt, was not enforced as a tax, but was to be paid as a voluntary contribution. And no threat bound them to make those contributions; all depended upon their conscientiousness. The only exhortations to the people on the subject are as follows:

“Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite as long as thou livest upon the earth.” (Deut. 12:19.) “And the Levite that is within thy gates, thou shalt not forsake him; for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee” (in the land). Deut. 14:27. The evidently pious and noble law-giver, Moses, denies that the laws were his own, and attributes them to God. (Ex. 24:12; Deut. 9:9-11; Ex. 26:30; Lev. 1:1.) In view of his general character, and his commands to the people not to bear false witness and to avoid hypocrisy and lying, is it reasonable to suppose that such a man bore false witness and palmed off his own views and laws for those of God? Although bad men were among Moses' successors, who did seek their own and not the people's good, it is evident that they did not tamper with the sacred writings, which are pure to this day.

THE PROPHETS OF THE BIBLE

Glance now at the general character of the prophets of the Bible and their testimonies. A rather remarkable fact is that the prophets, with few exceptions, were not of the priestly class; and that in their day their prophecies were generally repugnant to the degenerating and time-serving priesthood, as well as to the idolatrously inclined people. The burden of their messages from God to the people was generally reproof for sin, coupled with warnings of coming punishments, intertwined with which we find occasional promises of future blessings, after they should be cleansed from sin and should return to favor with the Lord. In some instances it was years after their death before their true character as God's prophets was recognized.

We should remember that in the giving of the law to Israel there was no priestly intervention; it was given by God to the people by the hand of Moses. (Ex. 19:17-25; Deut. 5:1-5.) And, furthermore it was made the duty of every man seeing a violation of the law to reprove the sinner. (Lev. 12:17.) Thus all had the authority to teach and reprove; but since, as in our own day, the majority were absorbed in the cares of business, and became indifferent and irreligious, the few comparatively fulfilled this requirement by reprovng sin and exhorting to godliness; and these preachers are termed "prophets" in both the Old and New Testaments. The term prophet, as generally used, signifies public expounder, and the public teachers of idolatry were also so called. Out of the large class called prophets, Jehovah at various times made choice of some whom he specially commissioned to deliver messages, relating sometimes to things then at hand, at other times to future events. It is to the writings of this class, who spoke and wrote as they were moved by the holy spirit, that we are now giving attention. They might with propriety be designated

DIVINELY COMMISSIONED PROPHETS OF SEERS

When it is remembered that these prophets were mainly laymen, drawing no support from the tithes of the priestly tribe, and when, added to this, is the fact that they were frequently not only the reprovers of kings and judges, but also of priests though they reprovd not the office, but the personal sins of the men who filled it, it becomes evident that we could not reasonably decide that these prophets were parties to any league of priests, or others to fabricate falsehood in the name of God.

Let us next inquire whether there exists any link, or bond of union, between the records of Moses, those of the other prophets, and those of the New Testament writings, writers. If we shall find one common line of thought interwoven throughout the law and the prophets and the New Testament writings, which cover a period of fifteen hundred years, this, taken in connection with the character of the writers, will be a good reason for admitting their claim that they were divinely inspired, particularly if the theme common to all of them is a grand and noble one, comporting well with what sanctified common sense teaches regarding the character and attributes of God.

THE BIBLE ONE AND HARMONIOUS

This we do find: One plan, spirit, aim and purpose pervades the entire book. Its opening pages record the creation and fall of man; its closing pages tell of man's recovery from the fall' and its intervening pages show the successive steps of the plan of God for the accomplishment of this purpose. The harmony, yet contrast, of the first three and the last three chapters of the Bible is striking.

The one describes the first creation, the other the renewed or restored creation, with sin and its penal curse removed; the one shows Satan and evil entering the world to deceive and destroy, the other shows his work undone, the destroyed ones restored, evil extinguished and Satan destroyed; the one shows the dominion lost by Adam, the other shows it restored and forever established by Christ, and God's will done on earth as in heaven; the one shows sin the producing cause of degradation, shame and death, the other shows the reward of righteousness to be glory, honor and life.

Though written by many pens, at various times, under different circumstances, the Bible is not merely a collection of moral precepts, wise maxims and words of comfort. It is more; it is a reasonable, philosophical and harmonious statement of the causes of present evil in the world, its only remedy and the final results as seen by divine wisdom, which saw the end of the plan from before its beginning, marking as well the pathway of God's people, and upholding and strengthening them with exceeding great and precious promises, to be realized in due time.

The teaching of Genesis, that man was tried in a state of original perfection in one representative, that he failed, and that the present imperfection, sickness and death are the results, but that God has not forsaken him, and will ultimately recover him through the Redeemer, born of a woman. (Gen. 3:15), is kept up and elaborated all the way through. The necessity of the death of a redeemer as a sacrifice for sins, and of his righteousness as a covering for our sin, is pointed out in the clothing of skins for Adam and Eve, in the acceptance of Abel's offerings, in Isaac on the altar, in the death of the various sacrifices by which the patriarchs had access to God, and of those instituted under the law and perpetuated throughout the Jewish age.

JESUS IN PROPHECY

The prophets, though credited with understanding but slightly the significance of some of their utterances, (1 Pet. 1:12) mention the laying of the sins upon a person instead of a dumb animal, and in prophetic vision they see him who is to redeem and to deliver the race led "as a lamb to the slaughter," that "the chastisement of our peace was upon him," and that "by his stripes we are healed." They pictured him as "despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," and declared that "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." (Isa. 53:3-6) They told where this deliverer would be born (Mic. 5:2), and when he should die, assuring us that it would be "not for himself." (Dan. 9:26). They mention various peculiarities concerning him, that he would be "righteous" and free from "deceit," "violence," or any just cause of death (Isa. 53:9-11); that he would be betrayed for thirty pieces of silver (Zech. 11:12; that he would be numbered among transgressors in his death (Isa. 53:12); that not a bone of him should be broken (Psa. 34:20; John 19:36); and that though he should die and be buried, his flesh would not corrupt, neither would he remain in the grave. (Psa. 16:20, Acts 2:31)

The New Testament writers clearly and forcibly, yet simply, record the fulfillment of all these predictions in Jesus of Nazareth, and by logical reasonings show that such a ransom price as he gave was needful, as already predicted in the law and the prophets, before the sins of the world could be blotted out. (Isa. 1:18) They trace the entire plan in a most logical and forcible manner, appealing neither to the prejudices nor to the passions of their hearers, but to their enlightened reason alone, furnishing some of the most remarkably close and cogent reasoning to be found anywhere on any subject. See Rom. 5:12-19, and onward to the 12th chapter.

Moses, in the law, pointed not alone to a sacrifice, but also to the blotting out of sins and a blessing of the people under this great deliverer, whose power and authority he declares shall vastly exceed his own, though it should be "like unto" it. (Deut. 18:15-19) The promised deliverer is to bless not only Israel, but through Israel "all the families of the earth." (Gen. 12:3; 22:18; 26:4) And, notwithstanding the prejudices of the Jewish people to the contrary, the prophets continue the same strain, declaring that the Messiah shall be also "for a light to lighten the Gentiles" (Isa. 49:6; Luke 2:32); that the Gentiles should come to him "from the ends of the earth (Jer. 16:19); that his name "shall be great among the Gentiles" (Mal. 1:11); and that "the glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall see it together." Isa. 40:5; 42:1-7.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE APOSTLES

The New Testament writers claim a divine anointing, which enabled them to realize the fulfillment of the prophecies concerning the sacrifice of Christ. They, though prejudiced as Jews to think of every blessing as limited to their own people (Acts 11:1-18), were enabled to see that, while their nation would be blessed, all the families of the earth should be blessed also, with and through them. They saw also that, before the blessing of either Israel or the world, a selection would be made of a "little flock" from both Jews and Gentiles, who, being tried, would be found worthy to be made joint heirs of the glory and honor of the Great Deliverer, and sharers with him of the honor of blessing Israel and all the nations. Rom. 2:17.

These writers point out the harmony of this view with what is written in the Law and the Prophets; and the grandeur and breadth of the plan they present more than meets the most exalted conception of what it purports to be, "Good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people."

The thought of Messiah as a ruler of not only Israel, but also of the world, suggested in the books of Moses, is the theme of all the prophets. The thought of the kingdom was uppermost also in the teaching of the apostles; and Jesus taught that we should pray, "Thy Kingdom come," and promised those a share in it who would first suffer for the truth, and thus prove themselves worthy.

This hope of the coming glorious kingdom gave all the faithful ones courage to endure persecution and to suffer reproach, deprivation and loss, even unto death. And in the grand allegorical prophecy which closes the New Testament, the worthy "Lamb that was slain" (Rev. 5:12) the worthy "overcomers" whom he will make kings and priests in his Kingdom, and the trials and obstacles which they must overcome to be worthy to share that Kingdom, are all faithfully portrayed. Then are introduced symbolic representations of the blessing to accrue to the world under that Millennial reign, when Satan shall be bound and Adamic death and sorrow wiped out, and when all the nations of earth shall walk in the light of the heavenly Kingdom the new Jerusalem.

THE BIBLE UNIQUE AMONG BOOKS

The Bible, from first to last, holds out a doctrine found nowhere else, and in opposition to the theories of all the heathen religions, that a future life for the dead will come through a resurrection of the dead. All the inspired writers expressed their confidence in a redeemer and one declares that "in the morning," when God shall call them from the tomb, and they shall come forth, the wicked shall no longer hold the rulership of earth for "the upright shall have dominion over them, in the morning." (Psa. 4:14). The resurrection of the dead is taught by the prophets; and the writers of the New Testament base all their hopes of a future life and blessing upon it. Paul expresses it thus: "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain; then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept; for as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive." 1 Cor. 15:13-22.

Like a watch, whose many wheels might at first seem superfluous, but whose slowest moving wheels are essential, so the Bible, composed of many parts, and prepared by many pens, is one complete and harmonious whole. Not a single part is superfluous, and though some parts take a more active and prominent place than others, all are useful and necessary. It is becoming popular among the so-called "advanced thinkers" and "great theologians" of the present day to treat lightly, or to ignore if they do not deny, many of the "miracles" of the Old Testament, calling them "old wives' fables." Of these are the accounts of Jonah and the great fish, Noah and the ark, Eve and the serpent, the standing still of the sun at the command of Joshua, and Balaam's speaking ass.

Seemingly these wise men overlook the fact that the Bible is so interwoven and united in its various parts that to tear from it these miracles, or to discredit them is to destroy or discredit the whole. For if the original accounts are false, those who repeated them were either falsifiers or dupes, and in either case it would be impossible for us to accept their testimony as divinely inspired. To eliminate from the Bible the miracles mentioned would invalidate the testimony of its principal writers, as well as that of our Lord Jesus.

MIRACLES WITH US DAILY

Those miracles, not common to our experience, find parallels about us every day which, being more common, are passed by unnoticed. We plant two seeds side by side; the conditions, air, water and soil, are alike; they grow, we cannot tell how nor can the wisest philosopher explain this miracle. These seeds develop organisms of opposite tendencies; one creeps, the other stands erect, form, flower, coloring, everything differs, though the conditions were the same. Such miracles manifest a power as much beyond our own, and beyond our limited intelligence, as the few miracles recorded in the Bible for special purposes, and as intended illustrations of omnipotence, and of the ability of the Great Creator to overcome every obstacle and to accomplish all his will even to our promised resurrection from the dead, the extermination of evil, and the ultimate reign of everlasting righteousness.

Here we rest the case. The depth, the power, the wisdom and scope of the Bible's testimony convince us that not man, but the Almighty God, is the author of its plans and revelations.

HARMONY OF THE SCRIPTURES

Pastor C. T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., preached twice today in Infantry Hall to large audiences. We report his evening discourse as follows:

Continuing our examination of the eternal evidences of the reliability of the Bible, we consider this evening the center of the divine message, "Jesus Christ the Righteous." No other name in the world's history fills such a place as the name of Jesus. His character and His message have met the demands of the human heart, and satisfied its longings as nothing else ever did or could do. And this notwithstanding the fact that the world and but a comparatively small proportion of the church have ever caught more than a passing glimpse of the divine plan which centers in this "Son of God."

The Bible may be said to be a revelation of Jesus, who in turn is a revelation of the Father. Its opening pages tell us of the fall of the first human Son of God, Adam, point to the death penalty upon him, and indicate the need of a Savior and Redeemer and more than this, inferentially promise such an one as the seed of the woman who ultimately shall bruise the serpent's head, crush, subdue all evil. Its intermediate pages are prophecies and types respecting Jesus and the work he would accomplish as a redeemer, and later as a deliverer of the race. And further on it records his birth, his ministries, His death, resurrection, glorification, and the messages he gave to all who would become His followers, including His promise to come again and receive them unto Himself. The closing pages of the Bible picture in symbolical language the completion of the present age, the inauguration of the millennial age, the work that it will accomplish in the blessing and uplifting of the human family and the ultimate purging of the earth from all sin, imperfection, evil, when every voice in heaven and earth shall be heard praising the Lord.

We submit to intelligent minds the proposition that no other book no other record, no other combination of writings and sermons by scores of preachers and teachers, covering a period of thousands of years, present any such harmony as the foregoing. And this harmony centering the divine plan upon Jesus, the Messiah, is the more wonderful in proportion as the minutia of the scriptural statements respecting Him are clearly discerned. But in order to appreciate these scriptural statements, in order to see the beauty and harmony of the word of God, we must divest ourselves of the teachings of the dark ages, which becloud the beauties of the divine word and tend to make its statements of no effect yea, worse than that, tend to make the divine record appear unreasonable, contradictory, non-sensical. Let us, then, divest our minds of the traditions of the ancients so carefully handed down to us in the various creeds, Catholic and Protestant, and let us look to the word of the Lord for the instruction and guidance necessary to see its beauty and harmony.

ALL THINGS WERE MADE BY HIM

The teachings of higher criticism are very misleading on this subject. They would have us consider that all miracles are impossible; that our Lord was born as other men; that He happened to be a rather superior type of man; that He never had a pre-human existence. The scriptures teach to the contrary of this most explicitly, that Jesus was the "Son of God;" that "He left the glory which He had with the Father before the world was;" that "He who was rich for our sakes became poor," taking a human form for a particular, specific purpose—"for the suffering of death," that He might be our Redeemer. John 17:5; 2 Cor. 8:9; Heb. 2:9.

The inspired writers go further and declare, "All things were made by Him and without Him was not one thing made that was made." The context tells us that He was in the beginning with the Father, and was the word or mouthpiece and personal representative of the Father in all the work of the creation of all the remainder of the works of God. Our common translation of John 1:1-3 only partly discloses the beauty and force of the Greek original, which should be rendered thus, "In the beginning was the logos (the divine mouthpiece, the representative), and the logos was with the God and the logos was a God, the same was in the beginning with the God. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not one thing made that was made."

TO US THERE IS BUT ONE GOD

We should note in passing the consistency of the scriptures in respect to the supremacy of Jehovah God. From first to last with one voice the scriptures declare that there is but one supreme in the universe. For instance, in the Lord's address to His people Israel, He said, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord your God is one, Jehovah." (Deut. 6:4) On every reasonable occasion the Israelites were warned against recognizing any but one supreme God. The new testament is in thorough agreement with this, as for instance, the Apostle Paul's words "To us there is one God, the Father... and one Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 8:6.

How comes it then that the record is that Jesus, our Master, in his pre-human condition was the logos, a God with the God? Is this testimony out of accord with the remainder of scriptural testimony? We answer, No! The name Jehovah was never permitted to any but the one, the Father supreme; but the title God, which in the Hebrew is Elohim, and sometimes abbreviated El, signifies a mighty one, and might be applied to any mighty one in authority and power, Jehovah Himself being superior to all Elohim.

An examination of the scriptural uses of the word Elohim substantiates the foregoing. We find, for instance, that it has not only been applied to the Father and to the special representatives and prime minister, the logos, the Son of God manifest in the flesh, but we find also that the word is used in respect to angels when they directly represented the Lord as His special messengers, they who are His mighty ones. We find also that this title Elohim was used in respect to the first elders of Israel when God recognized them as His representatives in judging their brethren. For instance, see Ex. 21:6, "Bring him unto the judges" (elohim); 22:8, "Brought unto the judges" (elohim) 9, "Come before the judges" (elohim), "and whom the judges" (elohim); 28, "Thou shalt not revile the gods (elohim), margin, judges.

Similarly we read God's declaration to Moses, "I have made thee a God (elohim) to Pharaoh." (Ex. 7:1.) From these illustrations and others which we might give it will be seen that the word elohim signifies instead of God a representative of God. Sometimes, when the true God is mentioned in connection with other Gods or representatives or counterfeits, He is called the Almighty God, or by His name, Jehovah God, but at other times where the sense is evident or no particular emphasis is necessary, the very same word is used in referring to Jehovah and to those who are His representatives. For instance, in Psa. 82:1 we read, "God (elohim) standeth in the congregation of the mighty (El) He judgeth among the Gods (elohim)." In verse six of the same Psalm the Almighty (Elohim) prophetically addresses the Gospel church, who throughout the scriptures are called the Sons of God. We read, "I have said, ye are gods (elohim), all of you sons of the Highest."

NOW ARE WE THE SONS OF GOD

It will be remembered that the Jews were angry with our Lord Jesus, not because He called Himself Jehovah or intimated any usurpation of the Father's place, honors or prerogatives, but simply because he called himself the Son of God and referred to Jehovah God as His Father. On one occasion when they were about to stone Him, Jesus inquired why, and the Answer--was that in calling Himself the Son of God He was affecting to be superior to them and to others of mankind, and affecting a relationship with the great Jehovah which they termed blasphemy, because they said it was affecting an equality with Jehovah; but our Lord contradicted that thought, and pointed out to them that the claim to be the Son of God was not to put Himself on an equality with Jehovah, but that the scriptures fully sanctioned such a title as the Son of God.

Jesus referred them to the passage in the 6th Psalm already quoted, "I have said, Ye are gods." (elohim) Our Lord's logical suggestion is that if God himself, through the prophet David, gave the name, the title of gods, thus to human beings, to the followers of Christ, to the church of this gospel age, why should it be considered blasphemous that the special Son of God, whom the Father had specially set apart and sent into the world as His representative, should be called the Son of God. His persecutors were unable to Answer--Him, nor can any logical objection be found to our Redeemer's words. He was indeed pre-eminently the representative of Jehovah and pre-eminently He was His Son

WHAT AND WHERE IS PURGATORY?

Pastor C. T. Russell of Allegheny, Pa., preached twice here yesterday. One discourse was his Answer--to infidelity entitled, "To Hell and Back. Who are There? Hope for the recovery of many." The other discourse was from 1 Cor. 5:5, "To deliver such an one to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

Luther, Zwingli and others of the early reformers withdrew from the doctrines of Roman Catholicism because they believed them to be erroneous because they believed that they had found clearer and truer light in the word of God. But, alas, they brought with them at least a partial truth. We do not wish to give the impression that we have any sympathy whatever with the Roman Catholic view of purgatory that all Roman Catholic believers (except the merest handful of saints) are saved from an eternity of torture by being put into an inferno, there to suffer physical torture for years or for centuries, and of more or less severity according to the heinousness of their sins and the carelessness of their earthly friends in the matter of paying for masses whereby they might be sooner relieved and granted access to heaven.

It was probably because the reformers felt a righteous indignation against all thought of masses for the sins of the dead, against all thought that anything could make atonement for sins except the precious blood of Christ, that they rejected the doctrine of purgatory so absolutely and adopted instead the thoroughly inconsistent theory that only the handful of saints would ever reach heaven and that the great mass of the human family would experience endless torture.

ONLY THE PURE ENTER HEAVEN

Our common sense corroborates the word of Jesus, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God," and again the Apostle's words to the saints, "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." (Matt. 5:8; 1 John 3:2.) But the acceptance of this reasonable scriptural view leaves Protestants in a sad dilemma. On the one hand they know that remarkably few are saintly, "pure in heart," that remarkably few live or "walk not after the flesh but after the spirit," and that these few would not take in very many of their dear ones of earthly relationship, nor very many of their friends of the nominal church relationship either. It is impossible for them to think of these as all going to a hopeless eternity of torture when they realize that many of them have never really had the eyes of their understanding opened to see, to know, to appreciate the Lord and the message of his grace; and that many others, millions upon millions, of humanity, have never heard of God or of the Lord Jesus or of the gospel message in the most indefinite and remote sense.

But as they cannot think of these going to eternal torment, in their measurable or total ignorance of God and the companionship of the holy angels and an eternity of bliss. What would heaven be anyway if, mixed with its angelic hosts and handfuls of saints, there were nearly 20,000,000,000 of Adam's race who died without being saints, and many of them in absolute darkness and ignorance what kind of a place would heaven be composed of such an incongruous mass? What an amount of teaching and labor and teaching would be necessary to bring these savage, brutal, unregenerate ones into full accord with the divine character and law. The very thought suggests to us a pandemonium in heaven worse than anything by far that we have known on earth, because here the scenes are gradually changing and the worst as well as the best are continually passing off the stage of action, while there, according to the general thought on the subject, the numbers of heathen and otherwise darkened ones are being increased by 90,000 deaths every day. Every reasoning mind must conclude that either there is some great mistake in this theory or else that heaven will not be one tenth as desirable a place to go to as we had hoped.

BIBLE TEACHES TWO PURGATORIES

It may seem a startling thought to some Protestants that the Bible teaches distinctly two different purgatories one for the church the other for the world. The world's judgment and purgatory lie beyond the second coming of Christ. Meantime, as the Scriptures distinctly show, the world of mankind in general at death go to sheol, to hades, to the grave, to the tomb, to the state of death, where they are utterly unconscious until their awakening shall occur during the Millennial age. Then they will come forth from the tomb for their purgatorial experiences on the earth, the object and purpose of those experiences being their reformation that they may all come to a knowledge of the Lord and to a full, complete salvation from sin and death. We will consider these and the character of their purgations further on. We must first examine in some detail the church's purgatory, which is open and in full operation at the present time.

Be it understood that the church consists not of everyone who has heard of Jesus nor of everyone who believes that he is the Son of God. The church, according to the Bible, consists only of those who have renounced sin and accepted the merit of Christ's atoning sacrifice as their ransom price, and who, under Christ's robe of imputed righteousness, have approached the Father through him and presented their bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable to God and their reasonable service. (Rom. 12:1) This class, accepted of God through Christ, are begotten of the Holy Spirit and reckoned as new creatures. They at once are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, with the assurance that their names will never be blotted out if they remain faithful to their pledge, their covenant, their consecration. These have a crown of life apportioned to them, with the promise that if they are faithful the crowns shall be theirs and not be given to another. (Rev. 3:5,11; 2:10.) These, as the apostle explains, are forthwith in the school of Christ, to be taught of him, the lessons and experiences necessary to their attainment of the glory, honor and immortality promised to the faithful.

They are forewarned to expect that there will be trials and difficult lessons in this school; that every son whom the Father receiveth must need have chastisements and schoolings, lessons, experiences in life, to teach him the way of the Lord more perfectly, to help him to conquer his own self-will, and to cultivate the fruits and graces of the spirit exemplified in his great teacher, our Lord. These experiences the Apostle Peter refers to saying, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials that shall try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you." (1 Pet. 4:12). If rightly informed as to what we are undertaking when we become disciples of Jesus we would know to expect fiery trials and disciplines, and that we are in the school of Christ for the very purpose of learning these lessons. Nevertheless while under going these fiery trials, all the faithful are assured that they may enjoy the while the peace of God which passeth all understanding ruling in their hearts. Such as are faithful have no need to be put into purgatory, for they joyfully and thankfully accept the experiences of life and learn as the Apostle says, to rejoice in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh experience, patience, hope.

DELIVERED OVER TO SATAN

The purgatory for the church is not entered at death, but as soon as any individual in the church, any of the consecrated ones, step aside from their consecration and with a measure of willfulness go into sin and error these are put forthwith into purgatory and our text describes the manner. The context shows us that in the church at Corinth was a brother who not only stepped aside from the properties of the elect but he was inclined to glory in his sins; the apostle assures the other members of the church that they should have rebuked the brother, and if he then failed to reform they should have withdrawn all brotherly relationship from him until he would reform not that they should have misused him or tortured him, but simply that they should have treated him as a worldly man and not as a brother in Christ. After upbraiding them the apostle says that wherein the church failed in its duty, he as an apostle of the Lord would undertake to do this duty for them, and accordingly in this letter he excommunicates the wrongdoer, subject to his reform. His words are that he delivered him over to Satan for buffeting, for the “destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus” at the second coming of Christ.

What did the apostle mean by this expression, “delivered over to Satan?” We reply that the church in God’s providence is especially under Divine care, so that, as the apostle expresses it, the wicked one touches not, injures not, those who are in proper relationship with the Lord as members of the elect church. It is not for us to say what power is granted to Satan in respect to the world; but we have the assurance that the members of the elect church in their every interest are protected by the Lord’s care, so that he can guarantee them that anything that he permits to come upon them will work for their good. But in the case of the evildoer under consideration, he was specially delivered over to Satan that is to say, the apostle wishes us to understand that the Lord’s will respecting such would be that Satan might have special power over them to work them injury, to work them trouble, distress, financial or physical or otherwise. But even this opposition of the adversary would still be subject to the Divine supervision, to the intent, as the apostle explains, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Any punishment approved by the Lord, we may rest assured, are intended to be remedial, reformatory. The man mentioned in our text, then, we may be sure, passed into troublesome experiences at the hands of the great adversary, and in these experiences he was bereft of the fellowship of the church and cut off from the throne of grace, at least temporarily. We cannot be sure that he endured more severe trials and difficulties than did some of the faithful; indeed our Lord and the apostles suffered severely because of their loyalty to truth and righteousness, but in the midst of all their persecutions and sorrows and stripes and experiences and crucifyings they had the holy love, joy and peace divine ruling in their hearts which enabled them to rejoice in all those experiences. But this poor man mentioned in our text had nothing of consolation in his trying experiences, only the bitter reflection that he was now enduring punishment for sin. We may be sure that, according to his appreciation of his wrong course and his desire to return to the Lord and to harmony with righteousness, in that same proportion would his punishment at the hands of the adversary be shortened.

The apostle’s suggestion that his spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus is not an intimation that he might come back into harmony with the Lord and his people at any time, rather he is giving the ultimate design of the matter, namely, that if the evildoer persists in his wrong course it would eventuate in the destruction of his flesh, of his mortal body, instead of its sacrifice, which he had pledged; and that thus, even if it were slowly, he might be recovered from his wrong course and eventually be purged, purified, that he might attain salvation at the second coming of Christ. But on the other hand the Scriptures assure us that if these purgatorial experiences through which such would pass fail of having the effect of purifying them from sin and bringing them back into harmony with God, then they would die the Second Death the spirits would not be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus all means for their recovery from sin would have failed. It is probable that quite a good many of the Lord's people during the past eighteen centuries have passed through Purgatory fiery experiences.

“GREAT TRIBULATION” OF PURGATORY

The Scriptures clearly show that in the closing time of this Gospel Age great light and blessing will be bestowed upon the Lord's people, all of whom are classed as “virgins” pure ones forgiven ones covered with the robe of Christ's righteousness. The light and testing of the end of this age will prove some of these “wise virgins” and some to be “foolish virgins.” The parable which illustrates this is located at the end of this age at the second coming of the Son of man. The wise virgins represent those of the Lord's faithful who will be prepared, and enter into the joys of their Lord as members of the bride of Christ the “Bride, the Lamb's Wife.” (Rev. 21:9.) The foolish virgins, overcharged with the cares of this life, not sufficiently zealous, who do not comply with the terms of their consecration, fail to sacrifice earthly interests in favor of the heavenly ones these are unwise virgins, and in the parable they are represented as being without light because without oil.

The oil of the holy spirit is necessary in our earthen vessels as well as in the lamp, the word of God, and all the children of the light should have the oil abundantly both in themselves and in the word. The foolish virgins are represented as finally getting the light, the oil, the holy spirit, but too late to enter in with the wise virgins to the marriage. They cannot be of the Bride class, therefore, even though they get the necessary oil and light by and by. In the parable they are represented as standing outside the closed door, and are informed that the Lord does not recognize them and that they must have their portion, experiences, in the great time of trouble. That great time of trouble will be their purgatory the time when they will learn what a great mistake they have made in setting their affections too much upon the things of earth and failing to sufficiently set them upon heavenly things.

Thus viewed from the scriptural standpoint the Lord's people are seen in two different phases—(1) Those who live faithfully up to their covenant engagement, and joyfully lay down their lives in sacrifice and service of the truth. (2) Those who, while acknowledging the Lord and holding fast to him, do not live up to their covenant engagements of self sacrifice, and whose flesh therefore must be destroyed if they would be counted worthy of life on any heavenly plane. The purgatorial tribulations upon these is referred to in Revelations 7:9-15. There the Little Flock is represented as completing the elect 144,000 of spiritual Israel a Little Flock. The remainder of spiritual Israel, who finally pass through the purgatorial trial successfully, are declared to be “a great multitude whose numbers no man knoweth (not a predestined number).” These, we are assured, will reach their high position as palm-bearers before the throne (not as crown-wearers in the throne, the position and honor of the Little Flock) by coming through great tribulations and washing their robes and making them white in the blood of the Lamb. Thus symbolically their purification, their perfecting, is set before us. Their spirits are saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

The Apostle Paul refers us to this class again and likens their purification to a fiery ordeal, saying, “The fire of that day shall try every man’s work of what sort it is.” (1 Cor. 3:13). He then pointed out that some of the Lord’s people are building faith and character with gold and silver and precious stones, and that these will obtain a more excellent glory and honor. Others he tells us have built upon the true rock foundation, Christ Jesus, but with a mixture of hay and stubble. Of these he tells us that they shall be saved so as by fire, but their works shall suffer loss: that is to say, they will fail in getting the highest reward, joint-heirship with Christ in the Kingdom, but they will get salvation, everlasting life, after and by means of the purifying fires of trial, difficulty, trouble, through which they will pass. As already intimated, the end of this age is to be such a time of fiery trial, especially upon those who are faint-hearted, laggards. We are assured that upon all Christendom it will be a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation.

The apostle writing to Timothy, refers to two brethren, Hymenaeus and Alexander, who had gone astray from the truth, and says, “Whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme.” 1 Tim. 1:20. It is doubtless because many of the Lord’s people at the present time are not sufficiently reverential toward God and his word and sufficiently zealous for his cause that they will go into the time of trouble, failing to come off “more than conquerors.” The doctrine of eternal torment is as gross a blasphemy against the holy name as could possibly be imagined, yet in this blasphemy are associated a very large portion of those who have consecrated themselves to lay down their lives in defense of the Lord and his cause. While we may excuse many of those on the score of ignorance, we must remember that now the true light on the subject is shining, and that daily the excuse is less and less potent. In the great time of trouble, when all the various systems of men, financial, social, political and religious, will all go down in anarchy, in preparing for the establishment of the Lord's kingdom, then those who have blasphemed the holy name, and others who have been too busy with worldly cares to study the Divine word, will be in sore straits, represented in the Scriptures as "weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth," chagrin and disappointment. In that trouble they will wash their robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb; they will trim their lamps, get the oil which now they lack, and see and understand clearly the true situation and be delivered their spirits saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

THE WORLD'S PURGATORY

The time of trouble with which the present Gospel Age will end and the last members of the consecrated class be tested and proven will also do a work for the world in general. To whatever extent men have not lived up to their best conceptions of right and wrong, the flickering light of nature left them through the fall, and subsequently at times by the light of grace reflected from God's consecrated ones to that extent they are blameworthy and deserve stripes or punishment of a purgatorial kind, and will surely get them. But whatever proportion of their misconduct is due to ignorance and superstition, the results of the fall, in themselves or in others, to that extent their wrong doing is pardonable and excusable under the Divine arrangement through the blood of Christ. The world-wide trouble already referred to serves as a purgatorial flame to purge the world in general of much of the sin and shame which now it licenses and approves.

The plowshare of trouble will cut deep furrows through human hearts, breaking up fallow ground and making the world of mankind more ready to hear the voice of peace and reconciliation from him who speaketh from heaven, the great Mediator, the great Christ our Lord Jesus the Head, the church His body, His bride. The Scriptures teach that the entire Millennial age will be a period of judgments or disciplines disciplines and punishments for wrong doing and wrong intending, and of rewards for every right intention and effort. Thus the entire Millennial age will be a period of world's purgatory. At its beginning sin and degradation will cause shame and contempt, but as the great King of Glory and his associate judges (1 Cor. 6:2) shall progress with the work of judging, disciplining, uplifting and restoring the poor fallen race from its conditions of sin and degradation and death, marvelous changes will go on daily, hourly, until finally, at the close of that period of purgation and discipline and correction in righteousness, all will have been brought to perfection who were willing to return, and of the others it will be true as written, "It shall come to pass that the soul will not hear (obey) that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts 3:23.

At the close of that world's day of purgatory, having accomplished the work intended of the Father, Christ will deliver up the kingdom, the rule of the earth, to God, even the Father. The elect church will still be His bride and co-laborers with Him in His further honor, glory and service, while the remainder of mankind, as many as will receive the grace of God, the gift of life eternal, on God's terms, being absolutely perfect, will need no mediator, no intermediary to cover blemishes for them. Satan, who will be bound through out that thousand years of the world's purgatory, will be loosed then that he may test and try all those perfect ones of the human family as at first he was permitted to try and test our first parents in their perfection. As many as will then yield to error and disobedience will die the second death, while all the remainder, perfectly proven and tested, will have the gift of eternal life at the hands of their creator, having attained it through the merit of him who loved us and bought us with his precious blood by his sacrifice and afterwards by the purgatorial experiences through which they will pass under his loving care.

PASTOR RUSSELL IN PULPIT IN THE SOUTH

A convention of "Believers in the Atonement Sacrifice of Christ `a ransom for all'" has been held here during three days in the Casino, our immense auditorium. Pastor C. T. Russell, of Alleg-heny, spoke twice, one of the discourses was based on 1 John 2:15; as follows:

Our text clearly indicates that there are two kinds of love in the world, with votaries for each the love for the world versus the love for God. The two are stated to be opposites to such a degree that they cannot be blended. We must be on one side or on the other side. As our Lord on one occasion declared, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon," and as the Apostle declared "his servants ye are to whom ye render service." Matt. 6:24; Rom. 6:16.

So then, dear friends, we who are assembled here are either servants of God or servants of Mammon, and are possessed of one or the other spirit the spirit of the world, which loves the world, or the spirit of Truth, which delights to do the Father's will. It is important that we get this clearly before our minds, as we live in a day when theological teachings are very much mixed, confused, and almost anything passes for Christianity that has with it some degree of respectability, and anything not classed by the world as respectable and in accord with its sentiments is styled fanaticism. From this standpoint of worldly criticism, from the standpoint of Churchianity, our Lord was a fanatic, also the apostles were fanatics, and Luther, Melancthon, Bunyan, Calvin, Knox, were all fanatics. I hope, dear friends, that we by the grace of God are counted worthy to be numbered with these fanatics.

ALL GAINED NEW SWEETNESS

Did the Holy Spirit, speaking through the Apostle, mean to teach us that we should not love those things in the world that are beautiful, beautiful prospects, flowers, birds, etc., etc. Some in times past and at present take this view and go into cloisters, nunneries, monasteries, etc., and shut themselves away from things beautiful and pleasing to their senses. Not only are there such orders amongst Roman Catholics, but also amongst Episcopalians, and a few holiness people in all denominations of Protestants are inclined to feel that if they take pleasure in anything of an earthly kind it signifies sin in the sight of God. It was along this line that the Puritans of New England passed the laws which even forbade a parent to kiss his child on the Lord's day, and which in its strictest interpretation almost implied that a smile or a happifying thought was a sin. It is in harmony with this view of matters that the poet wrote, and that our old hymn books used to contain, the hymn which reads:

*“Sweet prospects, sweet birds and sweet flowers
Have all lost their sweetness to me.”*

Those who have taken such a view of life have usually done so from a misunderstanding of our text and others of similar import. In our understanding long-facedness is not piety, sour and sullen thoughts are not pleasing to the Lord neither beneficial to our hearts. Quite to the contrary, as we endeavored to show in our discourse of last Sunday, the Lord's people are to be full of good cheer on all occasions, because they realize that all things are working for their good.

In a hymn book of our arrangement we incorporated the beautiful hymn above referred to, but changed its entire sentiment so that it reads:

*“Sweet prospects, sweet birds and sweet flowers,
Have all gained new sweetness to me.”*

From this you will perceive, dear friends, that it is not our thought that our text signifies that moroseness, a lack of appreciation of the world's beautiful things, is what our Lord wished to inculcate. Properly then we inquire, what does our text mean when it says, Love not the world? What is there in the world to attract our attention aside from the birds, flowers, landscapes, etc.? What else could be meant by the world? We reply that the world as it came from the hands of the Creator was pronounced very good, and was certainly intended to be appreciated and enjoyed by all creatures in harmony with the Creator. The word world in our text is from the Greek Kosmos, and signifies the present order of things, especially the social and moral conditions including financial, political and social arrangements.

THE PRESENT EVIL WORLD

The Scriptures everywhere contrast what they denominate this world or present order of things with the world to come or future order of things, assuring us that the present social order or arrangement is imperfect, unsatisfactory, sinful and that it must give place in God's due time to the perfect order or arrangement, under the dominion of the Millennial Kingdom of Christ, for which we pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." It is in accord with this that the Apostle speaks of the present conditions as the present evil world, and refers to the future conditions of things as "the world to come in which dwelleth righteousness." The thought then prevalent throughout the Scriptures is that unrighteousness is reigning or governing amongst men at the present time, and will hold sway until the second coming of Christ who will overthrow the present order of things and establish the reign of righteousness, the world or order of things promised to come.

Many in the world are totally unable to see why present conditions should be designated "evil." It suits them well enough. They would be sorry to see it discontinued or set aside or changed in any manner lest the results to themselves would be less favorable. It is mainly the poor that are unsatisfied with the present state of affairs, that long for more favorable opportunities for still brighter prospects for themselves and their posterity. It is only as we become the Lord's people that we are able to see matters in their true light, because after we have been inducted into the school of Christ, and begin to be taught of him, the eyes of our understanding open more widely and our hearts fill more thoroughly with the sentiments of love and benevolence.

From this new standpoint, both rich and poor alike, can see the situation, because both may see it from the Divine standpoint. They do not see it exactly alike, but they both see light in His light and approximately see eye to eye.

They see that only a fragment of mankind possesses the wealth, the honors, the distinctions of the world at the present time; they see that these are not distributed according to the real character and morality of the individual who possesses them. Their sentiments are expressed in the Scriptures in the words, "Now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered, and again, "The wicked have more than heart could wish." Mal. 3:15; Psa. 73:7

It is far from our heart to proclaim against riches and honors, positions and authorities. It is far from our intention to set forth that all riches are unjustly, unrighteously acquired, and that the rich of the world are the most lacking in principle, the most deficient in respect to justice. Quite to the contrary, we know rich men who are naturally disposed to be noble-minded and generous, while we know of poor people much more selfish, much more grasping, and who if possessed of the same opportunities and power and riches would use them much less generously, much less equitably.

SOCIAL CONDITIONS DISORDERED

Our thought on the subject is expressed by the Psalmist when he declares that “all the foundations of the earth are out of course.” (Psa. 82:5.) His words mean that all the basic principles of the present social structure are distorted out of proper relationship to each other, are in confusion. Society for centuries has been endeavoring to serve its interests as wisely as possible, yet selfishness inherent in the entire human family since the fall affects, influences, warps and twists the judgment on every subject. As a consequence, while it has endeavored to have matters right and just and true, while it has endeavored as a whole to regulate its affairs on lines of justice, sympathy, truth and equity, nevertheless individual selfishness and class preference have distorted the whole arrangement, until we have the conditions which prevail today.

We are not by any means saying that present conditions are intolerable, nor that they are the worst that could be imagined. Much indeed could be said in favor of what has already been attained in the way of laws, regulations, etc. Indeed the judicial mind is astounded at the character of the laws that are upon the statute books of our civilized lands and surprised at how well these laws are executed. Nevertheless, as is the case with all human arrangements, changes are continually in progress, and the selfishness of heart which is innate to all permits each one who has opportunity and discernment of mind to grasp the special blessings for themselves rather than to distribute them equally with all. We are not so much finding fault with those who possess wealth, but our claim is that the present order of the whole world is unsatisfactory, that it does not work equitably for the blessing of the whole world, that it fosters class distinctions, that it favors the few who have the superior intellects, and especially those who by fortune or wisdom have attained the blessings of influence and power and authority. The history of the whole world shows that this condition of things is bound to continue so long as selfishness reigns in the human heart and so long as the present order of society continues.

We are not advocating political, social and financial doctrines, revolution, etc. Quite to the contrary, we claim that the present condition of things as a whole is about as good as it is possible for men to make it. We hold that any attempt to establish socialism, and to deprive the most intelligent and most wealthy of the advantages which they possess, would result in violent trouble and anarchy; and that on the whole the best that the poor world can do for itself is to seek to hold matters as nearly level, as nearly equitable as possible without provoking the anarchy and strife to get all of the riches and liberty and justice properly belonging to the whole world into their hands so far as this can be done along peaceable lines.

BLOOD SPRINKLING OF THE PASSOVER

Pastor C. T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., preached here twice yesterday. The opera house was crowded to hear his defense of the Bible entitled, "To Hell and Back." We report the morning discourse from the text, "Ye shall take a bunch of hyssop and dip it in the blood that is in the basin and strike the lintel and the two side posts with the blood that is in the basin; and none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning. For the Lord will pass through to smite the Egyptians; and when He seeth the blood upon the lintel, and on the two side posts, the Lord will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you." Ex. 12:22, 23

The Passover season draws near its beginning, as celebrated by the Jews, on the 29th of this month; but the interest of Christians centers especially in the slaying of the lamb, which preceded the Passover feast, and their celebration therefore properly begins on the evening of March 28th. We greatly regret, however, that while millions of Christians and Jews will in some formal ceremonies and in a perfunctory manner celebrate this great event of history but few of either religion discern the real signification of the celebrations.

THE PASSOVER INSTITUTED

Could their minds be awakened thoroughly to the true significance it would mean a religious revival such as the world has never yet known. But, alas! as the apostle declares, The god of this world has blinded the minds of many, and even some whose eyes of understanding are partially opened he describes as being blind and unable to see afar off, or holden and unable to see the deep things of God in respect to these ceremonies, which have been celebrated in the world, for now more than 3,300 years. And, by the way, it must be admitted even by the higher critics and agnostics in general that an event so prominently marked, widely observed for so long a time, must have a foundation in fact.

There must have been just such an occurrence in Egypt; the first born of Egypt must have perished in that tenth plague, and the first-born of Israel must have been preserved free from it all that observed the rule to remain under the blood else this widespread celebration of the event would have been inexplicable.

I need not remind you of the particulars connected with the institution that the Israelites were held in a measure of serfdom by the Egyptians, and that when the time, in the Lord's providence, arrived for their deliverance, their masters sought selfishly to maintain their bondage and refused to let them go forth to the land of Canaan. One after another the Lord sent during the year nine different plagues upon the people of the land of Egypt, relieving them one after another when their king craved mercy and made promises which he afterwards broke. Finally the servant of the Lord, Moses, announced a great crowning disaster that the first-born in every family of Egypt would die in one night, and that in the home of the humblest peasant as well as in the home of the king there should be mourning, as a result of which they would be glad finally to yield and let the Israelites go yea, urge them to go, and in haste, lest the Lord should ultimately bring death upon the entire people if their king continued to harden his heart and resist the divine mandate.

The first three plagues were common to all Egypt, including the district in which the Israelites resided; the next six plagues affected not the district occupied by the Israelites; and the last, the tenth plague was declared to be common to the entire land of Egypt, including the land of the Israelites, except as the latter should show faith and obedience by providing a sacrificial lamb whose blood should be sprinkled upon the sides and lintel of their doorways and whose flesh was to be eaten in the same night, with bitter herbs and unleavened bread, the eaters standing staff in hand and girded ready for the journey with full expectancy that the Lord would smite the first-born of the Egyptians with death and make them willing to let the Israelites go and with full faith also, that they would share in this calamity were it not for the blood upon their door-posts and lintels. As our text declares, this was the express command of the Lord.

WHEN HE SEETH THE BLOOD

The Israelites were commanded to celebrate this as the first feature of the Jewish law and one of their greatest memorials as a nation. As a matter of fact, we find that in some degree the Passover is celebrated by Jews in all parts of the world even by those who claim to be agnostics and infidels. They still have a measure of respect for it as an ancient custom. But is it not strange that, with the bright minds which many of them possess, our Jewish friends have never thought it worth while to inquire the meaning of this celebration? Why was the lamb slain and eaten? Why was the blood sprinkled upon the door posts and lintels? Because God so commanded, of course; but what reason, motive, object or lesson was there behind the Divine command? Truly a reasonable God has reasonable commands and in due time will be willing that his faithful people should understand the significance of every requirement. Why are the Hebrews indifferent to this subject? Why does prejudice hold their minds? It is for them to answer, and, answering, to get light and joy from the knowledge.

Although Christianity has the Answer--to this question we regret that the majority of Christians, because of carelessness, would be unable to give a reason and ground for any hope in connection with this matter. If the Jew can realize that his Sabbath day is a type of foreshadowing of a coming epoch of rest and blessing and release from toil, sorrow and death, why can he not see that similarly all the features of the Mosaic institution were intended by the Lord to be typical foreshadowings of various blessings, to be bestowed in due time? Why can it not be discerned by all that the Passover lamb typified, represented, the Lamb of God? that its death represented the death of Jesus, the just for the unjust? and that the application of its blood symbolizes, represents, the application of the merit of the death of Jesus to the entire household of faith? Blessed are those whose eyes see that Jesus was indeed "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world" that the cancellation of the world's sin is effected by the payment of man's penalty that as the whole world lost divine favor and came under divine sentence of death with its concomitants of sorrow and pain, it was necessary before this sentence or curse could be removed that a satisfaction of justice should be made, and that therefore, as the Apostle declares, Christ died for our sins the just for the unjust, that He might bring us back to God. Thus He opened up a new and living way a new way to life everlasting.

A KIND OF FIRST-FRUITS

Those familiar with the Bible have noticed that therein the Church of Christ is called the Church of the First-Born and again a kind of first-fruits unto God of His creatures. (Heb. 12:23; Jas. 1:18.) This implies others ultimately of God's family later born; it implies after-fruits. Christian people seem to have overlooked these Scriptures so far as making application of them is concerned, and have generally come to believe that only those who are of the first-fruits will ever be saved, and that there will be no after-fruits. But let us look at this type of the Passover let us notice that it was God's intention to save all Israelites, and that as a nation they represented all mankind that will ever come into harmony with God and be granted eternal life in the land of promise. Let us notice that there were two passovers: a great one, when the whole nation by divine power was miraculously delivered by the Lord and led by a sandbar across the channel of the Red Sea especially prepared for them by the accentuation of winds and tides.

That picture or type shows the ultimate deliverance from the power of sin and Satan of every creature who will ultimately come into accord with the Lord and desires to render Him worship not an Israelite was left behind. But that passover at the Red Sea is not the one we are discussing particularly on this occasion not the one we are about to celebrate. No, the event which we celebrate was merely the passing over or sparing of the first-borns of Israel. Only the first-born were endangered, though the deliverance of all depended upon the salvation of the first-born. Applying this in harmony with all the Scriptures we see that the Little Flock, the first-fruits unto God of His creatures, the Church of the First-Born alone, is being spared at the present time being passed over, provided they are under the blood. We see that the remainder of mankind who may desire to enlist and to follow the great antitypical Moses when He shall ultimately lead the people forth from the bondage of sin and death are not now endangered merely the first-born.

THE CHURCH OF THE FIRST-BORNS

The first-born—"The Church of the First-Born" are those of mankind who in advance of the remainder have had the eyes of their understanding opened to a realization of their condition of bondage and their need of deliverance and to God's willingness to fulfill to them His good promises. More than this, they are such as have responded to the grace of God, have made a consecration of themselves to Him and His service, and in return have been begotten by the Holy Spirit. With these first-born ones it is a matter of life and death whether or not they remain in the household of faith behind the blood of sprinkling. For these to go forth would imply a disregard of divine mercy. It would signify that they would do despite to divine goodness, and that, having enjoyed their share of the mercy of God as represented in the blood of the Lamb, they were not appreciative of it. For such the Scriptures declare, "There remaineth no more a sacrifice for their sins," they are to be esteemed as adversaries of God, whose fate was symbolized in the destruction of the first-born of Egypt.

We do not mean to say that the first-born of Egypt who died in that night and any of the first-born of the Israelites who departed from their homes contrary to command and who died therefor we do not mean to say that any of these have gone into the Second Death. Quite to the contrary, we understand that all those matters were types, figures, illustrations, foreshadowings of matters on a higher plane, and that the realities belong to the Church of Christ during this Gospel Age since Pentecost. If we sin willfully after that we have received a knowledge of the truth, after that we have tasted of the good word of God, after that we have been made partakers of the Holy Spirit and thus members of the Church of the First-Born if we should fall away it would be impossible to renew us again to repentance God would have nothing further for us, our disregard of His mercy would mean that we would die the Second Death. From this standpoint the Church of the First-Born, through the begetting of the Holy Spirit and the greater knowledge and privileges they enjoy every way, have a greater responsibility in the world, for they are the only ones as yet in danger of the Second Death. This is the lesson of the type, and applies to Christians only.

By and by the night will have passed, the glorious morn of deliverance will have come and the Christ, the antitypical Moses, will lead forth, will deliver all Israel all the people of God all who when they shall know shall be glad to reverence, honor and obey the will of God. That day of deliverance will be the entire Millennial age, at the close of which all evil and evil doers, symbolized by the hosts of Egypt, will be utterly cut off in the Second Death.

AS OFT AS YE DO THIS

The apostle clearly and positively identifies the Passover lamb with our Lord Jesus, saying, "Christ our Passover is slain for us; therefore let us keep the feast." (1 Cor. 5:7-8) He informs us that we all need the blood of sprinkling, not upon our houses but upon our hearts. (Heb. 12:24; 1 Pet. 1:2) We are also to eat the unleavened bread of truth if we would be strong and prepared for the deliverance in the morning of the new dispensation. We also must eat of the Lamb must appropriate Christ, His merit, the value that was in Him, to ourselves. Thus we put on Christ, not merely by faith, but more and more to the extent of our ability we put on His character and are transformed more and more to His glorious image in our heart. We are to feed upon Him as the Jews fed upon the literal lamb. Instead of the bitter herbs, which aided and whetted their appetites, we have bitter experiences and trials which the Lord provides for us, and which help to wean our affections from earthly things and give us more and more appetite to feed upon the Lamb and the unleavened bread of truth. We, too, are to remember that we have no continuing city, but are en-route as pilgrims, strangers, travelers, staff in hand, girded for the journey, that we may ultimately reach the heavenly Canaan and all the glorious things which God hath in reservation for the Church of the first-born, in association with their Redeemer, as kings and priests unto God.

Our Lord Jesus also fully identified himself with the Passover Lamb. On the same night that He was betrayed, and just preceding His crucifixion, He gathered His disciples in the upper room, saying, "With desire have I desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer.” It was necessary that as Jews they should celebrate the Passover supper on that night the saving of the typical first-born from the typical prince of this world but as soon as the requirements of the type had been fulfilled our Lord instituted a new memorial upon the old foundation, saying, “As often as ye do this (celebrate the Passover annually) do it in remembrance of me!” (1 Cor. 12:24-25) Your Jewish neighbors, whose eyes of understanding have not been opened, will not appreciate the matter in its true antitypical sense, but you who recognize Me as the Lamb of God, who in God’s purpose has been slain from the foundation of the world you who recognize that I am about to give my life as the world’s redemption price, you will note this Passover with peculiar and sacred significance, different from all others. Henceforth you will not celebrate any longer the type but memorialize the antitype, for I am about to die as the Lamb of God, and thus to provide the blood of sprinkling for the Church of the First-Born and meat indeed for the entire household of faith.

THIS IS MY BODY, BROKEN FOR YOU

That the Lord’s followers should no longer gather as the Jews had done previously to eat the literal lamb supper in commemoration of the deliverance in Egypt, our Lord shows by choosing new emblems—“ unleavened bread” and the “fruit of the vine” to represent Him as the Lamb. Thenceforth His followers, in accord with His injunction, celebrated His death as their Passover Lamb every year until after the apostles had fallen asleep in death, and a great falling away had confused the faith of nominal Christendom, producing the epoch known as the “dark ages.” Even during the “dark ages” the teaching that Christ was the antitypical Passover Lamb persisted, though the celebration of His death in the Passover supper which Jesus instituted fell into disuse. It was crowded out by that most terrible blasphemy which has deceived and confused so many millions of Christendom the mass, introduced by Roman Catholicism. This in the Scriptures is called “abomination of desolation,” because of the disastrous influence it has had upon the faith and practice of the Lord’s people. Although Protestants in general have repudiated the mass, as being wholly contrary to the teachings of Christ and the Apostles, nevertheless the practices of Protestants are largely influenced yet by that terrible error, from which they have only partially escaped.

3H316

THE MASS IS NOT THE EUCHARIST

Many protestants will innocently ask, is not the mass merely the Eucharist, the Lord’s Supper, under another name? O, no! we Answer--it is wholly different. The Lord’s Supper celebrates the death of Christ accomplished at Calvary; the mass represents a new sacrifice for sins, made every time it is performed. Our Roman Catholic friends believe that when the priest blesses the bread it becomes the actual body of Christ, in his hands for the very purpose of sacrificing Him afresh. High mass is a particular sacrifice of Christ for a particular sin by a particular individual. Low mass is a sacrifice of Christ for the general sins of a congregation. Roman Catholics claim to believe in the merit of Christ's sacrifice at Calvary that it covered original sin, general sins that are past; but they claim also that the daily sins, shortcomings, blemishes of every individual, require to be cleansed by fresh sacrifices of Christ from time to time.

Thus from their standpoint, as represented in the mass and as practiced by the Roman Catholics and Greek Catholics and high church Episcopalians, Christ is being sacrificed afresh all the world over every day. This in the scriptures is called an "abomination" in God's sight, because it disregards, sets at naught, the statement of the Scriptures that Christ dieth no more, that by one sacrifice He hath perfected forever all who come unto the Father through Him. Rom. 6:9
